PREFACE

THE general nature and design of the present work are sufficiently indicated by the title, which represents the Commentary as "Methodist" in character, and as specially designed to meet the practical requirements of "local preachers and lay workers" in our Church. A Commentary which we receive from the hands of well-known Wesleyan ministers, in which is included nearly the whole of John Wesley's Notes on the New Testament, one of our recognised standards of doctrine, and which, in the way of direct citation, presents to the reader the best portions of such Commentaries as those of Joseph Benson, Adam Clarke, and Joseph Sutcliffe, may, without risk of challenge, claim the name of "Methodist." The doctrinal exposition, devotional comment, and practical teaching which Methodists from one generation to another have so highly prized will, as here given,—selected from bulky volumes and gathered together in small compass,—be welcomed by many readers to-day. Strong practical sense, true learning, and deep piety are apparent in the notes which have been brought out of the treasury of early Methodist literature.

If, however, the authors of the present Commentary had contented themselves with drawing thus upon the wisdom of the past, they would have failed to produce a volume suited to the requirements of the great body of Christian men and women who are working in our Church to-day. No student can be unaware of the great advance in many departments of Biblical scholarship which has been made during the last fifty or sixty years. While therefore the writers have selected from earlier works what has best stood the test of time, they have felt it their duty to add a large number of supplementary notes, drawn from various sources, giving the results of more recent study and investigation. As the names of the authorities are given, the reader is enabled to a large extent to judge for himself of the trustworthiness of the information supplied. A glance at the following pages will detect not a few references to older writers, such as Luther, Calvin, and Bengel (so deservedly esteemed by John Wesley), and to the rich devotional comments of Matthew Henry. Of the many works of our own time which are repeatedly cited may be mentioned—the Speaker's Commentary, Bishop Ellicott's New Testament for English Readers, the Cambridge Bible for Schools, the Expositor's Bible, Lange's Commentaries, and the well-known exegetical works which bear the names of Meyer, Delitzsch, Godet, Lightfoot, Alford, Westcott, Beet, Findlay, Edersheim, Morison, Trench, Webster and Wilkinson, Conybeare and Howson, Farrar, Reynolds, and Dale.

If I may in this brief Introduction give any opinion of my own, I would gladly express my conviction that the writers will be found to have done their work faithfully and well, with great diligence and no small ability. The plan of the work may involve certain disadvantages—some amount of repetition, and here and there a want of harmony between comments on the same verse; but a candid reader will find great compensating advantages in the interesting character of the varied notes and in the breadth of treatment which the sacred text receives. The writers have deserved well of our Church by their successful work.

WILLIAM F. MOULTON.

CAMBRIDGE, May 22, 1893.

THE COMMENTARY has been prepared, at the suggestion of W. W. POCOCK, Esq., B.A., Treasurer of the Local Preachers' Book Supply Association, by—

The late Rev. F. W. BRIGGS (S. Matthew).
The Rev. JOHN H. GOODMAN (S. Mark, S. Luke, S. John).
The Rev. FRANCIS W. GREEVES (Acts, the Seven General Epistles, Revelation).
The Rev. GEORGE KENYON (Romans, I. and II. Corinthians, I. and II. Thessalonians, I. and II. Timothy, Titus, Philemon, Hebrews).
The Rev. E. J. OLDMEADOW (Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians).

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO

S. MATTHEW.

THE BOOK AND ITS AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR.

S. MATTHEW, who has the distinction of standing at the head of all the New Testament writers, was one of the Twelve. He was apparently the last of the Twelve whom Jesus called. He had a second name, Levi, and under that name we meet with him as a prosperous publican, or collector of customs. Compare ch. 9. 9–13 with S. Luke 5. 27–32. As an apostle he did not take a prominent position. His characteristics of quietness and love of retirement qualified him all the more for the preparation of the life of Christ, the questions bearing upon the fulfilment of prophecy, and the reproduction of our Lord's elaborate discourses. That the First Gospel was written by this apostle is the testimony of all antiquity. That he died a natural death may be concluded from the belief of the best informed of the Fathers—that of the apostles only three, James the greater, Peter, and Paul, suffered martyrdom.

THE BOOK.

For the date of this Gospel we have only internal evidence, and that far from decisive. Accordingly, opinion is much divided. That it was the first issued of all the Gospels was generally believed. It bears the most evident marks of having been prepared and constructed with a special view to the Jews. That it was written before the destruction of Jerusalem is equally certain. The dates assigned for the composition of this Gospel vary from A.D. 41 to A.D. 70. It has been said the true gem of S. Matthew's Gospel is the Sermon on the Mount. The language in which the Gospel of Matthew was written has always been a disputed point. The only form in which it has come down to us is in the same language as the other books of the New Testament, viz. Greek. But from the very earliest times there has been a tradition that Matthew wrote his Gospel first of all in the language of Palestine, and that it was afterwards translated into Greek. No truth or doctrine depends on this. "The Gospel of S. Matthew," as ALFORD has eloquently written, "is that one to which we owe, more than to any other, our complete idea of our blessed Lord as the promised Messiah, the Holy One of God, the King and Head over all to His Church. In the vivid depictions of S. Mark, we have ever His personal image before us, and the very sound of His voice. In the careful and precious collections of S. Luke we see Him as the Saviour of our race, the Head and Root of our humanity; while it is from this first and best known of the Gospels that that image of Him especially arises, which is so much in the thoughts and hearts of all of us who believe—that chosen One in whom centre all the ways and works of God: perfect in majesty, perfect in mercy; the King's Son, for whom is made the great marriage of heaven and earth; the Bridegroom into whose feast the wise and virgin souls shall enter; the King Himself, who shall come to take account of His own servants—nay, who shall come, and all the holy angels with Him, and sit on the throne of His glory, with all the nations before Him, and allot to every one his eternal doom."

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO S. MATTHEW CONTAINS:

CHAPTER I.

Vers. 1-17. OUR LORD'S GENEALOGY. (Luke 3. 23-38.)—1. The book of the generation. This is a purely Hebrew expression. (Gen. 2. 4; 5. 1.) It is probably used here as the title of the genealogy which follows, and may have been the actual title of the document which the Evangelist copied. "If there were any difficulties in this genealogy, or that given by S. Luke, which could not easily be removed, they would rather affect the Jewish Tables than the credit of the Evangelists; for they act only as historians, setting down these genealogies, as they stood in those public and allowed records. Therefore they were to take them as they found them. Nor was it needful they should correct the mistakes, if there were any. For these accounts sufficiently answer the end for which they are recited. They unquestionably prove the grand point in view that Jesus was of the family from which the promised Seed was to come. And they had more weight with the Jews for this purpose, than if alterations had been made by inspiration itself. For such alterations would have occasioned endless disputes between them and the disciples of our Lord." Of Jesus Christ. Here used as a proper name, as also Mark 1. 1; John 1. 17; 17. 3, but nowhere else in the Gospels, though frequently in the Acts and Epistles. "Jesus" (see note on ver 21). "Christ," from the Greek, answering to the Hebrew Messiah—the Anointed (Acts 10. 38). This title was occasionally used in Old Testament times to designate a prophet (1 Chron. 16. 22; 1 Kings 19. 16); more frequently to denote a priest (Lev. 4. 3; 6. 22; Num. 3. 3); and at a later period was applied generally to kings (1 Sam. 12. 3; 16. 6; 2 Sam. 19. 21; Isa. 45. 1). Finally it became the special title of the promised Redeemer, who was to be pre-eminently Messiah the Prince (Dan. 9. 25). In Him the three offices were combined. He is, in the highest sense, Prophet, Priest, and King. "And if we look into ourselves, we shall find a want of Christ in all these respects. We are by nature at a distance from God, alienated from Him, and incapable of a free access to Him. Hence we want a Mediator, an Intercessor; in a word, a Christ in His priestly office. This regards our state with respect to God. And with respect to ourselves, we find a total darkness, blindness, ignorance of God, and the things of God. Now here we want Christ in His prophetic office, to enlighten our minds, and teach us the whole will of God. We find also within us a strange misrule of appetites and passions. For these we want Christ in His royal character, to reign in our hearts, and subdue all things to Himself"—WESLEY.

The Son of David (Ps. 132. 11; Isa. 11. 1), the Son of Abraham (Gen. 12. 3). The Evangelist thus clearly states his purpose to show that He whom he had just designated by the compound appellative, then beginning to be used as a proper name, "Jesus Christ," was He "of whom Moses in the Law and the Prophets did write" (John 1. 45); in whom more especially the promises made to David (Ps. 89. 36; Acts 2. 30; 13. 23; Rom. 1. 3) and to Abraham (Gen. 22. 18; Gal. 3. 16) were fulfilled. This is to be taken as the keynote of this Gospel. The mysterious Person of whose great and peculiar sayings, acts, sufferings, and death, the Evangelist is about to write, was, he here affirms at the outset, of lineal descent from David and Abraham, in accordance with the revealed purposes of God and with the general expectation of the Jews respecting the Messiah (John 7. 42).

2. Judas. (Gen. 29. 35.) In the Revised Version, "Judah," the Hebrew form of the name; which, "in the case of persons and places mentioned in the Old Testament," the Revisers have uniformly followed.

3-6. Thamar, Rahab, Ruth. (Gen. 38. 27, 28; Ruth 4. 18, 22; 1 Chron. 2. 3-15.) Also, referred to, but not by name, Bathsheba (2 Sam. 12. 24). Three of these women were not of the Jewish race, and three also, Thamar, Rahab, and Bathsheba, were of seriously blemished reputation. Thus is the descent of Him who was "made in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin," and in whom "there is neither Jew nor Greek," traced through Gentiles as well as Jews, and through some of the most sinful as well as the most saintly of mankind.

6. David the king. "Particularly mentioned under this character, because his throne is given to the Messiah"—WESLEY.

8. Joram begat Ozias (Uzziah). (1 Chron. 3. 11.) Here three generations, represented by the names of Ahaziah, Joash, and Amaziah (1 Chron. 3. 11, 12), are omitted; it may be in order to reduce the number to fourteen, the first of the three equal divisions enumerated in ver. 17; probably also they were omitted in the document from which this table was taken.

16. Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary. Yet, according to Luke, Joseph was the son of Heli. "This discrepancy on a point which must have been easily ascertainable at the time when these Gospels were written, can hardly be explained except on the supposition that it is intentional. The most probable explanation is that Joseph was the son of Heli by birth, but the heir and adopted son of Jacob. If, moreover, we suppose Jacob and Heli to have been brothers, it is almost certain, according to the Jewish custom in such cases, that if Jacob had a daughter, she would become the wife of his nephew Joseph. (See Num. 36. 11; 1 Chron. 23. 22.) Thus there is at least a high probability that the Gospel genealogies contain not merely the nominal lineage of our Lord, through His reputed father, but also His actual lineage through His virgin mother as the daughter of Jacob, though neither genealogy is expressly constructed for the latter purpose. That Mary as well as Joseph was descended from David seems implied in Luke 1. 32"—S. C. (Also in Acts 2. 30; 13. 23; Rom 1. 3; 2 Tim. 2. 8.) This seems to be the most probable solution of the difficulty, but it should be accepted as probable only.

17. So all the generations. "Observe, in order to complete the three fourteens, David ends the first fourteen, and begins the second (which reaches the Captivity); and Jesus ends the third fourteen"—WESLEY.

"The first and the second fourteen contain the promise, the third its fulfilment"—B.

Nothing more need be said, it may be, respecting the peculiar value of these genealogical records—obviously independent as they are of each other—in relation to the special end for which they are given. But how full of instruction are they when taken as an example of God's silent and untraceable but unfailing guidance of the events of human history for the accomplishment of His gracious purposes. "Verily He is a God that hideth Himself; His ways are past finding out." Yet is He infallibly, and often by means of what may appear to us most unlikely agencies, "working all things after the counsel of His own will." So also, "when we survey such a series of generations, it is a natural and obvious reflection, How like the leaves of a tree one passeth away, and another cometh! Yet the earth still abideth. And with it the goodness of the Lord, which runs on from generation to generation, the common hope of parents and children.

"Of those who formerly lived upon earth, and perhaps made the most conspicuous figure, how many are there whose names are perished with them! how many, of whom only the names are remaining! Thus are we likewise passing away! And thus shall we shortly be forgotten! Happy are we, if, while we are forgotten by men, we are remembered by God! if our names, lost on earth, are at length found written in the book of life!"—WESLEY.

Vers. 18–25. BIRTH OF CHRIST.—18. Mary was espoused (R.V. "had been betrothed") (Luke 1. 27.) From the day of betrothal the relationship between them was as sacred as if they had been already married (Deut. 22. 23). Hence Joseph is called husband (19) and Mary wife (20). She was found. She may have revealed the fact herself, but not immediately; for after the angelic annunciation she went "with haste" to visit Elizabeth, and tarried with her three months (Luke 1. 41, 55). It must have been after her return to Nazareth, with her own hopes fully confirmed by the fulfilment of the angelic prediction to her kinswoman, that she first spoke of it to Joseph. And the intelligence naturally startled and perplexed him.

19. Being a just man—a strict observer of the Law (Luke 1. 6)—"therefore feeling bound to divorce Mary. But two courses were open to him. He could either summon her before the law-courts to be judicially condemned and punished, or he could put her away by a bill of divorcement before witnesses, but without assigning cause (Deut. 24. 1). This is meant by 'putting her away privately,' the more merciful course which Joseph resolved to adopt"—C. S.

20. Joseph, thou son of David. "These words would recall Joseph's mind to the promised Seed, the expectation of the families of the lineage of David, and at once stamp the message as the announcement of the birth of the Messiah"—A.

21. JESUS. In form, the Greek for the Hebrew name Joshua; in meaning, the sum of the whole Gospel, Thou shalt call His name Jesus, "Saviour," or more fully, "Jehovah the Saviour." (Isa. 12. 2.) For He shall save (R.V. "For it is He that shall save"). He Himself, or He alone,—He personally shall save His people from their sins. "He does not say, according to the expectation of the Jews, He shall save His people Israel from their Gentile enemies; but indefinitely His people, all who believe on Him, whether Jew or Gentile; and that not from temporal calamity or degradation, but from their sins: thus, from the beginning, was the notion of a political Messiah excluded from the minds of Joseph and Mary. The very name of our Lord, given by Divine command, lays a firm foundation for the trust of the guilty; and opens the most glorious hope to man, even that of salvation from the guilt and penalty, from the power and pollution, of sin in this life, and beyond it a resurrection from the dead, immortality, and eternal felicity"—R. W. "It is remarkable that in the early part of the evangelic history, in the midst of pedigrees and the disturbances of thrones by the supposed temporal king of the Jews, we have so clear an indication of the spiritual nature of the office of Christ"—A.

22. All this was done (R.V. "All this is come to pass"). The Evangelist is speaking of what has taken place in his own day. It is important to note this as one of many incidental indications of the early date of this Gospel. That it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet. Not in order that the prophet's words might be verified, but in order that the supernatural birth which the prophet foretold might take place. The point of view intended by the Evangelist is the incarnation of the Son of God in the fulness of time, as an event divinely predestinated and pre-intimated by the words of the prophet.

23. Behold a virgin.—The Virgin. (Isa. 7. 14.) —They shall call His name Emmanuel. The meaning is not that He should be known by this as His proper name, but that He should be confessed and adored in the grateful recognition of what the great designation implies. "The Child thus marvellously born, who Himself by His own power shall save His people from their sins, is, as the prophet foretold, God with us"—S. C. "To be called only means, according to the Hebrew manner of speaking, that the person spoken of shall really and effectually be what He is called, and actually fulfil that title. Thus, 'Unto us a Child is born—and His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the Prince of Peace';—that is, He shall be all these, though not so much nominally, as really, and in effect. And thus was He called Emmanuel; which was no common name of Christ, but points out His nature and office: as He is God incarnate, and dwells, by His Spirit, in the hearts of His people"—WESLEY.

25. Her firstborn Son. Nothing can be justly inferred from these words on the question of the perpetual virginity of Mary. This the Evangelist neither affirms nor denies. Nor is the question important.

CHAPTER II.

Vers. 1-12. VISIT OF THE MAGI.—1. When Jesus was born. As now ascertained, about four years before the common era. In Bethlehem—the House of Bread—of Judea, to distinguish it from another Bethlehem near the Sea of Galilee (Judg. 17. 7-9; 1 Sam. 17. 12). This village was originally called Ephrath, or Ephratha, "Fruitful" (Gen. 35. 16, 19; 48. 7). In Micah 5. 2 the two names are combined. In Luke 2. 4, it is called "The City of David," and in John 7. 42, "The town where David was," and out of which the Christ was to come. How it came to pass that Jesus was born there, and not in Nazareth, where Mary and Joseph had resided, is fully explained by S. Luke (2. 1-7), but is passed over in silence by S. Matthew, the Evangelist of Messiah's kingship, as unnecessary to his special plan and purpose. In the days of Herod the king. He was the second son of Antipater, an Idumæan or Edomite, by an Arabian mother. In the year 47 B.C. Antipater was appointed procurator of Judea, and Herod, who was then only fifteen years of age, was made governor of Galilee. After his father's death, Herod became, chiefly through the influence of Marc Antony, king of Judea. He died miserably at Jericho, a few months after the birth of Christ, in the seventy-first year of his age, and the thirty-first of his reign.—Behold, there came wise men—Magi, or Magians. This was originally the name of a sect of Persian or Median philosophers, devout observers and students of natural phenomena. Nothing definite can be rightly inferred from the statement that these Magi came from the East, for this might mean Arabia, Persia, Chaldæa, or even Egypt. But wherever they came from they were evidently sincere, religious inquirers and worshippers of the true God. "Probably they were Gentile philosophers who, through the Divine assistance, had improved their knowledge of nature, as a means of leading to the knowledge of the one true God. Nor is it unreasonable to suppose that God had favoured them with some extraordinary revelations of Himself, as He did Melchisedec, Job, and several others, who were not of the family of Abraham; to which He never intended absolutely to confine His favours. The title given them in the original was anciently given to all philosophers, or men of learning; those particularly who were curious in examining the works of nature, and observing the motions of the heavenly bodies"—WESLEY.

2. King of the Jews. Not our king; and not "King of Israel" (John 1. 49), which would have implied a knowledge of Jewish expectancy, but simply "King of the Jews," using the term in a political sense. For we have seen His star in the East. (Num. 24. 17; Isa. 60. 3.) This must have been a meteor, bearing "the appearance of a bright star, and was manifestly supernatural, and connected as to its import with some revelation made to them of the birth of the Messiah. How otherwise should it have guided them to the very house where 'the young Child was'? and how, without a revelation, should they have known its significancy as indicating the birth of 'the King of the Jews'? The sign was, however, appropriate, as among the ancients the appearance of a star was considered the forerunner of the birth of great princes"—R. W. Moreover, the belief prevailed at the time everywhere in the East that a great Deliverer and King was about to appear in Judea. To worship Him—to do Him kingly homage. "To pay Him that honour, by bowing to the earth before Him, which the Eastern natives used to pay to their monarchs"—WESLEY. (Comp. ver. 8.)

The visit of the Magi must be supposed to have taken place after the presentation in the Temple (Luke 2. 22–24); consequently, when the holy Babe was more than forty days old, and when Mary was no longer lodged in a stable, but was entertained in ■ house.

3. He was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him. He, under the accusations of a guilty conscience, and anxiety for the safety of his throne; and they in dread of some fresh outbreak of his rage, and some renewed acts of cruelty.

4. All the chief priests and scribes of the people. Probably a designation of the Sanhedrim, or Council, as hastily summoned in the emergency. (See ch. 16. 21; 21. 23; 26. 47; 27. 1, where, however, elders are included in the description.) This council consisted of seventy-one members, and was composed of "the high-priest and his deputy, with those who formerly had borne that office; the chief man in each of those twenty-four courses into which the body of the priests were divided (1 Chron. 24. 4–19) and representative elders of the people. The scribes were those whose peculiar business it was to explain the Scriptures to the people. They were the public preachers, or expounders of the Law of Moses: whence the chief of them were called doctors of the Law"—WESLEY.

He demanded of them where Christ (the Christ) should be born—according to the preintimations of the prophets. The Magi had inquired for "the King of the Jews," which Herod rightly understood to be a true title of the expected Messiah. He "believed the Jewish Scriptures, and that the birth of the Messiah was foretold in them. And yet, which discovered the height of madness as well as of impiety and cruelty, he was contriving to destroy Him! to destroy Him whose birth and reign and glory God, in His word, he believed, had infallibly foretold!"—J. B.

5, 6. (It is written by, by means of (R.V. "through") the prophet. (Micah 5. 2.) Among the princes of Juda—"that is, among the cities belonging to the princes or heads of thousands in Judah. When this and several other quotations from the Old Testament are compared with the original, it plainly appears the apostles did not always think it necessary exactly to transcribe the passages they cited, but contented themselves with giving the general sense, though with some diversity of language. The words of Micah, which we render, 'Though thou be little,' may be rendered, 'Art thou little?' And then the difference which seems to be here between the prophet and the evangelist vanishes away"—WESLEY.

8. That I may come and worship Him also. How striking the contrast between the deceitful and crafty king, and these simple-minded Magi!

9. And, lo, the star which they saw in the east went before them. It is perfectly evident, therefore, that it was something miraculous. It had happened after indicating Jerusalem as the fit place for the inquiry where the royal Babe should be born, and now, on their departure for Bethlehem, the star reappeared near enough to the earth to guide them, not only to the town, but to the particular house where the young child was.

10. They rejoiced with exceeding great joy—the joy of success, and also a natural reaction from the state of anxiety and disappointment in which they had lived ever since they entered the capital.

11. Fell down and worshipped Him. Prostrated themselves before Him in humble acknowledgment of His kingly dignity. "We may well imagine their expectations were raised to find this royal Babe, though slighted by the nation, yet honourably attended at home, and what a disappointment it was to them when they found a cottage was His palace, and His own poor mother all the retinue He had! 'Is this the King of the Jews?' Yes; this is He who, 'though He was rich, for our sakes became poor.' They did not think themselves balked or baffled in their inquiry; but, as having found the King they sought, they presented themselves first, and then their gifts, to Him"—H. And when they had opened their treasures—the chests or packages in which their treasures had been brought—they presented unto Him gifts, as was usual when visits were paid to monarchs. (1 Kings 10. 2; Ps. 68. 29; 72. 10, 11, 15.) "This was a most seasonable, providential assistance for a long and expensive journey into Egypt, a country where they were entirely strangers"—WESLEY.

"The whole history is beautifully instructive, as one of those numerous instances with which the Scriptures abound of the manner in which an unseen but ever-watchful, ever-active power overrules the purposes of men, even when they are opposed to that issue which is evoked by unanticipated circumstances, and frustrates equally their subtlety and their power. Herod, in his own true character of malignant cunning, wishes to make the Magi the instruments of conveying to him the intelligence of this new-born heir of the throne of David, and affects to partake of their joy, and to be ready to do Him homage; but, warned of God, they depart home by another route, and thus their safety is provided for, which might have been compromised by an act of constructive treason, in acknowledging another king beside him; whilst his sanguinary purpose was delayed, to give the holy family time to hasten down to Egypt, beyond the reach of his power; for which journey the gifts of the Wise Men afforded a seasonable and, as it appears, an abundant, supply. 'There is no counsel against the Lord'"—R. W.

Vers. 13-23. FLIGHT INTO EGYPT.—13. Flee into Egypt. This, "as near, as a Roman province, and independent of Herod, and much inhabited by Jews, was an easy and convenient refuge"—A.

15. That it might be fulfilled, see on 1. 22—Out of Egypt have I called (R.V. "did I call") My Son (Hosea 11. 1; comp. Ex. 4. 22, 23). The Evangelist intimates that there was an analogy between the condition of the Israelites in Egypt in the infancy of their nation, and the condition of the infant Jesus in His enforced exile in that country, and that as this coincidence was divinely ordained, the words spoken by the prophet with reference to Israel were fulfilled in their higher meaning as applied to Christ. "It seems to have been a received axiom of interpretation, which has, by its adoption in the New Testament, received the sanction of the Holy Spirit Himself, and now stands for our guidance, that the subject of all allusions, the represented in all parables and dark sayings, was He who was to come, or the circumstances attendant on His advent and reign"—A.

16. When he saw that he was mocked—trifled with, treated contemptuously by the Wise Men, as his own wrathful feelings interpreted their omission to obey his command—sent forth a band of soldiers, and slew all the children (R.V. "the male children") that were in Bethlehem and (to prevent escape) in all the coasts, or surrounding parts thereof, from two years old and under, which may mean from their entering upon their second year. "In so small a place as Bethlehem, the number of male children of that age was probably not large, and the deed may well have been passed over in comparison with the greater atrocities of Herod's latter days"—S. C. As, for example, the murder of his own wife, Mariamne, and of his two sons.

17. Then was fulfilled. Not as before (ver. 15) "that it might be fulfilled," implying Divine agency—that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet (Jer. 31. 15) with reference to the taking of the Israelites to Babylon.

18. Rachel weeping for her children. The Benjamites, who inhabited Rama, sprang from her. She was buried near this place; and is here beautifully represented risen, as it were, out of her grave, and bewailing her lost children. Because they are not—that is, are dead. The preservation of Jesus from this destruction may be considered as a figure of God's care over His children in their greatest danger. God does not often, as He easily could, cut off their persecutors at a stroke: but He provides a hiding-place for His people; and by methods not less effectual, though less pompous, preserves them from being swept away, even when the enemy comes in like a flood.

19. But when Herod was dead. His own death must have taken place almost immediately after the massacre of the infants. "On his bed of intolerable anguish, in that splendid and luxurious palace which he had built for himself under the palms of Jericho . . . longing for death as a release from his tortures, yet dreading it as the beginning of worse terrors—stung by remorse, yet still unslaked with murder—a horror to all around him, yet in his guilty conscience a worse terror to himself . . . as though visibly smitten with the finger of God's wrath, after seventy years of successful villainy—the wretched old man, whom men called the Great," passed away—F.

22. Archelaus. The dominions of Herod were divided at his death among three of his sons—Antipas, Archelaus, and Philip. Archelaus inherited Idumea, Judea, and Samaria, and forthwith assumed the title of king; but this the emperor refused to sanction, allowing him only that of Ethnarch, ruler of the people. After a tyrannous reign of nine years he was dethroned, and his dominions came into the direct government of Rome, under a procurator. Joseph was returning into the land of Israel with his holy charge, as instructed; but hearing that it had come under the rule of this tyrant, he was afraid to go thither. This seems to intimate that his desire was to return to Bethlehem, the city of David, and to settle there; but being again warned of God in a dream, he turned aside—or "withdrew" (R.V.)—into the parts of Galilee now under the dominion of Antipas, an elder brother of Archelaus, "equally unscrupulous, but more indolent and indifferent" than he. Galilee, the most northern of the three provinces of Palestine, included the territory formerly occupied by the tribes of Issachar, Zebulon, Asher, and Naphtali, and was peopled at this time with a large admixture of Gentiles. It was bounded on the west by Phœnicia; on the east by the Lake of Gennesaret, called also the Sea of Galilee (ch. 4. 18; Mark 7. 31) and the Sea of Tiberias (John 6. 1; 21. 1), and the river Jordan; on the south by Samaria; and on the north by the mountains of Lebanon.

23. A city called Nazareth. Up to this point S. Matthew makes no reference to the fact that this was the previous residence of Joseph and Mary, though he afterwards recognised it distinctly (ch. 13. 54-57). Beginning his narrative with the birth of the Messiah in Bethlehem, as divinely foretold, he leaves the original residence in Nazareth to be alluded to when occasion called for it. Nazareth was a quiet and beautifully situated little town of central Galilee. It is nowhere mentioned in the Old Testament and seldom in the New, except as connected with the history of Christ. It was a secluded spot on a hillside, surrounded by heights varying in altitude from 400 to 500 feet, not thickly wooded, yet picturesque and pleasing. Immediately around it the soil was well cultivated, and abounded with trees bearing pomegranates, olives, and figs. Spoken by the prophets, not by any individual prophet, but by the prophets generally, in many places, in idea, though not in words. He shall be called a Nazarene, not a Nazarite, as suggested by the original references; for that name has a totally different meaning. (Num. 6. 1-22; Judg. 13. 5; 1 Sam. 1. 11.) Nazarene is not a by-name of scorn or contempt, as is sometimes avowed, and certainly nothing of this kind was in the mind of the Evangelist when he said that to call our Lord a Nazarene would be to fulfil that which was spoken of Him by the prophets. The name of Nazareth was in its original form Netzer, which means a branch or shoot; and this word, taken as an image of revived life, growth, and prosperity, springing out of a state of decay, is used by the prophet Isaiah in application to the Messiah to represent His connection with the fallen house of David and the greater glory of His reign: "There shall come a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch (Netzer) shall grow out of his roots" (Isa. 11. 1). This, however, is only one of many names and forms of expression having the same meaning, by which the prophets designated the Messiah. (See Isa. 53. 2; Ezek. 17. 22; Jer. 23. 5; 33. 15; Zech. 3. 8; 6. 12; and compare Rev. 5. 5; 22. 16.) What the Evangelist here points out is, therefore, that our Lord, by His residence in Nazareth, "verbally as well as really, fulfilled the prediction of the prophet; not only growing up in obscurity from the family of Jesse, reduced to a low estate, but bearing a name derived from the place in which He grew up, which by its derivation expressed this circumstance"—S. C. To call Him the Nazarene was in reality to confess His claim to be recognised as the true Messiah.

CHAPTER III.

Vers. 1-11. PREPARATORY MINISTRY OF JOHN. (Mark 1. 2-8; Luke 3. 2-18; John 1. 6-31.)—1. In those days—that is, towards the end of the long period of nearly thirty years during which our Lord dwelt at Nazareth—came John the Baptist, who is thus like Elijah, his type (Mal. 4. 5; Matt. 11. 14), introduced abruptly into the narrative (1 Kings 17. 1) as a person already known. The Baptist, or Baptizer, was probably the name which the people gave him. Preaching—heralding or proclaiming with authority, the coming of the King, the Heir to the throne of David—in the wilderness of Judea—a comparatively uncultivated district near the Dead Sea.

2. Repent ye. Literally, change your minds, with all that this implies, namely, conviction of error and sin, contrition, a sense of danger, the solemn purpose to amend, and the power to do so. For the kingdom of heaven. S. Matthew alone uses this phrase, occasionally substituting for it its synonym, "the kingdom of God," as used by all the other Evangelists. Its meaning is the reign of the promised Messiah, or the rule of God through the Messiah. (Ps. 2. 6; 110. 2; Dan. 2. 44; 7. 13, 14.) The Jews were necessarily familiar with the term, but "they understood it of a temporal kingdom, the seat of which they supposed would be Jerusalem; and the expected sovereign of this kingdom they learned from Daniel to call the 'Son of Man.' Both John the Baptist and Christ took up that phrase, 'the kingdom of heaven,' as they found it, and gradually taught the Jews, though greatly unwilling to learn, to understand it right. The very demand of repentance, as previous to it, showed it was a spiritual kingdom; and that no wicked man, how politic, brave, or learned soever, could possibly be a subject of it"—WESLEY.

3. For this is He. Here, as in Mark and Luke, the words of the prophet are cited by the writer; in John they are spoken by the Baptist himself. Saying, the voice of one crying in the wilderness (Isa. 40. 3). The Baptist, like the prophet, does not name the herald. He is content to speak of himself as a voice. "The whole man was a sermon; he might well call himself a voice." Prepare ye the way of the Lord—that is, Jehovah. "The idea is taken from the practice of Eastern monarchs, who sent harbingers before them to prepare all things for their passage, and pioneers to open the passes, to level the ways, and to remove all impediments"—E.

4. And the same John (R.V. "Now John himself"), like the prophet Elijah, in whose spirit and power he came. (2 Kings 1. 8.) And his raiment of camel's hair—rough, cheap, and warm; the clothing characteristic of the prophetic office (Zech. 13. 4). And his meat (food) was locusts—which the Israelites were allowed by the Law to eat (Lev. 11. 22), and are eaten by poor Arabs to this day, fried in butter or oil. And wild honey. Found in rocks and trunks of trees. (1 Sam. 14. 25; Ps. 81. 16.)

6. And were baptized of him in Jordan. This river, taking its rise in the mountains of Lebanon in the north, flows into and passes through the Lake of Gennesaret, and continues its course to the head of the Dead Sea in the south. John baptized during his ministry in different parts of this river, probably near its fords. Confessing their sins—to God, but also openly before John and one another. Baptism, as a rite administered to Jesus, was wholly new; but John told his hearers that he had instituted it by the express command of God (John 1. 33); that he administered it only to the humble and penitent (ver. 7), and that it was their duty to receive it as a sign of the spiritual cleansing to be experienced through faith in Him who should come after him (Acts 19. 4). This meaning of the rite they would easily understand from their knowledge of the symbolical workings required by the Law before offering sacrifice in cases of ceremonial defilement. (Lev. 14. 19; Num. 19. 7.)

7. Pharisees and Sadducees. These opposing sects arose in the times of the Maccabees, probably about B.C. 150. The name Pharisee signifies Separatist. It was probably adopted in the first instance to distinguish the party who, after the return of the Jews from Babylon, were the most jealous in maintaining a complete separation between them and the heathen. "The re-establishment of the Jews in Palestine naturally gave rise to two courses of policy; one which sought to continue, and even to increase, the ancient separation between the Jews and the heathen kingdoms with which they came in contact; the other which sought to facilitate intercourse by partial assimilation. From the former gradually arose the Pharisees, from the other the Sadducees"—S. C. In the time of Christ, however, the name did not imply separation from other nations so much as the separation of this party from their countrymen. "They were outwardly strict observers of the Law, fasted often, made long prayers, rigorously kept the Sabbath, and paid all tithe, even of mint, anise, and cummin. Hence they were of high esteem among the people. But, inwardly, they were full of pride and hypocrisy"—WESLEY.

The Sadducees were the rationalists of that period. It is uncertain whether the name they bore is derived from Zadok (supposed to be their founder), or from the Hebrew word for righteousness. But in opposition to the Pharisees they denied the authority of tradition, and probably also of all the books of the Old Testament, except the books of the Law. They openly professed their disbelief in the resurrection, and the existence of angels or spirits (Acts 23. 8), and did not shrink from conformity to many Gentile customs. They were the courtly and aristocratic party. The coming of these men of distinction, not as penitents but as scornful observers, moved the indignation of John, and He said unto them, O generation of vipers (Isa. 59. 5; ch. 12. 34; 23. 33), who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Possibly alluding to Mal. 4. 5, 6, but with more direct reference to judgment of the ungodly in the future life. What motive and purpose have you for coming to my baptism? To have administered the rite to them would have been a mockery. They are simply repelled as self-deceived men of malignant and deadly social influence. "'Ye brood of vipers.' —In like manner the crafty Herod is styled 'a fox'; and persons of insidious, ravenous, profane, or sensual dispositions are named respectively by Him who saw their hearts, 'serpents, dogs, wolves, and swine'; terms which are not the random language of passion, but a judicious designation of the persons meant by them. For it was fitting such men should be marked out, either for a caution to others, or a warning to themselves"—WESLEY.

8. Fruits meet for (R.V. "worthy of") repentance. "Wherever this is, there will, of course, be an entire reformation of life, a 'ceasing to do evil,' in all respects, according to the knowledge and ability of the penitent, and a 'learning to do well.' Hence it is styled, 'repentance from dead works' (Heb. 6. 1); and 'repentance unto salvation, not to be repented of' (2 Cor. 7. 10); that is, such as is not reversed by any voluntary returning, or relapsing into our former sins"—J. B.

9. We have Abraham to our father. (John 8. 33, 39; Acts 13. 29.) "A relation which was the theme of their constant boastings, and from which they expected salvation, merely by virtue of their fleshly descent, though both the faith and the works of Abraham were wanting among them. There is no imputation of the holiness of pious ancestors to their children, and personal regeneration can alone qualify men for the kingdom of God. For God is able of these stones, etc. Perhaps John pointed to the rocks and stones in the bed of the Jordan"—R. W. Perhaps also he had in his mind such words as those of Isa. 51. 1, 2, "Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn," with a tacit allusion to the call of the Gentiles —children of Abraham because inheritors of his faith (Rom. 4. 16; Gal. 3. 29; 6. 15).

10. And now also (R.V. "And even more"). At this moment the axe is laid unto the root of the fruitless trees (ver. 8). "That is, there is no room for such idle pretences. Speedy execution is determined against all that do not repent. The comparison is taken from a woodman that has laid down his axe to put off his coat, and then immediately goes to work to cut down the tree. This refers to 'the wrath to come' in the seventh verse. 'Is hewn down,' instantly, without further delay"—WESLEY.

11. I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance. That being the necessary condition of its administration, and baptism itself a symbol of consequent newness of life. But He that cometh after me is mightier than I. These words are given in Luke as spoken in answer to the musings in the public mind whether John "were the Christ or not" (3. 15), and in John (1. 25, 27), as said in reply to inquiries from the Pharisees. Probably they were uttered on several occasions. Whose shoes (sandals) I am not worthy to bear. In

Luke, "the latchet (thong) of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose." The meaning of both expressions is the same. So great is the superiority to myself of Him, whose way it is my vocation to prepare, that I am not worthy to do for Him the service of a slave. He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. "He shall fill you with the Holy Ghost, inflaming your hearts with that fire of love which many waters cannot quench. And this was done, even with a visible appearance as of fire, on the day of Pentecost"—WESLEY. (Acts 1. 5; comp. Acts 19. 2–6.)

12. Whose fan is in His hand. "The metaphors in this verse are taken from the process of threshing among the Jews. The sheaves of corn were trodden by oxen upon a 'threshing-floor,' or prepared plain area, formed upon some elevated place, so as to force out the grain; then the winnowing fan, which was often a portable instrument used by the hand, and here not inaptly rendered by some 'a winnowing shovel,' was applied to throw up the grain to the wind, that the chaff might be separated from it, whilst the straw, being crushed beneath the feet of the oxen, and rendered worthless, was reserved with the separated chaff, to be burned with other fuel"—R. W.

Vers. 13–17. BAPTISM OF CHRIST. (Mark 1. 9; Luke 3. 21, 22.)—13. Then—S. Luke says, "When all the people were baptized," which seems to intimate that our Lord's baptism was private—cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, apparently after He had withdrawn from the wilderness of Judea to a locality "beyond Jordan" called "Bethabara," or the "House of a Passage"; a ford about thirty miles below Nazareth (John 1. 28). To be baptized of him. The fact so quietly stated is full of instruction. For thirty years Jesus had lived in the secluded rural town of Nazareth, undistinguished from His fellow-townspeople, except by His perfect rectitude of conduct and His meek subjection to His "parents" (Luke 2. 41); increasing in favour with all who knew Him, yet not known in His true character, perhaps not even in person to His distinguished kinsman John (John 1. 31). And now the first thing recorded of Him is that He comes to submit to an institution which represented the putting away of sin; not confessing sin, however, like all others, but indirectly affirming His righteousness (ver. 15). "He who knew no sin was made sin for us. The Lord laid upon Him the iniquity of us all." And, as the Representative of the sinful race with whom He so mysteriously allied Himself, His first act, on emerging into His public life and ministry, is to present Himself for baptism.

14. And John forbad Him (R.V. "would have hindered Him"). The sign by which John was to know Him to be the Messiah had not yet been given (John 1. 33), and it is not certain that they had ever previously met. But the sight of Him was enough. In a moment John recognised His transcendent greatness, and said, with involuntary shrinking, I have need to be baptized of Thee, and comest Thou to me? As John beholds Him, he sees shining through His deep humility the high majesty of the Holy One; and that he had an inward token thereof, constitutes his own dignity. He has baptized many, has seen, and in some sense seen through, men of all kinds; but no one like this had as yet come before him. "Who am I in Thy presence, that I in the office and ministry of baptism should be placed over Thee?"—S.

15. Suffer it to be so now—as yet. "Now for a time thou seemest to be the greater, who consecrates the less—soon, as is fit, will our relative position be reversed"—S. For thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness—that is, to conform to the whole will of God, whether revealed in His word or in His ordinances. "It was sufficient for our Lord that such was the Divine will that He should be baptized of John, and John, though overwhelmed with a just sense of his inferiority, should baptize Him; and it was the righteousness of both to obey"—R. W. "It becometh every messenger of God to observe all His righteous ordinances. But the particular meaning of our Lord seems to be, that it becometh us to do (me to receive baptism, and you to administer it) in order to fulfil, that is, that I may fully perform, every part of the righteous law of God, and the commission He hath given Me"—WESLEY.

That was the single principle which governed His whole life. (Ps. 40. 7, 8.)

16. When He was baptized—(S. Luke adds, "and praying")—He went up straightway out of the water. "It is manifest that the descent of the Holy Spirit did not take place during the administration of the rite to Him, which is a clear proof that it was a distinct act of God wholly unconnected with the baptism of John; so that this baptism was not a means of communicating this grace; for John baptized not with the Holy Ghost; and it was no doubt to mark this circumstance that His departing from the water immediately after His baptism is noticed." Lo, the heavens were opened. S. Mark, R.V. "The heavens were rent asunder." (Comp. Isa. 64. 1.) Unto Him, and He saw. This seems to mean Jesus saw, but the Baptist "bare record" that he also "saw the Spirit descending from heaven," and that he had been divinely instructed to take this as a sign of His dignity as the Messiah (John 1. 32, 33). Like a dove. "This may mean no more than a defined visible appearance; and the comparison may be between the motion of this appearance in its descent, and the motion of a dove when alighting. But whether this view be taken, or, which is at least equally probable, that the effulgence which broke from the heavens had the similitude of a dove, the conclusion is the same; for, whether by the shape or the peculiarity of the motion, the idea of a dove was strongly and intentionally excited in the mind of John; the reason of which is justly and beautifully conceived by Archbishop Leighton: 'The Holy Ghost descended upon the apostles in the shape of fire; there was something to be purged in them; but on Christ as a dove, because there was no need of cleansing or purging anything. That, therefore, was a symbol of the spotless purity of His nature'"—R. W.

17. Lo a voice from heaven. As on two other occasions (ch. 17. 5; John 12. 28). This is (Mark and Luke, "Thou art") My beloved Son. In a sense peculiar to Him (Ps. 2. 7). In whom I am well pleased. This term denotes perfect and eternal complacency. (Comp. Isa. 42. 1.) "We have here a glorious manifestation of the ever-blessed Trinity: the Father speaking from heaven, the Son spoken to, the Holy Ghost descending upon Him. In whom I delight—What an encomium is this! How poor to this are all other kinds of praise! To be the pleasure, the delight of God, this is praise indeed! This is true glory; this is the highest, the brightest light that virtue can appear in"—WESLEY.

"This was not a sudden and temporary descent of the Spirit, but a permanent, though special, anointing of the Saviour for His holy office. 'It abode upon Him.' And, from this moment His ministry and mediatorial work (in the active official sense) began. But we must not imagine any change in the nature or person of our Lord to have taken place at His baptism. The anointing and crowning are but signs of the official assumption of the power which the King has, by a right, independent of, and higher than, these"—A. "At the same time we cannot but believe (so far as we realise the perfect humanity of Christ) that Christ at this crisis first became conscious, as man, of the power of a Spirit within Him corresponding to the new form of His work"—S. C.

CHAPTER IV.

Vers. 1–11. THE TEMPTATION. (Mark 1.12, 13; Luke 4. 1–13.)—1. Then—that is, as S. Mark states, immediately after the baptism—was Jesus led up of the Spirit—(S. Mark, "The Spirit driveth Him"). Evidently meaning urged Him by a peculiarly powerful impulse, as implied also in the statement of S. Luke, that He was "full of the Holy Ghost." Yet He willingly yielded to the constraint, for the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of Christ Himself (Rom. 8. 9). Into the wilderness. What wilderness is unknown, and is of no importance. To be tempted of the devil. "Before proceeding to the details of this narrative, it should be remarked at the outset that there is only one way of understanding it as a whole, namely, as the history of a real occurrence, of an actual temptation of our Lord by the devil as a person"—S. C. The Greek word devil has the same meaning as the Hebrew word Satan, which is used by S. Mark, namely, accuser, slanderer (Rev. 2. 10). This name itself suggests the nature of the conflict through which our Lord passed. He is no sooner consecrated to the work of establishing the kingdom of heaven upon earth, as the great end of His mission, than that work is made to appear unreasonable, hopeless, impossible. His absolute submission to the Divine will and purpose is thus awfully tried, tested, put to the proof.

2. And when He had fasted forty days and forty nights. "As did Moses, the giver of the Law, and Elijah, the great restorer of it"—WESLEY. (Ex. 34. 28; 1 Kings 19. 8.) He was afterward—not during the forty days, so all-absorbing was the conflict—an hungered. Here we are called to recognise the perfect humanity of Christ. His oneness with us as the Man, and the intense reality of His temptations.

3. When the tempter came to Him—exhausted, faint, alone, with everything around Him to depress—he said—referring to the recent testimony out of the open heavens—If Thou be the Son of God—appealing to His physical wants and weakness under the semblance of sympathy with Him, and putting Him in remembrance of His might as a divine person—command that these stones be made bread. Since Thou art the Son of God, possessed of unlimited power, provide for Thine own bodily needs. A most subtle temptation to distrust of God.

4. It is written (Deut. 8. 3), Man shall not live by bread alone. "The Israelites had been suffered to hunger, and had been fed with manna that they might learn to depend on God, who could support life by any means He pleased. And this had been written, and stood as a lesson for the guidance of this people in all ages. He, the Son of God, did not require to be taught that lesson, for it was impossible that His will should diverge from the will of the Father, as the severe testing He was then undergoing abundantly proved. But He 'foils the tempter as man for man.' Thus Christ answered, and thus we may answer, all the suggestions of the devil. By every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God—that is, by whatever God commands to sustain Him. Therefore, it is not needful I should work a miracle to procure bread, without any intimation of My Father's will"—WESLEY.

5. Taketh Him. S. Luke, "brought, or led, Him." How, is not stated, but there is nothing to indicate supernatural means. The holy city. "So Jerusalem was commonly called, being the place God had peculiarly chosen for Himself. On the battlement of the temple—probably over the king's gallery, which was of such a prodigious height, that no one could look down from the top of it without making himself giddy"—WESLEY.

6. Cast Thyself down. This is a temptation to presumption, as the former was to distrust. This unfaltering trust of Thine is right. Here then is another opportunity of showing it; and since Thou appealest to Scripture for Thy guidance, take this promise for Thy encouragement—He shall give His angels charge concerning Thee (Ps. 91. 11). The suggestion is to put the promise of God to the proof, and to pervert trust into reckless confidence and pride. Possibly also the thought was suggested that He might at once convince the worshippers below that He was "the Lord whom they sought, and who should come suddenly to His temple" (Mal. 3. 1). "In the priests' courts below Him the morning sacrifice has been offered. The massive temple gates are slowly opening, and the blast of the priests' silver trumpets is summoning Israel to begin a new day by appearing before their Lord. Now then let Him descend, heaven-borne, into the midst of priests and people. What shouts of acclamation would greet His appearance! What homage of worship would be His! The goal can at once be reached, and that at the head of believing Israel"—E.

7. It is written again—"in another place" (Deut. 6. 16). Scripture is consistent with itself, and one saying must be explained by another. Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. Thou shalt not put the faithfulness of God to the test by a rash demand for the exercise of His power. "And thus once more Jesus not only is not overcome, but He overcomes by absolute submission to the will of God."

8. All the kingdoms of the world—(S. Luke adds, "in a moment of time"). A kind of instantaneous vision, clearly with allusion to the prophetic descriptions of the universal reign of the Messiah, as they were understood by the Jews of that period.

9. All these things will I give Thee. "For they are in my power" (Luke). In a true sense, alas! (John 12. 31; Eph. 2. 2; 6. 12). If Thou wilt fall down and worship me. One act of homage, and Thy aspirations as the heir to David's throne, and the fulfilment of all those promises of unlimited dominion which belong to Thee, shall be fully realised.

10. Get thee hence, Satan. For the first time calling him by his true name, the adversary of God and truth and righteousness. "By this temptation Satan, like Simon afterwards, stood between the Lord and His Cross; hence the unspeakable majesty of this first word of authority, which for once sought its answer deeper than Scripture, 'Get thee behind Me, Satan!' (ch. 16. 23). But the tempter had aimed to pervert His pure humanity from the supreme worship of God; hence the other words which he heard as he retreated, and which told him that man had vanquished him again, For it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve"—POPE. (Deut. 6. 16.)

11. Behold, angels came and ministered to Him. "He who would not turn stones into bread was now fed; He who would not call upon angels to uphold Him in rash confidence was now sustained by them; He who demanded worship for God alone, received homage from those servants of God"—S.

"Subjoined observations: 1. This account must have been given to the apostles by our Lord Himself, which is a sufficient declaration of its deep and solemn importance. 2. It demonstrates the absolute sinlessness of Christ; therefore the impossibility of the suggestions to sin having originated in His own mind; therefore the existence and personality of the devil. 3. It teaches us that no follower of Christ, however spiritual and holy, is beyond the assaults of the tempter, and also that temptation is not sin. 4. It shows that temptation to sin may be a form of spiritual discipline, that we may therefore be divinely led unto it, though not into it. 5. It exhibits to us the special forms which temptation may be expected to take in the experience of Christ's followers, namely, self-dependence and distrust of God; self-complacent confidence in the unauthorised expectation of Divine favour; and self-gratification in 'the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life.' 6. It teaches us to repel temptation by the wise use of 'the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God' (Eph. 6. 17). 'It is written.' Thus Christ answered, and thus we may answer all the suggestions of the devil"—WESLEY.

Vers. 12–25. BEGINNING OF OUR LORD'S MINISTRY IN GALILEE. (Mark 1. 14–20; Luke 4. 14, 15.)—12. He departed (R.V. "withdrew") into Galilee. "This journey was not immediately after His temptation. He first went from Judea into Galilee (John 1. 43; 2. 1); then into Judea again, and celebrated the Passover at Jerusalem (John 2. 13). He baptized in Judea while John was baptizing at Ænon (John 3. 22, 23). All this time John was at liberty (ver. 24). But the Pharisees being offended (John 4. 1) and John put in prison, He then took this journey into Galilee"—WESLEY.

13. Capernaum. The village of Nahum, supposed to have taken its name from the prophet Nahum, who probably resided there. Its exact site is uncertain, but the majority of recent explorers identify it with that of Tell Hûm, on the north-west coast of the Lake of Gennesaret. "Henceforth Capernaum is to be considered as Christ's place of residence. Hence it is called 'His own city.' It was upon 'the coast' of 'the sea' of Galilee, and gave Him easy access by water to many very populous districts, where He delivered many of His discourses, and wrought His astonishing miracles; but from this country He went up thrice in the year, at the great feasts, to Jerusalem"—R. W.

14. That it might be fulfilled. (Isa. 9. 1.) This prophecy now began to be fulfilled in its original messianic and evangelical meaning.

15. Galilee of the Gentiles. So called because colonised by a mixed heathen population when the Israelites were in captivity in Babylon.

16. The people which sat in darkness. (Isa. 42. 6, 7; Luke 2. 32.) "Here is a beautiful gradation: first they 'walked,' then they 'sat in darkness,' and lastly in the region of the shadow of death"—WESLEY.

The whole passage (Isa. 8. 11 to 9. 7) has direct reference to the Messiah, "the Light of the world."

17. From that time Jesus began to preach. "He had preached before, both to Jews and Samaritans (John 4. 41, 45). But from this time began His solemn, stated preaching. Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Although it is the peculiar business of Christ to establish the kingdom of heaven in the hearts of men, yet it is observable He begins His preaching in the same words with John the Baptist; because the repentance which John taught still was, and ever will be, the necessary preparation for that inward kingdom"—WESLEY.

18. The sea of Galilee. "This was otherwise called the Sea or Lake of Tiberias, from the city of that name which was built on its western shore by Herod the Tetrarch, and so named in honour of Tiberius Cæsar. This inland sea had also the appellation of the Lake of Gennesaret; and in the Old Testament is called 'the Sea of Cinnereth.' It is between seventeen and eighteen miles in length, and near six in breadth. It is surrounded with a varied scenery of mountains and valleys, is generally smooth and tranquil, but subject to storms of wind suddenly beating down upon it from the mountains"—R. W. Saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother. "In John 1. 35–40 we have furnished to us the reason why these two brethren were so ready to arise and follow one whom, if we had this account only, we should infer they had never before seen"—A.

19. Follow Me. They first became disciples of Christ on the occasion described by John (ch. 1), but had returned to their occupation as fishermen; from this time they followed Him constantly.

23. Jesus went about all Galilee. (Mark 1. 38, 39; Luke 4. 14–44.) All the Evangelists, however, may not refer to the same journey. Our Lord probably made many tours of Galilee. Teaching in their synagogues. (Ch. 9. 35; Luke 4. 15–44.) Synagogues or meeting-houses owe their origin to the long captivity of the Jews in Babylon. They were places of assembly where all the regular forms of Jewish worship were observed, except the offering of sacrifices, which could take place only in Jerusalem. In structure they were made to resemble, as nearly as possible, the Tabernacle and the Temple. At the end pointing towards Jerusalem, which was called the Sanctuary, was an ark which contained a copy of the Law and rolls of the Prophets; the lid of this ark or chest was called a mercy-seat, and usually a vail hung before it. In the centre was a raised platform, which had seats (the chief seats) for the ruler and elders, who formed a kind of council (ch. 23. 6; Mark 12. 39), and also a pulpit, in which the officer who conducted the service stood to read, and sat to teach and exhort. Each synagogue had its almoner or deacon, and its minister or servant (Luke 4. 20). The officers of the synagogue had also certain judicial functions, and it was often itself a place of trial (Luke 12. 11; 21. 12), and even of the punishment of scourging (ch. 10. 17; Mark 13. 9). After the return of the Jews at the end of the Exile they built synagogues in every part of Palestine, and afterwards wherever colonies of Jews resided in Syria, Asia Minor, and throughout the Roman Empire. "These important institutions, where a congregation was always to be met with on the Sabbath, and often at other times, and where liberty of exhortation and of interpretation was allowed to qualified persons, our Lord availed Himself of to teach His heavenly doctrine; and itinerated through all Galilee, 'preaching the gospel of the kingdom.' It was also by ministering in synagogues that the apostles gathered churches in different parts of the world; and when Christian congregations were formed, they followed, during the first ages, nearly the same mode of worship as that of the synagogues, with the addition of the Lord's Supper"—R. W. Preaching—heralding or proclaiming publicly—the gospel of the kingdom. The good tidings respecting the kingdom of heaven. (Mark 1. 4; ch. 24. 14.) "The gospel, that is, the joyous message, is the proper name of our religion; as will be amply verified in all who earnestly and perseveringly embrace it"—WESLEY.

24. All Syria. "The whole province, of which the Jewish country was only a small part"—WESLEY. Here probably the large district on the north and east of Palestine. Possessed with devils. These are distinguished from persons suffering from natural maladies. Yet in some cases the symptoms appear to have been the same. "Thus we find violent madness (Mark 5. 4; Luke 8. 29), epilepsy (Mark 9. 18; Luke 9. 39), dumbness (ch. 9. 32; Luke 11. 14), blindness (ch. 12. 22), ascribed in different persons to the same cause. This variety of phenomena is entirely opposed to the view of those critics who maintained that the belief in demoniacal possession was merely a vulgar error concerning a particular class of diseases. In the scriptural account these visitations are distinguished from other diseases, not by their symptoms but by their cause. They are represented as a power exercised by the evil spirit on the lower vital functions, the nerves and bodily organs, producing results varying in different cases, sometimes peculiar, sometimes similar to those arising from natural causes"—S. C.

25. There followed Him great multitudes. (Luke 6. 17–19.) Decapolis. "A tract of land on the east side of the Sea of Galilee, in which were ten cities near each other"—WESLEY.

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.

THE SUBJECTS, LAWS, AND PRIVILEGES OF THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

CHAPTER V.

Vers. 1–16. THE CHARACTERS OF THE SUBJECTS OF THE KINGDOM AND THEIR BLESSEDNESS. (Luke 6. 20–23.)—1. In a (R. V. "the") mountain. The mountainous country—the high land bordering on the Lake. His disciples came unto Him. Probably they "sat in a semicircle at His feet as was customary with the disciples of Jewish doctors," the multitude standing behind them. That the great sermon which follows is "one continued discourse, and not, as some have supposed, a collection of fragments, delivered at different times, is manifest both from the introductory and the concluding remarks of the Evangelist: 'Multitudes' follow Him to the mountain; they listen and express their astonishment when He had 'ended these sayings'; and when He was 'come down from the mountain, great multitudes' still follow Him. We must therefore conclude that all which S. Matthew has inserted between these historical remarks as 'the sayings' of our Lord, were at that time delivered consecutively"—R. W.

2. And He opened His mouth. A phrase which always denotes a set and solemn discourse. And taught them. To bless men, to make men happy, was the great business for which our Lord came into the world. And accordingly He here pronounces eight blessings together, annexing them to so many steps in Christianity. Knowing that happiness is our common aim, and that an innate instinct continually urges us to the pursuit of it, He in the kindest manner applies to that instinct, and directs it to its proper object. Though all men desire, yet few attain, happiness, because they seek it where it is not to be found. Our Lord therefore begins His divine institution, which is the complete art of happiness, by laying down, before all that have ears to hear, the true, and only true, method of acquiring it. Observe the benevolent condescension of our Lord. He seems, as it were, to lay aside His supreme authority as our Legislator, that He may the better act the part of our Friend and Saviour. Instead of using the lofty style, in positive commands, He, in a more gentle and engaging way, insinuates His will and our duty, by pronouncing those happy who comply with it.

3. Blessed. Our Lord is describing the characters of His real followers, the citizens of His heavenly kingdom; and so He designates successively their characters, beginning with that which first manifests itself, and going from stage to stage of spiritual progress, He pronounces each to be blessed—deeply, truly happy—an element of blessedness in itself, and blessed for a reason which He assigns. The poor in spirit. The humble (Isa. 57. 15; 66. 2). "Poverty of spirit implies a penitential sense of our guilt as sinners, and a deep conviction of our unworthiness and natural imbecility in all things relating to our salvation, accompanied by an entire dependence upon God for counsel, strength, and grace. It is the root of all true faith or trust in God"—R. W. There is an evident allusion here, and throughout the description, to the false notions of the Jews respecting Messiah's kingdom and its subjects. For theirs is, by a peculiar right, the kingdom of heaven. S. Luke says simply, "Blessed be ye poor," a contradiction of all Jewish conceptions, "for yours is the kingdom of God." (Jas. 2. 5.)

4. They that mourn. (Isa. 61. 3; Ezek. 7. 16.) Clearly the penitent on account of sin are specially intended, but also those who sorrow under the pressure of testing affliction, and who mourn in sympathy with them that mourn. For they shall be comforted. "More solidly and deeply even in this world, and eternally in heaven"—WESLEY.

In Luke, "Blessed are ye that weep now; for ye shall laugh." (John 16. 20; 2 Cor. 1. 7.)

5. The meek. The resigned under suffering, and the unruffled under provocation. (Ch. 11. 29; 2 Cor. 10. 1; 1 Pet. 3. 4.) For they—not the ambitious and restless—shall inherit the earth. (Ps. 37. 11.) "The usual dividers and allotters of the earth being mighty and proud conquerors, and the Messiah being expected as such a conqueror, this announcement, that the meek should inherit the earth, struck at the root of the temporal expectations of power and wealth in the Messiah's kingdom"—A. (Dan. 7. 27.)

6. Hunger and thirst after righteousness. (Ps. 107. 9; Isa. 41. 17.) "Out of humility, sorrow, weakness, grows finally greatness of soul, the sanctified and true loftiness of desire which aspires earnestly towards that which alone is right"—S. "Here the strong desires of the mind are represented by the appetites of the body, a metaphor common in all languages. Righteousness is to be taken in the sense of holiness; which consists in the entire renewal of the soul after the image of God; which cannot be attained without vehement desires, prayers, and efforts, and with which all those shall be abundantly satisfied who thus seek it. In them there shall be no lack of any virtue to complete the full and mature character of a true Christian"—R. W. They shall be filled. (Ps. 17. 15; 145. 7; Isa. 64. 5; 65. 13; comp. Rom. 1. 17; 10. 4-10; 1 Cor. 1. 20.)

7. The merciful. "To be merciful implies a sympathising regard to the miseries of others; liberality in relieving their distresses according to our utmost power; the ready forgiveness of offences, and the remission of obligations due to ourselves, when the parties are unable to discharge them"—R. W. This element of character presupposes the attainment of those already described. The man whose longings after righteousness are satisfied in his renewal in righteousness, after the image of Him who created him, is supposed to show that he dwells in God, therefore in love. For they shall obtain mercy. (Ps. 18. 25; 41. 1, 2.) "Whatever mercy therefore we desire from God, the same let us show to our brethren. He will repay us a thousandfold the love we bear to any for His sake"—WESLEY. (Luke 6. 37.)

8. Pure in heart. (Ps. 24. 3, 4; Heb. 12. 14; 1 John 3. 2.) "The sanctified; they who love God with all their hearts. They shall see God—in all things here; hereafter in glory"—WESLEY. (Comp. 1 John 1. 6, 7; 3. 6; 3 John 11; Rev. 22. 4.)

9. The peacemakers. (Ps. 34. 14.) "They that, out of love to God and man, do all possible good to all men. Peace, in the Scripture sense, implies all blessings, temporal and eternal. They shall be called the children of God—shall be acknowledged such by God and men"—WESLEY.

"God is the God of peace"; peacemakers shall therefore be recognised as His sons. (Rom. 15. 33; 2 Cor. 13. 11; Eph. 5. 1, 2.) This sevenfold delineation of the distinctive characters of the subjects of the kingdom of heaven is complete in itself. The other benedictions which follow are confirmatory of it. "Through this whole discourse we cannot but observe the most exact method which can possibly be conceived. Every paragraph, every sentence, is closely connected both with that which precedes and that which follows it. And is not this the pattern for every Christian preacher? If any then are able to follow it without any premeditation, well; if not, let them not dare to preach without it. No rhapsody, no incoherency, whether the things spoken be true or false, comes of the Spirit of Christ"—WESLEY.

10. For righteousness' sake. (1 Pet. 3. 13, 14.) "That is, because they have, or follow after, the righteousness here described. He that is truly a righteous man, he that mourns, and he that is 'pure in heart,' yea, all 'that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution'"—WESLEY. (2 Tim. 3. 12.)

For theirs is the kingdom of heaven. The same promise as that given to the "poor in spirit" (ver. 3), and to be understood in the same sense. "Theirs is"—not merely shall be hereafter—"the kingdom" which our Lord was then establishing on earth. They are already within that kingdom, and "their immediate reward is a more intimate fellowship with God, and richer internal consolations. 'As our afflictions abound, our consolations abound.' In this sense the kingdom of heaven may be truly said to be theirs, who are 'persecuted for righteousness' sake'; though our Lord ultimately refers, as in the twelfth verse, to the rewards of another life"—R. W.

11. Blessed are ye. Our Lord here assumes the form of direct address to His disciples, identifying His cause and theirs with the cause of righteousness, the righteousness which is His. (John 15. 19.) "Revile when present, say all evil when you are absent"—WESLEY.

For My sake—because for "righteousness' sake."

12. Your reward in heaven. "Even over and above the happiness which naturally results from holiness." "If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him." The righteousness which believers have and manifest in Christ, and which constitutes them citizens of His kingdom, may expose them to persecution, but its attainment is their title and personal meetness for the City wherein "dwelleth righteousness." (2 Cor. 4. 17.) For so persecuted they—the rebellious Jews—the prophets. "For instance, Jeremiah was scourged (Jer. 20. 2), Zechariah, son of Jehoiada, was stoned (2 Chron. 24. 21), Isaiah, according to Jewish tradition, was sawn asunder by Manasseh"—A.

13. Ye whose characters I have described—"not apostles or ministers and teachers only, but all who are truly righteous—are the salt of the earth, and are to season others"—WESLEY. (Mark 9. 50; Luke 14. 34, 35.) As the special use of salt is to preserve from corruption, so the faithful followers of Christ check, by their example and influence, the spread of moral corruption in human society, and exert upon it a purifying reactive power. For this end it is their duty to mingle with men in daily life; not to "go out of the world," but to be "a holy nation, a peculiar people" in it. But if the salt have lost its savour—its taste and pungency, which was quite possible in the case of the salt to which our Lord would be understood to refer—it is thenceforth good for nothing, etc. "The savourless salt represents those who have lost the vital influence of piety. Neither does their conversation savour of the things of God; nor do their conduct and spirit exert a sanctifying influence upon others. Their profession may remain; the doctrines of Christ may still generally be held; all the external signs of piety may be exhibited by them—but the spirit, the pungency, is gone. The dry and sapless branch, and the tasteless and unsavoury salt, are their proper emblems. The expression 'wherewith shall it be salted,' appears not to have been rightly understood by those interpreters who think that it imports that the savour of grace can never be regained, and that therefore the case of hopeless apostates is represented under this figure. It was rather the intention of our Lord to impress His disciples with the sin and danger of being useless to mankind, through the neglect of personal and influential piety. 'Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it,' that is, the earth, 'be salted?' or purified. To be useless, is, in fact, to be injurious; and he who neglects his own salvation is a hindrance to many others"—R. W.

14. The light of the world. "Yet only in a lower and derivative sense; Christ Himself being 'the true Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world' (John 1. 9; 8. 12)"—A. Light is an emblem of truth, purity, benevolence, and activity. In all these senses Christ is the Light of men (John 1. 4). His true followers are said to be "children of light," to be "light in the Lord," and are therefore charged to "shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life" (Phil. 2. 15, 16). A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid—"probably pointing to that on the brow of the opposite hill." "Love cannot be hid any more than light; and, least of all, when it shines forth in action, when ye exercise yourselves in the labour of love, in beneficence of every kind. As well may men think to hide a city as to hide a Christian; yea, as well may they conceal a city set upon a hill, as a holy, zealous, active lover of God and man"—WESLEY.

15. Light a candle (lamp), etc. "The family lamp, placed upon its stand, and giving light to the family, seems to indicate the duty of domestic piety and zeal. Their houses were illuminated all night long by lamps placed upon a large 'stand,' or, as our translation calls it, a candlestick, fixed in the ground, from which the smaller lamps were lighted, which were to be used in the other apartments. Such is the office of the head of every Christian family, to give light to all that are in the house, by his instructions and example"—R. W.

16. Let your light so shine. Even so, in like manner, this refers to each of the emblems used. Like the Law, like the city on a hill, like the lamp on a stand, so let your light shine. "It is important to observe that it is not said, we must wish ourselves to shine; but as the translation well expresses it, that we should 'let' freely, without covering or hindrance, 'our light,' that which has by grace been given to us and exists within us, shine before men, according to its own nature and the will of Him who kindled it"—S. And glorify your Father which is in heaven. (1 Pet. 2. 12.) "'Your Father,' not yourselves. 'To glorify God' here does not merely signify to give praise to Him, but along with that to confess the truth and divine origin of a religion teaching such truths, and raising men to so high characters of holiness, and under these views and impressions to embrace it"—R. W.

So shine before men, that—in order that—without any thought of self, ye may glorify God; guiding others to the knowledge and experience of the power of the gospel quietly, it may be "like a fair taper, illuminating everything near it, but casting a comely shadow around itself."

Vers. 17–48. THE RELATION OF THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN TO THE MOSAIC ECONOMY: THE KINGDOM THE FULFILMENT OF THE LAW.—17. That I am come to destroy—to invalidate or do away with—the Law, or the Prophets. (Isa. 42. 21; Rom. 5. 21; 10. 4; Gal. 3. 24.) The Moral Law most clearly, as in ch. 7. 12: "The Law whose substance is found in the ten commandments 'written and engraven in stones,' and enforced in the writings of the Prophets"—R. W. (Ch. 22. 40; Luke 16. 16.) But to fulfil—to complete and make perfect. "To establish, illustrate, and explain its highest meaning both by my life and doctrine"—WESLEY.

18. For verily I say unto you—a strong affirmation of something about to be spoken, which our Lord alone ever used—till heaven and earth pass (away)—till the end of the world (Jer. 33. 20, 21)—one jot or one tittle—the smallest characters in the Hebrew alphabet—shall in no wise pass (away) from the Law, till all be fulfilled (R.V. "till all things be accomplished"). The word translated "fulfilled" is not the same as that in ver. 17. The meaning is till the whole purpose of the Law shall be effected. "For the Law has its effect when the rewards are given, and the punishments annexed to it inflicted, as well as when its precepts are obeyed"—WESLEY.

19. Whosoever therefore shall break—that is, annul or relax the obligation of—one of these least commandments—"so accounted by men—and shall teach—either by word or example—shall be the least—that is, shall have no part therein"—WESLEY. The kingdom of heaven, in its present relation to the Law, and to the heavenly kingdom hereafter. (Jas. 2. 10.)

20. Exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees. "Described in the sequel of this discourse"—WESLEY. (See ch. 23. 23–36; Phil. 3. 9; Heb. 10. 16.)

21. Ye have heard—from the scribes reciting the Law—that it was said by (R.V. "to") them of old time, Thou shalt not kill. (Ex. 20. 13; Deut 5. 17.) "And they interpreted this, as all the other commandments, barely of the outward act. The judgment. The Jews had in every city a court of twenty-three men, who could sentence a criminal to be strangled. But the Sanhedrim only (the great Council which sat at Jerusalem, consisting of seventy-two men) could sentence to the more terrible death of stoning. That was called 'the judgment'; this, 'the council'"—WESLEY. (Deut. 19. 12; Ezra 7. 26.)

22. "But I say unto you. Which of the prophets ever spake thus? Their language is, 'Thus saith the Lord.' Who hath authority to use this language, but the one Lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy? Whosoever is angry with his brother. Some copies add, 'without a cause'; but this is utterly foreign to the whole scope and tenor of our Lord's discourse [omitted from the R.V.]. If He had only forbidden the being angry without a cause, there was no manner of need of that solemn declaration, 'I say unto you'; for the scribes and Pharisees themselves said as much as this. Even they taught, men ought not to be angry 'without a cause.' So that this righteousness does not 'exceed' theirs. But Christ teaches that we ought not for any cause to be so angry as to call any man Raca, or 'fool.' We ought not for any cause to be angry at the person of the sinner, but at his sin only. Happy world, were this plain and necessary distinction thoroughly understood, remembered, practised! 'Raca' means a silly man, a trifler. Whosoever shall say, Thou fool—shall revile or seriously reproach any man. (Ps. 14. 1.) Our Lord specifies three degrees of murder, each liable to a sorer punishment than the other; not indeed from men, but from God. Hell fire. In the valley of Hinnom (whence the word in the original is taken) the children were used to be burned alive to Moloch. It was afterwards made a receptacle for the filth of the city, where continual fires were kept to consume it. And it is probable, if any criminal were burned alive, it was in this accursed and horrible place. Therefore, both as to its former and latter state, it was a fit emblem of hell. It must here signify a degree of future punishment, as much more dreadful than those incurred in the two former cases, as burning alive is more dreadful than either strangling, death by the sword, or stoning"—WESLEY.

23, 24. Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar (R.V. "if thou art offering thy gift at the altar")—if even thou art already engaged in the most solemn act of religious worship,—"and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee. On any of the preceding accounts, for any unkind thought or word; any that did not spring from love"—WESLEY.

Leave there thy gift. "For neither thy gift nor thy prayer will atone for thy want of love: but this will make them both an abomination before God"—WESLEY. (Hosea 6. 6; Prov. 15. 8; 21. 3.)

25. Agree with thine adversary (at law) quickly. (Luke 12. 58.) "The whole of this verse is the earthly example of a spiritual duty which is understood and runs parallel with it. The sense may be given. As in worldly affairs, it is prudent to make up a matter with an adversary before judgment is passed, which may deliver a man to a vain and rigorous imprisonment, so reconciliation with an offended brother in this life is absolutely necessary before his wrong cry against us to the great Judge, and we be cast into eternal condemnation"—A.

26. Verily I say unto thee, etc. "These words, as in the earthly example, they imply future liberation, because an earthly debt can be paid in most cases, so in the spiritual counterpart they amount to a negation of it, because the debt can never be discharged"—A.

27, 28. Ye have heard, etc. (Job. 31. 1; Prov. 6. 25.) "That the guilt of secret inclinations to sin was concluded from the letter of the Law, by the ancient Jews, appears from many passages in the Old Testament, and from the manifest strugglings and prayers of the pious against all 'secret sins.' The law prohibiting adultery would therefore be understood to prohibit also all impure desires; but it was now explicitly enacted, so to speak, by the great Lawgiver Himself, that the desire of sin is sin; and that he who indulges that desire comes under the penalty of the Law as certainly as he who commits an outward violation of it"—R. W.

"Our Lord, making perfect the Law, gives the full import of the commandment as condemning the beginning no less than the completion of the sin"—S. C.

29, 30. If thy right eye offend thee (R.V. "causeth thee to stumble") pluck it out. (Ch. 18. 8, 9; Mark 9. 43–48.) "Whatever, therefore, becomes an occasion of our falling from a state of purity into sin; whatever would lead us into criminal entanglements of our consciences and affections, must be resolutely renounced, at the expense of every sacrifice, however painful or costly"—R. W.

31, 32. A writing of divorcement. (Deut. 24. 1; Luke 16. 18; 1 Cor. 7. 10.) "Divorces had been long frequent among the Jews, and that for trivial causes; and the general interpretation of the Law had introduced a laxity far beyond its intention. Here then our Lord, in His capacity of the Lawgiver of His own dispensation, settles this question also—a question of the highest importance to the institution of marriage, which is the source of all the domestic virtues, and the fountain of public morals. He allows the bill of divorce, but restrains it absolutely to cases which directly and essentially violate the marriage covenant"—R. W.

33–36. Thou shalt not forswear thyself—that is, swear falsely or commit perjury. (Lev. 19. 12; Num. 30. 2; Deut. 23. 21–23.) But I say unto you, Swear not at all, etc. "Our Lord here refers to the promise made to the 'pure in heart,' of seeing God in all things; and points out a false doctrine of the scribes, which arose from their not thus seeing God. What He forbids is, the swearing at all (1) by any creature; (2) in our ordinary conversation, both of which the scribes and Pharisees taught to be perfectly innocent"—WESLEY.

"He teaches, that to swear by any of the creatures is, in fact, to swear by God who made and preserves them; and that the violation of such oaths was as truly an act of perjury as when the name of God was directly appealed to. It is a beautiful observation of Law, in reference to this passage: 'How sacred the whole frame of the world is, how all things are to be considered as God's, and referred to Him, is fully taught by our Lord in the case of oaths. Here you see all things in the whole order of nature, from the highest heaven to the smallest hair, are always to be considered, not separately as they are in themselves, but as in some relation to God'"—R. W.

37. Yea, yea; Nay, nay—simply affirm or deny—cometh of evil—"the evil or the evil one." (Jas. 5. 12.) All oaths come of evil. Even judicial oaths, though not evil in themselves, come of the evil of distrust in human society; and the use of oaths in ordinary discourse is essential evil.

38. An eye for an eye, etc. (Ex. 21. 24; Lev. 24. 20; Deut. 19. 18–20.) This principle of retaliation, so seemingly equitable and so generally acted upon in early times, among all nations, Moses adopted for the administration of justice by the courts of law, but the Jews perverted it into a sanction of private revenge. It is against this that our Lord's teaching is here especially directed.

39. Resist not evil (R.V. "him that is evil"), retaliate not. (Rom. 12. 17.) "The Greek word translated 'resist' signifies 'standing in battle array,' 'striving for victory.' If a man strike thee on the right cheek—return not evil for evil; yea, turn to him the other—rather than revenge thyself"—WESLEY.

"It is quite beside the purpose to say that these precepts of our Lord's are too highly pitched for humanity, and so to find an excuse for violating them. If we were disciples of His in the true sense, these precepts would, in their 'spirit,' as indicative of frames of mind, be strictly observed"—A.

40, 41. Take away thy coat—thy tunic, or inner garment—let him have thy cloke also—thy more costly garment. This was frequently used by the poor as a coverlet by night, and the Law therefore forbade to retain it in pledge (Ex. 22. 26; comp. 1 Cor. 6. 7). The injunction is: "Where the damage is not great, choose rather to suffer it, though possibly it may on that account be repeated, than to demand 'an eye for an eye,' to enter into a rigorous prosecution of the offender. The meaning of the whole passage seems to be, rather than return evil for evil, when the wrong is purely personal, submit to one bodily wrong after another; give up one part of your goods after another; submit to one instance of compulsion after another. That the words are not literally to be understood appears from the behaviour of our Lord Himself (John 18. 22, 23)"—WESLEY. (See Prov. 3. 27; Gal. 6. 10; Phil. 2. 4; Heb. 13. 16; 1 Tim. 6. 18.)

42. Give to him that asketh thee, etc. (Deut. 15. 8.) This precept must be taken in its principle, not in its bare literal meaning. To give indiscriminately to every one that asks, and to lend to every one who desires to borrow, would be to do evil rather than good. Regard must be had also to our means. "Give and lend to any so far (but no farther, for God never contradicts Himself) as is consistent with thy engagements to thy creditors, thy family, and the household of faith"—WESLEY.

43. Thou shalt love thy neighbour (Lev. 19. 18; Deut. 23. 6), and hate thine enemy. "God spake the former part; the scribes added the latter"—WESLEY.

And how contrary this rabbinical gloss is to the principle and spirit of the Law appears from Ex. 23. 4, 5; Prov. 24. 17, 18; 25. 21; Job 31. 29.

44. Love your enemies. (Rom. 12. 14, 20.) Bless them that curse you. "Speak all the good you can to and of them who speak all evil to and of you. Repay love in thought, word, and deed, to those who hate you, and show it both in word and deed"—WESLEY.

Pray for them, etc. (Luke 23. 34; Acts 7. 60.)

45. That ye may be the children of your Father—"that is, that ye may continue and appear such before men and angels"—WESLEY.

That ye may show resemblance to Him. (Eph. 5. 1; comp. John 8. 39, 44, 46.)

46. The publicans "were officers of the revenue, farmers, or receivers of the public money; men employed by the Romans to gather the taxes and customs which they exacted of the nations they had conquered. These were generally odious for their extortion and oppression, and were reckoned by the Jews as the very scum of the earth"—WESLEY.

The men here and so frequently mentioned in the Gospels as the objects of scorn and odium were not the farmers of the customs, but the actual collectors—degraded Jews or heathen, who carried on their occupation with recklessness and cruelty. Even these men loved those who loved them. The love by which His followers, the subjects of the kingdom of heaven, were to be distinguished, was to be something very different from that.

47. Do not even the publicans so? (R.V. "Do not even the Gentiles so?"). "If not to salute be a heathen indifference, to hide hatred under outward civilities is a diabolical treachery. To pretend much love and affection for those for whom we have neither—to use toward them complimentary phrases, to which we affix no meaning but that they mean nothing, is highly offensive in the sight of that God by whom actions are weighed and words judged"—C. "Our Lord probably glances at those prejudices which different sects had against each other; and intimates, that He would not have His followers imbibe that narrow spirit. Would to God this had been more attended to among the unhappy divisions and subdivisions into which His Church has been crumbled; and that we might at least advance so far as cordially to embrace our brethren in Christ, of whatever party or denomination they are!

48. "Therefore ye shall be perfect, as your Father who is in heaven is perfect. So the original runs, referring to all that holiness which is described in the foregoing verses, which our Lord in the beginning of the chapter recommends as happiness, and in the close of it as perfection. And how wise and gracious is this, to sum up, and as it were seal, all His commandments with a promise; even the proper promise of the gospel, that He will 'put those laws in our minds, and write them in our hearts'! He well knew how ready our unbelief would be to cry out, This is impossible! and therefore stakes upon it all the power, truth, and faithfulness of Him to whom all things are possible"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER VI.

Vers. 1–34. SPIRITUAL DUTIES IN THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN, MANIFESTING ITS RIGHTEOUSNESS.—1. Take heed that ye do not your alms (R.V. "that ye do not your righteousness") before men, to be seen of them. (Ps. 112. 9.) Righteousness, not alms, is the true teaching. "Barely the being seen, while we are doing any of these things, is a circumstance purely indifferent. But the doing them with this view, to be seen and admired, this is what our Lord condemns"—WESLEY.

This general charge to take heed that our motives and ends are right our Lord goes on to illustrate by examples.

2. Therefore—accepting this as a general rule—when thou doest thine alms, do not sound a trumpet before thee. (Rom. 12. 8.) Do not make self-consciously a display of thy benevolence. It is not likely that the trumpet was literally used on these occasions, but the meaning is obvious. Avoid ostentation. The hypocrites. Men who pretend to be what they are not. The Pharisees are no doubt intended though not named. They have their reward—in full, "all they will have; for they shall have none from God"—WESLEY.

3. Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth. "A proverbial expression for doing a thing secretly. Do it as secretly as is consistent—(1) With doing it at all; (2) with doing it in the most effectual manner"—WESLEY.

"Observe that the singular number is used throughout these instructions on the subject of almsgiving and prayer, and in these only these duties are essentially personal and individual"—C. S.

5. The synagogues. (See ch. 4. 23.) Which were houses of prayer, but the word may mean any place of assembly. And in the corners of the streets. There were fixed hours of prayer, and these hypocrites arranged their business so as to be at these appointed hours in the most public situations, as if by accident, and stood to repeat forms of prayer in the presence of the admiring crowd.

6. Enter into thy closet. (Ch. 24. 26.) A small room, usually in the upper part of the house—meaning, however, any place where secrecy can be secured.

7. Vain repetitions. (Eccles. 5. 2, 7.) As the heathen do. (1 Kings 18. 26; Acts 19. 34.) This caution is not directed against spending much time in private prayer, or the fervent repetition of the same words, for our Lord Himself did both (Luke 5. 12; ch. 26. 36–46); but against the rabbinical teaching that he who multiplies his prayers will be certainly heard. "To repeat any words without meaning them is certainly a vain repetition. Therefore we should be extremely careful, in all our prayers, to mean what we say; and to say only what we mean from the bottom of our hearts. The vain and heathenish repetitions which we are here warned against are most dangerous, and yet very common; which is a principal cause why so many who still profess religion are a disgrace to it. Indeed, all the words in the world are not equivalent to one holy desire. And the very best prayers are but vain repetitions, if they are not the language of the heart"—WESLEY.

8. Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of. (Luke 12. 30; John 16. 23–27.) "We do not pray to inform God of our wants. Omniscient as He is, He cannot be informed of anything which He knew not before: and He is always willing to relieve them. The chief thing wanting is, a fit disposition on our part to receive His grace and blessing. Consequently, one great office of prayer is, to produce such a disposition in us; to exercise our dependence on God; to increase our desire of the things we ask for; to make us so sensible of our wants, that we may never cease wrestling till we have prevailed for the blessing"—WESLEY.

9. After this manner. "He who best knew what we ought to pray for, and how we ought to pray; what matter of desire, what manner of address, would most please Himself, would best become us, has here dictated to us a most perfect and universal form of prayer, comprehending all our real wants, expressing all our lawful desires; a complete directory and full exercise of all our devotions"—WESLEY.

"This prayer consists of three parts—the preface, the petitions, and the conclusion. The preface, 'Our Father who art in heaven,' lays a general foundation for prayer; comprising what we must first know of God, before we can pray in confidence of being heard. It likewise points out to us that faith, humility, love of God and man, with which we are to approach God in prayer."

I. 9. Our Father. (Rom. 8. 15.) "A form of address almost unknown to the Old Covenant; now and then hinted at (Isa. 1. 2; Mal. 1. 6), but never brought out in its fulness, as indeed it could not be, till He was come by whom we have received the adoption of sons"—A.

"Our Father"—"Who art good and gracious to all, our Creator, our Preserver; the Father of our Lord, and of us in Him; Thy children by adoption and grace; not my Father only, who now cry unto Thee, but the Father of the universe, of angels and men. Who art in heaven—beholding all things, both in heaven and earth; knowing every creature, and all the works of every creature, and every possible event from everlasting to everlasting; the Almighty Lord and Ruler of all, superintending and disposing all things. 'In heaven.' Eminently there, but not there alone, seeing Thou fillest heaven and earth"—WESLEY.

II. (1) Hallowed be Thy name. (Deut. 28. 58; Ps. 111. 9; 139. 20.) The name of God is His character, as revealed and made known to men. May Thy character be revered and glorified! "Mayest Thou, O Father, be truly known by all intelligent beings, and with affections suitable to that knowledge! Mayest Thou be duly honoured, loved, feared, by all in heaven and in earth, by all angels and all men!"—WESLEY.

10. (2) Thy kingdom come. (Ch. 16. 19; Rev. 11. 15; 22. 17, 20.) "May Thy kingdom of grace come quickly, and swallow up all the kingdoms of the earth! May all mankind, receiving Thee, O Christ, for their King, truly believing in Thy name, be filled with righteousness, and peace, and joy; with holiness and happiness, till they are removed hence into Thy kingdom of glory, to reign with Thee for ever and ever"—WESLEY.

(3) Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. (Ps. 103. 19, 20; Isa. 11. 9; 40. 9–31; Rev. 21. 3, 22–27; 22. 3.) "May all the inhabitants of the earth do Thy will as willingly as the holy angels! May these do it continually even as they, without any interruption of their willing service; yea, and perfectly, as they! Mayest Thou, O Spirit of grace, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make them perfect in every good work to do Thy will, and work in them all that is well-pleasing in Thy sight"—WESLEY.

11. (4) Give us this day our daily bread. (Prov. 30. 8; Isa. 33. 16.) "Give us"—"O Father (for we claim nothing of right, but only of Thy free mercy)—'this day'—(for we take no thought for the morrow)—'our daily bread'—all things needful for our souls and bodies; not only the meat that perisheth, but the sacramental bread, and Thy grace, the food which endureth to everlasting life"—WESLEY.

12. (5) And forgive us our debts. (Ch. 18. 21–35; Luke 7. 40–48.) Our unfulfilled obligations, our failures in duty, and also, as explained in ver. 14, "our trespasses." This is to be the daily prayer of the true subjects of Christ's kingdom. "God forgives once as a Judge, but daily as a Father. (See 1 John 1. 8, 9.) As we forgive (R.V. 'as we have forgiven') our debtors—those who have failed in their duty to us. The form of the petition implies that we have already forgiven them. It can never be used sincerely by any who cherish resentment. Give us, O Lord, redemption in Thy blood, even the forgiveness of sins, as Thou enablest us freely and fully to forgive every man, so do Thou forgive all our trespasses"—WESLEY.

13. (6) And lead us not into temptation. (Ch. 26. 41; Luke 22. 40, 46.) Suffer us not to be led into circumstances which may become to us an occasion of sin. But deliver us from evil. (John 17. 15; 2 Thess. 3. 3; 2 Tim. 4. 18.) "Whenever we are tempted, O Thou that helpest our infirmities, suffer us not to enter into temptation; to be overcome or suffer loss thereby; but make a way for us to escape, so that we may be more than conquerors, through Thy love, over sin and all the consequences of it. Now, the principal desire of a Christian's heart being the glory of God (vers. 9, 10); and all he wants for himself or his brethren being the daily bread of soul and body (or the support of life, animal and spiritual), pardon of sin, and deliverance from the power of it and of the devil (vers. 11–13), there is nothing besides that a Christian can wish for: therefore this prayer comprehends all his desires. Eternal life is the certain consequence, or rather completion, of holiness"—WESLEY.

III. For Thine is the kingdom. (Rev. 5. 12, 13; 1 Chron. 29. 11; Ps. 72. 18, 19; 2 Tim. 4. 18.) "The sovereign right of all things that are or ever were created. The power—the executive power, whereby Thou governest all things in Thy everlasting kingdom. And the glory—the praise due from every creature, for Thy power, and all Thy wondrous works, and the mightiness of Thy kingdom, which endureth through all ages, even for ever and ever. It is observable, that though the doxology, as well as the petitions, of this prayer, is threefold, and is directed to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost distinctly; yet is the whole fully applicable both to every Person, and to the ever-blessed and undivided Trinity"—WESLEY.

14, 15. For if ye forgive, etc. Essentially and peculiarly the teaching of the gospel, and made emphatic here by being singled out from the other petitions for special comment. (Mark 11. 25, 26; Eph. 4. 31; Jas. 2. 13.)

16. Moreover, when ye fast. A third example of what our Lord meant by the caution (ver. 1), "Do not your righteousness before men, to be seen of them." In fasting, as in almsgiving and prayer, do not put on appearances to gain the admiration of men. Be real and absolutely sincere (Isa. 58. 3-5). "Our Lord does not enjoin either fasting, alms-deeds, or prayer; all these being duties which were before fully established in the Church of God. Disfigure—by the dust and ashes which they put upon their heads, as was usual at the times of solemn humiliation"—WESLEY.

17. Anoint thine head, etc. "Conduct thyself in thy usual manner."

19. Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth. (Prov. 23. 4; Luke 18. 25; 1 Tim. 6. 9, 10; Heb. 13. 5.) The principle of the injunction is the same as that of the foregoing examples. Our Lord is continuing to show and enforce the righteousness inseparable from the kingdom of heaven. As His true followers, the subjects of the kingdom would not think of man, but of God, in the discharge of religious duties, so they would be governed by a regard to His will in all their worldly pursuits. To lay up treasure upon earth is to make gain, honour, or worldly distinction the chief end of life. "The accumulation of property is not here absolutely forbidden. In most cases the business of life cannot be carried on without it, in some degree; and large commercial and manufacturing concerns can only be conducted by a large capital, and if successfully managed must rapidly increase wealth. But the precept forbids—(1) The hoarding up of useless wealth which is not made beneficial to society; (2) All anxiety to acquire wealth, so that we may be cheerfully content with the portion which Providence assigns us; (3) All greediness of gain, whether to keep or to spend, whether to gratify the mean passion of avarice, or to be used for vain ostentation or personal indulgence"—R. W. Where moth and rust doth corrupt (R.V. "consume," Jas. 5. 2, 3). "Where all things are perishable and transient"—WESLEY.

The treasures of the East consisted in great part of costly garments which moths and other insects might render worthless in a night, and which rust, representing the wear and tear of time, must sooner or later destroy.

20, 21. But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven. (Ch. 19. 21; Luke 12. 23; Col. 3. 1-8; 1 Pet. 1. 4; Heb. 10. 34.) Let God be supreme in your thoughts and affections. This is the principle of all these precepts. "If God be the treasure of our souls, our hearts, i.e. our affections and desires, will be placed on things above. An earthly-minded man proves that his treasure is below; a heavenly-minded man shows that his treasure is above"—C. "The antithesis contained in these verses will not pass unnoticed by the attentive reader. Treasures on earth, and treasures in heaven; the latter, therefore, are all spiritual, suited to the enjoyment and capacity of a perfectly purified and glorified nature; they are also inalienable and imperishable, in contrast with the corruptible and uncertain enjoyments of time; and so it is a joyful consideration that in proportion to the value of the treasures of heaven is their security; we can never outlive them, never forfeit them, they shall never be taken away from us"—R. W.

22. The light (R.V. "lamp," Luke 11. 34) of the body is the eye. The eye is man's natural guide when he walks or acts. If therefore the eye be single—presenting a single and clear image of objects to the brain—thy whole body shall be full of light. "Thou shalt walk and act in full light; in the knowledge of what thou art doing."

23. But if thine eye be evil—distempered, and so conveys to the brain a distorted image of objects, in contrast with that of the single eye—thy whole body shall be full of darkness. And "he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth." "And what the eye is to the body, the intention is to the soul. We may observe with what exact propriety our Lord places purity of intention between worldly desires and worldly cares, either of which directly tend to destroy it. If thine eye be single—singly fixed on God and heaven, thy whole soul will be full of holiness and happiness"—WESLEY.

24. No man can serve two masters. (Luke 16. 9, 13.) That is, in the sense of being wholly at the command of both, not as a hired servant, but as a slave. Ye cannot serve God and mammon—that is, "riches, money, anything loved or sought without reference to God"—WESLEY.

Our Lord had just spoken of the devotion of the heart to God as required by the righteousness of His kingdom. But the heart cannot be devoted to God, and at the same time be set upon the acquisition and possession of this world's wealth. "For to serve God acceptably is to serve Him absolutely, to confide in Him alone, to love Him supremely, and to submit to all those laws of generous liberality in the use of money which necessarily imply that we make riches our servants, not our masters; and are to be ready to sacrifice wealth, and all the distinctions and pleasures which it can purchase, when called to it for Christ's sake, and the preservation of a good conscience"—R. W.

25. Therefore—since devotion to God and slavery at the same time to mammon is an impossibility—Take no thought (R.V. "be not anxious"). Let not your mind be drawn in opposite directions. (Luke 12. 29; 1 Cor. 7. 32; Phil. 4. 6, 7.) "Beware of worldly cares; for these are as inconsistent with the true service of God as worldly desires"—WESLEY.

"Let not even the necessary things of this life so distract the mind as to turn it from the service of God; but let your labour (see vers. 26-28) for these things be undertaken in the trust that God will provide them"—S. C.

Is not the life more than meat? "And if God gives the greater gift, will He deny the smaller?"—WESLEY.

26. Behold the fowls of the air. Look attentively at the birds of the heaven. "Not fowls of the barn door, of which man takes care for his own profit, but birds of the air. Yet even these, for whom none cares but God, find their food provided by a hand they cannot recognise; so that He who hath given them life, and assigned them their place in the rank of created beings, and appointed their uses, fails not to supply them with subsistence. The fowls here are only considered as the representatives of all the inferior creatures, of the different orders of which the Psalmist says, 'All these wait upon Thee, and Thou givest them their meat in due season'; and so accurately is this furnished, that none of their species perish for want of sustenance, but continue from age to age, a standing monument of the care of God. Are ye not much better than they? as being spiritual, rational, immortal, and redeemed creatures"—R. W. (Job 38. 41.)

27. Can add one cubit unto his stature? This word had also the meaning of age. "If you are ever so careful, can even add a moment to your own life thereby? This seems by far the most easy and natural sense of the words"—WESLEY.

28. Consider—observe carefully—the lilies of the field—then probably displaying their beautiful expanded petals in full sight—how they grow—without man's anxiety or care.

30. If God so clothe the grass of the field. "The wild flowers which form part of the meadow growth are counted as belonging to the grass, and are cut down with it. Cut grass which soon withers from the heat is still used in the East for firing"—A. Cast into the oven. "The Jewish oven was a vessel narrower at the top than at the bottom, made of baked clay. Sometimes the fuel was placed within and the cakes laid against the sides. Sometimes the oven was heated by a fire kindled beneath or around it. Eastern travellers state that wood being rare in most parts of the East, grass, twigs, and straw are commonly used for fuel"—C. B. O ye of little faith. The faith of our Lord's most advanced disciples was necessarily little at that time, yet even they were expected to reason from the greater gift of life to the lesser gift of food and raiment. With how much firmer faith should we reason from the unspeakable gift of God's own Son? (Rom. 8. 32.)

32. For after all these things do the Gentiles seek. Their notions of God and of His providential government of the world are necessarily defective and misleading. They can have no such calm and intelligent trust in God as your knowledge of Him should command; they therefore seek eagerly and with anxiety the possessions in which they expect to find happiness. "How kind are these precepts, the substance of which is only this, Do thyself no harm! Let us not be so ungrateful to Him, nor so injurious to ourselves, as to harass and oppress our minds with that burden of anxiety which He has so graciously taken off. Every verse speaks at once to the understanding and to the heart. We will not, therefore, indulge these unnecessary, these useless, these mischievous cares. We will not borrow the anxieties and distresses of the morrow, to aggravate those of the present day. Rather we will cheerfully repose ourselves on that heavenly Father who knows we have need of these things; who has given us the life which is more than meat, and the body which is more than raiment. And thus instructed in the philosophy of our heavenly Master we will learn a lesson of faith and cheerfulness from every bird of the air, and every flower of the field."

33. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness. (1 Tim. 4. 8.) "Singly aim at this, that God, reigning in your heart, may fill it with the righteousness above described. And, indeed, whoever seeks this first will soon come to seek this only"—WESLEY. (Lev. 25. 20, '21; 1 Kings 3. 13; Ps. 37. 25; Mark 10. 30, 21.)

34. The morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. The morrow (personified) will have its own anxieties and its own promised succours. (Deut. 33. 25; Heb. 13. 5, 6.) The evil thereof. "Speaking after the manner of men: but all trouble is, upon the whole, a real good. It is good physic, which God dispenses daily to His children, according to the need and the strength of each"—WESLEY.

"Who, after reading this part of our Lord's sermon, can doubt whether the Scripture teaches the doctrine of a particular providence? That which the philosophy of the world so often stumbles at, God's attention to minute and individual things and persons, is here most fully declared. He provides for the fowls of the heaven, that is, for every one of them; He paints every flower of the field; He regards each individual of His human family in particular; marks who among them 'seeks first the kingdom of God and His righteousness,' and deals with him accordingly. The government of God over individuals, as such, cannot be more strongly marked"—R. W.

CHAPTER VII.

SEPARATE CHARACTERISTIC LAWS OF THE KINGDOM, AND CONCLUSION. The discourse up to this point progresses from stage to stage in unbroken continuity. Its connection with that which follows is less clear, yet each part of the remaining section has the same characteristic relation to the righteousness of the kingdom of heaven, in contrast with the righteousness taught and practised by the Pharisees.

Ver. 1. Judge not. (Luke 6. 37; Rom. 2. 1-3, 17-23; 1 Cor. 4. 5; Jas. 3. 1.) Elsewhere our Lord says, "Judge righteous judgment"; and in vers. 5, 15, and 20 of this chapter, the act of forming an opinion of the actions and characters of men is spoken of as right and necessary. The meaning is, Avoid a hasty and censorious opinion of others, such as would result from a false and pharisaical conception of your own superiority. "Judge not any man without full, clear, certain knowledge, without absolute necessity, without tender love"—WESLEY.

2. "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you. (Judg. 1. 7; Jas. 2. 13.) Awful words! So we may, as it were, choose for ourselves whether God shall be severe or merciful to us. God and man will favour the candid and benevolent: but they must expect 'judgment without mercy, who have showed no mercy'"—WESLEY.

3. Why beholdest thou. "In particular, why do you open your eyes to any fault of your brother, while you yourself are guilty of a much greater? The mote. The word properly signifies a splinter, or shiver of wood. This, and a beam, its opposite, were proverbially used by the Jews to denote—the one, small infirmities, the other, gross palpable faults"—WESLEY.

5. Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam, etc. "It is not enough that we should see clearly that the mote is in the eye of our brother; we must see clearly how to cast it out, and that without injury, without offence, and in tenderness and charity. And who can perform so great an office but he that walks with God, and learns of Him?"—R. W. (Gal. 6. 1.)

6. Give not that which is holy unto the dogs. (Pro. 9. 7, 8; 23. 9.) Evil-minded men who would be ready to seize and misuse what you offer them. "Do not talk of the deep things of God to those whom you know to be wallowing in sin, or to the profane, furious, persecuting"—WESLEY.

Neither cast ye your pearls before swine. "Who having cast to them something like their natural food—such as peas or acorns—whose value is inappreciable by them, in fury trample them with their feet, and turning against the donor, rend him with their tusks"—A. (Comp. Phil. 3. 2; 2 Pet. 2. 21, 22.) The general meaning is, use a wise discrimination in your efforts to do good to others, especially when you reprove them. A disregard to circumstances or to a person's present temper and mood of mind may do more evil than good.

7. Ask, and it shall be given you. (Isa. 55. 6; ch. 21. 22; Mark 11. 24; Luke 13. 24, 25; 18. 1.) For the sake of others, as for yourselves, live in close and confident communion with God. "Ask, seek, knock—all expressive of the same act. This is our duty; God requires this as an acknowledgment of our dependence, and as the expression of our faith; but ask with entire and unlimited confidence, for every one that asketh receiveth, and he that seeketh findeth, etc. There is no respect of persons with God. 'Ask,' as painfully sensible of your wants; 'seek' with diligence, as those who would recover some great thing lost; and 'knock' at the door of the appointed refuge, that you may obtain admission, and be safe from all danger. Words of inimitable simplicity, but of weightiest import"—R. W.

8. For every one that asketh, etc. (Ps. 81. 10, 16; John 14. 13, 14; 16. 23, 24; 1 John 3. 22; 5. 14, 15.) An explicit and definite promise to be fulfilled now—receiveth—findeth—it is opened.

11. Being evil. (Luke 11. 11, etc.) "This word is the most vigorous proof text in all the Scripture for original sin; and, at the same time, one of the strongest testimonies to the superhuman dignity of our Lord, who, excepting Himself from the whole race, can say to all mankind: ὑμεῖς being evil"—S (John 8. 23, 24.) Even in our nearest and most tender relation to others there is evil, therefore selfishness in our nature; but He is essentially holy, therefore essential love. How much more then shall your Father, etc. (Ex. 34. 6, 7; Ps. 86. 5, 15.)

12. Therefore. God will certainly give to His children the good things they ask Him. "But on this condition, that ye follow the example of His goodness, by doing to all as ye would they should do to you. For this is the Law and the Prophets. This is the sum of all, exactly answering ch. 5. 17. The whole is comprised in one word—Imitate the God of love"—WESLEY. (Ch. 22. 39, 40; Luke 6. 31; Lev. 19. 18; Rom. 10. 8-10; Gal. 5. 14; 1 Tim. 1. 5.)

With this comprehensive precept our Lord ends the doctrinal part of this great discourse. He has shown how very far the righteousness of the kingdom of heaven exceeds the righteousness exemplified by the Pharisees; that the attainment of this righteousness demands the denial of self, and the renunciation of much that the world follows with eagerness; and that this presupposes that great change of thought, experience, and practice, which His call to repent signified. And now, with all this brought clearly and in detail before the minds of His hearers, our Lord exhorts them to immediate decision.

13, 14. Enter ye in at the strait gate. (Luke 13. 24, 25.) The allusion seems to be to those narrow entrances into certain houses in Palestine of which travellers speak, which were in retired corners, and had to be sought for. For wide is the gate—like the public portals of the houses referred to—and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction. "It is broad as the world; thou standest and walkest on it already. But this narrow way and this strait gate must be perseveringly sought, till it is found throughout and to the end"—S. "The metaphor of the 'strait gate' and the 'narrow path' has reference to the previous doctrines which our Lord had delivered. The principles unfolded, and the duties enjoined in them, indicated the only way to eternal life. Yet they are difficult to our corrupt nature to practise, and require a constant course of self-denial and vigorous exertion"—R. W.

15. Beware of false prophets. (Deut. 13. 1, 3; Jer. 14. 13-16; 1 John 4. 1.) That is, false teachers, "who, in their preaching, describe a broad way to heaven: it is their 'prophesying,' their 'teaching' the broad way, rather than their 'walking' in it themselves, that is here chiefly spoken of. All those are false prophets who teach any other way than that our Lord hath here marked out. In sheep's clothing. With outside religion, and fair professions of love. Wolves. Not feeding, but destroying souls"—WESLEY. (Acts 20. 29, 31; 2 Pet. 2. 1. Comp. Ezek. 13. 1-10, 22.)

16. Ye shall know them by their fruits. (Ch. 12. 33.) "A short, plain, easy rule, whereby to know true from false prophets; and one that may be applied by people of the meanest capacity, who are not accustomed to deep reasoning. True prophets convert sinners to God; or, at least, confirm and strengthen those that are converted. False prophets do not. They also are false prophets who, though speaking the very truth, yet are not sent by the Spirit of God, but come in their own name to declare it: their grand mark is, 'Not turning men from the power of Satan to God.'"

19. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down. (Ch. 3. 10; John 15. 2, 6.)

21. Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord. Here our Lord extends the application of His solemn warning, so as to include all false professors of discipleship to Him, as well as all false teachers of His gospel. (Ch. 25. 11, 12; Isa. 48. 1, 2; Luke 6. 46; 13. 25; Rom. 2. 13; Jas. 1. 22.) "'Not every one'—that is, no one 'that saith Lord, Lord,' that makes a mere profession of Me and My religion, shall enter, whatever their false teachers may assure them to the contrary. He that doeth the will of My Father. As I have now declared it. Observe, everything short of this is only saying, 'Lord, Lord'"—WESLEY.

"Our Lord sets Himself forth as the Judge in the great day, and at the same time speaks not of My will but of My Father"—A.

22. Many will say to Me in that day. The day of judgment, as in 2 Tim. 1. 12; 4. 8; 1 Cor. 5. 5; Phil. 2. 16. Lord, Lord. A pathetic and strong appeal, as though in dreadest surprise. Have we not prophesied in Thy name? Have we not taught openly as with Thy authority? (Acts 19. 13, 15; 1 Cor. 13. 2.) And in Thy name cast out devils? Observe how our Lord associates these works with His name, just as He had spoken of the will of His Father.

23. I never knew you. (2 Tim. 2. 19.) "There never was a time that I approved of you: so that, as many souls as they had saved, they were themselves never saved from their sins. Lord, is it my case?"—WESLEY.

Depart from Me. (Ch. 25. 41; Ps. 5. 5; Rev. 22. 15.)

24. Therefore—being thus plainly forewarned—whosoever heareth those sayings of Mine—referring to the whole of the foregoing discourse—and doeth them (Luke 6. 47-49)—who saith, "Lord, Lord," as a professed disciple, and also doeth the will of My Father, as one of My true and faithful followers. Thus "these sayings" of Christ are identified with the declared will of the Father. And what our Lord affirms of "these sayings" of His applies equally to His words (Col. 3. 16) as spoken through His apostles. I will liken him unto a wise man (Ps. 111. 10; 119. 99, 130) which built his house upon a rock. Meaning, as the context sufficiently suggests, upon the great spiritual truths and precepts He had delivered as the Divine Perfecter of the Law and the Prophets; but meaning also Himself, to whom all His true disciples are united by a living faith. (Isa. 28. 15-18; 1 Cor. 3. 11-15; 10. 4.)

25-27. And the rain descended, etc. "It is by these references to the climate of Palestine, the violence of its winter winds, the impetuous rush of its sudden rains, and the power of the torrents thus formed, that the power of the comparison is made manifest. By these three words, 'rain,' 'winds,' and 'floods,' the severity of our great trials in the hour of death, and at the day of judgment, is strongly pointed out. Rain and hail fall with violence upon the roof and upper parts; winds try the sides of the house; floods and rushings of waters, the foundation. And then, should it fall, great will be the fall of it. 'It made a great show,' says one, 'while it stood, and it made as great a noise when it fell, the fall being the more notorious by how much the former profession was the more specious'"—R. W.

28, 29. Astonished at His doctrine (R.V. "teaching"). Not only at what He had said, but also at the manner in which He had spoken. (Jer. 23. 29; Mark 1. 22; 6. 2.) For He taught them—"the multitudes—as one having authority—with a dignity and majesty peculiar to Himself, as the great Lawgiver, and with the demonstration and power of the Spirit—and not as the scribes, who only expounded the law of another; and that in a lifeless, ineffectual manner"—WESLEY.

The scribes taught with authority, but they taught merely as interpreters of the Law, supporting their own interpretations by continual appeals to the authority of "the wise men," "our rabbans." Christ taught in His own name, "I say unto you."

CHAPTERS VIII. AND IX.

SIGNS OF THE KINGDOM.

In our Lord's miracles, "the word of salvation was incorporated in acts of salvation." "If we ask ourselves what are the physical manifestations of sin: they are sicknesses of all kinds, fevers, palsies, leprosies, blindness, each of these death beginning, a partial death, and, finally, the death absolute of the body. In the conquering and removing of these evils, Christ eminently bodied forth the idea of Himself as the Redeemer of men"—T. Thus His miracles are signs of His grace and power, assertions of His superhuman authority, types of the character and tendency of His teaching, and pledges of the ultimate triumph of His gospel. Very naturally, therefore, S. Matthew, who does not confine his narrative to the chronological order of events, introduces immediately after the divine sermon "a solemn procession, as it were, of miracles, confirming the authority with which our Lord had spoken"—A. And also picturing the spiritual results of His teaching.

CHAPTER VIII.

Vers. 1-4. HEALING OF THE LEPER: HOPE FOR THE DESPAIRING. (Mark 1. 40-44; Luke 5. 12-14.)—2. There came a leper (S. Luke says, "a man full of leprosy"). "This man tells us parabolically what the true and entire result of the sermon is to be upon ourselves." For a full description of the nature and symptoms of this terrible disease, and the Mosaic ordinances for its treatment, see Lev. 13 and 14. Whether the malady was contagious or not is undecided; but it is certain that the Israelites were taught to regard it as a symbol of the defilement and fatal tendency of sin. "And terrible indeed, as might be expected, was that disease round which this solemn teaching revolved. The leper was a dreadful parable of death. He was to bear about the emblems of death (Lev. 13. 45), the rent—that is, mourning—garments; the mourning for himself as for one dead; the head bare, as they were wont to have it who were in communion with the dead (Num. 6. 9; Ezek. 24. 17); and the lip covered (Ezek. 24. 17). In the restoration, too, of a leper, precisely the same instruments of cleansing were in use—the cedar wood, the hyssop, and scarlet—as were used for the cleansing of one defiled through a dead body, or aught pertaining to death, and which were never in use upon any other occasion. (Comp. Num. 19. 6, 13, 18, with Jer. 14. 4-7.) No doubt when David exclaims, 'Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean' (Ps. 51. 7), he, in this allusion, looking through the outward to the inward, even to the true 'blood of sprinkling,' contemplates himself as a spiritual leper, as one whose sin had been, while he lived in it, a sin unto death"—T. And worshipped Him. This was not properly religious worship, but an act of profound reverence, implying passionate entreaty. S. Mark says, "Beseeching him, and kneeling down to Him"; and S. Luke, "Fell on his face and besought Him." The three accounts should be combined to get a full conception of the scene. Saying, Lord—probably an acknowledgment of Him as the Messiah—if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean. "This is the right 'Lord, Lord, which shall not be used in vain'"—S. The poor man's faith in our Lord's ability is absolute, and he meekly but firmly fixes his hope on His will.

3. And Jesus—S. Mark says, "Moved with compassion"—put forth His hand; thus asserting His authority as superior to the ceremonial law, which forbade contact with the leprosy (Lev. 5. 3; 13. 12-46). Saying, I will; be thou (R.V. "be thou made") clean. Complying with the humble cry of faith by an echo of the very words in which it was uttered. This is given without variation by all the Evangelists. "Here the latent divinity of our Lord again breaks forth. As He taught with authority, He heals with authority; and in both, the very manner places Him infinitely above the highest commissioned servant: 'I WILL; BE THOU MADE CLEAN!'"—R. W. Contrast the words of S. Peter (Acts 3. 12). "Again, we can hardly forbear to recognise in His touching the leper a deed symbolical of His taking on Him, touching, laying hold of, our nature. (Comp. Luke 14. 4 with Heb. 2. 16)"—A.

4. See thou tell no man. "Perhaps our Lord only meant here, not till thou hast showed thyself to the priest, who was appointed to inquire into the case of leprosy. But many others He commanded absolutely to tell none of the miracles He had wrought upon them. And this He seems to have done, chiefly for one or more of these reasons: 1. To prevent the multitude from thronging Him, in the manner related (Mark 1. 45). 2. To fulfil the prophecy (Isa. 42. 2) that He would not be vain or ostentatious. This reason S. Matthew assigns (ch. 12. 17, etc.) 3. To avoid the being taken by force and made a king (John 6. 15). And 4. That He might not enrage the chief priests, scribes, and Pharisees, who were the most bitter against Him, any more than was unavoidable"—WESLEY. (Matt. 16. 20, 21.) The gifts that Moses commanded—(Lev. 14. 4, 10)—for a testimony unto them—a testimony to the people that the leper was cleansed.

Vers. 5-13. HEALING A CENTURION'S SERVANT: EXAMPLE OF SIMPLE FAITH. (Luke 7. 1-10.)—There came unto Him a centurion—captain of a hundred foot-soldiers, with a sergeant under him, and a colonel and general over him.

As he was probably in the service of Herod Antipas, he may not have been a Roman, but a Syrian. He had evidently renounced idolatry, and become a worshipper with the Jews. In the more detailed account given by S. Luke, it is said that he did not go to Christ himself, but induced Jewish elders to go and plead with Him on his behalf. "And they besought Him instantly, saying, that he was worthy for whom he should do this: for he loveth our nation, and he hath built us a synagogue." "Probably he came a little way towards Him, and then went back. He thought himself not worthy to come in person, and therefore spoke the words that follow by his messengers. As it is not unusual in all languages, so in the Hebrew it is peculiarly frequent, to ascribe to a person himself the thing which is done, and the words which are spoken, by his order. And accordingly S. Matthew relates, as said by the centurion himself, what others said by order from him. An instance of the same kind we have in the case of Zebedee's children. From Matt. 20. 20 we learn it was their mother that spoke those words which (Mark 10. 35, 37) themselves are said to speak; because she was only their mouth"—WESLEY.

6. Sick of the palsy, grievously tormented. S. Luke says, "Sick and ready to die." In its ordinary form paralysis is free from acute pain, but sometimes is accompanied by cramp, and in that case the suffering is intense.

7. I will come and heal him. "A second equally prompt, 'I will'"—S.

8. Lord, I am not worthy. (Ps. 10. 17; Luke 15. 19, 21.) An expression of conscious unfitness, which constituted his real worthiness. "It was this utter disclaimer of all claim, outward or inward, which prompted that absoluteness of trust, which deemed all things possible with Jesus, and marked the real faith of the true Israel"—ED. Speak the word only — Command with a single word. (Ps. 107. 20.)

9. Having soldiers under me. Just as my will is law to the soldiers subject to my authority, so at the instance of Thy will, as Thou shalt speak the word of command, "my servant shall be healed."

10. He marvelled. As when He said to another Gentile believer, "O woman, great is thy faith" (ch. 15. 28); and as, on one occasion, He marvelled at the unbelief of certain favoured Jews (Mark 6. 6). "Let not this be hastily read and passed over; let us thoughtfully penetrate the depths which that wonder at faith or unbelief in the spirit of the Son of Man discloses. So great faith, by which this man, a man under authority, absolutely and nakedly trusts in Me; confiding that I have power to command sickness by a word without coming or laying on of hands in the name of God, just as he himself can command his servant in the name of his sovereign!"—S.

11. From the east and west. Looking forward to the time so near at hand when all distinctions between Jew and Gentile should be abolished, and when all men alike should be admitted into the kingdom by the one door of faith (Acts 14. 27). And shall sit down. As though to a banquet at the inauguration of the kingdom of heaven when fully established on earth, but with a direct allusion to the kingdom in its future glory. (Isa. 2. 2, 3; Luke 13. 29; Acts 11. 18; Eph. 3. 6; Rev. 7. 9.)

12. But the children of the kingdom— the Jews, to whom the kingdom pertained as by natural inheritance — shall be cast into outer darkness — the darkness outside the festive and well-lighted chamber; shall be excluded from the spiritual blessings to which they were first called, but which they have slighted. (Rom. 9. 4, 5; 11. 7.) There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. These deeply solemn words pointing from the image to the inconceivable reality.

13. As thou hast believed, so be it unto thee. This appears to have been spoken to the centurion in person. "It was a great honour which Christ put upon the centurion, when He gave him a blank as it were: 'Be it done as thou believest.' What could ye have more? Yet what was said to him is said to us all: Believe and ye shall receive; only believe. The oil of grace multiplies, and fails not till the vessels of faith fail"—H.

Vers. 14 - 17. THE HEALING OF PETER'S MOTHER-IN-LAW AND MANY OTHERS—VICARIOUS SUFFERING. (Mark 1. 29-31; Luke 4. 38, 39.) —14. And when Jesus was come into Peter's house. It was the Sabbath, and our Lord, after having taught in the synagogue, where He had also healed a demoniac (Mark 1. 23-26; Luke 4. 33-36), had returned into the house of Peter for rest and refreshment. (Comp. Luke 14. 1.) He saw his wife's mother laid (struck down) and sick of a fever. S. Luke says, "A great," or burning and violent, "fever."

15. And he touched her hand. S. Luke the physician says, characteristically and graphically, "stood over her and rebuked the fever"— as He rebuked the winds and waves. And the fever left her. "The fever owned His touch and fled." And she arose, and ministered unto them—provided for their entertainment and waited upon them; showing her complete recovery and her faith and gratitude. "It was the first diaconate of woman in the Church —might we not almost say in the world?—a diaconate to Christ and to those that were His; the diaconate of one healed by Christ; a diaconate immediately following such healing" —ED.

16. When the even was come — and the Sabbath therefore ended—they brought unto Him many that were possessed with devils, etc. S. Mark says, "All the city was gathered together at the door." So widely had the fame of the two miracles on that memorable Sabbath — first that in the synagogue, then this in Peter's house—spread. And He cast out the spirits with His word (R. V. "with a word"). He never touched a demoniac. And healed all that were sick. Here as elsewhere the two classes are clearly distinguished the one from the other.

17. That it might be fulfilled, etc. (Isa. 53. 4; 1 Pet. 2. 24.) "The prophet spoke these words in a more exalted sense. The Evangelist here only alludes to them as being capable of this lower meaning also. Our Lord fulfilled these words in the highest sense, by 'bearing our sins in His own body on the tree'; in a lower sense, by sympathising with us in our sorrows, and healing us of the diseases which were the fruit of sin"—WESLEY.

He removed diseases, in the sense intended by the prophet, by being Himself "stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted." "Not so much the healing of these sicknesses was Christ's bearing them, but His burden was that there were these sicknesses to heal." "The whole mass of the world's woe lay upon His spirit, from the beginning to the end; for as His office was to take away the 'sin of the world,' He must first bear its weight. It was in this sense that S. Matthew says, 'He took our infirmities and bore our sicknesses'; not, certainly, by transferring the infirmities and sicknesses to His own person, for He became neither infirm nor sick; nor do the words used signify simply to take or bear away, much less the Hebrew term used by Isaiah, but that He took them, and carried them as a load or burden, the sustaining of which was a part of the process of the great atonement. In the strictest sense, therefore, the prophecy quoted by the Evangelist was here 'fulfilled'; not, indeed, fully, for Christ had much more to sustain; but still directly and properly"—R. W.

Vers. 18–27. TEMPEST ON THE LAKE: COMMAND OVER THE POWERS OF NATURE. (Mark 4. 35–41; Luke 8. 22–25.)—18. The other side. The eastern shore of the Lake, His object being, as the Evangelist intimates, to escape from the excited multitudes about Him, and obtain repose after excessive toil.

19. And a certain scribe came and said to Him, Master, I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest. (Luke 9. 57, 58.) He seems to have said this as seized for a moment with a sincere desire to become a disciple of Christ, and to adhere to Him faithfully; but the reply shows that his hope was to gain worldly advantage in some form.

20. The foxes have holes ("caves," etc.), and birds of the air have nests ("lodging-places"); but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head. This title would remind the scribe of the vision of Daniel, in which he saw "one like the Son of Man," to whom was given "dominion and glory and a kingdom" Dan. 7. 13, 14). The Jews well understood this to refer to the Messiah (John 12. 34), yet our Lord tells this scribe, when applying the title to Himself, that He has not "where to lay His head"; as though He had said, "I am indeed the Son of Man spoken of by Daniel, and, as thou professest to believe, the Messiah; but instead of a kingdom, and glory, and dominion, I have no house of my own, much less a palace and a kingdom." Of a spiritual reign the scribe had no notion; and being cut off from the hope of a visible and earthly one, he probably retired. "'I will follow Thee,' said this forward professor, 'whithersoever Thou goest'; but he secretly meant, only into the paths of publicity and enjoyment, not into those of humility and suffering. Yet wherever Christ leads, the true disciple must follow Him"—R. W. The scribe probably, like the ruler on a later occasion, "went away sorrowful" (ch. 19. 22).

21. And another of His disciples said unto Him, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. This was his answer to our Lord's command, "Follow Me" (Luke 9. 59). He was already a disciple, and was now called to follow Christ openly and fully; and he was willing to do this, but asked for a short delay. It may be that intelligence of the death of his father had reached him while he was with our Lord, and that He who knew his character foresaw that if he returned to his sorrowing home, and tarried to give attention to home requirements, his desire to follow Him might be lost.

22. Follow Me; and let the dead bury their dead. (Comp. ch. 10. 37; Luke 14. 26.) Leave funeral rites, sacred as they are, to those who have not experienced the spiritual quickening which thou hast as one of My disciples. The words are added in Luke, "Go thou and preach the kingdom of God."

23. And when He was entered into a ship. The ship, or large fishing-boat, belonging to one or more of His disciples, which was usually at His service. S. Mark notes that "the even was come," that He had been teaching from this ship, and that when the multitude had been sent away, His disciples "took Him even as He was," weary and without preparation of any kind.

24. And, behold, there arose a great tempest. A sudden and violent squall, to which that small inland sea, "surrounded with mountain gorges," is known to be exposed. But He was asleep. S. Mark adds, "In the hinder part of the ship upon a pillow," probably the steerman's cushion. Asleep, despite the howling of the blast, the dashing of the waters against and into the little vessel, and all the commotion around Him!

25. Lord, save us: we perish—they said in their alarm, even as S. Mark records, with a tone of reproach, "Carest Thou not that we perish?"

26. O ye of little faith. "He does not chide them for disturbing Him with their prayers, for disturbing Him with their fears"—H. A great calm. (Job 38. 11; Ps. 89. 9; 107. 29.) "Their great fear was the evidence of little faith; for how could they perish when their Master was with them; He whose power over nature they had so often seen and acknowledged? For this they were justly reproved. He arose, and rebuked the winds and the sea, etc. So that it was in the height of the tempest, amidst the very rage and fury of the elements, and in the extremity of danger, that He issued His authoritative commands. And there was a great calm. The very simplicity of the narrative heightens the sublimity of the whole scene as it passes before us—the suddenness and fury of the storm; the vessel labouring among the overwhelming waves; the terror of the disciples; the calm repose of Jesus, asleep amidst all this uproar; the majesty of His action—'He arose and rebuked the winds and the sea'; the immediate effect"—R. W.

27. What manner of man is this! (Ps. 79. 8, 9.) "We see here one of the moral purposes to which, in the providence of God, who ordered all things for the glory of His Son, this miracle was intended to serve. It was to lead His disciples into thoughts ever higher and more awful—of that Lord whom they followed, and should more and more bring them to feel that a nearness to Him was all safety and deliverance from every danger"—T.

Vers. 28–34. HEALING OF TWO DEMONIACS: EVIL SPIRITS IN SUBJECTION. (Mark 5. 1–20; Luke 8. 26–39.)—28. Country of the Gergesenes. So named from Gergesa, now called Herza, or Gersa, on the eastern shore of the Lake, and nearly opposite Capernaum. The other Evangelists call it "the country of the Gadarenes"—the district which took its name from Gadara, a Greek city, then of some importance, many ruins of which are still to be seen. Two possessed with devils. (Ch. 4. 24.) S. Mark and S. Luke mention only one. S. Matthew speaks as an eye-witness, in agreement with the fact; they speak only of the one who was the more conspicuous at the time and the better known afterwards. Coming out of the tombs. "Gersa is within a few miles of the shore, and an immense mountain rises directly above it, in which are ancient tombs, out of some of which the two men possessed of devils may have issued to meet Jesus"—T. Exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way. S. Matthew only relates that they had made that way impassable; S. Luke alone that "he"—the principal one—"was without clothing," although this is involved in S. Mark's account, who tells us that after he was healed he was found to be "clothed and in his right mind." The fully drawn picture is fearful, and "each Evangelist has some touches which are peculiarly his own, but S. Mark's is the most graphic of all."

29. They cried out. S. Mark says that when our Lord stepped out of the vessel, they met Him immediately;—that they "saw Jesus afar off, and ran and worshipped Him." "As always, the demons knew Jesus, and His presence seemed to constrain their confession of themselves, and therefore of Him. As in nature, the introduction of a dominant element sometimes reveals the hidden presence of others, which are either attracted or repelled by it, so the presence of Christ obliged the manifestations, and, in the case of these evil spirits, the self-confession of the powers of evil. In some measure it is the same still. The introduction of grace brings to light and experience sin hitherto unknown, and the new life brings consciousness of, and provokes contest with, evil within, of which the very existence had been previously unexpected"—ED. What have we to do with Thee? What have we in common? (Comp. 2 Sam. 16. 10; 19. 22; 2 Chron. 35. 21.) Art Thou come hither to torment us before the time? The true devilish spirit, "which counts it a torment not to be suffered to torment others," and also "the confession of a time coming, an inevitable hour, when there shall be an entire victory of the kingdom of light over that of darkness"—T. (Rev. 20. 10.)

30. An herd of many swine. S. Mark says, "They were about two thousand"—"which it was not lawful for the Jews to keep. Wherefore our Lord both justly and mercifully permitted to be destroyed"—WESLEY.

Even if the owners were Gentiles, to keep them was an insult to the conscientious Jews, and a show of contempt for their laws.

31. So the devils besought Him. The other Evangelists say that Jesus asked the man of whom alone they speak, "What is thy name?" as though to restore in some measure his self-recollection, and facilitate the cure; and the answer was, "Legion; for we are many." Not of course in the sense of a Roman legion of six thousand warriors; "for it was a common Jewish idea, that, under certain circumstances, a legion of hurtful spirits were on the watch for men"—ED. Suffer us to go away into the herd of swine. "The devils—if they must leave their more welcome habitation, the heart of man—yet entreat, in their inextinguishable desire of harming, that they might be allowed to enter the swine"—T.

32. Go. A word of permission only. And, behold, the whole herd of swine, etc. "The Lake is so near the base of the mountain, that the swine, rushing madly down it, could not stop, but would be hurried on into the water and drowned"—T.

34. "They besought Him to depart out of their coasts. They loved their swine so much better than their souls! How many are of the same mind!"—WESLEY.

The whole city came out. "Probably with the intention to destroy Jesus for having destroyed their swine; but, having seen Him, they were awed by His presence, and only besought Him to depart from their borders. Many love even their swine better than their salvation"—C.

CHAPTER IX.

Vers. 1-8. HEALING OF A PARALYTIC: POWER ON EARTH TO FORGIVE SINS. (Mark 2. 1-12; Luke 5. 18-26.)—1. His own city—Capernaum. (Ch. 4. 13.)

2. They brought to Him—by the use of extraordinary means which the other Evangelists describe—a man sick of the palsy. S. Mark says that after our Lord's return to Capernaum "it was noised that He was in the house"—that in which He was known to reside, probably Peter's—"and straightway many were gathered together, insomuch that there was no room to receive them, no, not so much as about the door: and He preached the word unto them." S. Luke mentions that among His hearers "were Pharisees and doctors of the law," who had come from curiosity or less worthy motives to see and hear Him, some of them even from Jerusalem. Both these Evangelists state also that the four bearers of the sick man, finding every ordinary way of access to the great Teacher and Healer blocked by the throng, carried him up the flight of steps outside the house on to the flat roof, broke up the thin tiling, and lowered him upon his pallet through the opening "into the midst before Jesus." And Jesus seeing their faith—the faith of the sick man's friends, but more especially his own, as the whole narrative implies—seeing his faith, mingled with fear, shame, and a shrinking awe—of which not our Lord's teaching, but His unique personal character was the object, faith in His power and benignity—said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, be of good cheer—a form of address full of tenderness and encouragement, evidently used with reference to the man's spiritual distress under a consciousness of sin, and his fear, in agreement with Jewish notions, that his sins might be a hindrance to his recovery. Thy sins be forgiven thee—words to be taken as declaratory of the fact. "They are the justification of the sinner; and, as declaratory of that which takes place in the purposes of God, so also effectually shedding abroad the sense of forgiveness and reconciliation in the sinner's heart"—T.

3. Said within themselves—(S. Mark, "Reasoning in their hearts")—This man blasphemeth. "The offended only can forgive the sin of the offender; and had not Christ been God, that is, the Being offended by the sin of man, He would have been guilty of the charge of taking into His own hands the office of God. Blasphemy, in the sense in which it is here used, and as in other instances applied by the Jews to Christ, signifies, not any reproachful, profane words, malignantly directed against God, but the arrogating of what is proper only to God by a creature; which species of blasphemy, the Jews held, rendered man liable to condign punishment"—R. W.

4. And Jesus knowing their thoughts (1 Kings 8. 39; Ps. 139. 2; John 2. 24, 25; Heb. 4. 12, 13; Rev. 2. 23)—said, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? "Why do ye unjustly account Me an impious person and a blasphemer? Their thinking evil signified, not that they were wrong in assuming that God only could forgive sin, but that they had formed a rash and injurious opinion of Christ; which also had this further evil, that they ought to have admitted Him to be the Messiah because of His miracles, and ought to have so understood their Scriptures as to conclude that the Messiah was a Divine person"—R. W.

5. For whether is easier, etc. Our Lord, who sees into their inner being, found them saying, It is easy to say thy sins are forgiven, but let Him prove it! "In our Lord's argument it must be carefully noted that He does not ask, 'Which is easiest, to forgive sins or to raise a sick man?' for it could not be affirmed that that of forgiving was easier than this of healing; but, 'Which is easiest, to claim this power or to claim that,' to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise and walk? And He then proceeds: 'That is easiest, and I will now prove My right to say it, by saying with effect and with an outward consequence setting its seal to My truth, the harder word, Rise up and walk'"—T.

6. But that ye may know that the Son of Man. "In the emphatic and well-understood sense of being the representative Man, who was to bring a new life to humanity; the second Adam, the Lord from heaven"—ED. Hath power on earth. "A tacit opposition to 'power in heaven.' This power is not exercised, as you deem, only by God in heaven, but also by the Son of Man upon earth. You rightly assert that it is only exercised by Him who dwelleth in the heavens; but He who, in the person of the Son of Man, has descended also upon earth, has also brought it down with Him here"—T.

8. They marvelled, and glorified God. "So what was to the scribes an occasion of blasphemy, was to the people an incitement to praise God"—WESLEY.

Which had given such power unto men—that is, to mankind, with allusion to the title "Son of Man" as just applied by our Lord to Himself, showing that they understood it to mean the Representative of mankind. They seem to have had a true, though dim and faulty, insight into His nature. "The mystery of Emmanuel, God with us, was not yet doctrinally fully declared, but was left to be inferred from the actions of our Lord, and the occasional allusions to His superior nature, which occurred in His discourses"—R. W. Observe that our Lord saw and honoured their faith—the faith of the man's friends as well as his own—notwithstanding that their knowledge of His true character was necessarily scanty and erroneous. And shall He not respect the faith of His real and earnest followers on behalf of others in our own times, when shown by their works?—when it moves to the use of wise, persistent, and, may we not add, with this case before us, ingeniously devised methods to bring them to Jesus?

Vers. 9-13. THE CALL OF MATTHEW. (Mark 2. 14-22; Luke 5. 27-32.)—9. A man, named Matthew. The other Evangelists call him Levi, which was probably his original name; Matthew, which signifies the "Gift of the Lord," having been given to him by Christ Himself after He had called him to become an apostle. Sitting at the receipt of custom—taxes or tolls, probably connected with the traffic of the Lake. Follow Me. A call to give himself up to Christ permanently (ch. 4. 19). He was no doubt a disciple already, in a general sense, but had continued in his occupation like Peter and Andrew, after their first acquaintance with Christ. Now he was called to give himself up wholly to spiritual service. And he arose. S. Luke says, "He left all, rose up, and followed Him."

10. As Jesus sat at meat in the house—that is, the house of Matthew, as both the other Evangelists state, though he modestly omits to mention this himself—behold many publicans and sinners came. Probably they were Matthew's old associates and had been invited by him to this "great feast" (S. Luke), as a kind of farewell repast, but also to give them the opportunity of receiving instruction from his Master.

11. And when the Pharisees saw it—that is, when the fact came to their knowledge, perhaps a day or two afterwards, for they could not have been present themselves—they said unto His disciples, etc. (Ch. 11. 19; Luke 15. 2.) "Thus they continually ask our Lord, Why do Thy disciples this? and His disciples, Why doeth your Master?"—WESLEY. (Ch. 12. 2; 15. 2.)

12. They that be whole, etc. Thus our Lord justifies His own conduct, and at the same time rebukes the pride and exclusiveness of these self-deceived censorious men. "Where ought the physician to be but among the sick?"

13. But go ye and learn, etc. "Ye that take upon you to teach others. I will have mercy, and not sacrifice—that is, I will have mercy rather than sacrifice. I love acts of mercy better than sacrifice itself"—WESLEY.

"The passage referred to is (Hosea 6. 6), 'For I desired mercy, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings.' Christ quotes only the former part, as being sufficient for His purpose; but the latter clause shows that the former was to be taken comparatively. God had appointed sacrifice; but when mercy and sacrifice could not both be performed, then sacrifice must give place to mercy—positive institutions to moral duties"—R. W. (Ch. 12. 7; Prov. 21. 3; Micah 6. 8.) "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners." This is the great principle of the incarnation and of the whole history of Christ. (1 Tim. 1. 15.)

14. The disciples of John. They continued to form a distinct sect, notwithstanding their master's declaration that his ministry was preparatory and provisional only. (John 3. 22 seq.)

15. Can the children of the bridechamber, etc. Thus our Lord recalls to these men their own master's words respecting Himself. The children of the bride-chamber were the bridegroom's friends who accompanied him to meet the bride (Judg. 14. 11) and took part in the marriage festival. Can they mourn (S. Mark and S. Luke say "fast") while the bridegroom is with them? "As if He had said, 'while I am with them it is a festival time; a season of rejoicing, not mourning'"—WESLEY.

After My departure the time of sorrow and persecution will come. (John 16. 20.) We have here one of our Lord's earliest intimations respecting His death. (See also John 2. 19; 3. 14.)

16. No man putteth a piece of new (R.V. "undressed") cloth unto an old garment. The piece of undressed cloth representing the gospel, "the old garment" symbolising Judaism. "The complete and beautiful whole of gospel light and liberty must not be engrafted as a mere addition on the worn-out system of ceremonies"—A.

17. Neither do men put new wine into old bottles (R.V. "old wine-skins"). "This parable is not a repetition of the former one, but a stronger and more exact setting forth of the truth in hand. The 'garment' was something outward; this wine is poured in, is something inward, the spirit of the system. The former parable respected the outward freedom and simple truthfulness of the New Covenant; this regards its inner spirit, its pervading principle"—A.

Vers. 18, 19, and 23-26. RAISING THE DAUGHTER OF JAIRUS: THE PRINCE OF LIFE. —(Mark 5. 22-24 and 35-41; Luke 8. 41, 42, and 49-56.)

18. A certain ruler. The other Evangelists give his name "Jairus." He was probably the president of the synagogue of Capernaum, though his exact position is uncertain (see on 4. 23); but he was evidently a man of high social rank. And worshipped Him. S. Mark says, "fell at His feet," in humble and reverent acknowledgment of His greatness of personal character. Saying, My daughter is even now dead. Manifestly speaking in a state of bewilderment, as if he had heard of her death at that moment from a messenger sent from his house. S. Mark records words which he had probably spoken previously, "My little daughter lieth at the point of death." S. Luke simply states the fact in his own words, "she lay a dying." But come and lay Thy hand upon her. This faith was strong, but not equal to that of his Gentile fellow-citizen, the centurion, on whose behalf he had recently with other elders interceded with Jesus, "Speak the word only!" (ch. 8. 8).

19. And Jesus arose, and followed him. On their way his state of suspense was prolonged but his faith strengthened by witnessing the case of healing which all the Evangelists record in the course of the narrative; and before they arrived at the house the distressed father was told that it was too late, for the end had come: "Thy daughter is dead; why troublest thou the Master any further?" But Jesus overheard the words, and said to the ruler—"leaving no room for a doubt to insinuate itself into his mind before he had preoccupied him with a word of confidence and comfort"—"Be not afraid, only believe." Then forbidding any man to accompany Him into the house, except the three whom He now for the first time chose to be His witnesses on the most solemn occasions—Peter, James, and John—the Prince of Life entered into the abode of death. And the usual funeral ceremonies had already begun.

23. He saw the minstrels (R.V. "flute-players"), and the people making a noise. "Musical instruments were used by the Jews as well as the heathens, in their lamentations for the dead; to soothe the melancholy of surviving friends by soft and solemn notes. And there were persons who made it their business to perform this, while others sung to their music. Flutes were used especially on the death of children; louder instruments on the death of grown persons"—WESLEY.

24. Give place. "Withdraw. There is no need of you now. For the maid is not dead—her life is not at an end—but sleepeth. This is only a temporary suspension of sense and motion, which should rather be termed sleep than death"—WESLEY.

25. But when the people—these professional mourners (2 Kings 4. 32, 33)—were put forth, He went in. The house was still. "Two souls, believing and hoping, stand like funeral tapers beside the couch of the dead maiden—the father and the mother. His Church the Lord sees represented in His three most trusted apostles. And now the solemn awakening finds place, and this without an effort on the part of Him who is absolute Lord of quick and dead"—T. And took her by the hand—and addressing her as not dead but sleeping, "said unto her, Talitha cumi; which is, being interpreted, Damsel, I say unto thee, arise" (Mark); and, at the word and the touch, the maid arose.

26. And the fame, etc. "Here the person had recently departed; in the case of the widow's son he was in the act of being carried to his grave; and in the instance of Lazarus the corpse had lain in the grave, and had become corrupt. But what can withstand the life-giving energy of the Son of God? Not the deeper death of the soul of man can resist His power. Of how many myriads may it be said, 'And you hath He quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins'! These miracles are not only glorious attestations of His mission and divinity, but teach us to look up to Him as the great fountain of spiritual life"—R. W.

Vers. 20-22. HEALING OF THE WOMAN. (Mark 5. 25, 34; Luke 8. 43-48.)—20. Behold, a woman, which was diseased with an issue of blood twelve years. (Lev. 15. 19, 23.) Both the other Evangelists add that she had spent ineffectually "all that she had" upon physicians. Came behind Him—that is, came to Him from behind—and touched the hem of His garment—that is, His outer garment or mantle, which was made so as to hang partly in the front and partly at the back of the body; and to each of the borders or corners of which a fringe or tassel, bound with a blue riband, was worn. (Num. 15. 38-41.) These tassels were to be constant reminders to them "of the commandments of the Lord," and for this reason a sort of sanctity was attached to them. It was one of these that the woman touched.

21. For she said, etc. "What strong faith to expect that even contact with Him, the bare touch of His garment, would carry such divine power—as to make her whole. Yet in this very strength lay also its weakness. She believed so much in Him, that she felt as if it needed not personal appeal to Him; she felt so deeply the hindrances to her making request of Himself, that, believing so strongly in Him, she deemed it sufficient to touch not even Himself, but that which in itself had no power nor value, except as it was in contact with His Divine Person"—ED. Her faith was real and strong, but ignorant and superstitious. "This is a most encouraging miracle for us to recollect when we are disposed to think despondingly of the ignorance or superstition of much of the Christian world: that He who accepted this woman for her faith, even in error and weakness, may also accept them"—A.

22. Jesus turned Him about. "Knowing in Himself that virtue (R.V. 'power') had gone out of Him" (Mark), "said, Who touched My clothes?" (Luke). He did not ask this question because He required to be informed, but to induce her to make an open confession, and so to cause it to be known that the healing had not been obtained by stealth,—that the healing power had gone out of Him by His own will, in answer to her faith. Peter said, almost reproachfully, "Master, the multitude throng Thee and press Thee, and sayest Thou, Who touched Me?" (Luke). Yet she only touched with the touch of faith. "And thus it is ever in the Church: many press upon Christ;

His in name; near to Him and to His sacraments outwardly; but not 'touching Him,' because not drawing near in faith; not looking for, and therefore not obtaining, life and healing from Him, and through these"—T. Thy faith hath made thee whole—"hath saved thee." "Not merely in the act of touching, but now completely by the act of confession; it saved her mediately, as the connecting link between herself and Christ"—A.

Vers. 27–31. HEALING OF TWO BLIND MEN. (Related by S. Matthew only.)—27. And when Jesus departed thence—from the house of the ruler—two blind men followed Him—through the streets of Capernaum—crying, and saying, Thou Son of David. A distinct acknowledgment of His Messiahship. (See on ch. 1. 1.) The same form of appeal was used by the two blind men near Jericho (ch. 20. 30, 31), and by the woman of Canaan (ch. 15. 22); and it is remarkable that in all these cases our Lord tried the faith of the applicant by delay. When faith in Him as the Hope of Israel is expressly avowed, He exercised and strengthened it by seeming indisposition to respect it. Believe ye that I am able to do this? The question is not, Do ye truly believe Me to be what you call Me, David's Son and Heir? but, Believe ye truly and firmly that I am able to heal your blindness?

29. According to your faith. At the same time touching their eyes. "No direct word of power passes from our Lord, but a relative concession making that which was done 'a measure of the faith' of the blind men"—A.

Vers. 32–34. HEALING OF A DUMB DEMONIAC. (Related by S. Matthew only.)—32. A dumb man possessed with a devil. (Ch. 12. 22.) The dumbness, no doubt, caused by the possession.

33. The multitudes marvelled. They had probably seen many cases of possession and many exorcisms or attempts to exorcise (Acts 19. 13, 14); but any such twofold cure as this was altogether new. Saying, It was never so seen in Israel—"Even in Israel, where so many wonders have been seen"—WESLEY.

"This was not a hyperbolical exclamation; for when had such a number of miracles, so great and so affectingly beneficent, been performed in a few hours?—the curing of the woman, the raising the daughter of Jairus to life, the restoration of sight to two blind men, and the ejection of an evil spirit, in the course of one afternoon! To which Jesus immediately added many more; for it is added, 'He went about all their cities, teaching, etc., and healing every sickness and every disease among the people'"—R. W.

34. But the Pharisees said. Probably in muttered whispers to the astonished people, to check their enthusiasm and prevent the inquiry, as on a later occasion, "Is not this the Son of David?" He casteth out devils, etc. (See ch. 12. 22.)

CHAPTERS IX. 36—X. 43.

THE KINGDOM PROCLAIMED GENERALLY: THE TWELVE CHOSEN, COMMISSIONED, AND CHARGED.

(Mark 3. 13–19; 6. 7–13; Luke 6. 12–16; 9. 1–6.)

Ver. 36. Moved with compassion on them—not elated with the signs of His popularity—because they, fainted and were scattered abroad. Many of them were far from their homes and oppressed with weariness, but the allusion is more especially to their spiritual condition. As sheep having no shepherd—"And yet they had many teachers: they had scribes in every city. But they had none who cared for their souls; and none that were able, if they had been willing, to have 'wrought any deliverance.' They had no pastors after God's own heart"—WESLEY. (Num. 27. 17; 1 Kings 22. 17; Jer. 3. 15; Eph. 4. 11; Zech. 10. 2.)

38. Pray ye therefore. "See of how great value are prayers"—B. (Ezek. 36. 37; Isa. 62. 6, 7; Ps. 2. 8; 1 John 5. 14–16.) The Lord of the harvest—"whose peculiar work and office it is, and who alone is able to do it, 'that He would thrust forth'—for it is an employ not pleasing to flesh and blood; so full of reproach, labour, danger, temptation of every kind, that nature may well be averse to it. Those who never felt this, never yet knew what it is to be labourers in Christ's harvest. He sends them forth, when He calls them by His Spirit, furnishes them with grace and gifts for the work, and makes a way for them to be employed therein"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER X.

Ver. 1. And when He had called unto Him His twelve disciples. This implies that they had been already chosen, which agrees with the representations of the other Evangelist. He gave them power, etc. "This is the grand distinction between the miraculous powers of Christ and those of His apostles. The one was inherent in Himself; the other was expressly communicated by Him, and was never employed but as His power, not as theirs who exercised it. The distinction, before noticed, will here again be remarked between 'casting out unclean spirits, and healing all manner of sickness'; so that possession is excluded expressly from the class of sickness and disease"—R. W.

2. The names of the twelve apostles. So named by Christ Himself (Luke). The title is here used for the first time. It signifies one sent—a messenger. It was in frequent use among the Jews, as a title of dignity. So that when our Lord applied it to the Twelve, He was "not introducing a new term, but adopting one which, from its current usage, would suggest to His hearers the idea of a highly responsible mission." The name is never used by John, and only once each by Matthew and Mark. But Luke, who was not himself an apostle, uses it repeatedly (6. 13; 9. 10; 11. 49; 17. 5; 22. 14; 24. 10). The first, Simon, who is called Peter. (John 1. 42.) He was first, "not only as regards arrangement or mere priority of calling, but as first among equals. That, however, no such idea was current among the apostles as that he was destined to be the primate of the future Church is as clear as the prominence given to him on many occasions before the rest"—A. And Andrew his brother. (John 1. 37–40.) They were fishermen of Bethsaida, and partners in trade with James and John, the brothers next named (Luke 5. 10), who were the sons of Zebedee and Salome. James was the first to suffer martyrdom (Acts 12. 1, 2); John the last survivor of the whole company. The name Boanerges was given to them at the time of this appointment (Mark), probably on account of their zealous earnestness.

3. Philip was also a native of Bethsaida. (John 1. 43; 6. 7; 12. 22; 14. 8.) Bartholomew (son of Talmai). No doubt the same as Nathanael. (John 1. 43; 21. 2.) Thomas, or Didymus, the twin, who is shown, by the references to him in John, to have been strongly and faithfully attached to Christ, but naturally despondent. (John 11. 16; 14. 5; 20. 25; 21. 2.) And Matthew the publican, whose call to follow Christ is recorded in ch. 9. 9. James, the son of Alphæus, so called to distinguish him from the brother of John. And Lebbæus, whose surname was Thaddæus, that is, Judas.

4. Simon the Canaanite (R.V. "the Cananæan, or Zealot"). In Luke and Acts 1. 13, "Simon Zelotes." He seems to have belonged to the party of the Zealots, originally peculiarly strict Jews, but who degenerated into wild fanaticism. And Judas Iscariot—probably a man of Kerioth, a village near Hebron. He was the only apostle who was not a Galilean.

5. These twelve Jesus sent forth—"with power and authority" (Luke). "Herein exercising His supreme authority, as God over all. None but God can give men authority to preach His word. Go not. Their commission was thus confined now, because the calling of the Gentiles was deferred till after the more plentiful effusion of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost"—WESLEY.

Into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not. Samaritans were descendants of the colonies imported into the territory of the ten tribes by the king of Assyria (2 Kings 17. 24). Though thus of heathen origin they were instructed in the Law of Moses, and had built a temple on Mount Gerizim, which was destroyed about B.C. 130. The bitterest hostility existed between them and the Jews. (John 4. 9; see Ezra 4; Neh. 6.)

6. Lost sheep of the house of Israel. (Ch. 9. 16; Ps. 119. 176; Isa. 53. 6; Jer. 50. 17.)

7. Preach — proclaim — the kingdom of heaven. (Ch. 3. 2; 4. 17.) Not yet the king. Their present announcements were to be preparatory. Is at hand. Not yet fully founded. (Contrast with this Col. 1. 26–28.)

8. Heal the sick, etc. Show the signs of the kingdom and manifest its advent by benevolent works. Freely ye have received "all things; in particular the power of working miracles. Freely give. Exert the power wherever you come" — WESLEY. (Acts 8. 18–20.)

9. Provide neither gold, etc. (Luke 22. 35; 1 Cor. 9. 7.) "'Provide not' — The stress seems to lie on this word: they might use what they had ready; but they might not stay a moment to provide anything more, neither take any thought about it. Nor indeed were they to take anything with them, more than was strictly necessary—(1) Lest it should retard them; (2) Because they were to learn hereby to trust God in all future exigencies"—WESLEY.

10. Nor scrip. That is, a wallet, or bag to hold provisions. "Nor yet a staff." We read (Mark 6. 8), "Take nothing, save a staff only." He that had one might take it; they that had none might not provide any. "For the workman is worthy of his maintenance. The word includes all that is mentioned in the 9th and 10th verses; all that they were forbidden to provide for themselves, so far as "was needful for them"—WESLEY.

11. "Inquire who is worthy. That you should abide with him who is disposed to receive the gospel. There abide — in that house, till ye leave the town"—WESLEY.

12. Salute it. In the usual Jewish form, "Peace" (that is, all blessings) "be to this house" (Luke 10. 5).

13. "If the house be worthy of it, God shall give them the peace you wish them. If not, He shall give you what they refuse. The same will be the case when we pray for them that are not worthy"—WESLEY. (Ps. 35. 13.)

14. "Shake off the dust from your feet. The Jews thought the land of Israel so peculiarly holy, that when they came home from any heathen country they stopped at the borders, and shook or wiped off the dust of it from their feet, that the Holy Land might not be polluted with it. Therefore the action here enjoined was a lively intimation, that those Jews who had rejected the gospel were holy no longer, but were on a level with heathens and idolaters"—WESLEY. (Neh. 5. 13; Acts 13. 51; 18. 6.)

15. Verily I say unto you, etc. (Ch. 11. 22, 24.) With this solemn "Verily," followed by His reference to the day of final judgment, our Lord closes the first part of this great charge (comp. ch. 7. 27; 8. 11, 12), that relating to the first mission of His apostles. They were to limit their proclamations to the Jews, and to govern their conduct among them by these instructions, all of them harmonising with Jewish ideas and usages. The second part (vers. 16–23) contains predictions and precepts of more general application, yet referring chiefly to the ministry of the apostles and the persecutions to which they would be subject among both Jews and Gentiles after His ascension, up to the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, and the end of the apostolic age.

16. Behold, I send you forth. This clearly marks a new starting-point of the discourse. Wise as serpents, and harmless as doves. Prudent but guileless. (Rom. 16. 19; Eph. 5. 15; Phil. 2. 15.)

17. But beware of men. (Phil. 3. 2; ch. 24. 9; Mark 13. 9; Acts 5. 4.) "Think not that all your innocence and all your wisdom will screen you from persecution. They will scourge you in their synagogues. In these the Jews held their courts of judicature, about both civil and ecclesiastical affairs"—WESLEY. (See on ch. 4. 23.)

19. Take no thought—"Be not anxious." (Mark 13. 11; Luke 12. 11; 21. 14; Ex. 4. 12.)

20. Spirit of your Father. "Our Lord can only say My Father and your Father, never our Father"—S.

22. The end. (Dan. 12. 12, 13; Rev. 2. 10; comp. 1 Cor. 1. 8; Heb. 3. 6; 6. 11.)

23. Flee ye into another. Not merely for your safety, showing the prudence of the serpent, but also for the purpose of continuing to carry out this My commission. For verily I say unto you. A repetition of the solemn form of words with which the first part of the discourse had ended, to indicate that this was the end of the second portion. "Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel—make what haste ye will—till the Son of Man be come to destroy their temple and nation"—WESLEY.

And also shall be "come in His kingdom (ch. 16. 28) for the fulfilment of the prophetic vision from which the title "Son of Man" is taken. (Dan. 7. 12–14.) For the destruction of the Temple and capital of Judaism, and the necessary termination of the economy of Moses, marked the fuller establishment of that spiritual kingdom over which "the Son of Man" (see Acts 7. 56) shall be Head and Lord until "all enemies shall be put under His feet." (1 Cor. 15. 27, 28; Rev. 22. 3, 7, 12.) The third and most weighty section of this discourse "extends its glance to the remote and final end, promising, by its third Verily, a corresponding reward which shall come at the same time with the judgment"—S.

24. The disciple is not above his Master—that is, should not expect to be treated better than his Master. (Luke 6. 40; John 13. 16; 15. 20.)

25. Beelzebub. In margin, "Beelzebul," which is no doubt the correct reading. The word means "Lord of the house," it may be "of the temple," or "Lord of idolatry," more strictly, "Lord of sacrificing to idols." The worst of demons. (Ch. 9. 34; 12. 24.)

26. Fear them not therefore. "For ye have only the same usage with your Lord." For there is nothing covered, etc. (Mark 4. 22; Luke 12. 2, 3; 1 Cor. 4. 5.) "The form of this sentence seems to indicate a proverbial saying, which our Lord uses here with special reference to His gospel, which, though now obscure, shall shortly be made manifest and be triumphant"—S. C.

27. In darkness. "Even what I now tell you secretly is not to be kept secret long, but declared publicly. Therefore, what ye hear in the ear, publish on the house-top. Two customs of the Jews seem to be alluded to here: their doctors used to whisper in the ear of their disciples what they were to pronounce aloud to others. And, as their houses were low and flat-roofed, they sometimes preached to the people from thence"—WESLEY.

28. And fear not them. (Isa. 8. 12, 13; 51. 7, 12; 1 Pet. 3. 14.) But rather fear Him. (Jas. 4. 12.) "It is remarkable that our Lord commands those who love God, still to fear Him, even on this account, under this notion"—WESLEY.

29, 30. Are not two sparrows. (1 Sam. 14. 45; Luke 21. 18; Acts 27. 34.) "The particular providence of God is another reason for your not fearing man. For this extends to the very smallest things. And if He has such care over the most inconsiderable creatures, how much more will He take care of you (provided you 'confess' Him 'before men,' before powerful enemies of the truth); and that not only in this life, but in the other also!"—WESLEY.

32. Whosoever therefore shall confess Me—publicly acknowledge Me for the promised Messiah. But this confession implies the receiving His whole doctrine (Mark 8. 38), and obeying all His commandments.

33. But whosoever shall deny Me. (2 Tim. 2. 12.) "The context shows plainly that it is a practical, consistent confession which is meant, and also a practical and enduring denial. The Lord will not confess the confessing Judas, nor deny the denying Peter; the traitor who denied Him in act is denied; the apostle who confessed Him even to death will be confessed"—A.

34. Think not that I am come to send peace. (Luke 12. 49, 53.) That is, think not that universal peace will be the immediate consequence of My coming: just the contrary. Both public and private divisions will follow, wheresoever My gospel comes with power. Yet this is not the design, though it be the event, of His coming, through the opposition of devils and men.

37. Is not worthy of Me. (Luke 14. 26, 27; comp. Deut. 23. 9; Ex. 32. 26, 29.) "Christ is the exceeding great reward of those that love Him; the greatest love and the most to be loved above all others"—S. "Not that, as is sometimes erroneously supposed, a very great degree of love to the dearest on earth amounts to loving them more than Christ. No degree of proper affection can ever make affection wrongful, even as no diminution of it would make wrongful affection right. The love which Christ condemneth differs not in degree, but in kind, from rightful affection. It is one which takes the place of love to Christ—not which is placed by the side of that of Christ"—ED.

38. "He that taketh not his cross—that is, whatever pain or inconvenience cannot be avoided but by doing some evil, or omitting some good"—WESLEY.

This is our Lord's first express allusion to His death by crucifixion; and His apostles must have heard it with amazement. The saying has become familiar to us as a proverb, but at that time it was new to them, for crucifixion was unknown to Jewish law, and the very mention of the cross must have thrilled them with horror. On later occasions our Lord repeated the saying with more direct reference to Himself. (Ch. 16. 24; Mark 10. 21; Luke 9. 23.) But His disciples never rightly understood His meaning.

39. He that findeth his life shall lose it. (Ch. 16. 25; John 12. 25.) "He that saves his life, by denying Me, shall lose it eternally; and he that loses his life, by confessing Me, shall save it eternally. And as you shall be thus rewarded, so in proportion shall they who entertain you for My sake."

40–42. He that receiveth you receiveth Me. (Ch. 18. 5; 25. 40, 45.) "You," that is, His apostles. But He immediately passes on to prophets representing any divinely-commissioned teacher (1 Cor. 14. 22–32); to righteous men, "saints" (Acts 9. 13); those whom He recognises as true subjects of His kingdom (ch. 5. 20); then to these little ones—learners, probably His feeble and inexperienced followers, or, it may be, to children, pointing to some near Him as He spoke ("of such is the kingdom of heaven"). The truth affirmed throughout is that Christ identifies Himself with His disciples—"I in them, and Thou in Me" (John 17. 21, 23)—and will accept and reward as acts of devotion to Himself every act of service rendered to them for His sake.

CHAPTER XI.

Vers. 1–30. MESSAGE FROM JOHN THE BAPTIST: OUR LORD'S ANSWER, AND FOLLOWING DISCOURSE. (Luke 7. 18–35; 10. 13–15, 21, 22.)—1. To teach and to preach in their cities. Thus for a time our Lord laboured apart from the Twelve, but where and with what results is not stated.

2. John had heard in the prison. Said by Josephus to have been the strong fortress of Machærus, near the north-east corner of the Dead Sea. The works of Christ, that is, of the Christ. The Evangelist evidently uses this title to intimate that this was the form in which our Lord's works had been reported to John. S. Luke states that they were his own disciples who told him of our Lord's miracles, and also that they had given rise to a widely circulated report that "a great Prophet had been raised up" (Luke 7. 15–18). On hearing this from his disciples, in words suggesting the hope that the "Great Prophet" might be the Messiah, John sent two of his disciples to obtain from our Lord a definite answer to the question, Art Thou or art Thou not the very Christ? His motive was, most probably, not only to satisfy his disciples, but also to obtain reassurance for himself.

3. Art Thou He that should come? The coming One for whose appearing all Israel is anxiously awaiting. (Isa. 11. 1–4; Luke 4. 18, 19.)

4. Go and show John again those signs of My being the Messiah of which you have already spoken to him, and "which are a stronger proof than any bare assertions can be"—WESLEY.

S. Luke says that, at the very moment when the messengers arrived, our Lord was occupied with works of healing in many forms.

5. The blind receive their sight, etc. (Isa. 29. 18; 35. 5; 61. 1.)

6. Shall not be offended in Me—who shall not find in Me, as the Messiah, an occasion of stumbling or of a faltering faith. It is clear from these words, which it should be observed are part of the answer to be conveyed to John, that his mind had been harassed with some difficulty respecting Christ. The testimony which our Lord bore to him after the departure of his messengers is confirmatory of this; for it implies that until His kingdom should be fully established, by the coming of the Holy Spirit, an obscure and defective conception of His character would be unavoidable.

7. What went ye out into the wilderness to see? What kind of man did you expect to find him to whom you went out in crowds? A man to be symbolised by a reed shaken with the wind? Meaning of course is, you went to see a man of known inflexible moral purpose.

8. A man clothed in soft raiment? "An effeminate courtier, accustomed to fawning and flattery. You may expect to find such a character in palaces, not in a wilderness"—WESLEY.

9. A prophet? yea (ch. 21. 26), and more than a prophet. "For the prophets only pointed Me out afar off; but John was My immediate forerunner"—WESLEY.

10. For this is he, etc. (Isa. 40. 3; Mal. 3. 1.) "It is remarkable that both S. Matthew and S. Luke, as well as S. Mark in another place (1. 2), cite this prophecy of Malachi with the substitution of Thy way before Thee. In the original, God is represented as speaking of Himself; in the citation He addresses the Messiah. The Lord thus, in applying the prophecy to Himself as Messiah, asserts His own Deity, as one with the Lord of Hosts who speaks through the prophets"—S. C.

11. He that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he. "Which an ancient author explains thus: 'One perfect in the Law, as John was, is inferior to one who is "baptized into the death of Christ." For this is the kingdom of heaven, even "to be buried with Christ," and to be "raised up together with Him." John was greater than all who had been then born of women; but he was cut off before the kingdom of heaven was given.' He seems to mean that righteousness, peace, and joy, which constitute the present, inward kingdom of heaven. 'He was blameless as to that "righteousness which is by the Law"; but he fell short of those who are perfected by the Spirit of life which is in Christ. Whosoever therefore is "least in the kingdom of heaven," by Christian regeneration, is greater than any who has attained only the righteousness of the Law, because "the Law maketh nothing perfect."' It may further mean, the least true Christian believer has a more perfect knowledge of Jesus Christ, of His redemption and kingdom, than John the Baptist had, who died before the full manifestation of the gospel"—WESLEY.

12. The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence. (Luke 16. 16.) Ever since John began to preach the coming of My kingdom, and to bear witness of Me, hindrances of every kind have been so multiplied by My opponents that, if men enter it at all, it must be with the violent determination of those who take a city by storm.

13. For all the Prophets and the Law prophesied until John. "For all that is written in the Law and the Prophets only foretold as distant what is now fulfilled. In John the old dispensation expired, and the new began"—WESLEY.

14. This is Elias, which was for to come. (Ch. 17. 12; Mal. 4. 5.) In a spiritual sense John was Elijah (Luke 1. 17). That he was Elijah actually, in the sense in which the Jews expected his return, John himself denied (John 1. 21).

15. He that hath ears, etc. An intimation that only men of spiritual discernment would pierce the deeper meaning of the prophet's words to which he was calling attention.

16. This generation—"that is, the men of this age. They are like those froward children of whom their fellows complain, that they will be pleased no way"—WESLEY.

18. John came neither eating nor drinking—"in a rigorous, austere way, like Elijah—and they say, He hath a devil—is melancholy, from the influence of an evil spirit"—WESLEY.

19. The Son of Man came eating and drinking—showing that man might be holy without asceticism—and they say, etc. His conduct in social life is unbefitting that of a prophet of the Lord. "The children of that generation expected quite another Elijah and quite another Christ, and disbelieved and complained, because the real Elijah and Christ did not meet their foolish thoughts"—ED. But wisdom—here personified, as in Prov. 9. 1-6, etc.—is justified of her children. This is a general truth, but means, as our Lord applies it to Himself, My character and position in social life is vindicated by the truly wise.

20. Most of His mighty works. Yet we have no record of any of them; very few of our Lord's miracles, comparatively, have been narrated.

21. Woe unto thee—"that is, miserable art thou. For these are not curses or imprecations, as has been commonly supposed; but a solemn, compassionate declaration of the misery they were bringing on themselves. Chorazin and Bethsaida were cities of Galilee, standing by the Lake of Gennesaret. Tyre and Sidon were cities of Phœnicia, lying on the seashore. The inhabitants of them were heathens"—WESLEY.

This is the only occasion on which Chorazin is mentioned. (Luke 10.13.) Its site was long unknown, but is now supposed to be identical with that of Kerazeh, two miles north-west of Capernaum.

22. But I say unto you. "Besides the general denunciation of woe to those stubborn unbelievers, the degree of their misery will be greater than even that of Tyre and Sidon, yea, of Sodom."

23. Thou, Capernaum, who hast been exalted to heaven—"that is, highly honoured by My presence and miracles"—WESLEY.

25. Jesus answered and said. This may mean simply Jesus said. More probably it means, said, as in a momentary outburst of His continual inner communion with the Father. Because Thou hast hid these things—the things concerning Himself and His kingdom, of which He had been speaking—from the wise and prudent—in the worldly and Jewish sense; from the self-misguided and misguiding Scribes and Pharisees and men whom they represent. And hast revealed them unto babes. Those who receive communications of spiritual truth with childlike simplicity and confidence. (Comp. 1 Cor. 1. 26-30; 2. 9, 10; 2 Cor. 4. 3, 4.)

27. All things are delivered unto Me of My Father. (Ch. 28. 18; Luke 10. 22; John 3. 35; 5. 26, 27; 6. 44, 46; 14. 6-9; 17. 2; 1 Cor. 15. 27.) The declaration is absolute, but here refers directly to the things of supreme knowledge of which He was speaking; all things pertaining to His own mysterious nature and the spiritual character of His kingdom. And no man (R.V. "no one") knoweth the Son, but the Father. "None but the Almighty Father has full entire possession of the mystery of the person and office of the Son: it is a depth hidden from all being but His, whose purposes are involved in it and by it." Neither knoweth any man (R.V. "neither doth any know") the Father save the Son. "Nor does any fully apprehend, in the depths of his being, the love and grace of the Father, except the Son, and he to whom the Son, by the Eternal Spirit proceeding from the Father and the Son, will reveal Him"—A. (Col. 1. 12; John 16. 15.)

28. Come unto Me. (Isa. 45. 22; John 6. 25-37, 44-47.) All ye that labour—toil as in a yoke—and are heavy laden—as with a burden. The allusion is, in the first instance, to those who felt the rites of the Mosaic (Acts 15. 10) and the superadded rites of tradition and the oral laws (ch. 23. 4; Luke 11. 46) to be intolerable; but also as determined by the preceding discourse to all who were struggling against intellectual doubt and difficulty respecting Christ and His mission, or were oppressed under a consciousness of guilt. And I will give you rest—of mind, heart, and spirit.

29. Take My yoke upon you and learn of Me. (2 Cor. 10. 1; Phil. 2. 6, 8; 1 Pet. 2. 21.) "Believe in Me; receive Me as your Prophet, Priest, and King. For I am meek and lowly in heart—meek towards all men, lowly towards God. And ye shall find rest. (Jer. 6. 16.) Whoever therefore does not find rest of soul is not meek and lowly. The fault is not in the yoke of Christ; but in thee, who hast not taken it upon thee. Nor is it possible for any one to be discontented, but through want of meekness or lowliness"—WESLEY.

30. For My yoke is easy—"Or rather, gracious, sweet, benign, delightful. And My burden—contrary to those of men, is ease, liberty, and honour"—WESLEY. (Rom. 6. 17-23; 8. 1-4.)

CHAPTER XII.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM PERSISTENTLY DISPUTED.

Vers. 1-8. PLUCKING EARS OF CORN ON THE SABBATH. (Mark 2. 23-28; Luke 6. 1-5.)

—1. His disciples were an hungered. A fact to be ascribed either to their poverty, or to their unceasing services to their ever active Master. To pluck the ears of corn. S. Luke adds, "rubbing them in their hands." Which shows that the corn was not barley, but wheat, and indicates that the season was the early summer.

2. Not lawful. For it was regarded as a kind of reaping. "Do Thy disciples break the Sabbath before Thine eyes, and dost Thou not rebuke them? Is this what they learn from Thee?" So the act was perfectly lawful in itself. (Deut. 23. 25.)

3. What David did. (1 Sam. 21. 6.) Whom ye teach your disciples to take as the great example of obedience to the Law.

4. Into the house of God. (Ex. 26. 30; 29. 32, 33; Lev. 24. 9.) "Into the tabernacle. The Temple was not yet built. The shewbread. So they called the bread which the priest, who served that week, put every Sabbath day on the golden table that was in the holy place, before the Lord. The loaves were twelve in number, and represented the twelve tribes of Israel. When the new were brought, the stale were taken away, but were to be eaten by the priests only"—WESLEY.

It is to be noted also that the new bread was hot (1 Sam. 21. 6), and must therefore have been baked the same day. "Not merely does the sacred history relate exceptional instances of necessity, but the Law itself ordains labour on the Sabbath as a duty"—S.

5. Read in the Law. (Neh. 8. 8.) Profane the Sabbath. (Num. 28. 9; John 7. 22, 23.) "That is, do their ordinary work on this, as on a common day, cleansing all things, and preparing the sacrifices. A greater than the Temple. If therefore the Sabbath must give way to the Temple, much more must it give way to Me"—WESLEY.

6. One greater than the Temple. (John 2. 19; 2 Chron. 6. 18; Mal. 3. 1.)

7. I will have (R.V. "I desire") mercy, and not sacrifice. (Ch. 6. 15; Hos. 6. 6.) That is, when they interfere with each other, I always prefer acts of mercy before matters of positive institution—yea, before all ceremonial institutions whatever; because these being only means of religion are suspended, of course, if circumstances occur wherein they clash with love, which is the end of it"—WESLEY. (Comp. 1 Cor. 13. 1-3.)

8. For the Son of Man is Lord. "Therefore they are guiltless, were it only on this account, that they act by My authority, and attend on Me in My ministry, as the priests attend on God in the Temple"—WESLEY.

This is the emphatic ending of the record by each of the three Evangelists; but in S. Mark the important principle is given before these last words, "the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath." Three things are here then put beyond dispute: 1. The Sabbath was given to man for his benefit. It must therefore be thankfully observed as a boon, and used for the bodily and spiritual ends for which it was instituted. 2. But we are not to observe it in a slavish obedience to the letter of the institution, as if the end of our own creation was to honour the Sabbath. There are works to be done on the Sabbath for ourselves and for others, which we cannot blamelessly omit. 3. He who is "the Son of Man," and One greater than the Temple, the Head and Sovereign of mankind, has power even over the Sabbath, to use it as He will for the gracious ends of His manifestation. And is it not by an act of His supreme authority that the first day of the week has been substituted for the seventh, the Lord's Day becoming God's holy day?

Vers. 9–14. THE WITHERED HAND HEALED: REPEATED CHARGE OF SABBATH-BREAKING. (Mark 3. 1–6; Luke 6. 6–11.) — 9. Their synagogue. Where it was cannot be decided.

10. His hand—(S. Luke says, "his right hand") — withered — that is, in a state of paralysis or atrophy. The other Evangelists add that the "scribes and Pharisees," probably the same men whose cavils He had just confuted, "watched Him." They seem to have brought the man into the synagogue in the expectation that Jesus would be present, in order to see whether He would exert His healing power on his behalf, and afford them ground for a formal and definite charge of Sabbath violation. S. Luke says, "that He knew their thoughts"—their insidious reasonings—"and said to the man, Rise up, and stand forth in the midst." So that the healing might take place before the whole assembly. And they asked Him, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath days? Which our Lord answered by a counter-question, as at other times (ch. 21, 24), "Is it lawful on the Sabbath days to do good or to do evil?" His purpose was to do good; theirs to do evil; for they were plotting to put Him to death.

11. If it fall into a pit, etc. (Deut. 22. 4; Luke 14. 5.) "But they held their peace" (Mark).

13. Then saith He to the man—"when He had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts" (Mark)—Stretch forth thine hand (1 Kings 13. 6); thus He gave them no legal basis for an accusation against Him. He did not touch the man. He did not command the restoration to take place. He simply bade him do an impossible thing. And he stretched it forth. He manifested his faith in the great Healer by the attempt to obey His command; and in the attempt the cure was wrought.

14. Held a council (R.V. "took counsel") how they might destroy Him. (John 5. 16, 18.) So little power have miracles to conquer prejudice and command faith. They have been disgracefully baffled in their attempt to fix the capital offence of Sabbath-breaking upon Him; and now, filled with madness, as S. Luke records, they came together as an irregular council, associating with them their political opponents, "the Herodians" (Mark), to consider by what means they might put Him to death, with a semblance of righteous zeal for the Law.

15. He withdrew Himself. (Ch. 10. 23.) And great multitudes followed Him, and He healed them all. (Ch. 19. 2; Luke 5. 17.)

17. That it might be fulfilled, etc. (Ch. 1. 22.) By the prophet. (Isa. 42. 1–4.)

18. Behold My Servant. (Zech. 3. 8.) Points of resemblance between the servant of the Lord, as described by Isaiah, and Christ, in whom Isaiah's Ideal is realised, were continually before the mind of Matthew. (Ch. 7. 29.)

19. He shall not strive, nor cry. Calm in the consciousness of His absolute authority, He should be free from all the wild gesticulations and ravings of false prophets. Neither shall any man hear His voice in the streets—"that is, he shall not be contentious, noisy, or ostentatious; but gentle, quiet, and lowly. We may observe, each word rises above the other, expressing a still higher degree of humility and gentleness."

20. A bruised reed—"a convinced sinner; one that is bruised with the weight of sin. Smoking flax—one that has the least good desire, the faintest spark of grace. Till He send forth judgment unto victory—that is, till He make righteousness completely victorious over all its enemies"—WESLEY.

Vers. 22–30. HEALING A BLIND AND DUMB DEMONIAC: A CHARGE OF BEING CONFEDERATE WITH SATAN. (Mark 7. 24–27; Luke 11. 14–29.) —22, 23. Then was brought unto Him. A similar incident is recorded in ch. 9. 32–34. But the effects of the possession in this case were more distressing, and the blasphemous plea of the Pharisees more complete. "This instance of possession being accompanied both with blindness and the loss of speech, induced in consequence, probably, of the terrible power exerted by the devil upon the whole frame, rendered the sudden healing of this unfortunate man, by the expulsion of Satan, exceedingly remarkable; and as it produced great amazement among the people, so that they said, Is not this the Son of David? and showed a disposition to acknowledge our Lord to be the Messiah in a tumultuary manner, so it excited the Pharisees to endeavour to countervail this impression, by spreading among the people the blasphemous theory they had adopted to account for His miracles, 'This man doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils'"—R. W.

24. When the Pharisees heard it (S. Mark says, "they came down from Jerusalem"). They had been sent down as spies to watch His movements and note His sayings, in order to detect some ground of accusation, and to counteract His influence over the people. But by Beelzebub. This had been already put forth (ch. 9. 34), but it is now reported openly and with emphasis, it may be as having been agreed to at the consultation mentioned in ver. 14. The prince of the devils. (See ch. 10. 25.)

25. And Jesus knew their thoughts—that is, their intentions. "It seems, they had as yet only said it in their hearts"—WESLEY.

26. How shall then his kingdom stand? How could any kingdom stand, one part of it seeking the destruction of the other?

27, 28. By whom do your children (R.V. "your sons") (2 Kings 2. 3)—that is, disciples—cast them out. It seems, some of them really did this; although the sons of Sceva could not. (Acts 19. 14–16.) Therefore they shall be your judges. Ask them, if Satan will cast out Satan: let even them be judges in this matter. And they shall convict you of obstinacy and partiality, who impute that in Me to Beelzebub, which in them you impute to God. Besides, how can I rob him of his subjects, till I have conquered him? The kingdom of God is come unto you—unawares; before you expected. So the word implies—Come upon (R.V.) "you," so that you are surprised into an attitude of malignant opposition.

29. How can one enter, etc. (Isa. 49. 24.) "So Christ coming into the world, which was then eminently the strong one's, Satan's house, first bound him, and then took his spoils"—WESLEY.

30. He that is not with Me is against Me. For there are no neuters in this war. Every one must be either with Christ or against Him; either a loyal subject or a rebel. And there are none upon earth who neither promote nor obstruct His kingdom. For he that does not gather souls to God scatters them from Him.

31. I say unto you. (Luke 12. 10.) I who alone have authority to reveal this. (Ch. 6. 29; 18. 10, 19.) The blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. "How much stir has been made about this! How many sermons, yea volumes, have been written concerning it! And yet there is nothing plainer in all the Bible. It is neither more nor less than the ascribing those miracles to the power of the devil, which Christ wrought by the power of the Holy Ghost"—WESLEY.

This is made sufficiently clear by the explanation given by S. Mark (3. 22-30)—"Because they said He had an unclean spirit." The warning is, that "he who, with full evidence and knowledge of the Divine power manifested by Christ, persists in enmity to Him, and blasphemes the work of the Holy Spirit as the work of Satan, who wilfully and knowingly calls evil good and good evil, gives proof of that reprobate mind which gives no hope of future repentance"—S. C. (Neh. 6. 4-8.)

32. Whosoever speaketh against the Son of Man—"In any other respect—it shall be forgiven him—upon his true repentance. (1 Tim. 1. 13.) But whosoever speaketh thus against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven, neither in this world nor in the world to come. This was a proverbial expression among the Jews, for a thing that would never be done. It here means further, he shall not escape the punishment of it, either in this world or in the world to come. The judgment of God shall overtake him, both here and hereafter"—WESLEY.

33. Either make the tree good and its fruit good; or make the tree corrupt, and its fruit corrupt—"that is, you must allow, they are both good, or both bad. For if the fruit is good, so is the tree; if the fruit is evil, so is the tree also." For the tree is known by its fruit. (Ch. 7. 20.) "As if He had said, Ye may therefore know Me by My fruits. By My converting sinners to God, you may know that God hath sent Me."

34. O generation of vipers. (Ch. 3. 7.) Adder's poison was under their lips (Ps. 140. 3). "In another kind also, the tree is known by its fruits, namely, the heart by the conversation"—WESLEY. (Luke 6. 45.)

36. Every idle word. Every word which is not spoken for the true and fitting end of speech. This does not condemn conversation meant to promote cheerfulness in company, but words which are in their nature unfruitful of good (Eph. 5. 11); or provocative of evil, such as "foolish talking and jesting." (Eph. 5. 4; 4. 29; Col. 4. 5, 6.)

37. "For by thy words (as well as thy tempers and works) thou shalt then be either acquitted or condemned. Your words as well as actions shall be produced in evidence for or against you, to prove whether you were a true believer or not. And according to that evidence you will either be acquitted or condemned in the great day"—WESLEY.

38. We would see a sign from Thee. This they said, "tempting Him" (Luke)—putting Him to the test. A sign from heaven—like those of Moses (ch. 16. 1; 1 Cor. 1. 22; comp. John 6. 30, 31; 12. 28–31). In order that they might be convinced that His miracles were really wrought by the Holy Ghost, let Him give them the decisive proof of a sign from heaven.

39. "An adulterous generation. (Isa. 57. 3.) Whose heart wanders from God, though they profess Him to be their husband. Such adulterers are all those who love the world, and all who seek the friendship of it. Seeketh a sign—after all they have had already, which were abundantly sufficient to convince them, had not their hearts been estranged from God, and consequently averse to the truth. The sign of the prophet Jonah—who was herein a type of Christ"—WESLEY.

"The sign of Jonas is the most remarkable foreshadowing in the Old Testament of the resurrection of our Lord"—A.

40. Three days and three nights. "It was customary with the Eastern nations to reckon any part of a natural day of twenty-four hours for the whole day. Accordingly they used to say, a thing was done after three or seven days, if it was done on the third or seventh day from that which was last mentioned. Instances of this may be seen (1 Kings 20. 29); and in many other places. And as the Hebrews had no word to express a natural day, they used night and day, or day and night, for it. So that to say a thing happened after three days and three nights was with them the very same as to say it happened after three days, or on the third day. (See Esther 4. 16; 5. 1; Gen. 7. 4, 12; Ex. 24. 18; 34. 28.)"—WESLEY.

In the whale's belly. Rather "in the fish's belly." The Greek word signifies any sea-monster or huge fish, without specifying the kind. So, in Jonah 1. 17, it is only called "a great fish"—S. C.

41. Because they repented at the preaching of Jonas. (Jonah 3. 5.) S. Luke says, "As Jonas was a sign to the Ninevites"—that is, as his miraculous deliverance was a sign of his Divine mission. So shall also the Son of Man be. "The preaching of Jonas to the Ninevites was a sign after his resurrection; so shall the preaching of the Son of Man be, by His Spirit in His apostles, after His resurrection"—S.

42. The uttermost parts of the earth. (1 Kings 10. 1.) A great distance. A greater than Solomon is here. "His preaching, greater than that of Jonah; His wisdom, than that of Solomon"—A.

43. When the unclean spirit, etc. With this most solemn warning, recorded by S. Luke in almost the same words (ch. 11. 24), our Lord concludes this, one of His most instructive and admonitory discourses. He speaks directly with reference to that generation as worse than preceding generations, because it was rejecting greater advantages, and incurring the heavier doom (vers. 31, 32). But this warning is equally applicable to ourselves. Is gone out of man. "Not willingly, but being compelled by One that is stronger than he. He walketh—wanders up and down—through dry places—barren, dreary, desolate; or, places not yet watered with the gospel. Seeking rest, and findeth none. How can he, while he carries with him his own hell? And is not this the case of his children too? Reader, is it thy case?"—WESLEY.

44. Whence I came out. "He speaks, as if he had come out of his own accord: see his pride! He findeth it empty—of God, of Christ, of His Spirit. Swept—from love, lowliness, meekness, and all the fruits of the Spirit. And garnished—with levity and security; so that there is nothing to keep him out, and much to invite him in"—WESLEY.

45. Seven other spirits—"that is, a great many; a certain number being put for an uncertain. More wicked than himself. Whence it appears, that there are degrees of wickedness among the devils themselves. They enter in and dwell—for ever, in him who is forsaken of God. So shall it be to this wicked generation—yea, and to apostates in all ages"—WESLEY.

46. While He yet talked—He was abruptly interrupted. The incident is related by S. Mark (ch. 3. 31–35), and by S. Luke (ch. 8. 19–21). It implies another attempt on the part of our Lord's determined opponents to ensnare and destroy Him. They had said that He was possessed by an unclean spirit, and seemed to have persuaded His mother and brethren to believe this; for they "went out to lay hold on Him; for they said, He is beside Himself" (Mark 3. 21). They had thought only of His excessive and self-forgetful labours, but His enemies had ascribed these to weakness; and even they, His friends, were beginning to accept this explanation.

47. Then one said unto Him, Behold Thy mother and Thy brethren—James, Joses, Simon, Judas—stand without—an indication of their anxiety and want of confidence. Desiring to speak with Thee. But also, as we know, and as is shown by their coming as a body, to control Him.

48. But He answered, and said. "Our Lord's knowing why they came sufficiently justifies His seeming disregard of them"—WESLEY.

49, 50. He stretched forth His hand, etc. (John 15. 14; Heb. 2. 11.) "See the highest severity and the highest goodness! Severity to His natural, goodness to His spiritual, relations. In a manner disclaiming the former, who opposed the will of His heavenly Father, and owning the latter, who obeyed it"—WESLEY.

"All obedient believers are near akin to Jesus Christ. They wear His name, bear His image, have His nature, are of His family. He loves them, converses freely with them, as His relations. He bids them welcome to His table, takes care of them, provides for them, sees that they want nothing that is fit for them; when He died He left them rich legacies; now He is in heaven, He keeps up a correspondence with them, and will have them all with Him at last, and will in nothing fail to do the kinsman's part (Ruth 3. 13); nor will ever be ashamed of His poor relations, but will confess them before men, before the angels, and before His Father"—H.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE KINGDOM EXPLAINED AND ILLUSTRATED BY PARABLES.

Vers. 1–23. THE SOWER: CONDITION FOR RECEIVING THE WORD OF THE KINGDOM. (Mark 4. 4–20; Luke 8. 5–15.)—1. Out of the house. Probably the house of Peter in Capernaum, where His mother and brethren had sought to seize and secure Him through a device of the Pharisees. (Ch. 12. 46, 47.) And sat by the sea-side. The northern shore of the Lake of Gennesaret; "when He began again to teach" (Mark).

2. Great multitudes (S. Luke says, "out of every city"). So that—to avoid the pressure of the crowds, and enable them to see and hear Him—He went into a ship, or boat, and sat.

3. In parables. "A parable is a serious narration, within the limits of probability, of a course of action, pointing to some moral or spiritual truth; and derives its form from real analogies impressed by the Creator of all things on His creatures"—A. "The word is here taken in its proper sense, for apt similes or comparisons. This way of speaking, extremely common in the Eastern countries, drew and fixed the attention of many, and occasioned the truth delivered to sink the deeper into humble and serious hearers. At the same time, by an awful mixture of justice and mercy, it hid them from the proud and careless. In this chapter our Lord delivers seven parables; directing the four former, as being of general concern, to all the people; the three latter to His disciples"—WESLEY.

"Behold, the sower. How exquisitely proper is this parable to be an introduction to all the rest! In this our Lord answers a very obvious and a very important question. The same sower, Christ, and the same preachers sent by Him, always sow the same seed. Why has it not always the same effect? He that hath ears to hear, let him hear"—WESLEY.

4. Fell by the wayside. The hard footway through the field. S. Luke, "and it was trodden down." And the fowls came and devoured them up. "It is observable, that our Lord points out the grand hindrances of our bearing fruit, in the same order as they occur. The first danger is, that the birds will devour the seed. If it escape this, there is then another danger, namely, lest it be scorched, and wither away. It is long after this that the thorns spring up and choke the good seed. A vast majority of those who hear the word of God receive the seed as by the highway side. Of those who do not lose it by the birds, yet many receive it as on stony places. Many of them who receive it in a better soil, yet suffer the thorns to grow up and choke it: so that few even of these endure to the end, and bear fruit unto perfection. Yet, in all these cases, it is not the will of God that hinders, but their own voluntary perverseness"—WESLEY.

5. Stony places. S. Luke, "On the rock." The meaning is continuous rock, covered with a thin coating of mould, where the plant would shoot forth quickly on account of the great heat, and would as quickly wither, "because it lacked moisture" (Luke).

7. Among thorns—thistles, weeds, etc.; they greatly infested the soil of Palestine.

8. Good ground—soft, deep, and with the roots of thorns and all other useless plants carefully cleared away.

9. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear. (Ch. 11. 15.) This solemn call to attention is given by the three Gospels. (Comp. Rev. 2. 11; 13. 9.)

10. And the disciples came—probably when He was returned "into the house" (ver. 36) "and was alone" (Luke)—and said unto Him, Why speakest Thou unto them in parables? So that hitherto our Lord had rarely used this method of teaching.

11. It is given unto you—"who have—to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. (Ch. 11. 25; Rom. 16. 25; 1 Cor. 2. 7, 10; Eph. 1. 9, 18; 3. 9; Col. 1. 26, 27; 1 John 2. 27.) The deep things, which flesh and blood cannot reveal, pertaining to the inward, present kingdom of heaven. But to them, who have not, it is not given. Therefore speak I in parables, that ye may understand, while they do not understand"—WESLEY.

A mystery is a hidden truth. As so frequently used in the New Testament it is a truth or Divine purpose, formerly hidden, but now revealed. (Rom. 11. 25; Eph. 3. 4–11.) Our Lord was at that time gradually revealing to His recipient and faithful hearers the secret truths which centred in Himself, and were the essential principles of His kingdom, and which, after the coming of the Holy Spirit, were to be revealed fully. (2 Cor. 3. 6–18.)

12. For (ch. 25. 29; Luke 19. 26) whosoever hath—"that is, improves what he hath, uses the grace given according to the design of the Giver—to him shall be given—more and more, in proportion to that improvement. But whosoever hath not—improves it not—from him shall be taken even what he hath. Here is the grand rule of God's dealing with the children of men: a rule, fixed as the pillars of heaven. This is the key to all His providential dispensations; as will appear to men and angels in that day"—WESLEY.

13. "Therefore I speak to them in parables, because seeing they see not. In pursuance of this general rule, I do not give more knowledge to this people, because they use not that which they have already: having all the means of seeing, hearing, and understanding, they use none of them: they do not effectually see, or hear, or understand anything"—WESLEY.

14. And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Esaias. (Isa. 6. 9; see also John 12. 40; Acts 28. 26, 27; Rom. 11. 8.) "Hearing ye will hear, but in no wise understand—that is, ye will surely hear; all possible means will be given you; yet they will profit you nothing, because your heart is sensual, stupid, and insensible; your spiritual senses are shut up—yea, you have closed your eyes against the light; as being unwilling to understand the things of God, and afraid, not desirous, that He should heal you"—WESLEY.

16. "But blessed are your eyes. For you both see and understand. You know how to prize the light which is given you"—WESLEY.

17. Prophets and righteous men. (2 Sam. 23. 5; Eph. 3. 5, 6; Heb. 11. 13; 1 Pet. 1. 10, 11.)

18. Hear ye therefore. Hear in your heart, that you may understand the true meaning (ver. 15). "'The seed is the word of God" (Luke). (Col. 1. 5, 6; 1 Cor. 3. 6, 7; 1 Pet. 1. 23; Jas. 1. 21.) "Also, conversely, the word of God is seed"—S. It contains the principle of life.

19. When any one heareth the word of the kingdom—(ch. 4. 23)—and understandeth it not—"fails to recognise his own relation to it, and to the kingdom it proclaims—'and considereth it not'—the first and most general cause of unfruitfulness. The wicked one cometh—either inwardly, filling the mind with thoughts of other things; or by his agents. Such are all they that introduce other subjects, when men should be considering what they have heard"—WESLEY.

20. Into stony places. (Ezek. 33. 31, 32; John 5. 35; Gal. 4. 15.) "The seed sown 'on stony places,' therefore sprung up soon, because it did not sink deep (ver. 5). He receiveth it with joy—perhaps with transport, with ecstasy; struck with the beauty of truth, and drawn by the preventing grace of God"—WESLEY.

21. Yet hath he not root in himself. (John 6. 66.) "No deep work of grace; no change in the ground of his heart. Nay, he has no deep conviction; and without this, good desires soon wither away. He is offended (R.V. 'he stumbleth'). He finds a thousand plausible pretences for leaving so narrow and rugged a way"—WESLEY.

22. Among the thorns is he that heareth the word, and considereth it—in spite of Satan and all his agents; yea, hath root in himself, is deeply convinced, and, in great measure, inwardly changed; so that he will not draw back, even when tribulation or persecution ariseth. And yet even in him, together with the good seed, the thorns spring up (ver. 7), perhaps unperceived at first, till they gradually choke it, destroy all its life and power, and he becometh unfruitful.

"Cares are thorns to the poor; wealth, to the rich; the desire of other things, to all. The deceitfulness of riches—deceitful, indeed! for they smile, and betray; kiss, and smite into hell. They put out the eyes, harden the heart, steal away all the life of God; fill the soul with pride, anger, love of the world; make men enemies to the whole cross of Christ; and all the while are eagerly desired, and vehemently pursued, even by those who believe there is a God"—WESLEY. (Comp. ch. 6. 33; Luke 17. 25, 31.)

23. Into the good ground. "Not only deep earth, prepared for the seed by the ploughing, but kept free from weeds by diligent and watchful labour. Understandeth it—so considers it and meditates upon it; maintains in his mind so deep and lively a conviction of its excellency and supreme importance, as to apply it to practical ends, both in the regulation of his heart and conduct. Hence in S. Luke it is, 'and keeps it in an honest and good heart'; a heart rendered so by the grace of God, communicated through previous religious advantages,—as the word of God contained in the Jewish Scriptures, or the preaching of John the Baptist,—and maintained and perfected by the word of Christ, kept within it. 'And bring forth fruit with patience' (Mark); with persevering resistance to all temptations, and a strong and unyielding endurance"—R. W. (Comp. John 14. 21; Jas. 1. 25.)

Vers. 24-30; 36-43. THE WHEAT AND THE TARES: TRUE AND COUNTERFEIT SUBJECTS OF THE KINGDOM.—24. Is likened unto a man. The history of the kingdom of heaven, or the reign of the Messiah, is like the case of a man who sowed good seed in his field—the seed being "the word of God," and "the field being the world" (ver. 38).

25. His enemy came and sowed tares. "Our Lord did not imagine here a form of malice without example, but alluded to one which may have been familiar enough to His hearers, one so easy of execution, involving so little risk, and yet effecting so great and so lasting a mischief"—T. The word translated tares, means more probably, as suggested in the margin of the R.V., "darnel," a poisonous plant which is scarcely distinguishable in the blade from wheat or barley. The tares represent non-spiritual members of Christ's visible and professing Church.

26. Then appeared the tares also—when coming into ear, not previously.

29. Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares. "Even the farmers, who in this country generally weed their fields, do not attempt to separate the one from the other. They would not only mistake good grain for them, but very commonly the roots of the two are so entertwined, that it is impossible to separate them without plucking up both. Both, therefore, must be left to grow together until the time of harvest"—T. "A zeal that is rash and precipitate is as much to be feared as the total lack of strict discipline"—C.

37. Is the Son of Man—Who was then personally sowing the word of spiritual life. Whatever good seed there is in the world, it all comes from the hand of Christ, and is of His sowing; truths preached, graces planted, souls sanctified, are good seed, and all owing to Christ. Ministers are instruments in Christ's hand to sow good seed; are employed by Him; and the success of their labours depends purely upon His blessing; so that it may well be said, "It is Christ and no other that sows the good seed"—N.

38. The field is the world. Humanity; the entire human seed. The good seed are the children of the kingdom—true, spiritual, faithful followers of Christ; those who have received the truth in the love of it; who have experienced its transforming power, and who show the fruits of righteousness in their character. (John 3. 3–5; Rom. 8. 4–17.) But the tares are the children of the wicked one. (John 8. 44; Acts 13. 10; 1 John 3. 8.) Apparent subjects of the kingdom of heaven, but real subjects of the kingdom of darkness; followers of Christ only in name and form; honoured, as belonging to Christ, by man that looketh only at the outward appearance, but disowned by Him who looketh at the heart. "Darnel, in the Church, is, properly, outside Christians, such as have the form of godliness without the power. Open sinners, such as have neither the form nor the power, are not so properly darnel as thistles and brambles; these ought to be rooted up without delay, and not suffered in the Christian community. Whereas should fallible men attempt to gather up the darnel, they would often root up the wheat with them"—WESLEY.

It is perfectly clear from this parable that the term, "the kingdom of heaven," is not synonymous with the Church, except when understood in the restricted and distinctive sense of the spiritual Church. (Col. 1. 12–18.)

39. The harvest is the end of the world. (Joel 3. 13; Rev. 14. 15.) In the margin of R.V. "The consummation of the age," that is, of the age or dispensation which began with the manifestation of the Son of God in the fulness of time, and will be completed "when He shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father" (1 Cor. 15. 24). The reapers are the angels—not the "servants," mentioned in ver. 27. (Rev. 14. 15–19; 2 Thess. 1. 5–10.)

41. They shall gather out of His kingdom—shall separate from His true subjects with whom they had mingled during the age, or dispensation now come to an end. All things that offend — "whatever had hindered or grieved the children of God; whatever things or persons had hindered the good seed which Christ had sown from taking root or bearing fruit. The Greek word is, all scandals"—WESLEY.

42. And shall cast them. (Ch. 25. 41; Rev. 21. 8.)

43. Then — when counterfeits have been separated from them—shall the righteous—sharers of that true and complete righteousness exceeding "the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees," which men in Christ attain (1 Cor. 1. 30)—shine forth as the sun. Their life previously "hidden in Christ with God," shall burst forth in all its vigour and activity; and the light in which they had walked, as behind a veil, shall beam out in its gladdening clearness. In the kingdom of their Father. (Dan. 12. 3; Rom. 8. 19.) "The kingdom," until the completion of the age, is the kingdom of Christ, "or the kingdom of Christ and of God"; then the subjects of the mediatorial kingdom shall enter with triumph into the eternal "kingdom of their Father." Then will be the full "manifestation of the sons of God" (Rom. 8. 19). Who hath ears, etc. (Ver. 9.)

Vers. 31, 32. THE GRAIN OF MUSTARD SEED: EXTERNAL GROWTH OF THE KINGDOM. (Mark 4. 30–34; Luke 13. 18, 19.)—31. Like to a grain of mustard seed. The comparison of the growth of kingdoms to that of trees occurs in the Old Testament, and might have been familiar to our Lord's hearers. (Ps. 80. 8–11; Ezek. 17. 22, 24; 31. 3–9; Dan. 4. 10–12.)

32. The least of all seeds. This expression need not be taken literally, but as meaning in popular speech something very minute. "'As a grain of mustard seed' was a proverbial expression among the Jews for smallness; and in the rabbinical writings the mustard plant is mentioned as a tree growing to a size and strength that a man might ascend into it"—R. W. So that the birds, etc. "This fact of the fondness of birds for the seeds, and the manner in which, therefore, they congregate in the branches, was probably familiar to our Lord's hearers as well. They too had beheld them congregating in the branches of the tree, whose seed thus serves them for meat, so that there must have been a singular liveliness in the image"—T. The most essential point of instruction which the parable contains is, that the kingdom which Christ was founding in the world was a living power which, although at that time small and despised, would ultimately fill the earth. It has a twofold reference. "I. In the general sense, the insignificant beginnings of the kingdom are set forth—the little Babe cast in the manger at Bethlehem; the Man of Sorrows with no place to lay His head; the crucified One. Or, again, the hundred and twenty names who were the seed of the Church after the Lord had ascended; then we have the kingdom of God waxing onward and spreading its branches here and there, and different nations coming into it. We must beware, however, of imagining that the outward Church form is this kingdom. 2. The individual application of the parable points to the small beginnings of Divine grace—a word, a thought, a passing sentence may prove to be the little seed which eventually fills and shadows the whole heart and being"—O.

Ver. 33. THE LEAVEN: HIDDEN WORKING OF DIVINE GRACE. (Luke 13. 20, 21.)—33. Like unto leaven. Elsewhere leaven is used as a symbol of sin; it may be with reference to its disturbing and corrupting power, or because the use of leaven was forbidden during the Passover season. (Ex. 12. 1; 15. 20; Luke 12. 1–17; Gal. 5. 9; 1 Cor. 5. 6, 7.) Here the allusion is to its secret, penetrating, effectual working. Which a woman took—from some dough, or from bread already leavened—and hid in three measures of meal. "This was the quantity which they usually baked at once. Till the whole was leavened. Thus will the gospel leaven the world, and grace the Christian"—WESLEY.

"Its influence is invisible, even slow; but it exerts a secret activity, conveying its own properties progressively, until, like the measures of meal, the whole mass is leavened. This must become matter of personal experience, that no principle of action, no affection of the soul, no temper, no thought, word, or action shall escape that influence of the gospel, the effect of which, when not wilfully counteracted, is to assimilate everything to its own charity and purity. In the world the process, from the vastness of the mass, will be slow; and yet, what reflecting mind can fail to remark with joy that, wherever the great truths of our Divine religion are fully and faithfully preached, how certainly, and often indeed rapidly, do great moral changes in the state of society follow?—a higher standard of judging as to right and wrong, a stricter regard to justice, a corrected state of morals, a more liberal benevolence, kindlier feelings, manliness of intellect, and an ameliorated state of the social affections. Let this encourage the exertions of the disciples of Christ."

34. Spake Jesus unto the multitude—whom at this point He dismissed. The parables which follow were spoken to His disciples only, when they had withdrawn with Him into the house. (Ver. 36; Mark 4. 33, 34.)

35. Which was spoken by the prophet. (Ps. 78. 2.)

Ver. 44. THE HIDDEN TREASURE: THE KINGDOM FOUND WHEN UNLOOKED FOR.—44. Treasure hid in a field. This and the parable following represent the kingdom of heaven simply in its relation to the individual. "Each man must have it for himself, and make it his own by a distinct act of his own will. He cannot be a Christian without knowing it"—T. (Mark 10. 15; John 3. 3; Heb. 12. 28.) The concealment of money and jewels in the ground was a frequent practice formerly, especially in the East. (Job 3. 21; Prov. 2. 4, 5; Jer. 41. 8.) And naturally, in cases of flight, death, and other obvious causes, the hidden treasure may have remained undisturbed for ages. In this parable a man comes to the knowledge of some such buried treasure as by accident; and in order to make it his own he quickly hideth it again, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field. What is thus represented is the unexpectedness with which the kingdom of heaven has come to those who have received it. "The woman of Samaria (John 4.) was thinking of anything rather than of lighting on the hid treasure when she came to draw water from the well"—T. The jailor at Philippi as little thought of finding salvation when Paul and Silas were committed to his custody. Christ was found of those who sought Him not. It should be observed that the means which this man adopted to possess himself of the treasure at any price, "that of purchasing the field while concealing its value from the owner (for this seems implied in the narrative) is not commended any more than the dishonesty of the unjust steward is commended along with his wisdom. In the present case, indeed, the feature of the parable is from the very nature of the case excluded from comparison. A worldly treasure can only be obtained by one man through being parted with by another; the blessings of the gospel may be shared by all without being diminished to any one"—S. C.

Vers. 45, 46. THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE: THE KINGDOM SOUGHT.—45. Seeking goodly pearls. (Prov. 3. 14, 15; 8. 11.) This case is the reverse of the former. It is that of a man, dissatisfied with his present attainments, who is carefully and unremittingly seeking something nobler and better. As a Jew, he may have had a "zeal for God, but not according to knowledge," making righteousness by the Law the object of his search, until, under better guidance, he finds the righteousness of faith. As a Gentile he may first have striven to "do the works of the Law as it is written in the heart" (Rom. 2. 14). Then having been instructed out of the Law, as a convert to Judaism, may have become like Cornelius, "a just man, and one that feared God"; and finally, like Cornelius, may have heard in faith words whereby he was fully saved (Acts 11. 14).

46. One pearl of great price. "The person has been seeking and finding goodly pearls; what is true, honest, just, pure, lovely, and of good report; but at last he finds 'one pearl' of great price—the efficacious principle of inward and spiritual life. We hear of no emotion, no great joy of heart as before, but the same decision of conduct; he sells all and buys it"—A. (Isa. 55. 1; Rev. 3. 18; Prov. 23. 23.)

Vers. 47–50. THE DRAG NET: AGENCIES OF THE KINGDOM.—47. Like unto a net. The word means a large drag or hauling net, such as is called in Cornwall a seine. The sea. Used elsewhere as an emblem of the nations (Rev. 17. 15; Isa. 8. 7; Ps. 65. 7)—the net being the gospel instrument of bringing men of all nations out of the world to Christ (Rev. 7. 9). The gospel is to be proclaimed throughout the world as the draw-net is cast into the sea, and is to gather of every kind. (Ch. 22. 10.) "But Christian discipline, and strong, close exhortation, begin that separation in this world which shall be accomplished by the angels of God in the world to come"—WESLEY.

49. The angels shall come forth. Not now the fishers of men—apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers; but "the angels," as in ver. 30. Shall sever the wicked from among the just (the righteous); those who were the true subjects of "the kingdom of heaven," having earnestly sought and attained its distinctive "righteousness" (ch. 5. 20).

50. And—the angels as ministers of justice—shall cast them—thus completely separated from the righteous—into the furnace of fire. (Ch. 24. 32; 25. 46; Rev. 21. 8.) This awful saying is a repetition, word for word, of ver. 42.

51. Have ye understood? Yea, Lord. They had really understood something; and "Christ receives their answer as true; for he who understands something is certainly in the right way"—S.

52. Therefore every scribe—official teacher—which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven (R.V. "who hath been made a disciple to the kingdom of heaven"). Evidently a description of the apostles, as called and taught by Himself, and who would be more fully instructed in the mysteries of the kingdom hereafter, for the enlightenment and salvation of the world. Is like unto a man that is an householder, etc. And this is true of every scribe really instructed in spiritual truth. "Every really spiritually-learned scribe of the kingdom of heaven is able, from the increasing stores of his genuine experimental knowledge of the word (not merely from books or learning or the Bible itself), to bring out of his treasure things new and old"—A.

53. He departed thence—that is, from Capernaum, where He had for some time resided as in "His own city."

54. Come into His own country. Nazareth and its neighbourhood. (Mark 6. 1.) He taught them in their synagogue. "But with no better success than He had there before"—WESLEY. (Luke 4. 16–31.)

55. Is not this the carpenter's Son? (S. Mark, "Is not this the carpenter?") (John 6. 42.) Every Jew was taught a trade, but comparatively few were instructed and trained for the office of scribe, and the fellow-citizens of Jesus knew that He had not been so qualified. He was a "carpenter," and "the son of a carpenter"—nothing more. But with what dignity does this fact invest manual labour!

57. And they were offended in Him. (Ch. 11. 6.) A prophet is not without honour—as He had reminded them on the former occasion (Luke 4. 24; also John 4. 44), that is, "he is usually more honoured by strangers than by his immediate connections, who are apt to be moved by envy at the distinctions put upon him. Besides, the latter, if reproved by him in the faithful exercise of his ministry, are most apt to be offended, and are most ready to remind him of any circumstances of meanness which may be connected with his family and rank in life"—R. W.

58. He did not many mighty works there. Some He had wrought (ver. 54, etc.)—and S. Mark says that "He laid His hand upon a few sick folk and healed them." Because of their unbelief. "Not that He was without power, but they without faith. Christ modifies the exercise of omnipotence according to the disposition of those to whom He comes. The Holy Spirit alone, who knows the mind of Christ, would have spoken thus of His power, and of the laws by which He is pleased to limit and control its manifestations."

CHAPTER XIV.

Vers. 1–12. DEATH OF JOHN THE BAPTIST: A DISMAL PARENTHESIS. (Mark 6. 14–29; Luke 3. 19, 20; 9. 7–9.)—1. Herod—Herod Antipas, a son of Herod the Great—the tetrarch. Properly the ruler of the fourth part into which a province was divided. By his father's will Herod Antipas was made tetrarch of Ituræa and Peræa. In ver. 9 and Mark 6. 14, he is called king by courtesy.

2. This is John the Baptist. Herod appears to have adopted this opinion from a popular rumour (Luke 9. 7). John's character had commanded his involuntary veneration (Mark 6. 20); and the murder of that just and holy man continued to trouble his guilty conscience, and had brought upon him the censure of the people. He is risen from the dead, etc.—an allusion to His "supposed greater power acquired by having passed through death. This is an incidental confirmation of John 10. 41, where we read that John wrought no miracle"—A.

3. For—what follows is an explanatory parenthesis—Herod had laid hold on John, etc. (Ch. 11. 2.) His brother Philip's wife—therefore, his sister-in-law. She was also his niece, the daughter of his brother Aristobulus. His brother Philip is not the "tetrarch" mentioned in Luke 3. 1, but a disinherited son of Herod the Great, known simply as Herod Philip. At the time of his marriage to Herodias, his former wife and her former husband were yet living.

4. It is not lawful for thee to have her. (Lev. 18. 16; 20. 21.) S. Luke states that "Herod was reproved" by John; and a terrible struggle took place in his guilty mind; for, inspired with respect and awe for his prisoner, he sent for him time after time, and not only heard him with seriousness, but "did many things" that John enjoined upon him, though not the one thing of putting away his unlawful wife (Mark 6. 19, 20).

5. Would have put him to death—under the instigation of Herodias (Mark); but was restrained by his own misgivings, and because he feared the multitude.

6. Herod's birthday—or possibly the anniversary of his accession. "A convenient day,"—for the fell purpose of Herodias, according to S. Mark, who adds that Herod invited to the feast he provided, "his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee." Danced before them, and pleased Herod. This was probably a kind of pantomimic performance, not unlike that of the dancing-girls of India.

7. Whereupon—to show how much he was gratified, influenced by wine and the applause of his guests—he promised with an oath to give her whatsoever she would ask. S. Mark adds, "unto the half of my kingdom." (Comp. Esther 5. 3; 7. 2.)

8. Instructed of her mother—who saw in a moment that her opportunity was come for carrying out her crafty designs. Said, Give me here—that is, forthwith; before you and your guests separate—not some royal domain or palace—but John Baptist's head in a charger—that is, a large dish or trencher.

9. And the king was sorry. S. Mark says, "exceeding sorry." Nevertheless for the oath's sake. "So he murdered an innocent man from mere tenderness of conscience"—WESLEY.

10. And he sent—a soldier of the guard—and beheaded John in the prison. Probably a dungeon of the castle in which the banquet was held. "How mysterious is the providence which left the life of so holy a man in such infamous hands! which permitted it to be sacrificed to the malice of an abandoned harlot, the petulancy of a vain girl, and the rashness of a foolish, perhaps drunken, prince, who made a prophet's head the reward of a dance! But we are sure the Almighty will repay His servants in another world, for whatever they suffer in this"—WESLEY.

12. His disciples—the disciples of John—took up the body, and buried it. Where is not known. And told Jesus. And we may reasonably believe transferred to Him the confidence and devotion they had shown toward John. This tragic event did not occur at the period in our Lord's history which S. Matthew is here relating, but probably some little time previously. It is introduced here to explain why Herod, when "he heard of the fame of Jesus," and of the conjectures of the people respecting Him, was so greatly alarmed.

MORE SIGNS OF THE KINGDOM.

Vers. 13–21. FEEDING OF THE FIVE THOUSAND: THE PEOPLE TEMPORARILY CONVINCED. (Mark 6. 31–44; Luke 9. 10–17; John 6. 5–14.)—13. He departed thence. His motives being the consternation produced in Herod's court by tidings of His works; the fact recorded by S. Luke that the troubled and evil-minded king "desired to see Him"; and also, as expressly stated by S. Mark, the need of rest for Himself and the Twelve: "for they had not time so much as to eat bread." Into a desert place. S. Luke says, "belonging to the city called Bethsaida" (The House of Fishing.) This was on the north-east of the Lake, and was known as Bethsaida-Julias. There was another city of this name on the west, called "Bethsaida of Galilee" (John 12. 21). They followed Him on foot. Round the head of the Lake, the distance being only about six miles from Capernaum.

14. Moved with compassion. (Ch. 9. 36; 15. 32; Heb. 4. 15.) S. John says, "He went up into a mountain"; meaning the higher ground on the bank of the Lake, "and there He sat" till the multitude had assembled. "And He received them, and spake unto them of the kingdom of God, and healed them that had need of healing" (Luke 9. 11).

15. And when it was evening. The first evening, or that which began at about three o'clock; the second, which began about five, is mentioned in ver. 23. (Ex. 12. 6.) Send the multitude away. From John we learn that, while people were streaming together from all directions, our Lord said to Philip, in order to "prove or try him, Whence shall we buy bread that these may eat?" Philip confessed the impossibility of providing food for them; and afterwards the disciples as a body, little conjecturing the wondrous work for which the question addressed to Philip was meant to prepare them, besought Him to dismiss the multitude that they might procure food.

16. Give ye them to eat. They had well pondered the difficulty our Lord had Himself suggested, and reply to His command, as with one voice, alluding to Philip's estimate of what would be required, "Shall we go and buy two hundred pennyworth" (about seven pounds' worth of bread? (Mark). He bids them go and see what quantity they had brought with them.

17. And they say unto Him. S. John states that their spokesman was Andrew. We have here but five loaves and two fishes—or, as given by S. John, "There is a lad here which hath five barley loaves"—the food of the poor only. (Judg. 7. 13.) "And two small fishes: but what are they among so many?"

18, 19. Bring them hither to Me. "And the scanty store being brought to Him, and then distributed by the disciples to each one, not only were the disciples themselves witnesses of the miraculous increase of the food, but every individual who received it at their hands. No miracle could be wrought with greater publicity, or under circumstances which more effectually excluded all deception. For the loaves and the fishes being taken by our Saviour Himself, as the Master of the feast, whilst all eyes were fixed upon Him, He looked up to heaven, the seat of His Father's glory, blessed—that is, He blessed or gave thanks to God, as the Giver of food to His creatures; and brake the bread, and gave it to His disciples, and they to the multitude; so that it would appear that it increased in His hands, and was taken from Him by the disciples and distributed, fresh supplies being dealt out to them by Christ until the whole multitude were fed. All were fully satisfied; for on this the words of the Evangelist are most express. And they did all eat, and were filled: and the fragments, filling twelve baskets, gave additional evidence of the vastness of the miracle, since more remained after all were fed than the original quantity from which it had proceeded"—R. W.

20. Twelve baskets full. They were the wicker baskets or wallets which poor Jews usually carried when on a journey. Probably each of the Twelve used his own.

21. About five thousand. They were easily counted; for they had been made to sit down "on the green grass" in groups of "fifty or a hundred" (Mark and Luke).

The immediate and special end for which this stupendous miracle was wrought will be manifest to every reader of this Gospel who keeps in mind S. Matthew's well-understood design of showing believing Jews how fully our Lord revealed Himself to His apostles and first followers as the Spiritual Deliverer, so variously promised in the Old Testament Scriptures. But this becomes still more evident from the statement of S. Luke that our Lord had just previously discoursed to the multitude concerning "the kingdom of God," and from S. John's record of the conclusion to which the miracle brought them. His statement is that when they had seen it they said, simultaneously, "This is of a truth that Prophet which should come into the world," referring no doubt to Deut. 18. 15; and that they would have taken Him "by force to make Him a king." Their conceptions of His purposes were in accordance with the then current notions of the Messiah, and were seriously wrong; but their conviction that He was the coming One, for whom the whole nation were waiting, was for a moment complete. They were therefore in some measure prepared for the strangely new and startling doctrines so shortly afterwards declared to them. The next day this miracle became the basis of the great testing-discourse delivered to many of the same people in the synagogue of Capernaum, upon Himself as the Bread of Life,—the Bread of God come down from heaven to give life unto the world. (John 6. 26–58.)

Vers. 22–33. WALKING ON THE LAKE: WORSHIPPED AS THE SON OF GOD. (Mark 6. 45–51; John 6. 14–21.)—22. Straightway Jesus constrained His disciples—who naturally shared the enthusiasm of the people, and were unwilling to be separated from Him. To get into a ship (R. V. "to enter into the boat"). No doubt the same in which they came (ver. 13). To go before Him unto the other side—S. Mark, "unto Bethsaida"; S. John, "toward Capernaum." The two places were near each other. This Bethsaida, the city of Andrew, Peter, and Philip (John 1. 43, 44), is distinguished from the other as Bethsaida in Galilee (John 12. 21). The instruction given to the disciples was to return to Capernaum, keeping near the north-western shore.

23. Apart to pray. "Here His Divine Majesty lay, so to speak, in repose; ready in due season to shine forth"—CALVIN. After showing Himself to be more than man by the quiet exercise of His creative energy, He yet, as a true man, seeks rest after the toils of the day, and relief from the oppressive influence of the excited crowd by direct personal communion with God. "In seclusion such as this, matters of the greatest importance took place between God and the Mediator"—B. (Mark 1. 35; Luke 6. 12; ch. 6. 6.) When the evening was come—that is, the second evening (ver. 15)—He was there alone—there to spend the night in prayer, as on an earlier occasion. (Luke 6. 12.)

24. In the midst of the sea. S. John says they had rowed "five and twenty or thirty furlongs," having kept to the shore as long as they could, but they were now carried irresistibly by the violence of the north-easterly storm into the centre of the Lake, perhaps three miles from land in any direction.

25. And in the fourth watch of the night—about three o'clock in the morning. The Jews had at this time, like the Romans, four watches (Mark 13. 35). Jesus went unto them—after the severe testing of six or seven hours' duration—walking on the sea. S. John says, "Drawing nigh unto the ship," and S. Mark, "that He would have passed by them." This was to call forth their prayer "that He would not pass them by, that He would not forsake them. Exactly in the same way, walking with His two disciples to Emmaus, after His resurrection, 'He made as though He would have gone farther,' thus drawing out from them the entreaty that He would abide. And at the root of what a multitude of God's other dealings does something of the same kind lie!"—T.

26. Saw Him walking on the sea. "S. John uses an expression which shows us, in the pale light, those in the boat intently, fixedly, fearfully gazing at the apparition as it moved still closer and closer"—ED. Cried out for fear—under the influence of a popular superstition. "The sight would have troubled men less superstitious than simple fishermen"—G.

27. Be of good cheer; it is I. They mistook the form of their Master; but it would have been impossible to mistake the reassuring tones of that familiar voice; and unutterable must have been the consolation conveyed by these few words of grace. (Comp. Isa. 41. 10; Rev. 1. 7.)

28–31. And Peter answered—with characteristic impulsiveness; giving expression to a true faith, but at the same time to a feeling strangely inconsistent with that suppression of self which Christ requires of His followers—Lord, if it be Thou, bid me come unto Thee on the water. "His ardent spirit, excited by this new proof of the high and Divine character of his Lord, probably at once concluded that his faith in His power and majesty was now sufficiently strong, that he could venture his life upon His bidding, undismayed by winds and waves. He was permitted to make the trial, in order to teach him more humble views of himself, by revealing the weakness of that faith which he thought so strong; for when he saw the wind boisterous, and consequently the waves greatly agitated, he looked off from that omnipotence of his Saviour, on which his faith at first simply and exclusively fixed, and, his fear rising with his unbelief, he began to sink, and cry out for help. That help was seasonably given; but with suitable though tender reproof: O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt? The doubt of Peter did not imply that he was not fully persuaded that the appearance was that of Christ Himself—that he knew before he left the vessel; for the expression, If it be Thou, is equivalent to, 'Since it is Thou Thyself,' and expresses full conviction. And his appeal to Christ for help, when sinking, also shows that he had no doubt as to the Person he was addressing. But he doubted, in the sense of hesitating, whether to regard the violence of the waves or the power of Christ; like a man standing where two ways meet, undetermined which to enter; or a balance vibrating with opposite impulses. He thus lost that full, simple view of the omnipotence of Christ, under the influence of which he had cast himself upon the water. This teaches us, in all matters where we have a warrant from Christ to trust in Him—a bidding of Christ to come to Him, though through storms and tempests, to look alone at His word of eternal faithfulness; and to 'walk by faith, not by sight'"—R. W.

32. The wind ceased. "The two most uncontrollable forces of nature again obey their Lord"—R. W. S. John adds, "Immediately the ship was at the land whither they went," or were going. The storm had accomplished its purposes, and apparently, by another miraculous act, the vessel suddenly reached its destination.

33. The Son of God. One of those who thus adoringly addressed our Lord had previously exclaimed, when suddenly convinced that He was the Messiah, "Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God; Thou art the King of Israel" (John 1. 49). But this is the first time the name was given to Him by a company of His followers unitedly. He had been proclaimed "the Son of God" by the voice from heaven. The great title was profanely echoed by Satan immediately afterwards (ch. 4. 3, 6); and evil spirits had uttered it (ch. 8. 29); but we have no record of its having been hitherto used by men. We find, however, that the conceptions of His mysterious Person, which this miracle forced upon them who witnessed it, were altogether peculiar. S. Mark says, "They were amazed beyond measure and wondered"; and here it is added that they came and worshipped Him—as from an enlightened and involuntary impulse, saying, as with one voice, Of a truth Thou art the Son of God. "They felt more or less clearly that this One must stand in wonderful relation to Him of whom it is written, 'Thy way is in the sea, and Thy path in the great waters, and Thy footsteps are not known' (Ps. 77. 19); 'which alone spreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the waves of the sea' (Job 9. 8)"—T.

34. The land of Gennesaret. A fertile plain on the western shore of the Lake, between four and five miles long, and more than a mile wide. At its northern end was Capernaum.

35. The men of that place had knowledge of Him. S. Mark says, "They straightway knew Him." They had been blessed by His presence and ministry on former occasions; they recognised Him instantly as the well-known great Prophet and Healer, and hastened to bring before Him, from all that country round about, all that were diseased. His stay must have been very short, for the next day He discoursed to some of the same wondering multitude in the synagogue of Capernaum. (John 6. 22–24.)

36. Only touch the hem of His garment. (Ch. 9. 20–22.) We may infer from this general description of our Lord's miracles, and similar accounts elsewhere, how vast must have been their number. (John 21. 25.)

CHAPTER XV.

Vers. 1–20. CEREMONIAL AND SPIRITUAL PURITY. (Mark 7. 1–23.)—1. Which were of Jerusalem. S. Mark says more clearly, "Certain scribes which came from Jerusalem"—evidently as commissioned by the authorities, to collect instances of His violation of the Law.

2. Tradition of the elders—that is, the oral explanations of the Law, and the precepts based upon them which came down from their forefathers. (Comp. Heb. 11. 2 — elders = ancients). For they wash not. "The duty of washing before meat is not inculcated in the Law, but only in the traditions of the scribes. So rigidly did the Jews observe it, that Rabbi Akiba being imprisoned, and having water scarcely sufficient to sustain life given to him, preferred dying of thirst to eating without washing his hands"—A. S. Mark, writing for Gentile believers, explains the practice of the Pharisees in full detail (ch. 7. 3, 4). The washings spoken of were not for cleanliness, but for ceremonial purification from possible contact with Gentiles.

3. Trangress the commandment of God by your tradition. Our Lord thus acknowledges the omission complained of, but denies the authority of tradition generally, as having originated, not in command of God, but in the narrow views of men, and as being, in this instance, subversive of the Divine Law. (Mark 7. 8, 9; Col. 2. 8, 23; Tit. 1. 14.)

4. For God commanded. (Mark, "For Moses said.") (Comp. John 5. 46, 47; 7. 19, 22.) Honour thy father and mother. "Which implies all such relief as they stand in need of" —WESLEY. (Ex. 20. 12; Lev. 21. 9.)

And he that curseth (R.V. "speaketh evil of") father or mother, let him die the death. (Ex. 21. 17; Deut. 27. 16.) Thus our Lord puts together one of the commandments of the Decalogue and a penalty enjoined by Moses as of equal authority.

5. A gift—that is, a sacred and devoted thing. S. Mark gives the word the Jews pronounced "corban"—consecrated. "I have given, or at least purpose to give, to the treasury of the Temple, what you might otherwise have had from me"—WESLEY.

Yet such was the insincerity encouraged by Pharisaic traditionalism, that the use of this expression did not bind the son who uttered it to devote that which he withheld from his parents to religious purposes. It sanctioned his unnatural refusal to succour them, but did not oblige him to dedicate his possessions to God. So openly and reproachfully did men make the commandment of God of none effect by their tradition.

7. Prophesy of you. (Isa. 29. 13.) "That is, the description which Isaiah gave of your fathers is exactly applicable to you. The words therefore which were a description of them are a prophecy with regard to you"—WESLEY.

8. Their heart is far from Me. "And without this, all outward worship is mere mockery of God"—WESLEY.

9. In vain they do worship Me—their worship is an empty show—teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. "As equal with, nay superior to, those of God. What can be a more heinous sin?"—WESLEY.

"The portion of Isaiah from which this citation is made (ch. 24–35) sets forth, in alternate threatenings and promises, the punishment of the mere nominal Israel, and the salvation of the true Israel of God. And, as so often in the prophetic word, its threats and promises are for all times of the Church—the particular event then foretold being but one fulfilment of those deeper and more general declarations of God, which shall be ever having their successive illustrations in His dealings with men"—A.

10, 11. He called the multitude. Turning away from those haughty, self-deceived Pharisees, as though in despair of making them discern His meaning. And said—in their presence, to the people they misled—Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man—maketh a man common or unclean. (Acts 10. 14.) He here anticipates the more formal abrogation of the ceremonial distinction between clean and unclean meats. (Acts 15. 18, 19.)

12. Then came His disciples—(S. Mark, "After He was entered into the house")—and said unto Him—apparently under fear for His safety—Knowest Thou that the Pharisees were offended—referring probably to whisperings of reproach and condemnation which they overheard as He withdrew from them.

13, 14. Every plant, etc. (John 15. 2, 8.) This term applies directly to the traditions, and indirectly to the men who enforced their observance.

16. Yet without understanding. A mild remonstrance, but also an intimation that they were as yet very far from being spiritually enlightened. (Comp. Col. 1. 9; Eph. 3. 4.)

19. For out of the heart proceed, etc. "The seat is there; they all spring from that source; and on this is grounded the necessity of that renewal of the heart, that entire regeneration of the will, affections, and all other moral faculties of the soul, upon which our Lord insisted, in opposition to the Pharisees, who placed holiness in external acts, and left the vices of the heart unremedied"—R. W. Our Lord here sets forth and shows by example the simple purity and spirituality of His kingdom and its laws, in contrast with prevailing externalism. There had grown up from the earliest times among the Jewish people a system of religious and social enactments, based upon non-spiritual interpretations of the Law, which had tended, by its very nature, to make them unreal and formal in worship, and to create opinions and usages in their relation to each other, which were repugnant to the most elementary principles of sound morality. In the time of our Lord the single plea in support of this system, and that which was allowed to silence every remonstrance of reason and conscience against it, was the authority of the ancients. The commandments of God were set aside by tradition. It is this, the fundamental principle of Pharisaism, that our Lord on this important occasion openly and directly assails. At the same time, He here enunciates "the fundamental principle of His own interpretation of the Law. That Law was not a system of externalism, in which outward things affected the inner man. It was moral and addressed itself to man as a moral being—to his heart and conscience. As the spring of all moral action was within, so the mode of affecting it would be inward. Not from without inwards, but from within outwards; such was the principle of the new kingdom"—ED.

Vers. 21–28. THE WOMAN OF CANAAN: THE PRAYER OF FAITH. (Mark 7. 24–30.)—21. Then Jesus went thence—partly to avoid the growing hostility of the Pharisees, and to secure a short season of retirement and rest, but also and chiefly for the sake of the more advanced instruction to be given to His apostles by the incident which follows—and departed into the coasts (R.V. "withdrew into the parts") of Tyre and Sidon. In contrast with the cavilling and scornful distrust of our Lord, which the representatives of the Jewish people continued to manifest, as the Evangelist has just shown, he now sets before us an example of faith in its true simplicity and resoluteness; as commanded by Christ's character and works, and unchecked by an illusive traditionalism. The region referred to was north and north-west of Palestine. Whether our Lord crossed the frontier or not is doubtful; but the statement of S. Mark that "He entered into a house" makes it probable that He did not actually cross the boundary. S. Mark adds that He "would have no man know of His presence, but He could not be hid."

22. A woman of Canaan. S. Mark calls her "a Greek, a Syrophenician by nation." "Meaning by the first term to designate her religion, that it was not Jewish but heathen; by the second, the stock of which she came, being even that accursed stock once doomed of God to a total excision, but of which some branches had been spared"—T. Came out of the same coasts (R.V. "out from those borders"). Came from within that heathen territory to the house where our Lord was being entertained. And cried unto Him—probably at or near the entrance—Have mercy on me—thus identifying herself with her child. (Comp. Mark 9. 22.) O Lord, Thou Son of David. Though a Gentile, as she lived on the borders of the land of Israel, she would necessarily know something of the expectation by the Jews of the coming of a Deliverer, whom they called the Messiah, and that His proper title was "the Son of David." And she had heard of the fame of Jesus; for it had spread through her country from the very opening of His ministry, and many of the inhabitants had experienced His power to heal. (Ch. 4. 24; Mark 3. 8; Luke 6. 17.) My daughter—(S. Mark, "My young daughter")—is grievously vexed with a devil.

23. "He answered her not a word. He sometimes tries our faith in like manner"—WESLEY. (Ps. 28. 1; Lam. 3. 8.)

"She begs for pity, but He pities her not. The fountain of mercy, usually open to every hand that only touches the hem of His garment, flows not; the much lauded Physician and Helper will not heal and help; the friendly mouth, which is ever so ready to give comfort, is silent"—S. Our Lord's object was most probably to prove and make manifest the strength of her faith, as an example for the instruction of His apostles and the world. But His silence, when His help was humbly besought, was unlike anything the Twelve had ever previously witnessed, and it filled them with astonishment. They did not presume to ask Him why He seemed to treat the distressed stranger with indifference, but supposing her appeals to be irksome to Him, they begged Him to send her away; not meaning, perhaps, command her to depart without giving heed to her petition, but simply yield to her entreaty, that she may go away. For she crieth after us—rousing public attention to us and destroying all hope of Thy obtaining quietude and rest.

24. Not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. (Acts 3. 26; comp. Ezek. 34.) This was said to the apostles, and would naturally remind them of the instruction given to themselves not to go into the way of the Gentiles. (Ch. 10. 5, 6.) It was not meant to suggest that He was disinclined to comply with the woman's petition, or that the terms of His commission rendered it necessary to disappoint her; but to intimate that the proper course of His personal ministry restricted His labours at that period to the Jews.

25. Then came she—into the house; pressing forward eagerly, desperately, into His presence—and worshipped Him. S. Mark says, "fell at His feet"—prostrated herself before Him in profound homage. Saying, Lord, help me. "The most condensed possible form of expression, wrung from the anguish of her heart"—S. And we learn from S. Mark that our Lord's silence was now broken, but that His answer was a repetition, in a modified form, of the saying He had just addressed to the apostles—"Let the children first be filled"—the children of "the house of Israel, the children of the kingdom," to whom I am sent. (Comp. Rom. 15. 8, 9.) This was not a refusal, and was, no doubt, spoken in a tone to encourage hope.

26. It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs. (Ch. 7. 6; Rev. 22. 15.) The term dog was used by the Jews as an expression of extreme contempt. (Phil. 3. 2.) Its use, in application to this distressed and humbly importunate mother, must have sounded peculiarly severe. Only He who knew the strength of her faith and foresaw the issue of this trial could have safely used it.

27. Truth, Lord: yet the dogs, etc. (R.V. "Yea, Lord, for even the dogs"). She accepts the title and makes it the ground of her deeply humble and final appeal. Let me fare as the dogs do, for they are fed without loss to the household. "From the very word which seemed to make most against her, with the ready wit of her faith, she drew an argument in her favour"—T.

28. Be it unto thee even as thou wilt. "He who at first seemed as though He would have denied her the smallest boon now opens to her the full treasure-house of His grace, and bids her to help herself to carry away what she will"—T. "Persevering faith and prayer are next to omnipotent. No person can thus pray and believe, without receiving all his soul requires"—C. "It is here most instructive to mark the character of the faith which our Lord thus commends and rewards. It was not faith merely in His Messiahship, though that was the ground of its higher exercises; it was grounded upon the knowledge which the woman had attained of His character, as manifested in His acts of power and compassion; and on this it rested all through the trial to which it was subjected. To His ability and His kindness the piercing eye of that faith looked through all the veils with which even our Lord Himself had surrounded them: He was silent; He refused the intercession of His disciples; He answered in the contemptuous language of the Jews to her own imploring supplication—yet still she received no direct denial. The language was contemptuous, but to faith it seemed not to sound like His own; and still she resolutely clung to the full persuasion that He was full of grace and truth. Such is true faith in its highest exercises in all. It looks through everything simply to the love, pity, and power of the Saviour; and presses its plea until it triumphantly carries off the blessing"—R. W.

Vers. 29–38. A SEMI-HEATHEN MULTITUDE TAUGHT, HEALED, AND FED. (Mark 7. 31–8. 1–9.)—29. Nigh unto the sea of Galilee—the eastern shore of the Lake. S. Mark says that He travelled "through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis," or the region of "the ten cities," all of which, with one exception, were on the east of the Jordan and of the Sea of Galilee. The locality indicated would be the high land not far from the place where the five thousand had been fed. (Ch. 14. 15–21.)

30. He healed them. (Ps. 103; Isa. 35. 5, 6.) S. Mark relates one of these cases of healing, probably a typical instance, in detail. (Ch. 7. 32–35.)

31. They glorified the God of Israel. "Perhaps this is added as an expression of the joy of the disciples themselves, who contrasted the fulness and abundance of the acts of mercy now before them with the instance they had just seen of the difficulty with which the faith of a Gentile had prevailed to obtain help"—A. But this name, "the God of Israel," was used with special reference to the more than half-heathen condition of the population of this district. Our Lord had come with the Twelve from the borders of a wholly Gentile and idolatrous country into a locality which, although chiefly heathen, was in close proximity to a purely Jewish population, and where in consequence the name of the God of Israel would be known and revered. He was thus conquering the national prejudices of His apostles, and gradually preparing them for their future mission among "all the nations."

33. Whence should we have so much bread? "At first it excites some surprise that the apostles, with that other miracle fresh in their memories, should now have been equally at a loss how the multitude should be fed as they were before. . . . Yet it is evermore thus in times of difficulty and distress. All former deliverances are in danger of being forgotten. . . . God may have divided the Red Sea for Israel, yet no sooner are they on the other side than, because there was no water to drink, they murmur against Moses, and count that they must perish for thirst (Ex. 17. 1–7), crying, 'Is the Lord among us or not?' (Comp. Ex. 16. 13 with Num. 11. 21, 22.) It is only the man of a full-formed faith, a faith such as apostles themselves at this time had not, who argues from the past to the future, and truly derives confidence from God's former dealings of faithfulness and love"—T. But more than this may be said. "We must remind ourselves that the former provision was for Jews, and the disciples might, from their standpoint, well doubt, or at least not assume, that the same miracle would supply the need of the Gentiles, and the same board be surrounded by Jew and Gentile"—ED.

39. Came into the coasts of Magdala. "Magdala or Migdol (a watch-tower) is identified with the modern Mejdel, a collection of ruins and squalid huts at the south-eastern corner of the plain of Gennesaret, opposite Gergesa"—C. B. It was probably the native place or the home of Mary Magdalene. S. Mark calls the locality Dalmanutha.

CHAPTER XVI.

Vers. 1–12. WARNINGS AGAINST HYPOCRISY. (Mark 8. 10–21; Luke 12. 54–56.)—1. The Pharisees also with the Sadducees. (See on Matt. 3. 7.) Hitherto the Pharisees only are spoken of as our Lord's prominent critics and adversaries; now they strangely combine their opposition to Him with that of their own opponents. Came (S. Mark, "came forth"), indicating that they resided elsewhere, though probably at no great distance from this obscure locality. Tempting—putting His claims as the Messiah to a test. Desired him that He would show them a sign from heaven. (Ch. 12. 38, 39.) They based this demand on the common expectation that signs from heaven would bring in the kingdom of the Messiah, and probably justified it by an appeal to such signs of Divine authority as Moses had produced before Pharaoh. (Ex. 7. 9, 10.) They had seen or heard of innumerable mighty works as wrought by Christ, but they were not signs such as they looked for, and might have been illusions. Besides, had they not sufficiently accounted for some of them? (Ch. 12. 24.) Let Him give them some clear and indubitable sign of His Divine mission direct from heaven.

2. He answered and said (S. Mark, "He sighed deeply in His spirit, and saith")—probably pointing as He spoke to the glow on the western sky—When it is evening, etc.

3. Can ye not (R.V. "Ye cannot") discern the signs of the times? Meaning, no doubt, those proofs of His Messiahship which were continually before their eyes—such as the appearance and testimony of John the Baptist, the fulfilment of prophecy in His own ministry,

His miracles, and the character and testimony of all His teaching.

4. There shall no sign be given to it (no further sign), but the sign of the prophet Jonas. "The only sign to Nineveh was Jonah's solemn warning of near judgment, and his call to repentance—and the only sign now, or rather unto this generation no sign, was the warning cry of judgment and the loving call to repentance"—ED. And He left them, and departed. (S. Mark adds, "to the other side of the Lake.") "Just severity. Our Lord never left the people in this manner"—B. (Titus 3. 10.)

5. They had forgotten to take bread (S. Mark, "Neither had they in the ship with them more than one loaf"). They left in haste and excitement, and when they landed discovered that they had omitted to provide for probably a long journey.

6. Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees. An evident allusion to their recent hypocritical demand of "a sign from heaven." "In Luke 12. 1, where the warning is given on a wholly different occasion, the leaven is explained to mean 'hypocrisy,' which is of all evil things the most penetrating and diffusive"—A.

7. They reasoned, etc. "They thought the words of Christ implied that, in His view, they had not forgotten to bring bread, but purposely omitted to do so in order, like the Pharisees and Sadducees, to 'seek of Him a sign' of His Divine Messiahship—nay, to oblige Him to show such—that of miraculous provision in their want"—ED.

8. Why reason ye? "Why are ye troubled about this? Am I not able, if need so require, to supply you by a word?"—WESLEY.

"If the experience of the past—their own twice-repeated question, and the practical answer which it had received in the miraculous provision of not only enough, but to spare—had taught them anything, it should have been to believe that the needful provision of their wants by Christ was not a sign, such as the Pharisees had asked, but what faith might ever expect from Christ"—ED.

9. Do ye not yet understand? Are ye not only so weak in faith, but so wanting in spiritual discernment?

12. Of the doctrine of the Pharisees and Sadducees. "In both cases hypocrisy; in the Pharisees hypocritical formalism, in the Sadducees hypocritical liberalism. These two apparently antagonistic tendencies have been practically united ever since in opposing Christ"—SC.

Vers. 13–20. THE GREAT CONFESSION: STARTING-POINT OF THE SECOND PERIOD OF OUR LORD'S MINISTRY. (Mark 8. 27–38; Luke 9. 18, 21.)—13. The coasts (parts) of Cæsarea Philippi—that is, the Cæsarea of Philip the Tetrarch—so called to distinguish it from the Cæsarea on the coast of the Mediterranean. (Acts 23. 33.) It was situated at the foot of Mount Hermon, at the principal source of the Jordan. It is the most northerly point that our Lord ever reached. It does not appear that He entered the city. He visited only the parts around it. (S. Mark says, "the towns, or villages of Cæsarea Philippi.") He asked His disciples—after He had been "alone praying" (Luke); everything indicates that our Lord was preparing to enter upon a new and most solemnly and vitally important part of His ministry. Whom do men say that I the Son of Man am? (R.V. "Who do men say that the Son of Man is?") The people had frequently heard Him call Himself the Son of Man, and our Lord now inquires of His apostles how they had understood Him to use the term. Do the people believe Me to be "the Son of Man" spoken of by Daniel the prophet (see on ch. 8. 20), or do they attach another and inferior meaning to that title?

14. Some say that Thou art John the Baptist (ch. 14. 2; Luke 9. 7)—some Elias (on the authority of Mal. 4. 5); and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. Jeremiah being mentioned as representative of "the old prophets" (Luke), one of whom the Jews generally believed would appear to usher in the advent of the Messiah. (John 1. 21.) "But, however they differed, in this all agreed, that they regarded Him not as an ordinary man or teacher, but His mission as straight from heaven; and also, in this also, that they did not view Him as the Messiah. Thus far then there was retrogression in popular opinion, and thus far had the Pharisees already succeeded"—ED.

15. But whom say ye that I am? The former question led to this, which was to call forth the greatest of all confessions.

16. Simon Peter answered and said—as the truth suddenly flashed on his powers of spiritual discernment, and sprang to his lips—Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. "The confession is not made in the terms of the other answer: it is not, We say, or I say, but 'THOU ART!' It is the expression of an inward conviction wrought by God's Spirit. The excellency of this confession is, that it brings out both the human and the Divine nature of our Lord: 'The Christ' is the Messiah, the Son of David, the anointed King; 'the Son of the Living God' is the Eternal Son, begotten of the Eternal Father, as the last word most emphatically implies,—not Son of God in any inferior figurative sense, not one of the sons of God, of angelic nature,—but THE SON OF THE LIVING GOD, having in Him the Sonship and the Divine nature in a sense in which they could be in none else"—A.

17. Blessed art thou. As greatly favoured of God; for thou hast uttered a truth which no human mind could conceive. Bar-jona—son of Jonah. For flesh and blood—the nature of man (1 Cor. 15. 20; Gal. 1. 16; Eph.

6. 12) in contrast with God—hath not revealed it unto thee. Not thy own mind, nor that of any other man, however great; but My Father which is in heaven. (Ch. 11. 25–27; Gal. 1. 15.)

18. Thou art Peter—a rock. This name I gave thee prophetically when thou wast first brought to Me by thy brother Andrew. (John 1. 42.) And upon this rock—clearly referring to Peter himself—I will build My Church. The Church is built pre-eminently upon Christ. (Isa. 28. 16; 1 Cor. 3. 11.) In a subordinate sense it is "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone" (Eph. 2. 20; comp. Rev. 21. 14.) In this subordinate meaning of the expression it applies specially to Peter; for it was through his ministry that the Church was first founded among the Jews (Acts 2. 41), and afterwards among the Gentiles (Acts 10. 44–48). "Peter, in the list of the apostles, is called first, and is always put in the first place." (Ch. 10. 2; 1 Pet. 2. 4–7.) "All these things are said with safety, for what have they to do with Rome?"—B. The term "Church," which is first used here, occurs in only one other place in the Gospels (ch. 18. 17). The Greek word so rendered is the exact equivalent for the Hebrew for convocation,—meaning a congregation or assembly called for religious purposes. Our Lord here predicts the formation of an organised society of His followers distinct from Judaism. "My Church." The gates of hell—that is, of Hades, the abode of departed spirits. "A well-known oriental form of speech for 'the power of the kingdom of death.' The meaning of the promise is that no adverse power should ever prevail over the Church to extinguish it"—A. (See Job 38. 17; Ps. 9. 13; Isa. 38. 10; Rev. 1. 18.)

19. And I will give unto thee—personally, but as is shown by ch. 18. 18, not to him only—the keys of the kingdom of heaven, which is here and everywhere else distinguished from the visible Church. The kingdom is within the Church, but is not and never has been identical or coextensive with it,—and it may be said to include, in a true sense, many earnest inquirers after truth and righteousness, whom the Church could not recognise. (John 1. 9; Acts 10. 34, 35; Rom. 5. 13–17.) The key was to the Jews a well-understood emblem of authority. To commit to Peter the "keys of the kingdom of heaven" was to give him authority to proclaim the kingdom open to all who live in loyal subjection to Christ as King, and to guide men into it. (Acts 10. 48; 15. 7.) Whatsoever thou shalt bind, etc. This is an extension of the same metaphor in application to acts and things. The best explanation of the whole promise is the historical record of its fulfilment. "The kingdom of heaven," in the full meaning of the term, was opened to believing Jews through the ministry of Peter (Acts 2. 14–39); and through him the Mosaic ritual was declared to be abrogated, and the Holy Spirit was given to believing Gentiles, even as unto the Jews. (Acts 10. 44–48.) In each case what Peter did on earth was manifestly ratified in heaven.

20. "Then charged He His disciples to tell no one that He was the Christ. Jesus Himself had not said it expressly even to His apostles, but left them to infer it from His doctrine and miracles. Neither was it proper the apostles should say this openly before that grand proof of it—His resurrection. If they had, they who believed them would the more earnestly have sought to take and make Him a King; and they who did not believe them would the more vehemently have rejected and opposed such a Messiah"—WESLEY.

Vers. 21–28. OUR LORD'S FIRST PREDICTION OF HIS SUFFERINGS AND DEATH. (Mark 8. 31–38; 9. 1; Luke 9. 22–27.)—21. From that time forth—His apostles having been brought to the full conviction and acknowledgment of Him as the Messiah, the Divine Son of God—began Jesus to show unto His disciples. S. Mark adds, "openly," or plainly. How that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things. He had given them occasionally obscure intimations to this effect from the first (ch. 9. 15; 10. 38; John 2. 19–22; 3. 14); but He now began to show it more and more clearly and "without disguise." "That He must"—not that He would, as an event which He distinctly foresaw, but that "He must." The same emphatic word is used by the other Evangelists. (Comp. ch. 26. 54; Luke 24. 25, 26; 1 Cor. 15. 24, 25.) "This first announcement mentions His passion and death generally; the second, in ch. 17. 22, 23, adds His being betrayed into the hands of sinners; the third, in ch. 20. 17–19, at length expresses His stripes, cross, etc."—B. Of the elders—"the most honourable and experienced men; the chief priests—accounted the most religious; and the scribes—the most learned body of men in the nation. Would not one have expected that these should have been the very first to receive Him? But "not many wise, not many noble, were called"—WESLEY.

22. Then Peter took Him. Took hold of Him in some way, and affectionately drew Him aside. Be it far from Thee, Lord—an involuntary utterance of alarm and horror—(literally, as in the margin of the R.V., "God have mercy on Thee!" "This shall not be unto Thee"). No! never! Nothing so dreadful as this shall befall Thee!

23. Get thee behind Me, Satan. As if He felt Himself to be re-enacting the final scene of His temptation in the wilderness. (Ch. 4. 10.) "Perhaps the term 'Satan' may not barely mean, thou art My enemy, while thou fanciest thyself most My friend; but also, thou art acting the very part of Satan"—WESLEY.

Thou art an offence (R.V. "a stumbling-block") unto Me—not the rock on which My Church shalt be built, but a rock of offence. (1 Pet. 2. 8.) Not the things that be of God—the things pertaining to the Messiah, which "God had spoken through His holy prophets—but those which be of men—the worldly misinterpretations of the prophetic utterances on which current traditional notions of the Messiah and His purposes are based. Thou savourest—mindest, hast fixed thy inner eye on the fiction of a worldly empire to be set up by the Messiah, and not on the spiritual and heavenly kingdom which I have come to establish."

24. Then said Jesus—taking advantage of Peter's ignorant though affectionate remonstrance, as giving occasion to state general principles respecting His kingdom. S. Mark says, "When He had called the people unto Him with His disciples," and S. Luke, "He said to them all" (see on ch. 10. 38). If any man will come after Me. "None is forced; but if any would be a Christian, it must be on these terms. Let him deny himself, and take up his cross. S. Luke adds, 'daily.' A rule that can never be too much observed; let him in all things deny his own will however pleasing, and do the will of God however painful. Should we not consider all crosses, all things grievous to flesh and blood, as what they really are—as opportunities of embracing God's will at the expense of our own; and, consequently, as so many steps by which we may advance towards perfection? We should make a swift progress in the spiritual life if we were faithful in this practice. Crosses are so frequent, that whoever takes advantage of them will soon be a great gainer. Great crosses are occasions of great improvement; and the little ones which come daily, and even hourly, make up in number what they want in weight. We may, in these daily and hourly crosses, make effectual oblations of our will to God; which oblations, so frequently repeated, will soon mount to a great sum. Let us remember, then (what can never be sufficiently inculcated), that God is the Author of all events; that none is so small or inconsiderable as to escape His notice and direction. Every event, therefore, declares to us the will of God; to which, thus declared, we should heartily submit. We should renounce our own, to embrace it; we should approve and choose what His choice warrants as best for us. Herein should we exercise ourselves continually; this should be our practice all the day long. We should in humility accept the little crosses that are dispensed to us as those that best suit our weakness. Let us bear these little things, at least for God's sake, and prefer His will to our own in matters of so small importance, and His goodness will accept these mean oblations; for He despiseth not the day of small things"—WESLEY.

25. "Whosoever will save his life—at the expense of his conscience; whosoever, in the very highest instance, that of life itself, will not renounce himself, shall be lost eternally. But can any man hope he should be able thus to renounce himself, if he cannot do it in the smallest instances? And whosoever will lose his life shall find it. What he loses on earth, he shall find in heaven"—WESLEY.

26. Lose his own soul. Shall forfeit his life in the higher and spiritual sense; "life here and hereafter"—A. "Every man has a soul of his own. It is possible for the soul to be lost, and there is danger of it. If the soul is lost, it is the sinner's own losing, and his blood is on his own head. One soul is of more worth than all the world; so the winning of the world is often the losing of the soul. The loss of the soul cannot be made up by the gain of the whole world. If the soul be once lost, it is lost for ever"—U.

27. For the Son of Man shall come—in the final judgment. (Dan. 7. 9, 10; Zech. 14. 3; Jude 14; John 5. 22.) According to his works. (Ps. 62. 12; Rom. 2. 8.)

28. Verily I say unto you—a solemn introduction to the change of thought in the next declaration—there be some standing here which shall not taste of death. A Jewish phrase for shall not die. (Heb. 2. 9.) Till they see the Son of Man coming—not, as before, "in the glory of His Father," etc., but in His kingdom. As given by S. Luke, "Till they see the kingdom of God"; and by S. Mark, "Till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power." There may be a reference in these words to His remote coming for the destruction of "the Temple, city, and polity of the Jews" (Heb. 12. 27); but as our Lord's intention seems to have been to dispel discouragement from the minds of His disciples, after having discoursed to them on His own approaching death, and on the crosses which they would be required to bear, it is probable that His special reference was (1) to His transfiguration, which some standing near Him witnessed six days later, and which one of them described as "His coming and power" (2 Pet. 1. 16)—His coming in His kingdom by a symbolical vision; and (2) to the outpouring of the Holy Spirit after His glorification—His coming for His universal spiritual dominion, in reality and in power.

CHAPTER XVII.

Vers. 1–3. THE TRANSFIGURATION: SYMBOL AND EARNEST OF COMING IN HIS KINGDOM. (Mark 9. 2–13; Luke 9. 28–36.)—1. And after six days. So also S. Mark. S. Luke says, "About an eight days after these sayings," meaning the same as the others, but including the day when "these sayings" were spoken, and also that of the event he was about to relate. Peter, James, and John. The three who had been already chosen to witness the raising of the daughter of Jairus (Mark 5. 37), and whom He afterwards chose to be with Him in Gethsemane. (Ch. 26. 37.) Into an high mountain. S. Luke adds, "to pray." Neither of the Evangelists names this mountain, but as they give no hint of our Lord having left the neighbourhood of Cæsarea Philippi, it is almost certain, as now generally held by expositors, that the scene of the solemn event was one of the peaks, though not the highest, of Mount Hermon.

2. Transfigured—changed in form—before them. No explanation of this word is given, and none can be imagined. From what follows we learn that an effulgence of the Divine glory which did not fall upon Him from without, but which emanated from within, clothed His Person with a dazzling radiance beyond description. His face did shine as the sun. S. Luke says, "As He prayed the fashion of His countenance was altered." As though the very "form of God" (Phil. 2. 8) was manifesting itself visibly through the veil of flesh. His raiment was white as the light. S. Mark, "Became shining, exceeding white, so as no fuller on earth" (however skilful) "could white them"; and S. Luke, "White and glistering." It was a momentary outburst of glory essentially Divine. (John 1. 14; Ps. 104. 2; Heb. 3. 4.)

3. There appeared unto them—and were immediately recognised, partly by intuition, and partly perhaps by the conversation they overheard—Moses and Elias (Elijah)—the acknowledged representatives, the one of the Law and the other of the Prophets. Talking with Him. S. Luke says, "Spake of His decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem." "The same mysterious and inconceivable event of which He had distinctly forewarned them, six days previously; now, however, presented to them in a less startling form. Then He told them that He would be killed; now they hear His death described as His decease—His exodus, or departure (2 Pet. 1. 15); and also as the fulfilling of a predetermined design. The decease which He should accomplish. The weighty word involves His passion, cross, resurrection, and ascension" —B.

4. Then—as the heavenly visitants were about to depart—answered Peter—for, eager and impulsive as he was, he did not dare to break in upon the strange heavenly conference—Lord, it is good for us to be here. It is best to remain in this glorious condition and company. Let us make here three tabernacles, or booths; one for Thee (implying, probably, "and us with Thee," as Thy attendants), and one for Moses, and one for Elias. He would at least prolong the bliss so unexpectedly realised. But, as the other Evangelists explain, "He wist not what to say." He was bewildered, but full of delight, to which he gave expression in his own ardent manner by simply praying that it might not be taken from them.

5. A bright cloud overshadowed them—that is, our Lord, Moses, and Elijah. "S. Luke adds that the apostles 'feared as they (the glorious three) entered into the cloud.' It was the token and awful symbol of the Divine Presence, overshadowing by its excessive and insufferable brightness. A voice out of the cloud—repeating and confirming the essential truth which Peter had confessed so recently under direct Divine revelation. This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. (Ch. 3. 17; John 12. 28.) Hear ye Him. (Comp. the three clauses of this verse with Ps. 2. 7; Isa. 42. 1; Deut. 18. 15; Acts 3. 22, 23.) The command, 'Hear ye Him,' and disappearance of the heavenly attendants, are symbolically connected, as signifying that God, who had spoken in times past to the fathers by the prophets, henceforth would speak by His Son"—A.

8. Save Jesus only. The one Mediator of the New Covenant, the Supreme Ruler in that kingdom of His grace to which the Law and the Prophets had looked forward, and which He was now personally bringing in.

9. Tell the vision—the heavenly realities they only had seen (Mark and Luke)—to no man—"not to the rest of the disciples, lest they should be grieved and discouraged because they were not admitted to the sight; nor to any other persons, lest it should enrage some the more, and His approaching sufferings should make others disbelieve it. Till the Son of Man be risen again—till the resurrection should make it credible, and confirm their testimony about it"—WESLEY.

10. Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?—"before the Messiah, if no man is to know of his coming? Should we not rather tell every man that he is come; and that we have seen him witnessing to Thee as the Messiah?"—WESLEY.

11. Restore all things. By calling men to repentance, and proclaiming the kingdom of heaven to be at hand, to introduce something better than had previously existed. "Regulate all things in order to the coming of Christ"—WESLEY. (Luke 3. 4; Acts 1. 5; 3. 21.)

12. Elias is come already. "And yet when the Jews asked John, Art thou Elijah? he said, I am not. (John 1. 21.) His meaning was, I am not Elijah the Tishbite, come again into the world. But he was the person of whom Malachi prophesied under that name" —WESLEY.

The doctrinal meaning of this most solemn central event in our Lord's history is sufficiently self-evident, and is clearly indicated by its connection with the great occasion preceding it, when His apostles first expressly declared their conviction that He was the promised Messiah, and He then began to announce to them that He, the Divine-human Messiah, must suffer and die in order to establish His saving dominion. But its import is explained more directly by one of the three chosen witnesses of the weighty scene, S. Peter himself: "We were eye-witnesses of His majesty. For He received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a Voice from the excellent glory, This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (2 Pet. 1. 16, 17). It was the declaration of the Eternal Father's infinite complacency in Him as a sacrificial Victim offering Himself for the salvation of the world. It was an attestation by the presence of Moses, who represented the types of the Law, and of Elijah, who represented the Prophets, of the fulfilment in the Cross of Christ of those pre-intimations of His sufferings, which they had not themselves understood, but into which they searched diligently. (1 Pet. 1. 10–12.) It was a revelation of the glory by which His sufferings were to be followed and crowned. It was a proclamation of His sovereignty in "the kingdom to be possessed by the saints" (Dan. 7. 13–22), and of the majesty of His supreme rule. It was the imperious call to all men to submit loyally to His authority. Hear Him! "Whoever would know the mind of God, must hearken to Jesus Christ; for by Him God hath in these last days spoken to us. The Voice from heaven has made all the sayings of Christ as authoritative as if they had been thus spoken out of a cloud. God does here, as it were, turn us over to Christ for all the revelations of His mind. Moses and Elias were now with Him the Law and the Prophets; hitherto it was said, 'Hear them' (Luke 16. 29). The disciples were ready to equal them with Christ, when they must have tabernacles for them as well as for Him. No, saith God, hear Him, and that is enough"—WESLEY.

Vers. 14–21. HEALING OF A LUNATIC CHILD: FAILURE OF APOSTLES, AND ITS CAUSE. (Mark 9. 14–29; Luke 9. 37, 42.)—14. And when they were come to the multitude. (S. Luke, "on the next day")—the day following the night of the Transfiguration—"When they were come down from the hill." "An abrupt and sorrowful transition of experience! The elect apostles, who had just heard their Master proclaimed King of Saints amidst scenes of heavenly splendour on the 'holy mount,' now suddenly find Him in conflict with the powers of darkness, yet also again calmly asserting His dominion over them. S. Mark, whose account of this miracle is full of interesting details, says that when Jesus returned to the nine apostles, whom He had left at the foot of the mountain, He found them beset by a company of noisy 'scribes, questioning with them'; probably taunting them with their failure to effect a miracle which they had proposed to them as a test or sign of their Master's Divine mission, and arguing from their inability to that of their absent Master. 'And,' S. Mark continues, 'straightway all the people when they beheld Him, were greatly amazed'—at His coming so suddenly, so seasonably, so unexpectedly; perhaps also at some rays of majesty and glory which yet remained on His countenance"—WESLEY. (Ex. 34. 30.)

"And running to Him saluted Him"—telling Him, no doubt, of the discomfiture of His poor disciples, and how opportunely He had reappeared. "And He asked the Scribes"—thus graciously transferring the task of silencing their opposition from His perplexed apostles to Himself. "What question ye with them?" But before they could answer, there came to Him a certain man—he who had been the occasion of the dispute—kneeling down to Him—and with the gesture of lowly homage saying—

15. Lord, have mercy on my son—"my only child" (Luke)—for he is a lunatic—moon-struck. The symptoms were those of epilepsy, but were supposed to be the effects of an influence from the moon. In S. Mark the father describes him as having "a dumb spirit"—possessed by a demon who deprived him of the power to articulate words, though at times "he suddenly cried out" (Luke); so that the boy was at once mentally disordered, epileptic, and dumb.

16. And I brought him to Thy disciples—the nine apostles—and they could not cure him. The other Evangelists record words of the distressed father which ascribe the child's affliction to its real cause: "Lo, a spirit taketh him; I besought Thy disciples to cast him out, and they could not."

17. O faithless and perverse generation. (Deut. 32. 5; ch. 12. 34; 16. 4.) This severe rebuke is addressed directly to the mocking Scribes, as representatives of the people generally, but was also intended for the disciples themselves, and for the faintly believing father. Bring him hither to Me. S. Mark adds, "And they brought him." And then, in the presence of Christ occurred an instance of what the father had just described to him. "As he was yet a coming—straightway the spirit tare him, and he fell on the ground, and wallowed, foaming." Our Lord asked, "How long is it ago since this came to him?" And he said, "Of a child"; and, true to nature, and in order to move more deeply the pity of the great Healer, began to relate again how oftimes the evil spirit had sought to destroy him. "But, if Thou canst do anything, have compassion on us, and help us" (Mark 9. 22). "There is all the calm majesty of Divine self-consciousness, yet without trace of self-assertion, when Jesus, utterly ignoring the 'if Thou canst,' turns to the man and tells him that, while with the Divine Helper there is the possibility of all help, it is conditioned by a possibility in ourselves, by man's receptiveness, by his faith. Not, if the Christ can do anything or even everything, but, 'If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth'"—ED. And his faith thus challenged, "straightway the father of the child cried out, and said with tears, Lord, I believe," "and then the little spark of faith which is enkindled in his soul, revealing to him the abyssmal deeps of unbelief which are there, he adds this further, 'Help Thou mine unbelief.' For thus it is ever; only in the light of the actual presence of a grace in the soul does that soul perceive the strength and prevalence of the opposing corruption. Till then it had no measure by which to measure its deficiency"—T.

18. And Jesus rebuked the devil. S. Mark adds, "Saying unto him, Thou dumb and deaf spirit, I charge thee, come out of him." I, whose command thou canst not disobey. I, even I Myself, now charge thee. "And the spirit cried and rent him sore, and came out of him; and the child was as one dead, insomuch that many said, He is dead. But Jesus took him by the hand, and lifted him up, and he arose." "Thus everything was permitted to manifest the more strikingly the fierceness and obstinacy of the possession, and the saving might of Christ, and the more forcibly to abash the gainsaying scribes, whose exultation, like that of 'the hypocrite, was but for a moment'"—R. W.

19. Then came the disciples to Jesus apart—disquieted and perplexed by their humiliating failure—and said, Why could not we cast him out? (See ch. 10. 1; Luke 9. 1.)

20. Because of your unbelief (R.V. "your little faith"). Your want of full reliance on My Name and My almighty grace. This was the precious lesson which the humbled nine were to learn from their failure, and it is a lesson for all the followers of Christ and for all time. If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed—"that is, the least measure of it. But it is certain, the faith which is here spoken of does not always imply saving faith. Many have had it who thereby cast out devils, and yet will at last have their portion with them. It is only a supernatural persuasion given a man, that God will work thus by him at that hour. Now, 'though I have all' this 'faith so as to remove mountains,' yet if I have not the 'faith which worketh by love,' I am nothing. 'To remove mountains,' was a proverbial phrase among the Jews, and is still retained in their writings to express a thing which is very difficult, and to appearance impossible"—WESLEY.

"But this faith, though it might not be saving to the individual, differed from saving faith only as it was directed to a different object. Faith, in both cases, does not mean mere credence given to some truth proposed, but trust or reliance. Faith is saving when it is the trust of a heart, broken and contrite on account of sin, in the great atonement, which is the only object of saving faith; so the faith by which miracles were wrought by the disciples of Christ was also trust or reliance, but its object was the name or power of Christ, and this undoubtedly some persons appear to have possessed, who had not the faith which placed them in a state of salvation"—R. W.

21. Howbeit this kind, etc. "And so it is for each of us individually. This kind—whether it be of sin, of the world, or of science falsely so-called, of temptation, or of materialism, cometh not out by any of our ready-made formulas or dead dogmas. Not so are the flesh and the devil vanquished; not so is the world overcome. It cometh out by nothing but by prayer—'Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief'"—ED.

22. While they abode in Galilee. S. Mark says that after the miracle just described, which had taken place in the extreme north of the country, near Cæsarea Philippi, "they departed thence, and passed through Galilee" (Upper Galilee), "and He would not that any man should know it." It was during this journey towards Capernaum, when quietly passing through regions which He would never visit again, that our Lord began for the second time to warn His apostles that the time was drawing near when He must be taken from them violently by betrayal and death. This became evidently at this period the subject of their constant conversation. "And He said unto His disciples, Let these sayings sink down into your ears" (Luke).

23. And they were exceeding sorry. "They understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask Him" (Mark). They did not dare to remonstrate, like Peter on the former occasion (ch. 16. 22), but pondered the startling prediction in pensive sorrow.

Vers. 24–27. THE TRIBUTE MONEY: THE DIVINE SONSHIP RE-AFFIRMED. — 24. When they were come to Capernaum—from which He had been for some time absent. They that receive tribute money—that is, the collectors of the half-shekel for the Temple service, which every Jew above twenty years of age was expected to contribute annually. (Ex. 30. 11–16; 2 Kings 12. 4; 2 Chron. 24. 6.) Its value was equal to about one shilling and fourpence of our money. Our Lord, who had just reappeared in the city, was probably passing into the house (ver. 25) when the collectors came to Peter—who was following Him—and said, Doth not your Master pay tribute?—the question implying that it was not absolutely obligatory, yet that the collectors looked for an affirmative answer.

25. He saith, Yes. And with affectionate pride stepped forward, it may be to procure the money. "Zealous for his Lord's honour, he pledged Him without hesitation to the payment. Yet was he over-hasty in this. There was on his part a failing here to recognise the higher dignity of his Lord. For the time he had lost sight of his Lord's true position and prerogative—that He was a Son over

His own house, and not a servant in another's; the Head of the theocracy—not one of its subordinate members—so that it was to Him in His Father that offerings were to be made, not from Him to be received." Jesus prevented him—anticipated him, or (R.V. "spake first to him"), showing that He knew already what he desired to say. Of whom do the kings of the earth take custom (dues on goods), or tribute (a capitation tax), of their own children, or of strangers? of their own sons, or of mere subjects?

26. Then are the children free. "The sense is, This is paid for the use of the house of God. But I am the Son of God. Therefore I am free from any obligation of paying this to My own Father"—WESLEY.

The argument is clear, and the inference irresistible, as founded on the Divine Sonship of Christ, which Peter had so lately confessed, and afterwards heard proclaimed by the Voice from the excellent glory. (Comp. John 2. 16.)

27. Lest we should offend them. "Lest we should place a stumbling-block in their way, create a prejudice against us, as though I disregard the Temple and its service, and teach you also to slight it. I waive insisting upon my right of exemption as the Son of God, and the Lord of the Temple itself"—R. W. A piece of money. "The original word is a stater, which was in value two shillings and sixpence—just the sum that was wanted. Give unto them for Me and thee. Peter had a family of his own; the other apostles were the family of Jesus"—WESLEY.

"Observe our Lord does not say, 'This give for us.' For though He had condescended to unite Himself with the apostle by saying, Lest we should cause them to stumble, the separation is instantly made again, and the distinction is uniformly kept up. (Comp. John 20. 17.) How illustrious a degree of knowledge and power did our Lord here discover! Knowledge penetrating into this animal, though beneath the waters; and power, in directing this very fish to Peter's hook, though he himself was at a distance. How must this have encouraged both him and his brethren in a firm dependence on Divine Providence"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Vers. 1–14. GREATNESS IN THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN. (Mark 9. 33–37; Luke 9. 46–48.) —1. At the same time—that is, during this our Lord's last visit to Capernaum—came the disciples unto Jesus (S. Mark says, "Being in the house")—saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? We learn from the other Gospels that this appeal to our Lord arose out of a dispute while on their way to Capernaum after the Transfiguration—probably caused by our Lord's preference of the three whom He took with Him to be witnesses of that weighty scene, and by the previous distinction bestowed on Peter (ch. 16. 18). As the Twelve were now quietly gathered about Him in the house, Jesus "perceiving the thought of their heart" (Luke) gave occasion for their question by first asking them, "What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way?" (Mark). For a moment shame and confusion kept them silent. "They held their peace" (Mark). But, reassured by signs of His gracious forbearance, they ventured to answer His question by the timid appeal to Him, Who (R.V. "Who, then,") is greatest—who among us will have priority—in Thy kingdom? They must have been fully convinced by this time that the kingdom which He, Messiah the Prince, was to establish, would differ from all other kingdoms, yet they still clung to the notion of something visible and worldly—a theocracy perhaps, morally and materially superior to that of the Jews in the purest period of their history, but a kingdom, a theocracy, with real distinctions of rank.

2. Called a little child to Him—and sought to impress the timely admonitory lesson now to be given by a formal act which they should never forget. S. Mark says that "He sat down and called the Twelve"; then "took a child," probably Peter's little son. And set him in the midst of them—afterwards took him "in His arms"—"possibly drawing a lesson for His disciples from his ready submission and trustfulness"—A.

3. And said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted (R.V. "Except ye turn")—from your present worldly, unspiritual, self-seeking ideal and aims—and become as little children (Ps. 131. 2; ch. 19. 14; Mark 10. 14; Luke 18. 16; 1 Pet. 2. 2)—ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. "Nothing could serve to impress them more strongly with the exclusive spirituality of that kingdom which He was about to establish than making a childlike character the essential qualification for entering it. Civil offices would require skill; the government of men energy and decision of character; the overthrow of the Roman legions, in order to deliver their country from a foreign yoke—courage; but Christ requires that they should become little children! From this alone they might most certainly conclude that, notwithstanding some better and more hallowed views, they had been under the influence of the most erroneous conceptions of the nature of the kingdom of Messiah"—R. W. "The first step towards entering into the kingdom of grace is to become as little children: lowly in heart, knowing yourselves utterly ignorant and helpless, and hanging wholly on your Father who is in heaven for a supply of all your wants. We may further assert (though it is doubtful whether this text implies so much), Except ye be turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God; except ye be entirely, inwardly changed, renewed in the image of God, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of glory. Thus must every man be converted in this life, or he can never enter into life eternal. Ye shall in nowise enter—so far from being great in it"—WESLEY.

4. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself. (Ch. 20. 27; 23. 11.) As this little child—as he is humble—the same is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven. In what, then, does the humility of a little child consist but in the absence of self-consciousness—in freedom from ambition and a striving to be the greatest. "Humility, therefore, as our Lord intended we should understand it, is the root of all the graces; when self is utterly removed; when things spiritual become the supreme objects of interest and desire; when others are preferred to ourselves; when we gladly embrace the inferior offices which may be assigned us by our Lord, and tremble at the responsibility of the highest; when we are ready to endure suffering, and to submit to lowly circumstances; and are not puffed up, and despise others, if placed in higher; and, finally, when we live under an entire sense of our dependence upon God for strength and grace, and maintain an habitual consciousness of our own insufficiency, then shall we be ranked with 'the greatest in the kingdom of heaven'"—R. W.

5. Whoso shall receive—into his affections and his fellowship—one such little child in My name—because of his relation to Me, and his fidelity to My cause—receiveth Me. (Ch. 10. 42; 1 Cor. 14. 20.) "All who are in this sense little children are unspeakably dear to Me. Therefore help them all you can, as if it were Myself in person; and see that ye offend them not—that is, that ye turn them not out of the right way, neither hinder them in it"—WESLEY.

6. And whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in Me—that is, shall cause them to stumble, referring immediately to His lowly, weak, and inexperienced followers, but, as is evident from Luke 9. 43, including children literally—it were better for him that a millstone, etc. Capital punishment by drowning was not practised by the Jews, but was common in Greece and Rome. Our Lord's warning is that death itself, even in this terrible form, would be better for a man than to incur the guilt of causing others, especially artless and simple-minded children or childlike believers, to fall away from Him. "A man may enter into the kingdom and do service; yet if, in so doing, he disregard the law of love to the little ones, far better his work should be abruptly cut short; better one of those large millstones, turned by an ass, were hung about his neck, and he cast into the sea!"—ED. "Woe to the world because of offences—that is, unspeakable misery will be in the world through them. For it must needs be that offences come. Such is the nature of things, and such the weakness, folly, and wickedness of mankind, that it cannot be but that they will come. But woe to that man—that is, miserable is that man—by whom the offence cometh. Offences are all things whereby any one is turned out of, or hindered in, the way of God"—WESLEY.

8. If thy hand or thy foot offend thee. As it is at thy peril that thou become a cause of stumbling to others, so thy safety demands the removal of causes of stumbling to thyself. The "hand" and the "foot" are symbols of activity in the world. If thy worldly business, thy personal associations, or thy private interest, though dear and apparently necessary to thee, are stumbling-blocks in the path of thy duty—cut them off—renounce them at any cost. (See on ch. 5. 29, 30.) "If the most dear enjoyment, the most beloved and useful person, turn thee out of, or hinder thee in, the way—part with them. Is not this an hard saying? Yes; if thou take counsel with flesh and blood"—WESLEY.

10. Take heed. Our Lord returns to the question of pre-eminence, which had been so evidently a matter of serious dispute among the Twelve, and declares the preciousness of modest, unobtrusive, unswerving fidelity to Him, even though associated with what the world would call feebleness. "See that ye despise not one of these little ones—as if they were beneath your notice. Be careful to receive, and not to offend, the very weakest believer in Christ; for as inconsiderable as some of these may appear to thee, the very angels of God have a peculiar charge over them; even those of the highest order, who continually appear at the throne of the Most High. To behold the face of God seems to signify the waiting near His throne, and to be an allusion to the office of chief ministers in earthly courts, who daily converse with their princes"—WESLEY.

The term "little ones" here undoubtedly includes children, and this saying of our Lord assures us "that those angels whose honour is high before God are entrusted with the charge of the humble and meek—the children in age and the children in grace"—A. (Ps. 34. 7; 91. 11; Heb. 1. 14.)

11. For the Son of Man, etc. (Luke 19. 10.) "Another and a yet stronger reason for not despising them is that I Myself came into the world to save them"—WESLEY.

"What an immeasurable word again, so simply spoken! There stands the ladder of Jacob before our eyes; below are the 'little ones; then their 'angels'; then the heavenly 'Son of Man,' He who comes as the original Angel from the presence and from the bosom of the Father; and then above Him (ver. 14) the 'Father' Himself and His good pleasure"—S.

12. How think ye? etc. (Comp. Ezek. 34. 6, 11, 12.) This parable was repeated in an expanded form on another occasion (Luke 15. 4, 6). It is instructive to note that the same imagery is used in application to weak believers and children, as in Luke to publicans and sinners.

14. That one of these little ones—however feeble spiritually—should perish. (Comp. S. Paul's admonitions with reference to those who are weak in the faith, 1 Cor. 8. 11–13; 10. 24–33; 12. 21–24.) As the little ones evidently include children—one of whom was still standing in the midst of our Lord's hearers—how absolutely certain it is that none of them, dying in childhood, shall perish; not because they are untainted with sin, but because the Son of Man came to save.

Vers. 15–35. LAST WORDS IN CAPERNAUM: FORGIVENESS—THE UNFORGIVING FORGIVEN DEBTOR.—15. Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee. (Luke 17. 3, 4; comp. Zech. 8. 17; Prov. 17. 10.) "Yet a further depth of Christian love remained to be shown which, all self-forgetful, sought not its own but the things of others. This also bore on the circumstances of the time, and the dispute between the disciples, but went far beyond it, and set forth eternal principles"—ED. Tell him his fault. (In S. Luke, "rebuke him.") The connection of this with the preceding discourse is obvious. "But how can we avoid giving offence to some, or being offended at others—especially, suppose they are quite in the wrong; suppose they commit a known sin? Our Lord here teaches us how: He lays down a sure method of avoiding all offences. Whosoever closely observes this threefold rule will seldom offend others, and never be offended himself. If any do anything amiss, of which thou art an eye or ear witness, thus saith the Lord, 'If thy brother,'—any one who is a member of the same religious community, 'sin against thee,' go and reprove him alone, if it may be, in person; if that cannot so well be done, by thy messenger; or in writing. Observe, our Lord gives no liberty to omit this, or to exchange it for either of the following steps. If this do not succeed, Take with thee one or two more—men whom he esteems or loves, who may then confirm and enforce what thou sayest, and afterwards, if need require, bear witness of what was spoken"—WESLEY. (See Num. 35. 30; Deut. 17. 6; 19. 15; John 8. 17; 2 Cor. 13. 1.)

17. Tell it to the Church. The apostles would at that time understand our Lord to mean, appeal to the body of ruling elders of a synagogue. But He was looking forward to the establishment of His Church, as in ch. 16. 18—the only other place in the Gospels where the word is used. "Tell it to the elders of the Church—Lay the whole matter open before those who watch over your and his soul. If all this avail not, have no further intercourse with him, only such as thou hast with heathens. Can anything be plainer? Christ does here as expressly command all Christians, who see a brother do evil, to take this way, not another; and to take these steps in this order, as He does to honour their father and mother. But if so, in what land do the Christians live? If we proceed from the private carriage of man to man to proceedings of a more public nature, in what Christian nation are church censures conformed to this rule? Is this the form in which ecclesiastical judgments appear in the popish, or even the Protestant world? Are these the methods used even by those who boast the most loudly of the authority of Christ, to confirm their sentences? Let us earnestly pray that this dishonour to the Christian name may be wiped away, and that common humanity may not with such solemn mockery be destroyed, in the name of the Lord! Let him be to thee as the heathen—to whom thou still owest earnest goodwill, and all the offices of humanity"—WESLEY. (See 1 Cor. 5. 11; 2 Thess. 3. 14, 15.)

18. Whatsoever ye shall bind, etc. Here our Lord extends to all His apostles the promise already given to Peter (ch. 16.19), with especial reference now as before to the release of His followers through them from the obligations of the Mosaic ritual (Acts 15. 23–31); but also, as the context shows, with a much wider scope. In the rules just laid down for dealing with grievances among themselves as individual believers, our Lord had used the singular number ("If thy brother," etc.), now, most notably, when giving to them, as a class apart, legislative authority, to be used in His name on behalf of His Church, the plural ye is introduced. It should also be observed that our Lord is not speaking now, as previously, with reference to persons ("these little ones"; "thy brother"), but only concerning things; "whatsoever," evidently the principles and rules of moral conduct which the apostles, after the Holy Spirit had been given to them to guide them into all the truth, should declare to be binding or not binding on all the followers of Christ. Our Lord is speaking to the Twelve only, for no other persons were present, and with exclusive reference to their peculiar relation to His Church.

19. Again (the solemn verily being understood) I say unto you—My apostles—that if two of you—whom I appoint to be the founders, first teachers, and rulers of My Church—shall agree on earth—under the plenary light and power of My Spirit—as touching anything that they shall ask—as My servants and for the interests of My kingdom—it shall be done for them. The connection of this promise with the words standing before it limits its application in the first instance to the apostles to whom it was spoken; but other promises of answers to prayer quite as definite and positive, and clearly intended for all believers (ch. 7. 7, 8; 1 John 3. 22; 5. 14, 15), give authority to extend the application of this also to Christians generally. Yet to be pleaded in prayer there must be a careful observance of the implied limitations and conditions, agreement of heart, and understanding by the power of "the Spirit of grace and supplications" (Zech. 12. 10), and all that is concentrated in the phrase, "In My name."

20. For where two or three. Observe our Lord does not repeat the words, "of you," My apostles; for He now speaks to them simply as the representatives of all His followers. Are gathered together in My name—for the ends of My grace and of My kingdom, in the exercise of faith and in reliance on My sufficiency (John 14. 12, 13)—there am I in the midst of them (ch. 28. 20; 1 Cor. 1. 2; 12. 13)—as Mediator, through whom they have access to the Father. "Where"—any place; "two or three"—the smallest company possible. "I suppose a man and his wife"—WESLEY.

Being one in heart and object; praying "in My name," in fellowship with Me; what they supplicate "shall be done for them by My Father."

21. Then came Peter. Evidently on the same precious occasion. Our Lord is seated "in the house," surrounded by His twelve apostles, who are His only hearers, perhaps with the little child He had called to Him still nestling in His arms. He had just shown them how He requires each disciple of His to deal with his brother if injured by him, probably alluding directly to Peter, as having been wounded by insinuations thrown out in the course of their recent wrangling on the question of priority in the kingdom. Peter had heard the encouraging words, "thou hast gained thy brother," and with a readiness to forgive, and a longing to regain the love and confidence of the offender, he ventured to submit to Christ the question in the presence of all his brethren, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times? The rabbis taught, on the authority of Amos (1. 3, 9, 11), that forgiveness might not be extended more than three times; so that probably Peter in his simplicity felt that he was suggesting a very liberal extension. "But the matter stands quite otherwise. For if I can still count, then have I not yet forgotten what went before, and therefore not at all really forgiven from the heart"—S.

22. I say not unto thee, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven. "He means by this saying, which is quite as definite as it is indefinite, let there be no numbering at all"—S. Let there be no limit. Forgive as often as there is occasion to do so.

23. Therefore—in this respect, in order to show that My law of forgiveness has no definite limit—is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants—his ministers, servants of the crown, or, it may be, the governors of his provinces.

24. One was brought unto him—for he would not have presented himself but under constraint—which owed him ten thousand talents. It is not said whether gold or silver talents; but the value of ten thousand talents, even of silver, would be equal to nearly two millions and a half sterling.

25. His lord commanded him to be sold. This would have been according to the law of Moses. (Lev. 23. 39–47.) But it is probable that the imagery is derived from the despotisms of neighbouring countries.

26. Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. "Words characteristic of the extreme fear and anguish of the moment, which made him ready to promise impossible things." But also words in which we may hear "the voice of self-righteousness, imagining that, if only time were allowed, it could make good all the shortcomings of the past. It is clear that he had never come to a true recognition of the immensity of the debt"—T. Yet even in this respect an exact representation of our condition before God; for who of us, however deeply penitent, has ever estimated aright the number and enormity of his sins?

28. An hundred pence—equivalent to about four pounds of our money.

29. Have patience with me, etc. The same words of entreaty which he had himself used in his appeal to the king.

34, 35. His lord was wroth, etc. "Before he had dealt with him as a creditor with a debtor, now as a judge with a criminal." (Jas. 2. 13.) Delivered him to the tormentors. "Imprisonment is a much severer punishment in the Eastern countries than in ours. State criminals especially, when condemned to it, are not only confined to a very mean and scanty allowance, but are frequently loaded with clogs or heavy yokes, so that they can neither lie nor sit at ease; and by frequent scourgings, and sometimes rackings, are brought to an untimely end. Till he should pay all that was due to him—that is, without all hope of release, for this he could never do. How observable is this whole account, as well as the great inference our Lord draws from it: (1) The debtor was freely and fully forgiven; (2) He wilfully and grievously offended; (3) His pardon was retracted, the whole debt required, and the offender delivered to the tormentors for ever. And shall we still say, But when we are once freely and fully forgiven, our pardon can never be retracted? Verily, verily, I say unto you, So likewise will My heavenly Father do to you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses"—WESLEY.

"Without drawing any dogmatic inference from the parable, it seems to proceed on these two assumptions, that suffering neither expiates guilt, nor in itself amends the guilty, and that as sin has incurred a debt which can never be discharged, so the banishment, or rather the loss and misery of it, will be endless"—ED. "The truth taught is the impossibility of the unforgiving being forgiven, but the chief lesson is the example of the Divine spirit of forgiveness in the act of the king"—C. B.

CHAPTER XIX.

Vers. 1–12. MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. (Mark 10. 1–12.)—1. He departed from Galilee—finally—and came into the coasts of Judea, beyond Jordan. "This does not mean that any part of Judea itself extended beyond Jordan, but that Jesus came into the country beyond Jordan, which, with the river itself, formed the eastern boundary of Judea." The Evangelist here omits many incidents which took place at this period of our Lord's ministry, but are supplied partly by S. Luke (9. 51–17. 11;) and partly by S. John (7. 8–10 and 10. 22–39; also 11. 1–46, 54). "The best mode of harmonising this verse with the narratives of S. Luke and S. John is to suppose a break in the middle. He departed from Galilee, and (after an interval not recorded by S. Matthew) came into Judea by the way of Peræa"—S. C. (S. Mark says, "By the further side of Jordan").

3. Tempting Him (ch. 16. 1). Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?—"that is, for anything which he dislikes in her"—WESLEY.

The question was not whether divorce was lawful in itself, for upon that they were agreed, but whether a man might put away his wife for any reason he chose to plead for taking this course. This was at that time the point of dispute between two great rabbinic schools—that of Hillel who asserted the right of arbitrary divorce, and that of Shammai who allowed it only in cases of unfaithfulness. The object of this appeal to our Lord was to bring Him into conflict with one of these parties, and so to impair His influence; for even in the retired region of Peræa where He now was, "multitudes resorted to Him again, whom He healed and taught." Not improbably also the tempters hoped that they might induce our Lord to commit Himself to some condemnation of divorce, and if this reached the ears of Herod the Tetrarch, within whose dominions He was now dwelling, it would provoke him and Herodias to hostility against Him.

4. Made them male and female. (Gen. 1. 27.) Our Lord thus avoids the snare so artfully laid for Him, by referring to what God did in the original institution of marriage. "He made them (man as a race) male (not a male) and female, but then the male and female were implicitly shut up in one; and therefore after the creation of woman from man, when one man and one woman were united in marriage they should be one flesh, because woman was taken out of man. The answer then is, that abstractly, from the nature of marriage, it is indissoluble"—A.

5. And said—"by the mouth of Adam, who uttered the words"—WESLEY. (Gen. 2. 24.)

Or rather, through the historian, but in either case, "He that made them said, For this cause," etc. (Eph. 5. 20). "By making them one man and one woman He condemned polygamy; by making them one flesh He condemned divorce"—WESLEY.

7, 8. Why did Moses then, etc. (See on ch. 5. 31, 32.) "Our Lord's answer is, Moses permitted, not commanded it, because of the hardness of your hearts, because neither your fathers nor you could bear the more excellent way"—WESLEY.

9. And I say unto you—"I revoke that indulgence from this day, so that from henceforth," whosoever shall, etc.—WESLEY.

Our Lord did not say this to His tempting opponents, but to His disciples in private. S. Mark says, "that in the house His disciples asked Him again of the same matter. And He saith unto them, Whosoever," etc. "Here again our Lord takes the character of Lawgiver, as well as Teacher, by re-enacting the original law, and abrogating the relaxation, though that rested upon the same author as the other Mosaic institutions. From the beginning it was not so, nor shall it be henceforward; for I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, etc. This then is the formally promulgated law of the Christian dispensation. 'The Lord hateth putting away'; and in no case is it permitted, but that one in which the very essence of the relation is previously destroyed, and the twain have ceased to be 'one flesh'"—R. W.

10, 11. If the case of a man be so with his wife—if he may not resort to divorce but in the single case our Lord allowed—it is not good to marry. "But He said to them—This is not universally true; it does not hold with regard to all men, but with regard to those only 'to whom is given' this excellent gift of God. Now, this is given to three sorts of persons—to some, by natural constitution, without their choice; to others, by violence, against their choice; and to others, by grace, with their choice, who steadily withstand their natural inclinations, that they may 'wait upon God without distraction'"—WESLEY.

12. For the kingdom of heaven's sake—believing that they can best promote the interests of Christ's kingdom unmarried. S. Paul was a noble example of this. (1 Cor. 7. 7; 9. 5.) But there is not a word here to exalt celibacy in itself into a state of superior spiritual worth. "He that is able to receive it, let him receive it. This gracious command (for such it is unquestionably, since to say such a man may live single, is saying nothing — whoever doubted this?) is not designed for all men; but only for the few who are 'able to receive it'"—WESLEY.

Let the prosperity of My kingdom be the end and aim of all My disciples, and let each decide for himself whether in his own case the married or unmarried state would most conduce to this end.

Vers. 13–15. THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN AND LITTLE CHILDREN. (Mark 10. 13 - 16; Luke 18. 15–17.)—13. Brought unto Him—no doubt into "the house" where He had taught His disciples as just stated—little children (S. Luke says, "infants"). Probably children of various ages were brought—that He should put His hands on them, and pray. "This was a rite that was very early used in praying for a blessing on young persons"—WESLEY. (Gen. 48. 14–20.)

In the time of Christ "Jewish parents usually brought their infant children on the first anniversary of their birthday to be blessed by the rabbi of the synagogue" — Bib. Dict. Perhaps in part under the sanction of this custom, but chiefly as moved by His manifestations of unspeakable benignity and tenderness, mothers led their little children by the hand or carried their babes in their arms to Him, even when in comparative retirement, to obtain His blessing upon them. And the disciples rebuked them. It may be for having dared to obtrude into His presence and interrupt Him when giving them instruction, or perhaps they inconveniently crowded around Him.

14. But Jesus said (S. Mark adds, "much displeased"), Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto Me. The interference of the apostles, though apparently well meant, showed how little they understood His will and purpose, and was a grief to Him. But their error was overruled so as to be the occasion of the utterance of words of precious instruction for the guidance and encouragement of Christ's followers in all ages. Of such is the kingdom of heaven—of these, and such as these. (Ch. 18. 3.) "That this kingdom signifies the spiritual kingdom of Christ upon earth, and also that glorious reign of God over redeemed and glorified men in a future world, are points not to be disputed; and the words of our Lord, if they relate to one, must relate to both. If little children are the subjects of His spiritual kingdom on earth, then, until the moment that by actual sin they bring personal condemnation upon themselves, they remain heirs of the kingdom of eternal glory; and if they become the subjects of the latter by dying, then a previous vital relation must have existed on earth between them and Christ as their Redeemer and Sanctifier, and that this relation is not a merely nominal but a vital and beneficial one, appears as clearly from His praying for them, putting His hands upon them, and blessing them; all which, being acts of favour and acceptance, indicated their most certain heirship, through His merits and intercession, should they die before forfeiture of this grace by personal actual offence, to the felicities of immortal life in His perfected kingdom above. Thus this important passage satisfactorily proves the share which infants have in the mercies of the Redeemer, both in this and in a future life"—R. W. But this anticipates and answers another question. "Not only may the little infants be brought to Him—but in order for us who are mature to come to Him, we must cast away all that wherein our maturity has caused us to differ from them, and become LIKE THEM. Not only is Infant Baptism justified, but it is the NORMAL PATTERN OF ALL BAPTISM; none can enter God's kingdom except as an infant"—A.

15. He laid His hands on them, and departed thence. "Methinks it has something observable in it, that, when He had done this He departed thence. As if He reckoned He had done enough then, when He had thus asserted the rights of the lambs of the flock, and made this provision for a succession of subjects in His kingdom"—H.

Vers. 16–30. THE RICH RULER: MAMMON AND THE KINGDOM. (Mark 10. 17–31; Luke 18. 18–30.)—16. Behold one came (S. Mark, "When He was gone forth into the way"), after blessing the children "in the house." "Many of the poor had followed Him from the beginning. One rich man came at last"—WESLEY.

Our Lord was now starting on His journey to Jerusalem; and this man, whom S. Luke calls "a certain ruler," that is, probably one of the three rulers of a local synagogue (ch. 4. 23), "came running"—in real eagerness to submit his great question—and "kneeled to Him" (Mark) as before a revered Rabbi—and said—with humble sincerity—Good Master—clearly with no higher thought than that He was a Teacher come from God—What good thing shall I do that I may have—that is, procure by doing, earn the blessing of—eternal life? This term occurs here for the first time. It was the thing of supreme importance to which thinking minds were then evidently waking up, chiefly under the influence, more or less direct, of our Lord's teaching. (Comp. John 3. 14, 16, 36; 5. 24; 6. 40.)

17. "Why callest thou Me good?—whom thou supposest to be only a man. There is none good—supremely, originally, essentially—but God. If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments—from a principle of loving faith—believe, and thence love and obey. And this undoubtedly is the way to eternal life. Our Lord, therefore, does not answer ironically, which had been utterly beneath His character; but gives a plain, direct, serious answer to a serious question"—WESLEY.

18, 19. He saith unto Him, Which?—meaning, it may be, which kind of commandments, moral or ritual. Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, etc.—enumerating the commandments of the second table, and then summing them all up in the one general command, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

20. The young man—whose answer, as well as his office of synagogue-ruler, shows that he was not very young—saith unto Him, All these things have I kept from my youth up. "So he imagined; and perhaps he had, as to the letter, but not as to the spirit, which our Lord immediately shows"—WESLEY. (Comp. Phil. 3. 6.)

What lack I yet? The cry of conscious want, and of a true striving after a better spiritual state,—answered, as we learn from the other Evangelists, by the startling test-words, "One thing thou lackest," etc.; while S. Mark also notes that "Jesus beholding him"—looking intently on him as an open, honest man, "not far from the kingdom of God"—"loved him."

21. If thou wilt be perfect—"that is, be a real Christian—sell what thou hast. He who reads the heart saw his bosom sin was love of the world; and knew he could not be saved from this, but by literally renouncing it. To him therefore He gave this particular direction, which He never designed for a general rule. For him this was necessary to salvation; to us, it is not so. To sell all was an absolute duty to him; to many of us it would be an absolute sin"—WESLEY.

22. He went away sorrowful (S. Luke says "very sorrowful," and S. Mark that "he was sad")—his countenance fell—"and went away grieved." The price was too great. So truly had Jesus read his heart.

23. Shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven—not necessarily because he is rich, but because it is so difficult for the owner of great possessions to renounce and keep himself free from the evils to which riches tend. (See 1 Tim. 6. 17–19.)

24. It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle "(a proverbial expression) than for a rich man to go through the strait gate; that is, humanly speaking, it is an absolute impossibility. Rich man, tremble! Feel this impossibility; else thou art lost for ever!"—WESLEY.

25. Were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved? "If rich men, with all their advantages, cannot. Who? A poor man; a peasant; a beggar; ten thousand of them, sooner than one that is rich"—WESLEY.

26. Jesus beheld them—"To compose their hurried spirits. Oh, what a speaking look was there! Said to them—with the utmost sweetness—With men this is impossible. It is observable, He does not retract what He had said; no, nor soften it in the least degree, but rather strengthens it, by representing the salvation of a rich man as the utmost effort of omnipotence"—WESLEY.

27. Behold, we have forsaken all and followed Thee. We have complied freely with the conditions from which that rich young ruler has so sadly shrunk! Words in every way characteristic of the speaker at his actual stage of spiritual enlightenment, but how different from Peter's estimate of his self-renunciation for Christ's sake at a later period! What shall we have therefore? Perhaps thinking of the "treasure in heaven" of which he had just heard, and no doubt assuring himself of that "eternal life" which the ruler had not valued at the worth of his great earthly possessions. It is quite true that they had forsaken their all of worldly advantage, which in some cases was not inconsiderable; but, alas! they had not given up their all of self, for the hope of adequate reward was still prominent and powerful.

28. In the regeneration, etc. The full and final import of this promise to the apostles is a mystery to be disclosed only by its fulfilment hereafter. But it has a meaning also, which, if not intelligible to them when the words were spoken, would become sufficiently manifest in the near future. This word "regeneration" itself is to be found in only one other place in the New Testament (Tit. 3. 5), where it is followed by the explanatory phrase, "and renewal of the Holy Ghost." But the doctrine of this passage is the same as that of our Lord on the new and spiritual birth without which no man can "enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3. 3–5), and accords with the whole drift of His teaching with reference to His spiritual Church—"the kingdom of heaven." In its immediate application the term "the regeneration," as here used, is a descriptive designation of the kingdom which He was then setting up by His personal ministry, and which was to be fully constituted after His departure by the perpetual presence and power of the Holy Spirit. Its more mysterious and remote application would probably be to that renewal of the world in righteousness which is variously referred to elsewhere. (Acts 3. 21; Rom. 8.19–21; 2 Pet. 3. 13; Rev. 21. 1.) Shall sit in the throne of His glory—the throne of His glorious mediatorial dominion. (Eph. 1. 20–23; Phil. 2. 10, 11; Col. 1. 18; 1 Pet. 3. 22.) Ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones. This is a repetition of the promise just given in other words to Peter alone, and afterwards extended to the Twelve. It is the promise of authority to "bind" and "loose." Here it is given to them as a complete company, for the throne of Judas would be taken by another. Just before His betrayal our Lord renewed the promise in the same form, but with the word "twelve" omitted. (Luke 22. 33.) Judging the twelve tribes of Israel. The spiritual Israel in its entirety. "To have authority under Christ in this spiritual Church, to convey immediately from Him its doctrines and laws, to regulate its discipline and its services, to encourage the humble spirits by promises, to direct the perplexed by counsel, to excite the languid by exhortation, to restrain the vicious by rebukes, to exhibit as the motives to submission and obedience to Christ all the hopes of heaven and all the terrors of future punishment with an authority which they only possessed and continue to possess to this day,—these were to be the rewards of the fishermen and publicans of Galilee, who had left all to follow Christ. And who of mankind have been raised to equal honour and influence? where are the men whose names are so venerable and so often pronounced? where the authority which is so often appealed to on all moral questions? where the writings which lay such hold upon the consciences of men? and where the teachers who have trained up such a host of immortal beings to holiness here and to a blissful immortality?"—R. W.

This promise, peculiar to the apostles, is followed by a promise to all His followers:—

29. And every one—in every age and country, not you My apostles only—that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or wife, or children—either by giving any of them up, when they could not be retained with a clear conscience, or by willingly refraining from acquiring them—shall receive an hundredfold—in value, though not in kind, even in the present world.

30. But many that are first—many of those who were first called—shall be last—shall have the lowest reward; those who came after them being preferred before them; and yet possibly both the first and the last may be saved, though with different degrees of glory.

CHAPTER XX.

Vers. 1-16. THE LABOURERS IN THE VINEYARD—THE SPIRIT OF TRUE AND ACCEPTABLE SERVICE.—1. For. This word connects the parable which follows with the general principle just stated, "Many that are first shall be last, and the last first," which it was spoken to illustrate. The kingdom of heaven is—in the process of its establishment in the world—like unto a man that is an householder. That is, I act in this preparatory stage of My mediatorial work in a manner resembling that of a householder who, having much and important work to be done, went out—himself—early in the morning—at sunrise—to hire labourers into his vineyard; this first set of labourers signifying the apostles, and the vineyard, if it has any distinct meaning, the Jewish people, "the house of Israel." (Isa. 5. 1-7.)

2. "He agreed with the labourers for a penny a day. (Ch. 18. 28.) The Roman penny was about sevenpence-halfpenny English. This was then the usual price of a day's labour"—WESLEY.

But the important thing to be noted here is that an express agreement was entered into with these first engaged labourers, perhaps after they had asked Peter's question, "What shall we have?" The answer would be, the full remuneration usually paid for a day's work.

3, 4. The third hour—about nine o'clock in the morning. Standing idle—that is, unemployed, but ready to be hired. Whatsoever is right I will give you. A general promise of fair and adequate recompense without a formal contract, demanding therefore an act of trust in the householder's honourable dealing. And they went their way—to do the service appointed to them, thinking only of their work, and aiming to do it in such a manner as their employer might be expected to approve.

5. The sixth and ninth hour. Noon and three o'clock in the afternoon, quarters of the day of twelve hours. Many of these details have no distinct spiritual meaning, but are used to give completeness to the picture.

6, 7. The eleventh hour—five o'clock—and found others standing idle. But whether through any fault of their own or not is not intimated. Their own explanation was that no man had hired them. It was strangely late in the day to begin work, but they were willing to do so, and with the general promise of suitable payment, as before, they also went into the vineyard—trusting implicitly in their employer's honour and kindness.

8. When even was come—six o'clock, when the day ended and wages were usually paid day by day. (Lev. 19. 13; Deut. 24. 15.) Give them their hire, beginning from the last. This was important, for if the first hired had been paid first they might have gone away without knowing how the others had been dealt with, and the test of character would have been wanting.

9. Every man a penny—the eleventh hour beginners receiving a full day's payment for their single hour's work.

10. When the first came—who had seen how liberally the others had been rewarded—they supposed that they should have received more than the amount for which they had bargained; but, to their surprise and disappointment, they likewise received every man a penny—the sum agreed upon, but no more.

11. They murmured. Why? Not because they had been wronged for the benefit of others, but simply because that, through the unlooked-for beneficence of the master, others, perhaps in consideration of their not having had the opportunity of being hired earlier in the day, had received more than they had earned at the rate of payment upon which they had themselves contracted. Thus the spirit in which they had laboured was tested, and made manifest. It was evident that they had thought only of self; that though they might have worked honestly under "the burden of the day and the scorching heat" (R.V.), their governing desire and aim had been, not to accomplish their allotted task satisfactorily to their master, or because they took a pleasure in it for the work's sake, but solely to secure the full amount of a covenanted recompense.

13. But he answered one of them—who may be supposed to have been spokesman for the rest (Peter?)—Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny? Thus quietly intimating that if a formal contract had not been demanded and entered into; if he and his companions hired at the first hour had gone into the vineyard, thankful that, without anxious waiting for hire, they were accepted so soon as they offered themselves for service, and with a readiness to do the work to which they were appointed, in a spirit of simple trust in the householder's justice and bounty, they would have been rewarded as liberally as they had seen those of their fellow-labourers rewarded who went to their work with no other promise of recompense than that of being paid "whatsoever was right."

15. Is thine eye evil? (Deut. 15. 9.) "Art thou envious, because I am gracious? There is an evident reference to that malignant aspect which is generally the attendant of a selfish and envious temper"—WESLEY.

16. So the last, etc. A repetition of the saying which the parable was introduced to illustrate and confirm. "The last were first, as equal to the first; first, in order of payment; first, as superior to the first (no other being brought into comparison), in that their reward was more in proportion to their work, and not marred by a murmuring spirit. The first were last in these same respects"—A.

Thus the parable is an enforcement of that lofty principle of self-renunciation for the sake of others, of which Christ Himself was the great and unapproachable Example (Phil. 2. 4–8), and which He so variously enjoined upon His followers throughout His earthly ministry. It was spoken with reference to Peter's boastful appeal, "Behold, we have forsaken all and have followed Thee; what shall we have therefore?" (ch. 19. 27), and was intended to show him and his fellow-apostles how contrary the spirit of these words is to that which befits a professed disciple and imitator of Himself. It is a continuation of the course of teaching which, ever since His promise of pre-eminence to Peter, followed by His first clear prediction of His own approaching sufferings, He had kept most prominently before the minds of His apostles (ch. 16. 24–26). His kingdom, He had told them, could tolerate no struggle for relative greatness, but as they only could enter into it who manifested the humility of a little child, so they, and they only, could be recognised as its subjects who continued to maintain, in their relation to Him and to each other, a child's unconsciousness of self (ch. 18. 1–4); that eternal life was not a thing to be acquired by meritorious acts, as the rich young ruler had dreamed, but was to be received as a free gift by every man in union with Himself (Rom. 6. 23); that the notion of inherent merit in any act of service or of self-denial was wholly alien to everything called by His name. He would acknowledge as His followers those only in whom self was subdued and hidden, who pleased not themselves, and who in His spirit made it their meat to do the will of God. (John 4. 34.)

Vers. 17–28. OUR LORD'S THIRD ANNOUNCEMENT OF HIS SUFFERINGS, AND THE FIRST OF HIS DEATH BY CRUCIFIXION: INCIDENTS OF THE GRACIOUS PROGRESS. (Mark 10. 32–45; Luke 18. 31–34.)—17. Going up to Jerusalem. For the mysterious end. The Parable of the Labourers had been spoken while He was yet in Peræa, on the eastern side of the Jordan, where vineyards are said to have been plentiful. Now He and the Twelve had crossed the Jordan for His final journey to Jerusalem, and were on the highroad from Galilee, which was probably at this time thronged with pilgrims passing onward to keep the approaching Passover. Took the twelve disciples apart in the way. Then, as stated by S. Mark, He pressed forward "before them," walking alone, with something so unusual and strange in His manner as to arrest their attention and fill them with alarm. "They were amazed"—at signs of oppressive and agitating thought which seemed to have suddenly seized Him—amazed also "at His courage and intrepidity, considering the treatment which He had Himself told them He should meet with there. 'And as they followed they were afraid'—both for Him and themselves. Nevertheless, He judged it best to prepare them, by telling them more particularly what was to ensue"—WESLEY.

"There are few pictures in the Gospel more striking than this of Jesus going forth to His death, and walking alone along the path into the deep valley, while behind Him, in awful reverence and mingled anticipations of dread and hope—their eyes fixed on Him, as with bowed head He preceded them in all the majesty of sorrow—the disciples walked and dared not disturb His meditations"—T.

18, 19. Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, etc. "The whole discourse is minutely prophetic, and shows that the scene of His sufferings was constantly, and in all its humiliations and most painful details, before His eyes. What stronger proof can we have that the death of Christ was voluntary? and, if voluntary, it was then vicarious. How many particulars are here predicted! 1. That He should be betrayed; 2. Into the hands, not of the Roman governor, but of the chief priests and scribes, composing the great Council; 3. That they should condemn Him to death, under their law, as a blasphemer; yet, 4. That they should not stone Him, which was the Mosaic punishment, but should deliver Him to the Gentiles, the Romans, to mock, and to scourge, and 'to spit upon' (Mark 10. 34), and to crucify, all which circumstances were most accurately fulfilled; (5) That on the third day He should rise again. S. Luke adds, that 'they understood none of these things; and this saying was hidden from them, neither knew they the things which were spoken.' They knew the meaning of the words, but probably thought that He was speaking in a kind of parable, and that the expressions carried with them a mystical meaning, to which as yet they had not the key"—R. W.

20. The mother of Zebedee's children—the apostles James and John. Her name was Salome. (Ch. 27. 56; comp. Mark 15. 40.) Worshipping Him, and falling on her knees before Him, in reverent acknowledgment of His kingly dignity and authority. Desiring a certain thing of Him. Her intervention is not mentioned by S. Mark; but it appears from his account that her petition was preceded by the timid and indefinite prayer of her sons themselves that our Lord would do for them something which they desired but shrank from asking.

21. Grant that these my two sons, etc. "Considering how He had been just speaking, was ever anything more unreasonable? Perhaps Zebedee himself was dead, or was not a follower of Christ"—WESLEY.

It appears, however, from ch. 4. 21, 22; Mark 1. 19, 20, that when Jesus called his sons to follow Him, he raised no objection to their doing so. Salome was probably the sister of Mary, the mother of Christ (John 19. 25–27; comp. Mark 15. 40, 41), and it has been suggested that the title, "the mother of Zebedee's children," is given to her to intimate that she did not make her request on the ground of kinship. But the more probable explanation is that her deceased husband had been well-known. Her prayer on behalf of her sons is not to be thought of as a mere hard and selfish craving for their pre-eminence, but as also an expression of faith and sympathy and deep affection. It betrays much ignorance and worldly ambition, but it manifests also fervid devotion and the purpose of unflinching fidelity. They would be nearest to their adored Master in all conditions, and would support Him with their presence in the mysterious sorrows and sufferings of which He had just warned them, if only they might share in His triumphs and sit nearest to Him in His glory.

22. Ye know not what ye ask. "Ye know not what is implied in being advanced in My kingdom, and necessarily pre-required thereto. All who share in My kingdom must first share in My sufferings. Are you able and willing to do this? Both these expressions, the cup, the baptism, are to be understood of His sufferings and death. The like expressions are common among the Jews"—WESLEY.

For examples of the use of the cup, with this meaning, see Ps. 11. 6; Isa. 51. 17; and by our Lord Himself, ch. 26. 39; John 18. 11. For a similar use of the word "baptism," see Luke 12. 50. The "cup" here seems to signify more the inner and spiritual bitterness, resembling the agony of the Lord Himself,—the "baptism" more the outer accession of persecution and trial.

23. Ye shall drink indeed of My cup. "The one of these brethren was the first of the apostles to drink the cup of suffering, and be baptized with the baptism of blood (Acts 12. 1, 2); the other had the longest experience among them of a life of trouble and persecution"—A. But to sit, etc. The meaning is that the rewards and honours of the future life will not be bestowed arbitrarily upon any of His followers, but in all cases in conformity with the purposes of perfect equity. (Rev. 3. 21.) "Christ applies to the glories of heaven what His disciples were so stupid as to understand of the glories of earth. But He does not deny that this is His to give. It is His to give in the strictest propriety, both as God and as the Son of Man. He only asserts that He gives it to none but those for whom it is originally prepared, namely, those who endure to the end in the 'faith that worketh by love'"—WESLEY.

24. Were moved with indignation (S. Mark, "Were much displeased with James and John")—showing that they were all longing for the same pre-eminence which the two had dared to bespeak.

25–27. Jesus called them unto Him—summoned them all before Him, not only to suppress the unholy strife which had so strangely broken out among them at that solemn hour, but to show them again that His kingdom differed essentially in its principles and spirit and aims from all the kingdoms of this world; that, in order to be truly great, they must strive in a forgetfulness of self to serve one another in love. (Luke 22. 24–27.)

28. To give His life a ransom for many. (1 Tim. 2. 6; Titus 2. 14.) A plain declaration of the vicarious character of His sufferings and death. "Breaking through the reserve that had held Him, and revealing to them the inmost thoughts which had occupied Him when He had been alone and apart, going before them on the way, He spoke for the first time fully what was the deepest meaning of His life, mission, and death—'to give His life a ransom for many'; to pay with His life-blood the price of their redemption, to lay down His life for them in their room and stead, and for their salvation"—ED. "That which was given by Christ was His life, upon that great principle which runs through all the dispensations of revealed religion—that without the shedding of blood there is no remission; that which man had forfeited by his sin was life—'for the wages of sin is death'; and that which alone could free him from this penalty was the substitution of a nobler life in place of his own, to which all the sacrifices of animal life under the patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations looked forward as instituted types. Christ is said to give His life, which not only intimates that His sufferings and death were voluntarily undergone, but that He had a power over the disposal of His life which no merely human being is invested with. 'I have power to lay down My life, and I have power to take it again,' are words which no man but our Lord ever used; and they prove that His humanity was impersonated in a higher nature, possessing a sovereign authority, and having life and death at command"—R. W. "For many." "No stress is to be laid on this word 'many' here; it is placed in opposition to the one life which is given—the one for many—and not with any distinction from all"—A. (Rom. 5. 19; Heb. 2. 9.)

Vers. 29–34. BLINDNESS CURED NEAR JERICHO. (Mark 10. 46–52; Luke 18. 35–43.)

—29. From Jericho. So also S. Mark. S. Luke says, "As He was come nigh unto Jericho." "Many explanations of this unimportant variation have been suggested; but it is enough to note the fact stated by all the Evangelists that the miracle took place near Jericho, when our Lord was going up to Jerusalem to pay that price of man's redemption of which He had just spoken"—"to give His life a ransom for many." (Rom. 3. 24; 1 Pet. 1. 19.) Jericho, the city of palm-trees (Deut. 34. 3), was about sixteen miles from Jerusalem. It had passed through many vicissitudes since taken by Joshua, but when visited by our Lord it was a large and beautiful city. A great multitude followed Him. These were chiefly pilgrims from Galilee, who were going up to keep the Passover. Many of them must have known Him.

30. Two blind men sitting by the wayside. S. Mark and S. Luke mention only one, and add that he was "begging." S. Mark also speaks of him by name—"Blind Bartimæus, the son of Timæus." "He was by far the more eminent of the two, and, as it seems, spoke for both"—WESLEY.

S. Mark's account of him "hints that he was a personage well known to Christians" in that Evangelist's time "as a monument of the Lord's miracle, as was probably also Simon the leper; and the designation, 'son of Timæus,' would distinguish him, not only from the father but also from other sons"—L. These blind men were sitting by the side of the highway with many other beggars of all kinds, as was usual with mendicants at the approach of the annual festivals, to appeal for aid to the passing groups of pilgrims. Hearing the stir of the multitude following Christ, they asked what it meant, and being told that "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," Bartimæus, speaking for his more retiring companion, as well as for himself, cried out, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, Thou Son of David. The same title was used by the two blind men in Capernaum (ch. 9. 27). Here its use, immediately after hearing the designation "Jesus of Nazareth," may well remind us of the meaning of this name, the Shoot, as out of the decayed root of a stately tree, as corresponding with His lowly condition as Heir to the throne of David. (See on ch. 2. 23.) It is clear at least that the appeal to Him as the Son of David was meant to be an open recognition of His claims as the true Messiah.

31. The multitude rebuked them. "And so they will all who begin to cry after the Son of David; but let those who feel their need of Him cry the more; otherwise they will come short of a cure"—WESLEY.

Happily this interference of the multitude, whether through want of sympathy with them, or on behalf of our Lord, supposing the importunate cry of the beggars to be irksome to Him, only moved them to cry the more earnestly.

32. And Jesus stood still. For what appeal to His compassion did He ever disregard? And called them. As shown by the vivid account of S. Mark, the people were now suddenly seized with sympathy with them; and they call the blind man, saying unto him, "Be of good comfort; rise, He calleth thee." And, casting aside his outer garment, he sprang to his feet, "and came to Jesus." "An example for every soul which Jesus has called, that it should in like manner lay aside every weight and whatever would hinder it from coming speedily to Him"—T. What will ye that I shall do unto you? He well knew what mercy they besought, but He would call forth the definite prayer of faith.

33. Lord. In S. Mark (R.V.) "Rabboni," my Master—the highest title of faith, reverence, and humility. (John 20. 16.) That our eyes may be opened. We do not solicit alms of Thee, but restored sight.

34. Touched their eyes. And, as the other Evangelists record, accompanied the healing touch with the words, "Thy faith hath saved thee. And they followed Him." S. Luke adds, "glorifying God." The narrative is throughout, as has been often pointed out, symbolical of the facts of man's spiritual experience. The blindness; the hope enkindled in the minds of some of the restoration of sight; the knowledge that the Divine Restorer is near; the awakened eagerness to arrest His attention; discouragement from the unsympathising multitude; the greater resoluteness of men really in earnest; the Voice of the compassionate Healer; the consequently more confident appeal, "Lord, that I may receive my sight"; the healing touch in answer to the faith of which He is the direct object; the exclamations of devout thanksgiving, and the immediate act of following the Great Deliverer;—all these points are full of instruction.

CHAPTER XXI.

Vers. 1-10. THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRY INTO JERUSALEM: PALM SUNDAY. (Mark 11. 1-11; Luke 19. 29-40; John 12. 12, 19.)—1. They drew nigh unto Jerusalem. This was six days before the Passover (John 12. 1); Friday, the 8th of the month Nisan. Came to Bethphage, meaning the House of Figs. S. Mark and S. Luke say, "Bethphage" and "Bethany," the House of Dates. "The limits of Bethany reached to the Mount of Olives, and joined to those of Bethphage. Bethphage was part of the suburbs of Jerusalem, and reached from the Mount of Olives to the walls of the city. Our Lord was now come to the place where the boundaries of Bethany and Bethphage met"—WESLEY.

The village of Bethany was on the south-eastern slope of the Mount of Olives, near the highroad from Jericho, and about two miles from Jerusalem. Here our Lord rested on the Sabbath, probably in the house of His friends Lazarus and his sisters, Martha and Mary, and the next day, Sunday, Nisan 10,—the day when the paschal lamb was selected (Ex. 12. 3), to be "kept until the fourteenth," He made His royal visit into the city—sent two disciples—probably Peter and John.

2. Ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her. S. Mark and S. Luke mention the colt only, and add, "whereon never man sat." Not having been used by man being a condition required in the choice of animals to be consecrated to God. (Num. 19. 2; Deut. 21. 38; 1 Sam. 6. 7.) Only the colt was wanted, but the mother would naturally accompany it.

3. The Lord (the Master—the Lord Jesus) hath need of them. This intimation to the owner seems to imply that he was a disciple of Christ, and would be prepared to recognise His rights. But this inference is not necessary. For as "the tidings of the proximity of Jesus and of His approaching arrival must have spread in the city . . . we can understand how eager questioners would gather about the owners of the colt, there at the cross-roads at Bethphage (S. Mark), just outside Jerusalem; and how, so soon as from the bearing and the peculiar words of the disciples, they understood their purpose, the owners of the ass and colt would grant its use for the solemn entry into the city of the Teacher of Nazareth, whom the multitude was so eagerly expecting; and, lastly, how, as from the gates of Jerusalem tidings spread of what had passed in Bethphage, the multitude would stream forth to meet Jesus"—ED.

4. That it might be fulfilled. (See ch. 1. 22.) Referring to "the Divine counsels, but not to the intention of the doers of the act; for this application of prophecy is in John 12. 16 distinctly said not to have occurred to the disciples at the time, but after Jesus was glorified"—A.

5. The daughter of Sion—"that is, the inhabitants of Jerusalem. The first words of the passage are cited from Isa. 62. 11; the rest from Zech. 9. 9. The ancient Jewish doctors were wont to apply these prophecies to the Messiah. On an ass. The Prince of Peace did not take a horse, a warlike animal; but He will ride on that by and by (Rev. 19. 11). In the patriarchal ages illustrious persons thought it no disgrace to make use of this animal; but it by no means appears that this opinion prevailed, or this custom continued, till the reign of Tiberius. Was it a mean attitude wherein our Lord then appeared? mean even to contempt? I grant it; I glory in it; it is for the comfort of my soul, for the honour of His humility, and for the utter confusion of all worldly pomp and grandeur"—WESLEY.

7. Put on them their clothes—their loose upper garments or cloaks. (2 Kings 9. 13.) Set Him thereon—that is, on the garments.

8. Spread their garments in the way. "Oriental mark of honour at the reception of kings, on their entrance into cities"—L. Cut down branches from the trees—olive, fig, and palm trees—and strawed them—as a matting—in the way. Also as an honour due to royalty, and in token of their loyalty and gladness. At the same time "much people that were come to the feast"—chiefly the pilgrims from Galilee and Peræa who had come up with Him as far as Bethany, and leaving Him there had gone forward to the houses of their friends in Jerusalem, or to provide accommodation for themselves in the valley outside the city walls—"when they heard that Jesus was coming," cut down branches of palm trees, to carry in their hands and wave in the air, as manifestations of their joy, and to salute and welcome the royal Visitor—"and went forth to meet Him" (John 12. 12, 13).

9. The multitudes. When the two companies had met, walked some before and some behind the lowly King, and cried, saying, Hosanna—"Save now" (Ps. 118. 25). "Lord, save us, was a solemn word in frequent use among the Jews. The meaning is, We sing hosanna to the Son of David. Blessed is He, the Messiah of the Lord. Save, Thou that art in the highest heavens. Our Lord restrained all public tokens of honour from the people till now, lest the envy of His enemies should interrupt His preaching before the time. But this reason now ceasing, He suffered their acclamations, that they might be a public testimony against their wickedness, who in four or five days after cried out, 'Crucify Him, crucify Him.' The expressions recorded by the other Evangelists are somewhat different from these; but all of them were undoubtedly used by some or others of the multitude"—WESLEY.

"That this riding and entry were intentional on the part of our Lord is clear; and also that He did not thereby mean to give any countenance to the temporal idea of His Messiahship, but solemnly to fulfil the Scriptures respecting Him, and to prepare the way for His sufferings by a public avowal of His mission. The typical meaning also is not to be overlooked. In all probability the evening visit to the Temple was at the very time when the paschal lamb was to be taken up—i.e. set apart for the sacrifice"—A.

10. All the city was moved. The multitudes who had brought Him triumphantly into it were composed chiefly of the pilgrims from a distance, many of whom had been His hearers, some of them subjects of His miraculous acts of healing. To the regular inhabitants of the city the tumultuous enthusiasm they witnessed was a surprise; and they asked, some from curiosity and wonder and some in contempt, Who is this?

11. Jesus the Prophet. They had just shouted their convictions that "He was the Messiah; but now they say, in reply to the cold and sceptical demand of the proud inhabitants of the city, This is Jesus the Prophet of Nazareth. What a stumbling-block was this! If He was of Nazareth, He could not be the Messiah. But they who earnestly desired to know the truth would not stumble thereat; for upon inquiry (which such would not fail to make) they would find He was not of Nazareth but Bethlehem"—WESLEY.

From S. Mark we learn that our Lord did not tarry in Jerusalem after having been conducted into it, as all the Evangelists so particularly describe, but that, after the multitude had dispersed, He quietly entered the Temple courts, and "when He had looked round about upon all things"—gazing with holy indignation and distress upon the same scenes of selfish traffic which presented themselves at the opening of His ministry (John 2. 12–17)—"He went out unto Bethany with the Twelve."

Vers. 12-22. CLEANSING OF THE TEMPLE AND CURSE OF THE FRUITLESS FIG TREE. (Mark 11. 12–26; Luke 19. 45, 46.)—12. And Jesus—on His return to the city, on the second day of the week of His Passion (Monday, Nisan 11)—went into the Temple of God—which on the preceding day He visited, but only to cast a glance at scenes of desecration and abuse. That sold and bought in the Temple "doves and oxen for sacrifice. He had cast them out three years before (John 2. 14), bidding them 'not make' that 'house an house for merchandise'; upon the repetition of the offence, He uses sharper words. 'In the Temple'—that is, in the outer court of it, where the Gentiles used to worship. The moneychangers—the exchangers of foreign money into current coin, which those who came from distant parts might want to offer for the service of the Temple"—WESLEY.

13. It is written (Isa. 56. 7; see also 1 Kings 8. 29; Neh. 11. 17), My house shall be called the house of prayer. "In referring to this prophecy, our Lord not only reproves the profanity and wicked avarice which had made the house of prayer a bazaar or market-house, but the contempt poured upon the pious Gentiles, or heathen proselytes, who had a right to worship there, and whose court they had invaded so as not only to occupy it with stalls for cattle, seats for them that sold doves, and the tables of moneychangers, but as to fill it with distracting noise and confusion, wholly subversive of its original and gracious intention. Instead of a place for offering up prayer by the pious 'stranger,' whom God had promised to make 'joyful in His house of prayer,' they had made it a den of thieves; an expression used probably in allusion to the rocky caves or dens in the mountainous parts of Judea, which were often the receptacles of robbers"—R. W. (Comp. Jer. 7. 11). "'Is this house which is called by My name become a den of robbers in your eyes?' The context of these words is strikingly suggestive—'If ye thoroughly amend your ways and your doings, and shed not innocent blood in this place . . . then will I cause you to dwell in this place, in the land which I gave to your fathers for ever and ever'"—C. B. "Christ by applying these words here hints in the deepest sense, and that more plainly than the first time (Destroy this temple!) at the now almost matured counsel of murder, against His own most sacred Person, which He well knew of; which, therefore, S. Mark (ch. 14. 18) and S. Luke (ch. 22. 47) make immediately to follow"—S.

14. He healed them. He had accepted the homage of the multitudes who had openly welcomed Him to the capital as Messiah the Prince; He had, in the assertion of His royal rights and authority, expelled the traffickers from His "Father's house," who had made it as a cave of wrangling robbers; and now He repeated those acts of miraculous healing by which His Divine character and mission were to be demonstrated. "And the boys that gathered about their fathers, and looked in turn from their faces of rapt wonderment to the God-like face of the Christ, and then on those healed sufferers, took up the echoes of the welcome on His entrance into Jerusalem"—ED.

15. The wonderful things that He did. Not only the miracles of healing by a word or a touch, but the flight of the hardened traders at His authoritative command. And the children crying in the Temple—ignorant probably of the true meaning of the words they shouted or sang, but spontaneously echoing strains they had heard chanted on the Mount of Olives the previous day. They were sore displeased (R.V. "moved with indignation"), so much so that S. Mark says they sought "how they might destroy Him."

16. Hearest Thou what these say?—how those senseless boys profanely misappropriate sacred words and titles. Yea, have ye never read? (Ps. 8. 2; comp. Heb. 2. 6–9; Eph. 1. 22.) They are unconsciously fulfilling the "sure words of prophecy," and are declaring truths in their artless utterances of wonder and adoration which ye proud and boastful men fail to discern. (Ch. 11. 25.)

17. Went out of the city into Bethany, but whether to the house of Lazarus and his sisters or not can only be a matter of conjecture. If the village of Bethany is meant, it is almost certain that He passed the night with them. But the name may be used for the district, and the meaning may be as given in S. Luke—"He went out and abode in the mount that is called the Mount of Olives"—sleeping "in the open air with His disciples, as is common with Orientals." This statement S. Luke applies directly to the Tuesday and Wednesday nights of this solemn week, but may include Monday night also.

18. Now in the morning—that is, of the same day (Monday). The Evangelist here looks back to the incident which, as related by S. Mark, took place in the early morning, in order to bring it, and the lessons which were given upon it the following day, together, so as to present the whole in one view. S. Mark separates the two, recording each, in his characteristic style, as it occurred. "As He returned into the city—from the expulsion of the traders from the Temple, as just stated—He hungered, for He had probably spent the greater part if not the whole of the night in prayer."

19. He saw a fig tree in the way. A single fig tree standing on an eminence; for S. Mark says that He saw it "afar off"; also that it had "leaves." He came to it, and found nothing thereon. Nor did He expect to find fruit; for, as S. Mark adds, "the time of figs was not yet." What He found was a fit emblem of a deceitful outward show of spiritual reality—a true and striking image of the spiritual condition of the Jewish people; and He caused it to become a silent prophet of their pending doom. He came to it as a hungry wayfarer might have been beguiled by the attractive foliage of a solitary wayside fruit-bearing tree, "if haply He might find anything thereon," but only to be bitterly disappointed. So on entering the city, and visiting the Temple the previous day, He had found abundant outward signs of fidelity to the Law and of a "zeal toward God." But of the hundreds of thousands gathered into the holy city from all quarters, and of the more favoured regular inhabitants, how few were there who bore the fruits of righteousness. How truly might the whole nation be symbolised by that leafy, fruitless tree, exhibiting at that festive season an imposing show of life and productiveness to those who only saw it afar off, but on closer inspection found to be barren and cumbering the ground! "Already, at Luke 13. 6–9, had Christ uttered the parable prepared in the Prophets (Hos. 9. 10; Joel 1. 7), and His present action recalls this to mind. There were leaves enough—words and hypocritical works, as if it were really the Israel which it was called to be, the people of God wonderfully ripened earlier than all other nations—but no fruit!"—S. He condemned it to destruction, as was necessary in itself, and for the completeness of its symbolical meaning. And presently—immediately—the fig tree withered away. No other instance of our Lord speaking and putting forth His miraculous power for the purpose of destruction is to be found in the whole Gospel history, and it is to be noted that in this case the thing destroyed was already worthless, and was no man's private property. The act was a prophetic parable, to be soon, alas! fulfilled, by the terrible facts of history. But more than this, our Lord intended "to teach His disciples an awful lesson by an emblem which not only pointed out the doom of a degenerate nation, of whose hypocritical and delusive pretensions the barren fig tree was a sign, but also that of hypocrites and apostates from His religion; for to this event S. Jude appears strikingly to allude when he marks the character and fate of such persons to be 'trees whose fruit withered, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots'"—R. W.

20. And when the disciples saw it—"as they went by the next day"—WESLEY. (See Mark 11. 20.)

They marvelled — so essentially different was the miracle from anything they had previously witnessed; and its full significance they could not as yet understand.

21, 22. If ye have faith, etc. "He ever leads His own from mere wonderment at the miraculous up to that which is higher. His answer now combined all that they needed to learn. It pointed to the typical lesson of what had taken place—the need of realising, simple faith"—ED. And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive. "This assurance has occurred before, in ch. 17. 20. That truest and highest faith, which implies a mind and will perfectly in unison with that of God, can have been in Him only who spoke these words. And by it, and its elevating power over the functions and laws of inferior natures, were His most notable miracles wrought. It is observable that such a state of mind entirely precludes the idea of an arbitrary exercise of power—none such can therefore be intended in our Lord's assertion. Though we cannot reach this faith in its fulness, yet every approach to it (ver. 21) shall be imbued with some of its wonderful power in obtaining requests from God"—A. Our Lord went on to show His disciples, as His continued instructions are recorded by S. Mark, that the mountain-moving faith of which He was speaking, can be exercised in such prayer only as is poured forth from a loving and forgiving heart —"when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any," etc. "He who so prays believes in God (Mark 11. 22), and loves man; such prayer is not selfish, self-seeking, self-conscious; least of all is it compatible with mindfulness of wrongs, or an unforgiving spirit"—ED. "When a man prays—whatever be his object—he must put away all malice and hatred from his heart, and specially when he would ask for an intervention of God. The presence of a personal feeling of enmity would convert the prayer for miraculous powers into a deadly sin"—S. C. Upon the whole of this weighty passage, it has been tersely said, "Faith, if it be right, will excite prayer; and prayer is not right if it do not spring from faith. This is the condition of our receiving; we must ask in prayer, believing; the requests of prayer shall not be denied; the expectations of faith shall not be frustrated. We have many promises to this purpose from the mouth of our Lord Jesus, and all to encourage faith (the principal grace), and prayer (the principal duty of a Christian). It is but, Ask and have; believe and receive; and what would we more?"

OUR LORD'S LAST DAY IN THE TEMPLE.

Vers. 23–32. HIS AUTHORITY QUESTIONED. (Mark 11. 27–33; Luke 20. 1–8.)—23. And when He was come into the Temple, the chief priests—"who thought He violated their right —and the elders of the people came—probably members of the Sanhedrim, to whom that title most properly belonged; which is the more probable as they were persons under whose cognisance the late action of Christ, in purging the Temple, would naturally fall. These, with the chief priests, seem purposely to have appeared in a considerable company, to give the more weight to what they said, and, if need were, to bear a united testimony against Him. As He was teaching—which also they supposed He had no authority to do, being neither priest, nor Levite, nor scribe. Some of the priests (though not as priests), and all the scribes, were authorised teachers. By what authority doest Thou these things? —publicly teach the people, and drive out those who had our commission to traffic in the outer court?"—WESLEY.

This was evidently an official deputation from the Sanhedrim, as hastily called together to concert measures against Christ. S. Mark and S. Luke mention that it included "scribes"; and they both intimate that they "came upon" our Lord suddenly, as if to take Him by surprise, when He was "walking in" one of the Temple porches (Mark), "teaching the people and preaching the gospel" (Luke).

24, 25. "I will ask you one thing—who have asked Me many. The baptism—that is, the whole ministry—of John, was it from heaven, or from men? By what authority did he act and teach? Did man or God give him that authority? Was it not God? But, if so, the consequence was clear. For John testified that Jesus was the Christ"—WESLEY.

They reasoned with themselves. They all saw the dilemma in which He had placed them; each laboured to discover some way out of it; then they seem to have gone aside from Him for consultation. If we shall say, From heaven, He will say unto us, Why did ye not then believe him?—when he bore witness of Me and My Divine mission. (John 1. 19–34.) If we shall say, Of men; we fear the people. S. Mark gives an abrupt turn to the account at this point, which makes it the more striking—"If of men, they feared the people, for all men counted John that he was a prophet indeed." "The hypocrites think only of what they might say, and what He would say, not of what is right and true in conscience before God"—S.

27. We cannot tell. "Thus has He caught them in their own net"—S. Neither tell I you. "Not again, in express terms. He had often told them before, and they would not believe Him"—WESLEY.

In effect, He told them now as they must have all felt; so that their plea of ignorance was grossly dishonest. Some of them, moreover, had probably been included in the deputation sent to inquire into John's authority. (John 1. 19.)

28. But what think ye? Of yourselves, in your relation to John and his ministry. Our Lord now bases an appeal to their consciences on what He knew to be their secret conviction, that John's mission was truly divine. "He commences that series of parables, in which, as in a glass held up before them, they might see themselves, the impurity of their hearts, their neglect of the charge laid upon them, their contempt of the privileges afforded them, the aggravated guilt of that outrage against Himself which they were meditating in their hearts"—T. A certain man had two sons —representing the two classes afterwards mentioned (ver. 32). Son—an affectionate call to duty—go work to-day. The time is limited; let there be no delay. Repent; turn to God, as exhorted by Him who announces with authority that the "kingdom of heaven is at hand"; and be ready to believe in Him whom he proclaims to be the greater One, who is coming after him. (Acts 19. 4.)

29. I will not. A rude refusal, representing the undutiful, reckless spirit of men resolved "to live as they list," many of John's hearers having been at one time of this character. Afterwards he repented—changed his mind on reflection—and went, in compliance with his father's request; as awakened men come to the baptism of John, "confessing their sins."

30. I go, sir—a prompt and courteous promise. And went not. "Just so did the scribes and Pharisees: they professed the greatest readiness and zeal in the service of God; but it was bare profession, contradicted by all their actions"—WESLEY.

31. The first. They could not avoid the answer, but they were little prepared for the application. Go into the kingdom of God before you. A proud, self-righteous spirit is the most formidable of all obstacles to the exercise of the faith of the gospel. (Rom. 10. 3.) "Before you" does not mean that they to whom our Lord was speaking, or that such as they, would ever enter His kingdom, though later than the others, but that even their condition was not hopeless. They too might go into it, but only by taking that narrow path which those penitent sinners were showing them.

32. For John came unto you in the way of righteousness—"walking in it, as well as teaching in it. The publicans and harlots—the most notorious sinners were reformed, though at first they said, 'I will not.' And ye, seeing—the amazing change which was wrought in them, though at first ye said, 'I go sir,' repented not afterward—were no more convinced than before. Oh, how is this Scripture fulfilled at this day!"—WESLEY.

Vers. 33–46. THE VINEYARD AND THE EVIL HUSBANDMEN. (Mark 12. 1–12; Luke 20. 9–19.)—33. Hear another parable. "I have not done with you yet; I have still another word of warning and rebuke"—T. The Pharisees who had challenged our Lord's authority, and to whom the former parable had been addressed, were retiring from Him in wrath, but, arrested by this call to continued attention, they stood where they were, at a short distance from Him, the people taking their place in the foreground. (Luke 20. 9.) Planted a vineyard. Our Lord evidently intended to bring before the minds of His hearers the picture of the vineyard so vividly described in Isa. 5. 1–7; for the imagery is precisely the same. But in Isaiah "the vineyard of the Lord of Hosts is the house of Israel"—"the theocracy"; whereas in this parable the vineyard is the Jewish Economy in the abstract—the peculiar spiritual privileges by which the chosen people were distinguished in their covenant relation to God. This vineyard God planted under Moses and Joshua. And hedged it round about—by the Law and its institutions. (Num. 23. 9; Eph. 2. 14.) And digged a winepress in it—or, as in S. Mark, "a place for the winefat," a receptacle into which the juice of the grapes flowed, probably the Temple, the central scene of spiritual joy and adoration. And built a tower, for the watchmen—the "watch-tower" of the prophets (Hab. 2. 1; Isa. 21. 5–8), representing the prophetic office and its functions. And let it out to husbandmen. Clearly the authorised rulers and teachers of the Jewish people, the vine being the image of the people themselves. And went into a far country; S. Luke adds, "for a long time"—the whole period of their history as a nation, nearly two thousand years. God established them in Canaan, separating them from all other peoples; made complete provision of external arrangements to ensure spiritual productiveness—all such means as might be represented by a well-appointed vineyard, and imposed upon them the responsibility of making such a use of their privileges, under the guidance of their teachers, who are here specially intended, as should cause them to bring forth the peaceable fruits of righteousness.

34. He sent His servants—"His extraordinary messengers, the prophets (Jer. 44. 4)—to the husbandmen—the ordinary preachers or ministers among the Jews"—WESLEY.

That they might receive the fruits—His fruits, as owner of the vineyard. "And what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God?" (Micah 6. 8.)

35. The husbandmen took his servants—as they came successively (S. Mark and S. Luke, whose statements are more full and detailed). The maltreatment of God's true prophets by the Jewish people and their leaders and representatives, when sent to them with messages from Himself, is frequently referred to in the Scriptures. (1 Kings 18. 4; 19. 10; 22. 24–27; Neh. 9. 26; Acts 7. 52; Heb. 11. 36–38.)

37. But last of all he sent unto them his son—in Mark, "Having yet therefore one son, his well-beloved son")—saying, They will reverence my son. (Comp. Isa. 63. 8.) So it was reasonable to expect, but the result was not so. "The description of this last of the ambassadors as the householder's son, as his only one, his well-beloved, marks as strongly as possible the difference of rank between Christ and the prophets, the worth and dignity of His Person, who only was a Son in the highest sense of the word (Heb. 3. 5, 6); and undoubtedly they who were our Lord's hearers quite understood what He meant, and the honour which in these words He claimed as His own, though they were unable to turn His words against Himself, and to accuse Him on the strength of them of making Himself, as indeed He did, the Son of God"—T.

38. This is the heir; come, let us kill him. "The very words (in the Greek version) of Gen. 37. 20, where Joseph's brother expresses a similar resolution; and no doubt used by the Lord in reference to that history, is deeply typical of His rejection and exaltation. This resolution had actually been taken (John 11. 53)"—A. Let us seize on his inheritance. "Practically the vineyard was already theirs; by killing the heir, the only claimant to it would be put out of the way, and so the vineyard would become in every respect their own. For the husbandmen proceeded on the idea that as the owner was 'in a far country for a long time' he would not personally interfere—an impression strengthened by the circumstance that he had not avenged the former ill-usage of his servants, but only sent others in the hope of influencing them by gentleness"—ED.

41. They say unto Him, etc. The other Evangelists give this as our Lord's own answer to His question in the preceding sentence. Probably S. Matthew means that they signified their concurrence in the conclusion to which He was leading them, having failed to perceive the drift of the parable, or pretending to do so. The people, however, to whom our Lord had directly addressed the parable, understood its meaning, and some of them exclaimed, "God forbid" (Luke). "Thus were the scribes and Pharisees made to pass sentence upon themselves. They were the descendants of a race who had persecuted God's servants, the prophets, beating one and stoning another; and now they themselves were conspiring against the life of the Son, the Heir of the vineyard. Their Church privileges were therefore to be abolished, their nation destroyed, and the vineyard let out to others, who should render the fruits in their season. This was a plain allusion to the calling of the Gentiles"—R. W.

42. Jesus saith unto them (S. Luke, "beheld them, and said")—fixed His eyes on them with peculiar solemnity, as He was about to make a startling application to Himself of words which they well understood to refer to the Messiah. He had answered fully their demand on what authority He taught and acted; and here is the one all-inclusive reply, as contained in that very psalm from which first the multitude who celebrated His royal entry into the city, when the boys in the Temple itself had taken the Hosanna of welcome, which those scornful Pharisees had heard chanted in His honour as "the Son of David." Did ye never read in the Scriptures. (Ps. 118. 22.) One of His continual appeals to prophetic testimony. The stone which the builders rejected—as of no value—the same is become the head of the corner. Their contemptuous rejection of Him would not defeat the purposes of God. "'The builders'—the scribes and priests whose office it was to build up the Church. 'Is become the head of the corner'—or the chief corner-stone; He is become the foundation of the Church, on which the whole building rests; and its principal corner-stone for uniting the Gentiles to it, as the chief corner-stone of an house supports and links its two sides together"—WESLEY. (Isa. 28. 16; Acts 4. 11; Eph. 2. 20; 1 Pet. 2. 6.)

43. Therefore—returning to the parable from which He had departed for this decisive appeal, and now explaining its terrible meaning in plain words—say I unto you—who reject and will shortly kill the "Heir, the Beloved Son"—the kingdom of God—which has existed among you in its preparatory stage and form (Ps. 22. 27, 28), but the privileges of which you have slighted and abused—shall be taken from you—as a people—and given to another nation. Not to any particular nation, and not to the Gentiles generally as Gentiles, but to a nation constituted of spiritual men in union with Christ as their Life and Lord—"a holy nation, a peculiar people" (1 Pet. 2. 9). (See Ex. 19. 5, 6; Luke 13. 29; Acts 13. 46, 47; Rom. 11. 13–17; 1 Cor. 10. 8; Gal. 4. 29.)

44. And whosoever shall fall on this stone—which the builders have rejected, and which through their unbelief has become to them "a stone of stumbling"—shall be broken—he who "stumbles at Christ, shall even then receive much hurt. He is said to fall on this stone who hears the gospel and does not believe"—WESLEY.

But on whomsoever it shall fall—from the head of the corner to which it shall be divinely raised, shall be utterly destroyed. "They on whom the stone falls are those who set themselves in distinct and self-conscious opposition against the Lord; who, knowing who He is, do yet to the end oppose themselves to Him and to His kingdom"—T. It will grind him to powder (R.V. "scatter him as the dust"). (Dan. 2. 35; 2. Thess. 1. 7–9.)

45, 46. They perceived that He spake of them. All the Evangelists record that the chief priests and Pharisees understood fully our Lord's meaning in its general reference to themselves; that they were exasperated by it, and would have laid hands on Him on the spot; but that they feared the people, who at that time took Him, if not for the Messiah, yet for a prophet. S. Mark adds that His adversaries "went away and left Him."

CHAPTER XXII.

Vers. 1–14. THE MARRIAGE OF THE KING'S SON: THE RIGHTEOUSNESS OF FAITH.—1. And Jesus answered—the signs of wrathful disappointment just shown by the departed deputation from the Sanhedrim, after having signally failed to find ground of accusation against Him.

2. The kingdom of heaven. The setting up of which was the special end of our Lord's ministry, and which He had just warned His hearers would be taken from them, as it had existed in its preparatory stage, and be given to a nation which would rightly use its privileges. (Ch. 21. 43.) Is like unto a certain king—God Himself, the "householder" of the former parable. Which made a marriage (R.V. "marriage feast") for his son. "So did God when He brought His First-Begotten into the world"—WESLEY.

The marriage feast consisted of more than one meal, but the principal meal was the supper, and the reference here is to "'the great marriage supper (Rev. 19. 9) of the Son of God,' i.e. His full and complete union to His Bride, the Church, in glory, which would be to the guests the ultimate result of accepting the invitation"—A. (Eph. 5. 25–27.)

3. And sent forth his servants. Here, not the prophets, as before (ch. 21. 34), but the first gospel messengers, meaning probably John the Baptist, the Apostles, and the Seventy. To call them that were bidden—the Jews, the chosen people already invited under the Law, the custom being to send a general preliminary invitation to expected guests, and afterwards summon them with the announcement that all was ready. (Esther 5. 8; 6. 14.) And they would not come. A sad example of this had been just before the eyes of our Lord's hearers in the angry withdrawment from Him of the chief priests and Pharisees.

4. Again, he sent forth other servants—with a more pressing call. The allusion here must be to the ministry of the apostles and evangelists, such as Stephen and Philip, after our Lord's ascension and the coming of the Holy Spirit. Behold, I have prepared my dinner. Not yet the supper, but the early meal, an image of the spiritual blessings to be realised in Christ even in the present life. My oxen and my fatlings—"fatted beasts and fowls"—WESLEY—are killed, and all things are ready—for the great evening banquet also. Come unto the marriage. Thus the servants are to repeat and explain their message, and to urge the acceptance of an invitation to take part in the feast provided by their king. So gracious and long-suffering to usward is He whom this king represents!

5. But they made light of it. Not being even at the pains to offer an apology or excuse; but in disregard of an invitation which they might have been expected to accept with thankfulness and joy. Went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandise. "One must mind what he has; another gain what he wants. How many perish by misusing lawful things!"—WESLEY.

6. And the remnant (R.V. "the rest")—the property-holders and traders having gone away, and the servants continuing to plead with those who lingered behind them—took his servants, and entreated them spitefully, and slew them—as literally came to pass in the case of James the brother of John, Stephen, and many more. (Acts 26. 10.)

7. Sent forth his armies. "The Roman armies, employed of God for that purpose"—WESLEY.

See, for a similar expression, Isa. 10. 5; Jer. 25. 9; Joel 2. 25. Burned up their city—Jerusalem, their city, no longer His.

8. Were not worthy. As their spirit and conduct had so sadly proved. (Acts 13. 46.)

9. Go ye therefore into the highways. "The word properly signifies the byways or turnings of the road"—WESLEY.

"Or it may be the points where different roads meet and branch off, and where people might always be found in large numbers. The persons here invited by the king were evidently those who are ordinarily overlooked and despised, and so their invitation represented the universal call of the gospel to men of all classes and nations, poor as well as rich—publicans, sinners, strangers, and Gentiles; a striking emblem of which was the indiscriminate and promiscuous crowds of people, from every part, who would always be hastening to some populous trading city of Palestine, where might be found not only Jews from distant nations, but Gentiles also, Syrians, Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, Chaldeans, Edomites, and many others. Yet all were bidden to the feast"—R. W.

10. Both bad and good—open sinners and men outwardly moral and righteous. All alike were to be invited; as many as the messengers found. "The doors of Christ's Church are to be thrown open to all who profess to accept the invitation; but it follows not from this, that no discipline is to be exercised in it before the King comes in 'to see the guests.' But it was not the design of the parable to illustrate this subject; and it is therefore passed over, that deficiency being abundantly supplied by other parts of the New Testament. It is however intimated, as in some other parables, that the Church would, after all, remain in a mixed state, and not be thoroughly purged of formalists and pretenders till the day of judgment. Then, indeed, the King will come 'in to see the guests'; every one of whom must pass the scrutiny of an omniscient eye, from which none can escape in the crowd. That piercing glance, which 'tries the reins and the heart,' will search the whole as though they were but one individual, and each individual of the vast assemblage as though he were alone"—R. W.

He saw there a man—one, alas! of the "many" (ver. 14)—which had not on a wedding garment. How this was to have been procured, the parable does not indicate. But "as the guests had been travellers, and as the feast was in the king's palace, we cannot be mistaken in supposing that such garments were supplied in the palace itself to all those who sought them. And with this agrees the circumstance, that the man when addressed by the king was speechless (lit. 'gagged' or 'muzzled'). His conduct argued utter insensibility as regarded that to which he had been called—ignorance of what was due to the king, and what became such a feast"—ED. What, then, is the spiritual meaning of this necessary and available but slighted "wedding garment"? The answer to this question is to be found in the true idea of "the kingdom of heaven," of the founding, growth, and consummation of which this parable is a miniature picture. It is clearly implied here, as in all our Lord's teaching respecting His kingdom, that it is essentially inward and spiritual. As in the parable which preceded it, the "kingdom of God" was distinguished from Jewish institutions, as represented by the vineyard and its appliances, so in this parable, although it has its visible means and activities, it is itself unseen. "The kingdom of heaven" consists of men who are individually in living union with Christ its Head, and in whom the gracious ends of His manifestation in their nature are being accomplished; who in humble acknowledgment of His kingly authority and rights, and in glad compliance with the "call of His servants," accept thankfully the spiritual blessings provided and offered in His name, and find in these an earnest of the supreme blessedness to be realised in Him hereafter. "The marriage feast or dinner (the communication of the grace of the gospel in this life) prepares for the 'marriage supper' of the Lamb (Rev. 19. 7–9), the enjoyment of eternal blessedness in the kingdom of glory. Now, as without 'holiness, no man can see the Lord,' we may at once perceive what our Lord means by this 'marriage garment'; it is holiness of heart and life"—C. "That one word 'holiness,' implying, as it does in the Christian sense, both the regeneration of those who have penitently received Christ as the propitiation for sin, and the maturing of all the graces of their new nature by the same influence of the Holy Ghost, will fully express all that is comprehended by having the wedding or festal robe"—R. W. "It is the righteousness of Christ, first imputed, then implanted"—WESLEY.

Compare the expressions—"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3. 5); "the fine linen is the righteousness of saints" (Rev. 19. 8); "the righteousness which is of God by faith" (Phil. 3. 9); "put on Christ" (Gal. 3. 27); "put on the new man" (Eph. 4. 24; Col. 3. 18). Also Ps. 132. 9; Isa. 61. 10; Jer. 23. 5, 6; 1 Cor. 1. 20, 21).

12. Friend—a term implying great condescension on the part of the king, yet not used in derision—how camest thou in hither? By what right art thou found among my guests in thy disqualified condition?

13. Then said the king to the servants. Not the same as in vers. 3, 4; evidently angels are to be understood here, as in ch. 13. 39, 49.

14. "Many are called; few chosen. (Ch. 20. 16.) Many hear, few believe—yea, many are members of the visible, but few of the invisible, Church"—WESLEY.

Vers. 15–22. QUESTIONS OF HERODIANS: POLITICAL DEVICE. (Mark 12. 13–17; Luke 20. 21–25.)—15. Then went the Pharisees. Chiefly no doubt those who had just retired from our Lord discomfited and defeated. Entangle (R.V. "ensnare") Him in His talk. After consultation they agreed to try the power of skilful artifice.

16. And they sent out unto Him their disciples—apparently young, earnest students—with the Herodians. S. Luke describes them as "spies which should feign themselves just," or "righteous men," honestly desiring instruction. They came to Him with an assumed simplicity, intimating that they had been discussing a question of public importance on which they respectfully sought His guidance. "The Herodians were a set of men peculiarly attached to Herod, and consequently zealous for the interest of the Roman government, which was the main support of the dignity and royalty of his family. Thou regardest not the person of men—Thou favourest no man for his riches or greatness"—WESLEY.

We appeal to Thee as true, impartial, and fearless of consequences to Thyself; and know that Thou wilt speak Thy decision without reserve. "Herod Antipas was at this time at Jerusalem, which was the time of the Passover; and the Herodians here mentioned were probably in attendance upon him. The union of these with the disciples of the Pharisees was artfully adapted to the designed plot laid to entrap our Lord. The Pharisees were averse, on religious grounds, to pay tribute to the Romans—that is, to submit to their government; and the feeling of the body of the people was with them. Herod and his party leaned chiefly upon the Roman power, and therefore supported their claims, though more out of fear than affection"—R. W.

17. Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar? "If He had said, Yes, the Pharisees would have accused Him to the people as a betrayer of the liberties of His country. If He had said, No (Deut. 17. 15), the Herodians would have accused Him to the Roman governor"—WESLEY.

18. Ye hypocrites—"pretending a scruple of conscience"—WESLEY.

19. The tribute money—"a Roman coin, stamped with the head of Cæsar, which was usually paid in tribute"—WESLEY.

21. "They say to Him, Cæsar's—plainly acknowledging, by their having received his coin, that they were under his government. And indeed this is a standing rule. The current coin of every nation shows who is the supreme governor of it. Render, therefore, ye Pharisees, to Cæsar the things which ye yourselves acknowledge to be Cæsar's; and, ye Herodians, while ye are zealous for Cæsar, see that ye render to God the things that are God's"—WESLEY.

"God was no longer, as of old, the civil Ruler of His people. They had rejected His authority, and He had given them over to a foreign power, who reigned and claimed tribute by His ordinance. (Rom. 13. 1, 7.) But God was still, and must ever be, the spiritual Ruler of the world, and to Him now as ever worship and obedience were due. It was a striking comment on this answer when, three days afterwards, Christ declared before Pilate, 'My kingdom is not of this world,' and the chief priests, in demanding His death, declared, 'We have no king but Cæsar'"—S. C.

Vers. 23-33. QUESTION OF SADDUCEES: THEOLOGICAL QUIBBLE. (Mark 12. 18-27; Luke 20. 27-40.)—23. The same day—that most memorable day of testing, Tuesday, Nisan 12—came to Him the Sadducees (ch. 3. 7), which say there is no resurrection, and who also denied the immortality of the soul. (Acts 23. 8.) They were the materialists of that age.

24. Master, Moses said. (Deut. 25. 5.) The object of this law was the preservation of families, which had gradually ceased to be important.

25. Now there were with us seven brethren. "This story seems to have been a kind of commonplace objection, which no doubt they brought up on all occasions"—WESLEY.

Such a thing might have taken place according to the law, but probably never did happen. The mention of seven brethren, when, if the number had been two, the difficulty would have been the same, shows that the question had been framed to make the doctrine of the resurrection appear ridiculous and absurd.

28. Whose wife shall she be? etc. "It appears that though the Pharisees held the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead, their gross corruption of all spiritual things which so influenced their interpretation of the prophecies respecting the Messiah, and converted the 'kingdom of heaven' into a worldly monarchy, had produced a like darkening effect upon their conceptions of a future state. They allowed of marriage in heaven"—R. W.

29. Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures—not rightly understanding even the Books of Moses, which they professed to receive with peculiar confidence.

30. But are as the angels. "What God would work was quite other than they imagined; not a mere reawakening, but a transformation. The world to come was not to be a reproduction of that which had passed away—else why should it have passed away—but a regeneration and renovation; and the body with which we were to be clothed would be like that which angels bear"—ED. "Incorruptible and immortal. So is the power of God shown in them. So little need have they of marriage"—WESLEY. (1 Cor. 15. 52.)

When thus calmly reasoning with Sadducees, our Lord does not prove the existence of angels, but assumes and affirms it. In S. Luke, "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world"—of purity and spiritual blessedness (Phil. 3. 11)—"are equal unto the angels," even superior to them in their privileges. (Heb. 1. 4; 2. 5-8.) Our Lord, not merely to silence His opponents, "but to instruct His followers, draws the veil more fully from before that new and eternal state of being which shall succeed the general resurrection, discloses its exclusive spiritual character, and shuts out for ever those gross conceptions with which imagination has clothed its pagan, pharisaic, and Mohammedan paradises. It does not, however, follow from this exalted view of a future life, that we shall not recognise each other, nor that those tender intellectual affections which bind pious friends and relations to each other on earth shall not there exist. The contrary is indicated in many passages; only we are to recollect that every affection will be purged, not only from sin, but from infirmity"—R. W.

31. That which was spoken unto you by God. (Ex. 3. 6, 15, 16.) (S. Mark, "In the Book of Moses"; S. Luke, "Even Moses showed"). They had cited an ordinance of Moses as the ground of their pretended difficulty; our Lord, therefore, appealed to Moses only. Probably they would not have refused to hear the more direct teaching of the Prophets—as Isa. 26. 19; Dan. 12. 2, though they attached less authority to them than to their Lawgiver. But it was enough for our Lord's purpose to refer to the books which "were the great and ultimate appeal for all doctrine," and certain it is that He "brings out in His answer a depth of meaning in the words which without it we could not discover"—A.

32. I am the God of Abraham. "The argument runs thus: God is not the God of the dead, but of the living; for that expression, 'thy God,' implies both benefit from God to man and duty from man to God. But He is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; therefore Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are not dead but living. Therefore the soul does not die with the body." "That God should call Himself the God of Abraham implies a relation wholly different from that in which He stands towards the beasts which perish. He is their Maker and Sustainer; but He is not their God; for they have no conscious relation towards Him as of a person to a person. That man is capable of a personal relation to God as his God, implies faculties and aspirations which cannot meet with their adequate object in this life, and therefore point to a life to come. That a feeling of this kind was present to the mind of Abraham himself, and of others of the patriarchs who confessed themselves strangers and pilgrims on the earth, is stated in Heb. 11. 16"—S. C. Of course this great truth underlies Divine revelation from beginning to end. "Thus the burden of the Law, I AM THE LORD THY GOD, contains in it the seed of immortality, and the hope of the resurrection"—A.

33. They were astonished at His doctrine—"at the clearness and solidity of His answers"—WESLEY.

"They were astonished at the clear and satisfactory manner in which the Teacher sent from God placed the greatest and most important subjects before them; the assured manner in which He spoke of eternal and invisible realities, as one possessing the most intimate knowledge of them; and the ease with which He detected the sophistry, and silenced the cavils, of their most noted doctors and disputants"—R. W.

Vers. 34–40. QUESTION OF A LAWYER: MORAL TEST. (Mark 12. 28–34.)—35. A lawyer—that is, an authorised interpreter of the Law of Moses; therefore, what S. Mark calls him, "a scribe"; but a lawyer was more particularly an expounder and teacher of the Law. Tempting Him—putting Him to the test. "Not, as it seems, with any ill design; but barely to make a further trial of that wisdom which He had shown in silencing the Sadducees"—WESLEY.

This may be inferred from our Lord's words of commendation. (Mark 12. 34.) But as he had been put forward by the Pharisees when gathered together in excited conference after hearing of the defeat of the Sadducees, there can be little doubt that the question was asked with the hope on their part that our Lord would give them ground of accusation against Him.

36. Which is the great commandment in the Law? "The positive is here used emphatically, and has therefore the force of the superlative. 'Which is the greatest commandment in the Law'; not the Law of the two tables, but the whole Law, comprehending all the precepts of Moses? On this subject the Jews differed, and warmly disputed, and continued to do so for a long time afterwards, as appears from their writings. As they called some commands 'light,' and others 'weighty,' some 'great,' others 'little,' it followed that some one must be the greatest and weightiest of them all; but on this day they were not agreed. Some contended for the law of the Sabbath, some for sacrifices, some for circumcision, some for the wearing of phylacteries, giving their reasons for each"—R. W. In S. Mark, however, the question has the more specific form, "Which is the first commandment of all?"

37. Jesus said unto him—quoting words which every Jew was required to repeat in his devotions twice a day—"Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord" (Deut. 6. 4–9) —Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind; S. Mark adds, "And with all thy strength"—the four terms being used to give force to the command. Taken together, they denote that God is to be loved with all our powers of affection. If each has a meaning of its own, the "heart" includes, with the affections, the will and purpose; the "soul" signifies the perceptive and emotional powers; the "mind," the reasoning faculties; and the "strength," the energy of our whole nature. (Comp. 2 Kings 23. 25.)

38. This is the first and great commandment. For love to God constrains to obedience; so that in the Decalogue itself the two things are inseparably combined. "Them that love Me, and keep My commandments" (Ex. 20. 6). (See 1 John 2. 3, 4; 5. 3.)

39. And the second is like unto it. (Lev. 19. 18.) For it is the sense of all our duty to one another, as the first includes all our duty to God. "It is like to it," inasmuch as both are laws of love; both deduced from the great and highest love; both dependent on, I am the Lord thy God"—A. (Rom. 13. 9, 10; Gal. 5. 14.)

40. Hang all the Law and the Prophets. This was a Jewish expression, and would be well understood. Love to God and man is the root from which particular acts of obedience naturally spring. S. Mark adds that the lawyer declared his acceptance of this deep instruction of our Lord, and said that to love God supremely, and to love our neighbour as we ought to love ourselves, was "more than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices"; perhaps having in his mind 1 Sam. 15. 22; Hos. 6. 6; Micah 6. 6–8. And that our Lord "said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God"—having a true discernment of its spiritual character and requirements. "The love of our neighbour springs from the love of God as its source; is found in the love of God as its principle, pattern, and end; and the love of God is found in the love of our neighbour, as its effect, representation, and infallible mark. This love of our neighbour is a love of equity, charity, succour, and benevolence. We owe to our neighbour what we have a right to expect from him. This is the religion of Jesus! How happy would society be were these two plain, rational precepts properly observed"—C.

Vers. 41–46. THE PHARISEES BAFFLED: THE SON OF DAVID. (Mark 12. 35–37; Luke 20 41–44.)

41. While the Pharisees were gathered together. (Ver. 34.) Astonished at the unlooked-for answers received to their successive questions, Jesus, in His turn becomes questioner—taking advantage, it may be, of a moment's silence.

42. Saying, What think ye of Christ—the Christ? whose Son is He? (John 7. 42; Ps. 132. 11; Jer. 23. 5; Micah 5. 2.) "The Pharisees had asked many questions of our Lord; and now, since they were collected about Him in the Temple, in the presence of the multitude, He proposes one to them; designing thereby to convict them of being in ignorance of the true character of the Messiah, and to leave an impression of His superior nature upon the minds of His disciples, a truth as yet obscurely intimated, but which was soon to receive its strongest demonstration"—R. W.

43. How then doth David in spirit (R.V. "in the Spirit"; S. Mark, "by the Holy Ghost"), under Divine inspiration—call Him Lord? "If He be merely the Son (or descendant) of David! If He be, as you suppose, a mere man, the Son of Man"—WESLEY.

"How could He be his Lord, who was not to be born until many ages afterwards, and was certainly to have no secular dominion over him? This question the Pharisees could not answer, for indeed it admits of no reply but one, which should acknowledge the Divinity as well as the humanity of Christ; for in no other sense but as God over all could He be David's Lord, his Lord then, even before He was born into the world, and his Lord when He should be born, as ruling over the dead of all past ages, as well as over all living men"—R. W. Our Lord's appeal is to Ps. 110, which the Jews have always held to be messianic, and "which is more frequently cited by the New Testament writers than any other single portion of the ancient Scriptures." (Acts 2. 34, 35; 1 Cor. 15. 25; Heb. 1. 13; 5. 6; 7. 17-21.)

44. The Lord (Jehovah) said unto my Lord (Adonai, My Sovereign Ruler). "This His dominion, to which David himself was subject, shows both the heavenly majesty of the King, and the nature of His kingdom. Sit Thou on My right hand—that is, remain in the highest authority and power"—WESLEY. (Comp. ch. 20. 21.)

Only two days before, our Lord had been openly called the "Son of David," and He had accepted the title as pertaining to Him by right. His hearers could not therefore have mistaken His intention when He referred them to those well-known words.

45. How is He his Son? We know the true answer to this question, "He was made of the seed of David after the flesh," or with regard to His human nature, but He was the Son of God, "according to the Spirit of holiness," or according to His Divine nature. He was the God-Man, Son of David, but also Lord of all. (Rom. 1. 3.)

46. No man was able to answer Him a word. Just as they had been equally baffled when asked to declare whether John the Baptist was a true or a false prophet (ch. 21. 23-27). Ask Him any more questions—"by way of ensnaring or tempting Him"—WESLEY.

"And thus our blessed Lord delivered Himself from the intrusion of these captious and cavilling men, and was left to pursue His own great work, without interruption, to the time of His sufferings, which were now approaching; this being the third day before the Passover, on which 'He was sacrificed for us'"—R. W.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Vers. 1-39. OUR LORD'S LAST PUBLIC DISCOURSE.—1. Then. "Leaving all converse with His adversaries, whom He now left to the hardness of their hearts"—and whose incompetence as teachers He had demonstrated. The great discourse which follows was spoken to the multitude ("the common people") and to His disciples, but no doubt within the hearing of some of His discomfited enemies, as when speaking directly to them the people stood as eager listeners around them. It is His last, unsparing, awfully severe, yet most tenderly loving denunciation of the hypocrisy, formality, and pride of the leaders of the people and of the age, mingled with injunctions and warnings for the personal guidance of those who professed to be His followers, and closing with an outburst of compassionate lamentation over the doomed city, whose children He would fain have gathered under His protecting wings.

2. Sit in Moses' seat—"that is, read and expound the Law of Moses, and are their appointed teachers"—WESLEY. (Ex. 18. 16; Deut. 17. 9-13.)

The place of authority they occupied was to be duly recognised.

3. Whatsoever they bid you observe—"which they read out of the Law, and enforce therefrom"—WESLEY.

That observe and do. (Rom. 2. 21-25.) Not, however, the glosses and traditions which they superadd to the Law in mere human authority. (Ch. 15. 1-6; John 5. 10; also vers. 15-29 below.)

4. They bind heavy burdens. (Acts 15. 10.) They so enforce the Law itself as to make its injunctions an intolerable burden to others, evading them for themselves.

5. All their works they do to be seen of men. (Ch. 6. 1-16.) All from vanity and self-seeking. They make broad their phylacteries. "The Jews, understanding those words literally, 'It shall be as a token upon thy hand, and as frontlets between thine eyes' (Ex. 13. 16), 'And thou shalt bind these words for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes' (Deut. 6. 8), used to wear little scrolls of paper or parchment enclosed in a leather case, and bound on their wrists and foreheads, on which several texts of Scripture were writ. These they supposed, as a kind of charm, would preserve them from danger. And hence they seem to have been called phylacteries, or preservatives"—WESLEY.

"The Pharisees wore these phylacteries, either broader than others, so that more might be written upon them, or they enlarged the case, so as to contain a greater number of sentences, so that they might appear to have a greater reverence for the Law than others" —R. W. Enlarge the borders (fringes) of their garments—"which God had enjoined them to wear, to remind them of doing all the commandments. (Num. 15. 38.) These, as well as their phylacteries, the Pharisees affected to wear broader and larger than other men"—R. W.

6. Love the uppermost rooms. (Mark 12. 39; Luke 14. 7-11.) The first or most honourable place. (Comp. 1 Sam 9. 22.) Chief seats in the synagogues. (Luke 11. 43.) Places in a semi-circle fronting the congregation.

7. Greetings in the markets. "These salutations, short and simple among all in ancient times, had become disgustingly long and ceremonious, and especially when a person of superior rank was addressed. They were commenced at a distance, accompanied with various humble gestures, and continued till the parties met. These forms the scribes and Pharisees exacted of their disciples and the common people"—R. W. To be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi—that is, "My Master" (John 1. 38). It was a title of honour "used by scholars to their masters, who were never called by their own names by their scholars" —A. It signifies great one, and had but recently come into use. Originally it was given only to persons of high civil rank. "So weighty was the duty of respectful salutation by the title Rabbi, that to neglect it would involve the heaviest punishment. Two great rabbis are described as literally complaining that they must have lost the very appearance of learning, since in the market-place they had only been greeted with 'May your peace be great,' without the addition, 'My Masters'" —ED.

8. Be not ye called Rabbi. (Jas. 3. 1; 1 Pet. 5. 3; 2 Cor. 1. 24.) "Though the disciples were to be constituted public teachers, this was only as servants conveying the words of their Master to the people, without any mixture of their own. The Jewish teachers assumed an authority to set up tradition above the Law, to pervert its meaning, and to make additions to it, on the sole authority of their own pretended wisdom. But the disciples were only to speak the words of another; and all titles, therefore, complimentary to their own wisdom, and which indicated any authority arising from their personal qualifications, were specially forbidden to them"—R. W.

9, 10. And call no man your father, etc. "The Jewish rabbis were also called father and master by their several disciples, whom they required—(1) to believe implicitly what they affirmed, without asking any further reason; (2) to obey implicitly what they enjoined, without seeking further authority. Our Lord, therefore, by forbidding us either to give or receive the title of rabbi, master, or father, forbids us either to receive any such reverence, or to pay any such to any but God" —WESLEY.

12. Whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased. (Ezek. 21. 26; Luke 1. 52; 1 Pet. 5. 5.) "It is observable that no one sentence of our Lord's is so often repeated as this; it occurs with scarce any variation at least ten times in the Gospels"—WESLEY.

13. Woe unto you. (Comp. Isa. 1. 2-23; 5. 8-23.) "Our Lord pronounced eight blessings upon the Mount; He pronounces eight woes here—not as imprecations, but solemn, compassionate declarations of the misery which these stubborn sinners were bringing upon themselves. Ye go not in—for ye are not poor in spirit; and ye hinder those that would be so"—WESLEY.

The allusion in the words, Ye shut up the kingdom of heaven, is to the key which was presented to a scribe on admission to his office as the symbol of his duties, and the meaning is, Ye falsely interpret the Scriptures which testify of Me and My kingdom. "In Luke 11. 52 it is added, 'Ye have taken away the key of knowledge'—the key being, not the key of, i.e. admitting to knowledge, but the knowledge itself—the true, simple interpretation of Scripture which would have admitted them, and caused them to admit others, into the kingdom of heaven, by the recognition of Him of whom the Scriptures testify; whereas now, by their perverse interpretations, they had shut out both themselves and others from it. See a notable instance of this latter in John 9. 24. They shut the door, as it were, in men's faces who were entering"—A.

14. Ye devour widows' houses. (Mark 12. 40; Luke 20. 47; comp. 2 Tim. 3. 6; Tit. 1. 11.) "They made a prey of weak, superstitious women who, being widows, had no protectors, and had property at their own disposal. And this they did under pretence of the greatest sanctity, making long and frequent prayers, and that so publicly, both in the synagogues and public places, as to be seen and praised of men. Yet, says our Lord, for these long prayers—because they were made for a pretext, in order to carry on covetous and rapacious designs more effectually—ye shall receive greater—more extreme—damnation. Let it be remarked, that neither is length nor shortness of prayer censured or approved. What Christ condemns is simply the hypocrisy, the pretence, or disguise, intended by them. Prayers may be long or short, according to the occasion and circumstances"—R. W.

15. Ye compass sea and land—a proverbial expression meaning, ye leave no effort untried —to make one proselyte—that is, "one convert." "Proselytes are generally reckoned of two kinds: the first, proselytes of the covenant or of righteousness, who were converts made from the Gentiles to Judaism, submitted to circumcision, and in every respect conformed to the Law. The rule of Moses, with respect to these was, that they should be 'as those born in the land'; that is, be reckoned as Jews. But many strangers and aliens dwelt among the Jews, on condition of their not practising idolatry, nor worshipping any other God beside Jehovah; and refraining from labour on the Jewish Sabbath; and were permitted to pay their worship to God in the outer court of the Temple, or Court of the Gentiles, but separated from the other courts by a wall of partition. These the later rabbins have called proselytes of the gate, obliged to observe the seven precepts of Noah (which, however, are nowhere to be found but in their writings), but not to conform to the Law generally"—R. W. Probably, however, our Lord does not refer to conversion to Judaism in general, but to the pains taken by the Pharisees to allure wealthy Gentiles into their own party for the sake of gain or greater influence. Twofold more the child of hell. (Ch. 5. 22; 11. 23.) For what could a proselyte made by covetous and hypocritical teachers become but a disciple of hypocrisy—neither a sincere heathen nor a sincere Jew! "Perverted proselytes are commonly the greatest bigots; the scholars outdid their masters—(1) in fondness of ceremony; (2) in fury against Christianity"—N.

16. Blind guides. (Ch. 15. 14.) "Before, He had styled them hypocrites, from their personal character; now He gives them another title, respecting their influence upon others. Both these appellations are severely put together in the twenty-third and twenty-fifth verses; and this severity rises to the height in the thirty-third verse. The gold of the Temple—the treasure kept there"—WESLEY.

More especially gold which has been devoted as a gift to God. (Ch. 15. 5, 6.) He is a debtor—that is, is bound to keep his oath.

20. "He that sweareth by the altar, sweareth by it and by all things thereon. Not only by the gift, but by the holy fire and the sacrifice; and, above all, by that God to whom they belong—inasmuch as every oath by a creature is an implicit appeal to God"—WESLEY.

23. Ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin. (Luke 11. 42.) By the Law a tenth part of the produce of the land and of the flocks and herds was to be set apart for the priesthood. (Lev. 27. 31–33.) "But by this it was not understood that insignificant herbs were included, as not properly coming under that denomination, and being of little value. The Pharisees, however, in their affectation of being more scrupulous in the observance of the Law than others, or seeking to increase the merit of their righteousness by a work of supererogation, gave the title of 'mint,' 'anise,' (rather dill), and 'cummin.' These are mentioned as specimens; for S. Luke adds, 'all manner of herbs'"—R. W. Omitted the weightier matters of the Law. (Isa. 1. 27; Hosea 12. 6.) Weightier even than the whole Ceremonial Law—judgment, mercy, and faith—fidelity to God, or general faithfulness. "Our Lord in speaking of these as 'the weightier matters of the Law,' probably adverted to their distinguishing the legal precepts into weighty and light. With them the true order was reversed, and moral duties and vital religious affections were postponed to trivial observances. The true order was restored by our great Teacher for the instruction of His disciples in all ages. These (weightier matters) ought ye to have done; and not to have left the other undone. This last clause, however, is not to be interpreted into a sanction by our Lord of this superstitious and self-righteous payment of a tithe on herbs. It is a concession on their own principles; for to pay tenths of these things was a trifling matter in itself, and might be innocently observed or not, according to the principle which actuated each individual; but allowing them that they ought to do this, judgment, mercy, and faith were the duties bound upon their consciences, and which could not be neglected without the highest guilt and danger. Our Lord, in this passage, appears to allude to Micah 6. 6–8, where the superior acceptableness to God of moral habits and acts to sacrifices and offerings themselves, however costly, is forcibly expressed"—R. W.

24. Ye blind guides—"Who teach others to do as you do yourselves, to strain out a gnat—from the liquor you are going to drink"—WESLEY—(R.V. "strain out the gnat")—and swallow a camel—which is not only of immense size but is ceremonially unclean, not dividing the hoof. (Lev. 11. 4.)

25. Ye make clean, etc. (Mark 7. 4; Luke 11. 39.) Ye scrupulously observe all religious rites and ceremonies. Within they are full of (R.V. "full from"), in consequence of extortion and excess. "Full of rapine and intemperance. The censure is double, taking intemperance in the vulgar sense. These miserable men procured unjustly what they used intemperately. No wonder tables so furnished prove a snare, as many find by sad experience. Thus luxury punishes fraud, while it feeds disease with the fruits of injustice. But intemperance, in the full sense, takes in not only all kinds of outward intemperance, particularly in eating and drinking, but all intemperate or immoderate desires, whether of honour, gain, or sensual pleasure"—WESLEY.

27. Whited sepulchres. Annually, before the Passover, the Jews whitewashed tombs and graves, not merely for ornament, but lest passers-by should come in contact with them unawares, and so contract uncleanness. (Num. 19. 16.) At the time when our Lord was speaking this would have been just done, so that the places would look clean and fresh. "This goes to the root of the mischief at once: your heart is not a temple of the living God, but a grave of pestilent corruption; not a heaven but a hell. And your religion is but the whitewash, hardly skin deep"—A.

28. Appear righteous unto men. "But what will this appearance avail a man, when God sits in judgment upon his soul? Will the fair reputation which he had acquired among men, while his heart was the seat of unrighteousness, screen him from the stroke of that justice which impartially sends all impurity and unholiness into the pit of destruction?"—C.

29. Ye build the tombs of the prophets. (Luke 11. 47, 48.) "And that is all; for ye neither observe their sayings nor imitate their actions"—WESLEY.

30. We would not have been partakers with them. "So ye make fair professions, as did your fathers"—WESLEY.

31. The children of them which killed the prophets. (John 8. 39, 40, 44; Acts 7. 51; 1 Thess. 2. 15.) The word "children" (sons) is used both literally and figuratively: Ye acknowledge your natural descent from the men who killed the prophets, but deny that you inherit their moral character; yet at this moment you are plotting to take away My life.

"Ye testify by your smooth words, as well as devilish actions, that ye are the genuine sons of them who killed the prophets of their own times, while they professed the utmost veneration for those of past ages.

"From the third to the thirtieth verse is exposed everything that commonly passes in the world for religion, whereby the pretenders to it keep both themselves and others from entering into the kingdom of God, from attaining or even seeking after those tempers in which alone true Christianity consists:—As (1) Punctuality in attending on public and private prayer (vers. 4–14); (2) Zeal to make proselytes to our opinion or communion, though they have less of the spirit of religion than before (ver. 15); (3) A superstitious reverence for those consecrated places or things, without any for Him to whom they are consecrated (vers. 16–22); (4) A scrupulous exactness in little observances, though with the neglect of justice, mercy, and faith (vers. 23, 24); (5) A nice cautiousness to cleanse the outward behaviour, but without any regard to inward purity (vers. 25, 26); (6) A specious face of virtue and piety, covering the deepest hypocrisy and villainy (vers. 27, 28); (7) A professed veneration for all good men, except those among whom they live"—WESLEY.

32. Fill ye up then. (Gen. 15. 16; Acts 7. 52.) A word not of irony, but of deep sorrow and despair. "As if He had said, I contend with you no longer: I leave you to yourselves: you have conquered: now ye may follow the devices of your own hearts. The measure of your fathers' wickedness: ye may now be as wicked as they"—WESLEY.

33. Ye serpents. (See ch. 3. 7.) "Our Lord, having now lost all hope of reclaiming these, speaks so as to affright others from the like sins"—WESLEY.

34. Wherefore—that it may appear that you are the true children of those murderers, and have a right to have their iniquities visited on you—behold, I send. Is not this speaking as one having authority? Prophets—men with supernatural credentials. Wise men—such as have both natural abilities and experience. And scribes—men of learning; but all will not avail. (Acts 5. 40; 7. 59; 12. 2; 23. 19; 26. 11.)

35. That upon you may come. "The consequence of which will be, that upon you will come the vengeance of all the righteous blood shed on earth. Zacharias, the son of Barachias—termed Jehoiada (2 Chron. 24. 20), where the story is related. Ye slew—ye make that murder also of your fathers your own, by imitating it—between the Temple—that is, the inner Temple—and the altar, which stood in the outer court. Our Lord seems to refer to this instance rather than any other, because He was the last of the prophets on record that were slain by the Jews for reproving their wickedness; and because God's requiring this blood, as well as that of Abel, is particularly taken notice of in Scripture"—WESLEY.

36. This generation. Guilty of the crowning sin of rejecting the Christ. (Acts 7. 51, 52.)

37. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem. (Luke 13. 34; 19. 41–44.) "His parting words are no longer denunciations of woe, but the deep wail of a heart wounded because its love has been despised"—M. As a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings. (Deut. 32. 11; Ps. 17. 8; 36. 7; 57. 1; 61. 4; Isa. 31. 5; Mal. 4. 2.) This image of protection and rest was familiar to our Lord's hearers. Proselytes were spoken of as gathered under the wings of the Shechinah. Ye would not. (Isa. 28. 12; 30. 15.) "Every part of this apostrophe is charged with feeling and beauty. The repetition of the word Jerusalem, denoting how intensely the mind was fixed upon an object of interest; the comparison of His own intense desire to save the people of His own nation from these impending calamities, with the restless anxiety of the parent bird to shelter her brood, from birds of prey, under her wings; the frequency of His calls and warnings; and the despairing conclusion—'and ye would not!' are all deeply touching. Nor is this expression of our blessed Saviour's compassion to be confined to the Jews. It is an exhibition of His character instructive to all ages. It was this tender concern for human salvation which brought Him from heaven, and carried Him through His painful course of humiliation, shame, and sorrow; and now every annunciation of His gospel is a call to us to the shelter of His wings from impending danger. He would gather us together there, and be our eternal refuge from the vengeance which we have so justly provoked; and if we are not saved, this is not only against His intention, but His anxious attempts and most sincere endeavours to bring us, by the use of a variety of means, to a better mind. I would and ye would not, are words which at once declare the fulness of His grace, and place the sole and aggravated fault of the final destruction of men upon themselves alone"—R. W.

38. Behold, your house—"the Temple, which is now your house, not God's—is left unto you. Our Lord spake this as He was going out of it for the last time. Desolate—forsaken of God and His Christ, and sentenced to utter destruction"—WESLEY.

39. "Ye—Jews in general, men of Jerusalem in particular—shall not see Me from this time—which includes the short space till His death—till—after a long interval of desolation and misery—ye shall say, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord—ye receive Me with joyful and thankful hearts. This also shall be accomplished in its season"—WESLEY. (Deut. 4. 30, 31; Hosea 3. 4, 5; Zech. 12. 10; 14. 8–11.)

"The words contain a remarkable instance of a threatening and a promise; and each is of the most emphatic import, being couched under the same terms. A long and dark interval was to take place in which they should not see Him, have no perception of the truth of His mission, and be separated from His peculiar mercies,—a long night in which they should wander in ignorance and unbelief, denationalised, unchurched, and deserted by God; but still ultimately they shall see Him in all the demonstrations of His divinity and redeeming offices, shall acknowledge Him as the true Christ, and take up that very acclamation of the multitudes in the streets of Jerusalem, at which their fathers were maddened into rage, and cry with them, 'Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord'"—R. W. (Rom. 11. 25, 26.)

CHAPTER XXIV.

Vers. 1–51. FALL OF JERUSALEM AND OUR LORD'S SECOND COMING. (Mark 13. 1–37; Luke 21. 5–36.)—1. Went out, and departed from the Temple (R.V. "went out from the Temple, and was going on His way"). After uttering His last and most terrible denunciation of Pharisaism, our Lord passed towards the Court of the Women, and, sitting down in silent sadness on the steps which led into it, "He beheld how the people cast money into the treasury"—that is, into the boxes which stood in the Court of the Women, to receive the freewill contributions of the worshippers for religious and charitable purposes. There He found a beautiful example of real self-denial, in the case of a poor widow who gave her "two mites"; and He called the attention of His apostles to it, in order to impress upon them—by the contrast between her gift and the contributions of the rich "out of their abundance," and between her character and that of the self-seeking men whom He had just so severely condemned—how all important in the sight of God is real self-sacrifice in His service. (Mark 12. 41–44; Luke 21. 1–4.) He was then calmly withdrawing from the Temple for the last time, when His disciples came to Him—anxious and perplexed through His prediction of its coming desolation; and one of them "saith to Him, Master, see what manner of stones and what buildings are here" (Mark), inviting His attention once more to the immensity of the architectural structure they were quitting for ever—the vast area it occupied—and "how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts" (Luke). The Temple proper was small, but the courts, cloisters, and towers by which it was surrounded constituted it one of the most magnificent edifices in the world. Some of its stones are said to have been more than twenty feet long; its rows of Corinthian pillars were cut wholly out of blocks of pure white or variegated marble, and were more than thirty-seven feet high; eight of its gates were overlaid with gold or silver plates, and a ninth, called "The Beautiful Gate," was covered with dazzling Corinthian brass. And this vast and gorgeous fabric was doomed to be shortly destroyed! (Luke 19. 43, 44.)

2. Verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down. "This was most punctually fulfilled; for after the Temple was burned, Titus, the Roman general, ordered the very foundations of it to be dug up; after which the ground on which it stood was ploughed up by Turnus Rufus"—WESLEY.

This is the statement of Josephus, and its correctness has been recently attested by the careful investigations of the Palestine Exploration Society.

3. As He sat upon the Mount of Olives. S. Mark adds, with his characteristic observance of graphic details, "over against the Temple." No doubt gazing tenderly upon it as it reposed peacefully in the glorious rays of the setting sun. The disciples came unto Him privately—not all of them, but "Peter and James and John and Andrew" (Mark). He seems to have sat apart for a while as if in silent contemplation; but they all longed to know something more of solemn, future events which so deeply affected them, and these, the more confidential apostles, venture to approach Him with the twofold inquiry—Tell us, when shall these things be?—the dreadful calamities just foretold—and what shall be the sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the world? Our Lord had intimated that there would be an indefinite interval between the judgment upon the Temple and the city and His reappearing, when the people who now rejected Him should welcome His return. (Ch. 23. 39.) Whether the apostles so understood Him or not is not clear. But in His answer He now speaks distinctly concerning—"(1) the destruction of the Temple and city, with the signs preceding (vers. 4, etc.; 15, etc.); (2) His own coming, and the end of the world, with the signs thereof (vers. 29–31); (3) the time of the destruction of the Temple (vers. 32, etc.); (4) the time of the end of the world (ver. 36)"—WESLEY.

4. Take heed that no man deceive you. Similarly Luke 13. 23, 24. "The caution is more particularly designed for the succeeding Christians, whom the apostles then represented. The first sign of My coming is, the rise of false prophets. But it is highly probable many of these things refer to more important events, which are yet to come"—WESLEY.

5. For many shall come in My name—"first, false Christs, next, 'false prophets' (ver. 11); at length, both together (ver. 24). And, indeed, never did so many impostors appear in the world, as a few years before the destruction of Jerusalem, undoubtedly because that was the time wherein the Jews in general expected the Messiah"—WESLEY. (See 1 John 2. 18; 4. 3; 2 John 7; Jer. 14. 14; John 5. 43.)

6. Wars and rumours of wars—"that is, war actual and war threatened; or 'wars near.' 'Rumours of war'—at a distance. All these things must come to pass—as a foundation for lasting tranquillity. But the end—concerning which ye inquire—is not yet. So far from it, that this is but the beginning of sorrows"—WESLEY. (R.V. "Beginning of travail.") "The death-throes of the Jewish state precede the regeneration of the universal Christian Church, as the death-throes of this world, the new heavens and new earth"—A. (Rom. 8. 22.)

9. Then—during the same time—shall they deliver you up to be afflicted. (Acts 4. 3; 5. 17–41; 6. 11–13; 12. 2; 16. 19–39; 25. 23; 2 Tim. 4. 16, 17.) And ye shall be hated of all nations—"even of those who tolerate all other sects and parties; but in no nation will the children of the devil tolerate the children of God"—WESLEY. (Acts 28. 22; 1 Pet. 2. 12; 3. 16; 4. 14-16; 1 Cor. 4. 12, 13.)

"Our Lord knew the hearts of men everywhere, and how they would be affected by a religion, simple in its worship, humbling in its doctrines, terrible to sinners in its disclosures of a general judgment and future punishment, rigid in its moral discipline, and holding out to hope few beside spiritual blessings; He knew how the carnal mind, which is naturally enmity to God, would manifest itself when a religion of this character, and pressing upon it with the weight of this authority, should be everywhere introduced; and the event proved the infallibility of His knowledge and the truth of His predictions"—R. W.

10. Many shall be offended (R.V. "shall stumble"). This refers to professed believers. Many of them would fall away when persecuted. (Ch. 13. 21.) "The difficulties and sufferings of the Christian life in these seasons of persecution would be as stumbling-blocks to many, who would hasten out of so rough and dangerous a path; and such persons would be the first to betray others, and deliver them up to their persecutors, and so discover the hate which apostates usually feel to the faithful. For nobly as the early Christians, as a body, braved the storms which were excited against them—and truly it was then seen with what sublimity religion invests the human character—there were among them false brethren, who either entirely shunned the cross, or fainted when it began to press heavily"—R. W. (2 Tim. 1. 15; 4. 16.)

11. False prophets—that is, false teachers—not false Christs (ver. 5); teachers in Christ's name of that which was not His gospel; Judaists, Antinomians, and others, to whom the Apostolic Epistles so often refer. (Acts 20. 30; Gal. 1. 7–9; Rom. 16. 17, 18; Col. 2. 8, 18.)

12. And because iniquity shall abound. (2 Thess. 2. 7.) The love of many—that is, of the many), of the masses of professed believers—shall wax cold. "Love to Christ is the only preservative from sin; and especially when all example strongly enforces it, and the public standard of morals is low. When man is not upheld by outward circumstances, he can only be sustained by some inward principle; and that which renders sin most abhorrent to the will is 'the love of God shed abroad' in the heart. But if by little and little, by unwatchfulness and compliance with the example of others in smaller things, the vigour of that affection is suffered to decay, then the more powerful temptations prevail, and the Divine principle of love becomes extinct. For by growing cold, we are not to understand the lukewarm state, but an entirely lapsed condition; the fire is not merely cooled, but gone out"—R. W. "But hold ye fast faith (ver. 11), in spite of 'false prophets'; love, even when iniquity and offences abound (ver. 12); and hope unto the end (ver. 13). He that does so shall be snatched out of the burning. 'The love of many will wax cold'—the generality of those who love God will, like the Church at Ephesus (Rev. 2. 4), leave their first love"—WESLEY.

13. But he that shall endure unto the end. In the case of the individual he, the end of life. He that shall patiently bear the trials and conflicts to which he may be subject as one of My followers shall be saved, eternally. In S. Luke, special Divine aid and protection are also promised.

14. And this gospel of the kingdom—which

I commit to you, and for which you will be persecuted (ch. 9. 35)—shall be preached in all the world. (Rom. 10. 18; Col. 1. 6, 23; 2 Tim. 4. 17.) "This was necessary, not only as regarded the Gentiles, but to give God's people the Jews, who were scattered among all these nations, the opportunity of receiving or rejecting the preaching of Christ. But, in the wider sense, the words imply that the gospel shall be preached in all the world, literally taken, before this great and final end come"—A. "Here the end, specially referred to, is the end of the Temple and of the commonwealth of the Jews. Josephus's History of the Jewish War is the best commentary on this chapter. It is a wonderful instance of God's providence, that he, an eye-witness, and one who lived and died a Jew, should, especially in so extraordinary a manner, be preserved to transmit to us a collection of important facts, which so exactly illustrate this glorious prophecy, in almost every circumstance"—WESLEY.

15. When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation. "Daniel's term is, 'the abomination that maketh desolate' (Dan. 11. 31)—that is, the standard of the desolating legions, on which they bear the abominable images of their idols. Standing in the holy place. Not only the Temple, and the mountain on which it stood, but the whole city of Jerusalem, and several furlongs of land round about it, were accounted 'holy'; particularly the Mount on which our Lord now sat, and on which the Romans afterwards planted their ensigns. He that readeth, let him understand. Whosoever reads that prophecy of Daniel, let him deeply consider it"—WESLEY. (Comp. Dan. 9. 27; 12. 11.)

The parallel passage in S. Luke is, "When ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies" (the armies of Rome, the abominable for its idolatry), "then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." "Which may probably be regarded as a paraphrase, intended to explain to Gentile readers the meaning (or rather the mode of fulfilment) of the obscure prophecy of Daniel"—S. C.

16. "Then let them who are in Judea flee to the mountains. So the Christians did, and were preserved. It is remarkable that after the Romans, under Cestius Gallus, made their first advance toward Jerusalem, they suddenly withdrew again, in a most unexpected and indeed impolitic manner. This the Christians took as a signal to retire, which they did, some to Pella, and others to Mount Libanus"—WESLEY.

17. Let him which is on the housetop not come down to take anything out of his house. "It may be remembered, that their stairs used to be on the outside of their houses"—WESLEY.

19. "Woe to them that are with child, and to them that give suck — because they cannot so readily make their escape"—WESLEY.

20. But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter. "They did so; and their flight was in the spring. Neither on the Sabbath—being on many accounts inconvenient; besides that many would have scrupled to travel far on that day. For the Jews thought it unlawful to walk above two thousand paces (two miles) on the Sabbath day"—WESLEY.

21. Then shall be great tribulation. "Have not many things spoken in this chapter, as well as in Mark 13 and Luke 21, a further and much more extensive meaning than has been yet fulfilled?"—WESLEY. (Comp. Dan. 12. 1.)

But taken with reference to the fall of Jerusalem, which our Lord had immediately in view, His words were awfully fulfilled. "The horrors of war and sedition, of famine and pestilence, were such as exceeded all example or conception. The city was densely crowded by the multitudes which had come to the Passover. Pestilence ensued, and famine followed. The commonest instincts of humanity were forgotten. Acts of violence and cruelty were perpetrated without compunction or remorse, and barbarities enacted which cannot be described. Mothers snatched the food from the mouths of their husbands and children, and one actually killed, roasted, and devoured her infant son. (Comp. Lev. 26. 29; Deut. 28. 56, 57.) Dead bodies filled the houses and streets of the city, while cruel assassins rifled and mangled with the exultation of fiends. The besieged devoured even the filth of the streets, and so excessive was the stench that it was necessary to hurl 600,000 corpses over the walls, while 97,000 captives were taken during the war, and more than 1,100,000 perished in the siege"—C. B.

22. And except those days should be shortened — by Divine interposition — (S. Mark, "Except the Lord had shortened those days"). "The whole siege by Titus occupied less than five months, and the conduct of the besieged themselves considerably shortened the resistance they might otherwise have made. The seditions which prevailed within the city contributed to hasten its overthrow; and the final abandonment of the strongest part of the fortifications enabled the Romans, as Josephus says, to obtain by fortune what they could not have taken by force. Titus himself indeed confessed that his success in this respect was owing to Divine assistance"—S. C. For the elect's sake. For the sake of Christian Jews (Rom. 11. 5-7), some of whom had fled to the mountains at an early period of the siege, as instructed by our Lord (ver. 16), and must have perished there if the siege had been prolonged; others probably had been unable to leave the city.

23, 24. Then—during that period, as at "the beginning of sorrows,"—if any man shall say unto you, etc. The repetition of this warning shows how greatly liable Jewish believers would be to take the calamities which came upon them for signs of His reappearing, and how readily impostors would take advantage of this weakness for gaining their confidence as divinely sent deliverers. Let those who were truly His followers be peculiarly on their guard against being misled by these seducers. "But the words are not to be limited to this period. Our Lord is speaking with reference to His second as well as His first coming, and warns not only His living disciples, but those who should come after them, that many false Christs would appear in the world before the one and the other coming of the true Christ; perhaps at various times before the latter"—S. C. Shall show great signs and wonders. (2 Thess. 2. 9.) If it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. "But it is not possible that God should suffer the body of Christians to be thus deceived"—WESLEY.

"The elect are the Christians, as distinguished from the Jews; and the words express the powerful efforts to deceive made by the seducers, and the great difficulty of succeeding with Christians. This would arise from the abundant evidence they had of the truth of Christ's mission; the witness in themselves, in their own moral experience, of the certainty and excellency of His religion; and from that elevation of the intellect, and that dominion over superstition, which Christianity truly received never fails to produce. Accordingly, we find that the body of Christians remained unmoved by the most plausible of these pretenders. But those that should argue from the words, 'if it were possible,' that the seduction of the elect—that is, of even true Christians—is impossible, forget how solemnly our Lord warns them to 'take heed' and to 'watch' and 'pray,' all which supposes danger, and that of no common kind"—R. W.

26. Behold, He is in the desert (Acts 21. 38) —where He expects His followers to gather around Him. In the secret chambers—to be consulted in private, or to mature His schemes for your deliverance. Believe it not—a solemn charge, spoken to "the very elect."

27. For as the lightning cometh—suddenly, swiftly, unmistakably, universally. So shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. This must refer to our Lord's final coming (Rev. 1. 7). It "shall be as quick as lightning, so that there will not be time for any such previous warning"—WESLEY. (Ver. 27.)

28. For wheresoever the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together. "Our Lord gives this as a further reason why they should not hearken to any pretended deliverer. As if He had said, Expect not any deliverer of the Jewish nation; for it is devoted to destruction. It is already before God a dead carcase, which the Roman eagles will soon devour"—WESLEY. (Comp. Deut. 28. 49; John 11. 48.)

But the metaphor has also a more extended signification. (Luke 17. 37.) It is used in the Old Testament to denote the inevitableness with which moral corruption will be visited by sudden judgment. (Hab. 1. 8; Hosea 8. 1.) Here our Lord uses it to affirm the truth generally, that sin will ever bring upon itself swift and certain punishment, but with particular reference to His final coming "to execute judgment upon all the ungodly" (Jude 14. 15). (1 Cor. 1. 8, 9.)

29. Immediately after the tribulation of those days. "Here our Lord begins to speak of His last coming. But He speaks not so much in the language of man as of God, with whom a thousand years are as one day, one moment. Many of the primitive Christians, not observing this, thought He would come immediately, in the common sense of the word, a mistake which S. Paul labours to remove in his Second Epistle to the Thessalonians"—WESLEY.

It may be indeed that the word immediately is to be taken in its usual meaning, but with application to other and unknown events in the remote future. For our Lord's words are not "immediately after those days," but "immediately after the tribulation of those days"; or, as given in S. Mark, "in those days after that tribulation." Here the expression "those days" may denote a period of indefinite duration—that of our Lord's kingdom upon earth; the same as "the last days" of the Prophet Joel (Joel 2. 30, 31; Acts 2. 17; Heb. 1. 2)—the period still going on, to which our Lord referred in words omitted by S. Matthew, but supplied by S. Luke, "and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." What the tribulation will be which is to immediately precede His reappearing, the awful event itself only can reveal. Shall the sun be darkened. The darkening of the sun, moon, and stars is frequently used in the Old Testament to denote national judgments. (Isa. 5. 30; 13. 10; 34. 4; Jer. 4. 28; Ezek. 32. 7, 8; Amos 8. 9; Micah 3. 6.) Probably this or a similar metaphorical meaning is intended here. But the prophecy will be fulfilled in a literal sense also. (2 Pet. 3. 3, 4, 10.)

30. And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man. This has been interpreted from very early times of the appearance of the Cross; but it is enough to know that a sign which the faithful followers of Christ will instantly recognise as His sign will be visible in the heavens. Both S. Mark and S. Luke say, "shall see the Son of Man." Possibly therefore His sign is His own appearance in the kingdom of His glory. Then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn. (Zech. 12. 10-12; Rev. 1. 7.)

31. Shall send His angels. (Ch. 13. 39-41, 49; 16. 27.) Great sound of a trumpet. Probably spoken with allusion to the silver trumpet which was used to call the people together during the wilderness sojourn. (Num. 10. 2-10.) And they shall gather together His elect—"that is, all that have endured to the end in faith which worketh by love"—WESLEY.

32. Now learn a parable of the fig tree. (R.V. "Now from the fig tree learn her parable.") Take the fig tree as a symbol, and learn its lesson. You know when you see it bursting into leaf that summer is nigh. This illustration would be peculiarly significant to our Lord's apostles in their circumstances at that moment.

33. When ye shall see all these things. This, then, is our Lord's answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of Thy coming?" With the exception of the great tribulation, connected so immediately with His reappearing, the events He had described might be taken as sure indications "that it," that is, as explained by Luke, "the kingdom of God is near, even at the door." Our Lord, having spoken of the signs preceding the two grand events, concerning which the apostles had inquired, begins here to speak of the time of them. And to the question proposed (ver. 3), concerning the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, He answers in ver. 34. Concerning the time of the end of the world He answers in ver. 36.

34. This generation shall not pass. (See ch. 16. 28.) The word generation may have the meaning here of "race" or "people"; but even if taken in its more usual sense, for the generation then living, our Lord's meaning is perfectly clear. Till all these things—which, although referring immediately to the destruction of Jerusalem, were at the same time signs of His final coming—be fulfilled; be done, or accomplished. (Ch. 26. 64.)

36. But of that day and hour—of the time of My coming for the judgment of the world. (Ch. 7. 22; Luke 10. 12; 1 Thess. 5. 2; 2 Pet. 3. 10.) Knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven. These words imply great remoteness, as well as the absence of knowledge, and, in this respect, place the "time of the end," to which they refer, in striking contrast with the event just spoken of, which was to take place before that generation had passed away. "The twofold application of the previous language is now distinctly shown, and the two events marked off from each other. The earthly kingdom of Christ shall be manifested to this generation; His heavenly kingdom shall come at a time which God only knows"—S. C. The R.V. adds, "Neither the Son," as also Mark 13. 32—"but My Father only." "All attempts to soften or explain this weighty truth must be resisted. . . . In the course of self-humiliation undertaken by the Son, in which He increased in wisdom (Luke 2. 52), learned obedience (Heb. 5. 8), uttered desires in prayer (Luke 6. 12)—this matter was hidden from Him"—A. (Comp. ch. 20. 23; 26. 39; John 14. 28, 31.) This may be accepted as the least objectionable theoretical explanation of the profound saying; but it should not be forgotten that "no man knoweth the Son but the Father" (ch. 11. 7). Our Lord goes on to show how uncertainty of the time of His final reappearing should have the effect of keeping His followers in the attitude of constant watchfulness, and in sustained activity and self-denial, and how the ungodly would make it the occasion for greater recklessness.

37. But as the days of Noe (Noah) were. (Luke 17. 26, 27, 35, 36.) When delay of threatened judgment was allowed to encourage disbelief and practical indifference. So shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. (2 Pet. 2. 4-10; 3. 10.)

38. Were eating and drinking, etc. (Gen. 7. 11-23)—in sceptical security, giving no attention to the warnings of the "preacher of righteousness"; so that day would find the world carelessly following its usual pursuits, and would come upon them as a surprise.

40. Then shall two be in the field—occupied side by side in the common labours of life—outwardly alike, but essentially different in their spiritual character. The one shall be taken—"into God's immediate protection—and the other left—to share the common calamities. Our Lord speaks as having the whole transaction present before His eyes." Perhaps more definitely, "the one shall be taken" by the angels "sent forth to gather together the elect"; "the other left," shut out from the kingdom of glory, and left to destruction.

41. Two women shall be grinding at the mill—the hand-mill (Ex. 11. 5; Isa. 47. 2), which was worked by women kneeling or seated on the ground, the upper stone having a handle fixed in it by which it was turned upon the lower stone — the one shall be taken, etc. These homely illustrations are full of pathetic and admonitory interest as our Lord here uses them. Men and women of the same household, or companions in the same worldly service, externally alike, in their spiritual character widely different, now intimately associated, then to be separated for ever.

42. Watch therefore. In consideration of the uncertainty of the time of My coming for the judgment of all, and of the suddenness of which I have warned you, be always ready and vigilant. "Take ye heed, watch and pray" (Mark).

43. If the good man (the master) of the house, etc. (Obad. 5; 1 Thess. 5. 1-10; 2 Pet. 3. 10; Rev. 3. 5; 16. 15.) If he had been told that the thief would certainly come at some hour during the night, without being more definitely informed, as you have been told of the coming of "that day," but not of the precise period itself. He would have watched — would have kept himself awake and on his guard, hour by hour—and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. "Literally, the word signifies 'to be dug through'; because the Eastern houses are generally formed of dry clay, or bricks hardened in the sun, but not burned; and it was the manner of house robbers to enter them by perforating the walls. 'In the dark,' says Job, 'they dig through houses which they have marked in the day-time'"—R. W.

44. Therefore be ye also ready. (Luke 21. 34, 35.) Also, like the forewarned master of the house—for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh. "Christ comes to His people as their Lord; to the unfaithful and secure as a thief in the night; to both as the Son of Man"—S. So He comes to each individual at death, and so He will come "with power and great glory in that day to judge the world in righteousness" (Acts 17. 31).

45. Who then is a faithful and wise servant (Luke 12. 42, "faithful and wise steward"). Which of you aspires after this character? "Faithful"—every moment retaining the clearest conviction, that all he now has is only entrusted to him as a steward. "Wise"—thinking, speaking, and acting continually in a manner suitable to that conviction"—WESLEY.

The exhortation is addressed immediately to the apostles and all who should be called after them to be "ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God" (1 Cor. 4. 1, 2; 2 Tim. 2. 15); but the principle of the words — namely, the greater the trust the greater the responsibility, and the greater the need of watchfulness — is a lesson for all. (Luke 12. 48.) Made ruler over his household —appointed steward in recognition of his trustfulness—to give to his fellow-servants over whom he is placed during his Lord's absence, meat in due season—to dispense to them daily or monthly their allotted provision. "The office and duties of a true minister are by this parable forcibly pointed out. It is of Divine appointment, not of human assumption; it conveys the power to rule in the family, but as a servant responsible to the great common Master; the object of this rule is to promote the service of the Lord in all the duties which may be assigned to each; and in order to this, the food, the wholesome doctrine of Christ by which alone strength for holy labours is imparted, must be administered fully, as out of the abundance which the Master has provided; statedly, according to the rules of the house; and in due season, that there may be nothing deficient in the administration either as to kind, or the circumstances of the servants"—R. W. (See Acts 20. 28; 1 Pet. 5. 2-4; 2 Tim. 2. 15; Heb. 13. 17.)

46, 47. Blessed is that servant, etc.—blessed in the testimony of his own conscience in the attested approbation of his Lord, and in his consequent promotion. For He shall make him ruler over all His goods—head-steward over His whole estate. "He shall be promoted to a higher honour, who is faithful in the inferior ministrations at first assigned him. His gifts shall be multiplied, his usefulness and influence enlarged, and his reward in eternity shall be heightened"—R. W. (Comp. ch. 25. 21; 1 Tim. 3. 13; Rev. 2. 26; 3. 21), "which last two passages answer to the promise here, that each faithful servant shall be over all his Master's goods. That promotion shall not be like earthly promotion, wherein the eminence of one excludes that of another; but rather like the diffusion of love, in which the more each has, the more there is for all"—A.

48, 49. But and if that evil servant—"now evil, having put away faith and a good conscience"—WESLEY.

Put in the form of a supposition this is a most solemn warning and a call to prayerful vigilance. Shall say in his heart—not openly, but by his conduct—My lord delayeth His coming. One of many intimations that His reappearing would be long delayed. And shall begin to smite, etc. (Eccles. 8. 11.) In his fearful selfishness and pride, assuming tyrannical lordship over God's heritage (1 Pet. 5. 3), neglecting his Master's work, and giving himself up to worldly indulgence and sin.

50, 51. In a day when he looketh not for Him—the surprise of His appearing again impressively referred to — and shall cut him asunder (Margin, "cut him off"). But the punishment of death, in the terrible form which the words express, is no doubt intended, and is but a faint image of the awful reality alluded to in the next clause. (2 Sam. 12. 31; Dan. 2. 5; Heb. 11. 37.) "The image of the parable itself is blended with the reality which the parable signifies; the thought of the human master who can punish his slaves with temporal death passes into that of the Divine Judge, who can punish with spiritual death"—S. C. His portion with the hypocrites—"the worst of sinners (Rev. 21. 8)—as upright and sincere as he once was. If ministers are the persons here primarily intended, there is a peculiar propriety in the expression. For no hypocrisy can be baser than to call ourselves ministers of Christ, while we are the slaves of avarice, ambition, or sensuality. Wherever such are found, may God reform them by His grace, or disarm them of that power and influence which they continually abuse to His dishonour, and to their own aggravated damnation"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XXV.

LAST PARABLES AND LAST WORDS IN PUBLIC: THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN CONSUMMATED.

Vers. 1-13. THE TEN VIRGINS: SPIRITUAL READINESS.—1. Then—that is, at the time of which our Lord was speaking (ch. 24. 42-51), for what follows is a continuation of the same solemn discourse — shall the kingdom of heaven — at the sudden reappearing of its Divine Head, when it shall pass from its present state of trial, discipline, and waiting, into its state of everlasting glory and blessedness—be likened unto ten virgins, etc. An evident representation of the whole community of professing Christians, the visible Church, as identical, to a certain extent, with the spiritual kingdom, but as comprehending also many whom Christ will finally disown. (Ch. 22. 10, 14.) The bridegroom is supposed to be coming from a great distance accompanied by his friends (John 3. 29); and the "virgins," the bride's "companions" (Ps. 45. 14), are assembled, probably at her dwelling, awaiting the summons to go forth to meet and welcome him, and to conduct him to the bride's house with blazing lamps, music, and other demonstrations of joy.

2. Five of them were wise. In the special sense of being prudent or provident. (Ch. 24. 45; Luke 16. 8.) And five were foolish. "They are not distinguished into good and bad, but as the hearers at Matt. 7. 25, 27, into 'wise' and 'foolish'; for as a certain degree of goodwill towards the truth is assumed there in the foolish, as evidenced in their willingness to hear, and in the superstructure, however weak, which they raise, so on the part of these in their going forth even with the intention of meeting the bridegroom. We have them described—'the wise' (2 Pet. 1. 5-8), and 'the foolish' (2 Pet. 1. 9)"—T.

3. They that were foolish took their lamps—emblems of their professed readiness to do acceptable service for the bridegroom, and of their willingness to wait patiently for his arrival. And took no oil with them—whether through oversight, wilful neglect, or a mistaken hope that oil might be procured on demand when it was required, is not indicated. What is to be specially noted is that as each took her own lamp, so each was expected to provide her own oil. Their foolishness consisted in their making an open profession of doing a service for which they omitted to make due personal preparation. "This corresponds to their conduct who, belonging to the Church, neglect the preparation of grace, personal conversion, and holiness, trusting that in the hour of need the oil may be supplied out of the common stock. But they know not, or else heed not, that every one must be personally prepared for meeting the Bridegroom, that the call will be sudden, that the stock of oil is not common, and that the time between His arrival and the shutting of the door will be awfully brief"—ED.

4. But the wise took oil in their vessels—"love in their hearts. And they daily sought a fresh supply of spiritual strength till their faith was made perfect"—WESLEY.

The oil in the lamps, which the foolish virgins had as well as the wise, may represent those freely bestowed gifts of grace which come to all men through the mediation of Christ (John 1. 9; Rom. 5. 14-21); together with those enlightening and quickening influences of the Holy Spirit which professing Christians receive under the ministry of the word, and through their connection with the living Church. And the reserve of oil which the wise virgins took in their vessels may symbolise that great change of spiritual character which they only experience who are in Christ, and maintain their union with Him by living in conscious fellowship with Him; who have and manifest faith working by love; and unto whom Christ is "made of God, wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."

5. While the bridegroom tarried—"that is, before they were called to attend him—they all slumbered and slept—were easy and quiet, the wise enjoying a true, the foolish a false, peace"—WESLEY.

"The sleep of all the virgins alike is necessary to the imagery of the parable. The Bridegroom is to come suddenly and without notice to all, which would not be the case if some were awake and could see the procession from a distance"—S. C.

6. At midnight—"in an hour quite unthought of"—WESLEY.

There was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom! (1 Thess. 4. 16; 5. 2.) "The startling suddenness" of His coming is thus brought into prominence.

7, 8. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. "Whereupon the foolish discovered, to their dismay, that theirs were at the point of expiring, and that they had not wherewith to replenish them. In other words, every one at the last prepares to give an account of his works, inquires into the foundation of his faith, seriously searches whether his life has been one which will have praise, not merely of men, for that he now feels will avail nothing, but also of God. Many put off this trying of the grounds of their faith and hope to the last moment"—T. "There are certain preparations which most persons believe they must make at the approach of death; but, alas! it is often too late. The lamp is defiled, the light almost out, and the oil expended; and what adorning is a wretched sinner, struggling in the agonies of death, capable of preparing for his guilty soul?"—C.

Give us of your oil—as if such a thing were possible! As if the grace of God was transferable from one to another, instead of being received in answer to the prayer of faith, each for himself alone. For our lamps are gone (Margin and R.V. "going") out. "What a time to discover this, whether it means the time of death or of judgment! Unto which of the saints wilt thou then turn? Who can help thee in such a season?"—WESLEY.

9. But the wise answered—Lest there be not enough for us and you—"beginning the sentence with a beautiful abruptness; such as showed their surprise at the state of these poor wretches, who had so long deceived them, as well as their own souls. 'Lest there be not enough'—it is sure there is not; for no man has more than holiness enough for himself. Go ye rather to them that sell—without money and without price; that is, to God, to Christ. And buy—if ye can. Oh no! the time is past, and returns no more!"—WESLEY.

"This advice must not be regarded as given in irony. The trait is introduced to point out the proper source of supply—to emphasise that the oil must be their own, and also to prepare for what follows"—ED.

10. They that were ready went in with him to the marriage—the marriage-feast—and the door was shut. "The instruction impressed by the result of the whole cannot be misunderstood. Heaven is prepared only for those who are rendered meet for it by sanctifying grace; and the shutting of the door denotes the eternal exclusion of all others. Nor can a former profession of discipleship, nor even former experience of any degree of grace, if lost, like the consumed oil of the lamp, avail as a plea for admission, should even such pleas be made"—R. W.

11, 12. Afterward came also the other virgins. "Afterwards," to find the door shut! "What door? exclaims the author of an ancient homily on this parable—that which now is open to them coming from the east and from the west, that they may sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven—that door which saith, 'Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out.' Behold how it is now open, which shall then be closed for evermore. . . . No one's penitence, no one's prayers, no one's groanings, shall any more be admitted"—T. Verily I say unto you, I know you not. (Ch. 7. 23.) You have not My likeness, My character; I recognise you not as Mine. "Time was when, 'Lord, Lord, open to us,' would have sped well by virtue of that promise, 'Knock, and it shall be opened to you'; but now it comes too late; the sentence, 'I know you not,' is solemnly bound in with, 'Verily I say unto you,' which amounts to no less than 'swearing in His wrath that they should never enter into His rest.' It speaks Him resolved—and them silenced by it"—H.

13. Watch therefore. "He that watches has not only a burning lamp, but likewise oil in his vessel. And even when he sleepeth, his heart waketh. He is quiet, but not secure"—WESLEY.

Be ready—always personally, consciously ready. "Christ will come when least expected—at midnight—and when the Church, having become accustomed to His long delay, has gone to sleep. So sudden will be His coming that, after the cry of announcement, there will not be time for anything but to go forth to meet Him; and so rapid will be the end that, ere the foolish virgins can return, the door has been for ever closed"—ED.

Vers. 14–30. THE TALENTS: WAITING IN PERSONAL ACTIVITY.—14. For the kingdom of heaven—"that is, the King of Heaven, Christ"—WESLEY.

It will be observed that the words, "The kingdom of heaven is," are supplied by the translators (R.V. "For it is as when"). Thus abruptly our Lord passes from the one parable to the other to show their mutual relation to each other. "While the virgins were represented as waiting for their lord, we have here the servants working for him; there the inward spiritual life of the faithful was described, here his external activity"—T. "There the foolish virgins failed from thinking their part too easy—here the wicked servant fails from thinking his too hard"—A. Called his own servants—that is, his own bond-servants or slaves. "The emphasis rests on this, that they were his own slaves, and to act for his interests. His property was handed over to them, not for safe custody, but that they might do with it as best they could in the interest of their master"—ED. "Slaves in antiquity were often artisans, or were allowed otherwise to engage freely in business, paying, as it was frequently arranged, a fixed yearly sum to their master, or they had money committed to them wherewith to trade on his account, or with which to enlarge their business, and bring in to him a share of their profits"—T.

15. To one he gave five talents. (Ch. 18. 24.) In our use of this word "talents" to denote mental endowments, "there is a clear recognition of the responsibilities which go along with the possession of intellectual gifts and endowments." But the word, as used by our Lord, includes much more than wealth of intellect. "Our influence, our money, our knowledge, our health, our strength, our time, our senses, our memory, our affections, our privileges as members of Christ's Church, our advantages as possessors of the Bible,—all, all are talents. Whence came these things? What hand bestowed them? Why are we what we are? There is only one answer to these questions. All that we have is a loan from God; we are God's stewards"—BISHOP RYLE. "All are to be sanctified to the Lord, and consecrated to His service; and for their use or abuse the possessors will have to render an account"—T. But these servants are differently entrusted. Five, two, one—to every man according to his several ability. "This capacity for work lies not within our own power; but it is in our power to use for Christ whatever we may have"—ED. "And who knows whether, all circumstances considered, there be a greater disproportion than this in the talents of those who have received the most and those who have received the fewest?"—WESLEY.

"The natural gifts are as the vessel, which may be large or may be small, and which receives according to its capacity, but which in each case is, or may be, filled; so that we are not to think of him who had received the two talents as incompletely furnished in comparison with him who had received the five, any more than we should affirm a small circle incomplete as compared with a large"—T. (See 1 Cor. 12. 4–31; Eph. 4. 8–12.)

16, 17. Went and traded, etc. "As each received according to his ability, so each worked according to his power. If the outward result was different, their labour, devotion, and faithfulness were equal"—ED.

18. Hid his lord's money. Thus not only failed to use it himself, but rendered it—not his own money, not that of a stranger, but the money of his lord—a useless, lost thing. "In so doing he was not only unfaithful to his trust, but practically disowned that he was a servant of his lord"—ED. "This servant appears to represent a numerous class of professing Christians, who are so far influenced by the apprehension of Christ's displeasure at last, as to avoid all direct abuse of the talents of various kinds entrusted to them, but are not roused into exertion and zeal either by right views of the danger to which neglect and indifference in the cause of Christ expose them, nor animated by the noble desire of approving themselves to their Lord, and of attaining the honours and larger rewards of the eternal world. They run not for this prize, because they possess not spirituality enough to value it"—R. W. "Reader, art thou doing the same? Art thou hiding the talent God hath lent thee?"

19. After a long time. Another intimation that our Lord's coming would be long deferred. "The notice of the long absence of the master not only connects this with the Parable of the Ten Virgins, but is intended to show that the delay might have rendered the servants who traded more careless, while it also increased the guilt of him who all this time had not done anything with his master's money"—ED. Reckoneth with them. "Even until the day of final account, the 'reckoning' is delayed. But then it takes place; and here the following circumstances are to be noticed:—(1) That 'every one shall give account of himself to God.' He reckoneth with them severally, one by one; for though the last judgment may not be in its formality particular to any one, it will be so really both from the secret consciousness which each one has, that the Judge is dealing with him according to his merits, and from the exact apportionment of the reward or the penalty. In effect and reality it will be the same as though every individual had a personal and particular trial, and an express decision on his formally stated case: (2) That the account required is exact and strict"—R. W. (Rom. 14. 12; Rev. 22. 11, 12.)

20. Behold, I have gained beside them five talents more. "This was successful trading, and is designed to show the abundant increase of good which would be produced in the world by an entire fidelity in the discharge of all the active duties of the Christian life. This is a most animating motive to excite the zeal of Christians, and it is confirmed by fact. The decline of religion in the world has in all ages resulted, not so much from the obstinacy of the wicked as from the slothfulness of Christ's servants"—R. W.

21–23. Well done, etc. The same words of commendation are spoken to each of the successful servants, because, as the result showed, they had been equally faithful and diligent. "The gain is according to the talents—five for five, and two for two." These servants put forth no meritorious claim to be rewarded. Thy talent hath gained. They were themselves the Lord's property; "the money with which they traded was His; their time, abilities, and activity equally belonged to Him; yet here we see that 'no work of faith or labour of love' shall be forgotten. Commendation from the lips of such a Being, the acceptance of our persons and services by Him whose 'favour is better than life,' and the joys of heaven, must from their nature be, not the reward of merit, but of stupendous grace. They are therefore subjects of promise, to encourage us to fidelity, sustain us against temptation, and to show the regard which God has to all that is benevolent and holy in His creatures, by stamping it with the seal of His munificent bounty"—R. W. I will make thee ruler over many things. "The servant is now to be raised into the condition of a 'ruler'; and the few things committed to him on earth, as a laborious and responsible trust, are heightened into 'many things' put into his power to regulate and enjoy"—R. W. Enter thou into the joy of thy lord. Come and share My rest and satisfaction and happiness. (Isa. 53. 11; Heb. 12. 2; Rev. 3. 21.)

24. Lord, I knew thee that thou art an hard man. "No, thou knowest Him not. He never knew God who thinks Him an hard Master. Reaping where thou hast not sown—that is, requiring more of us than Thou gavest power to perform. So does every obstinate sinner, in one kind or other, lay the blame of his own sins on God"—WESLEY.

25. And I was afraid. "Yet this very fear ought to have roused his slothful spirit into exertion; but it was fear without love. So far, however, it operated, that he hid the talent in the earth to keep it safe; he did not misemploy, though he did not employ it; and for this negative virtue, such is the inconsistent reasoning of a deceived heart, he hoped even from him whom he esteemed a hard master to escape punishment"—R. W. "This sets forth the excuse which men are perpetually making of human infirmity and inability to keep God's commands, when they never apply to that grace which may enable them to do so, an excuse, as here, self-convicting and false at heart"—A. Lo, there thou hast that is thine. "This is false; for there was his lord's time and his own labour, which was his lord's, to be accounted for"—A.

26. Thou wicked and slothful servant. "Wicked"—the plea of timidity is rejected; "wicked," idle, and now false and insolent. Thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not—"that I require impossibilities! This is not an allowing, but a strong denial of the charge"—WESLEY. (Comp. Luke 19. 21, 22.)

27. Thou oughtest therefore—"on that very account, on thine own supposition, to have improved my talent as far as possible"—WESLEY.

To the exchangers (R.V. "the bankers"). This was the least he could have done as an honest and faithful man, afraid, as he pleaded, of trading on his own account, for he would thus have relieved himself of anxiety, and yet have gained something by way of interest for his master.

29. "To every one that hath shall be given. (Ch. 13. 12.) So close does God keep to this stated rule, from the beginning to the end of the world"—WESLEY.

"God's gifts are not left unproductive, because one to whom they are intrusted neglects his duty. So far as such gifts are transferable they are often, as a matter of fact, taken away from him who does not use them aright, and given to another. Thus the kingly power which Saul misused was taken from him and given to David"—S. C.

30. "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into the outer darkness. For what? What had he done? It is true he had not done good. But neither is he charged with doing any harm. Why, for this reason, for barely doing no harm, he is consigned to outer darkness. He is pronounced a wicked, because he was a slothful, an unprofitable, servant. So mere harmlessness, on which many build their hope of salvation, was the cause of his damnation! There shall be the weeping—of the careless, thoughtless sinner. And the gnashing of teeth—of the proud and stubborn. The same great truth, that there is no such thing as negative goodness, is in this chapter shown three times—(1) In the parable of the virgins; (2) In the still plainer parable of the servants who had received the talents; and (3) In a direct unparabolical declaration of the manner wherein our Lord will proceed at the last day. The several parts of each of these exactly answer each other, only each rises above the preceding"—WESLEY.

Vers. 31–46. THE FINAL JUDGMENT.—31. When the Son of Man shall come in His glory and all the holy angels with Him. (Ch. 24. 30; John 5. 27; 17. 5; Dan. 7. 9, 10, 13, 14; 1 Pet. 3. 22; Jude 14.) "With what majesty and grandeur does our Lord here speak of Himself; giving us one of the noblest instances of the true sublime. Indeed, not many descriptions in the sacred writings themselves seem to equal this. Methinks we can hardly read it without imagining ourselves before the awful tribunal it describes"—WESLEY.

We have now reached the end, not only of this great and most important discourse, spoken by our Lord only three days before His sufferings and death, but the terminating point of His whole public ministry. The principle of this solemn closing passage is that of His own words, "By their fruits ye shall know them" (ch. 7. 20). So far it is a statement in express terms of the truth taught in the two foregoing parables by the use of imagery. "The Son of Man" revealed as "the Lord, the righteous Judge" (2 Tim. 4. 8; Acts 17. 31), gathers to Himself and into the kingdom of His glory "His elect from one end of heaven to the other" (ch. 24. 31). The elect are they who are "conformed to His image" (Rom. 8. 29). In the case of the nations to whom He has been made known by the gospel, they are those who have a true, penitent, loving faith in Him, and who show their faith by acts and habits of that self renouncing and self-forgetting love, of which He is the one perfect Example. (Phil. 2. 5-8.) In the case of those to whom He has never been named — His "sheep," though not of the gospel fold—they are those who hear His voice in their consciences and spirits, and who "follow Him" really, though not knowingly and in profession. All these come at His gracious call "into the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world"; and the rest depart at His awful command, "into everlasting fire," not prepared for them, but "for the devil and his angels" (Rom. 2. 6–16). The throne of His glory—the throne befitting and manifesting His Divine authority. (Rev. 20. 11, 12.)

32. And before Him shall be gathered all nations. "Here is not only an assembled world, but the assembled generations of the world, from the beginning of time, placed at His bar, awaiting His sentence. Merely human writers have nothing so awfully sublime as this; for they have no distinct knowledge of the great facts here described in language so clear and simple as could never have been used but by Him to whom the mysterious solemnities of the future were all clearly known. He shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd, etc. This is done with unerring penetration, and with infinite equity,—the vast multitude moving to the right hand or to the left under the influence of His mighty power, the consciousness of each answering to the impulse, and, as to the wicked, withering every effort at resistance. The metaphor is taken from the shepherds of ancient times, who kept the sheep and goats in different flocks, and hastily separated them when they became mingled together. A similar metaphor we have in Ezek. 34. 17, 'Behold, I judge between cattle and cattle, between the rams and the he-goats'"—R. W. (See ch. 3. 12; 13. 49, 50.)

34. Then the King say. Here for the first time our calls Himself by His rightful title, as implied by the term He so continually used, "the kingdom of heaven." Come, ye blessed of My Father. (Ch. 5. 3–12; Eph. 1. 3–6; Col. 1. 13.) Ye who have shown by your characters and works that ye lived under His benediction, and that your wills harmonised with His will, whether revealed to you in word or only inwardly. Inherit the kingdom. (Rom. 8. 14–17; Eph. 1. 11; 1 Pet. 1. 3–5.)

35, 36. For I was an hungered, etc. "After this general sublime description of the pomp and solemnity of the final judgment, our Lord proceeds to give the reason for this public acknowledgment of the righteous, and the equally public disowning of the wicked. These reasons, it is however to be remarked, are not the only ones in either case. Neither are the wicked punished solely because they have been fruitless in works of mercy, nor the righteous rewarded solely because they have abounded in them. They are taken in each case as manifestations of character; and they are specified to show the importance attached to them, and that where religion is not practical it is wholly false and delusive"—R. W. "All these works of outward mercy suppose faith and love, and must needs be accompanied with works of spiritual mercy. But works of this kind the Judge could not mention in the same manner. He could not say, I was in error, and ye recalled Me to the truth; I was in sin, and ye brought Me to repentance. In prison—prisoners need to be visited above all others, as they are commonly solitary, and forsaken by the rest of the world"—WESLEY.

37. Then shall the righteous answer. "It cannot be that either the righteous or the wicked should answer in these very words. What we learn herefrom is, that neither of them have the same estimation of their own works as the Judge hath"—WESLEY.

"The manner in which the case was put, as though they had ministered to the Lord Himself personally, excites their astonishment; and their modest forgetfulness of their own works, and the total absence of all idea of merit from their minds, rendering what was said more mysterious than it would otherwise have been, are circumstances finely touched; and with infinite skill they are made to give the greater force to the affecting truth, that what is done for the relief and comfort of persons in penury, sickness, and trouble, He regards as done to Himself"—R. W.

40. One of the least of these My brethren. (Ch. 10. 40.) Love to Christ where He is known, showing itself in acts of benevolence to His followers who need them; and love like Christ's, where His name has not been heard, manifesting itself in acts of personal service which require the denial of self for the sake of others, are the all-inclusive evidence that they belong to Him. "Those who restrain the term 'brethren' to poor and destitute Christians, have no warrant from the words or from the scope of the discourse. To narrow up the obligations of beneficence to those of our own faith would have been rather in the spirit of Judaism than according to the liberal and expansive genius of Christianity; and it would greatly tend to that were we taught to consider that those acts of mercy which are done 'to the household of faith' are the only works of that kind which shall be noticed and rewarded at the last day. The term 'brethren' is therefore to be taken in its largest sense for all mankind. By taking upon Him our nature, Christ became the Brother of every man, and even in His exalted and glorified state recognised us under that relation"—R. W.

41. Depart from Me, ye cursed. Not cursed "of My Father" (ver. 34). "All man's salvation is of God; all His condemnation from himself; there is election to life, but there is no reprobation to death; a 'Book of Life,' but no Book of Death; no hell for man—because the blood of Jesus hath purchased life for all. But they who will serve the devil must share with him in the end"—A.

44. When saw we Thee, etc. "So the endeavour to justify themselves will remain with the wicked even to that day!"—WESLEY.

If we had seen and known Thee we would have gladly done the omitted good deeds!

46. Into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal. (R.V. "eternal punishment . . . eternal life.") "Either therefore the punishment is strictly eternal, or the reward is not; the very same expression being applied to the former as to the latter. The Judge will speak first to the righteous, in the audience of the wicked. The wicked shall then go away into everlasting fire in the view of the righteous. Thus the damned shall see nothing of the everlasting life; but the just will see the punishment of the ungodly. It is not only particularly observable here—(1) that the punishment lasts as long as the reward; but (2) that this punishment is so far from ceasing at the end of the world, that it does not begin till then"—WESLEY. (See Dan. 12. 2; John 5. 28, 29; Rom 2. 7.)

CHAPTER XXVI.

Vers. 1–5. THE RULERS IN COUNCIL AGAINST CHRIST. (Mark 14. 1, 2; Luke 22. 1, 2.)—1. Finished all these sayings. All His discourses as a public Teacher, more especially since His triumphal entry into the city. (Ch. 21. 23–25, 46.) "When He had spoken all He had to speak. Till then He would not enter upon His Passion; then He would delay it no longer"—WESLEY.

He had much precious instruction to give His apostles in private (John 14. 16); but His public teaching was at an end, and He now calmly gave Himself up to die "for our sins according to the Scriptures" (1 Cor. 15. 3). It was now late on Tuesday evening; according to Jewish reckoning Wednesday had already begun; and Jesus was returning with His apostles to His nightly abode on the Mount of Olives (Luke 21. 37), or over Olivet into the village of Bethany.

2. After two days—that is, the day after the morrow—is the feast of the Passover. The paschal lamb was slain on the fourteenth day of the first month, originally called Abib, Ears of Corn (Lev. 23. 5, 6; Num. 28. 16); but now, and ever since the Captivity, called Nisan (Neh. 2. 1). And the Son of Man is betrayed to be crucified. "The solemn mention of these events in this connection is equivalent to a declaration from Himself, if it were needed, of the identity, both of time and meaning, of the two sacrifices"—A. For the history of the institution of this greatest of the festivals, see Ex. 12. 1–14. "The manner wherein it was celebrated gives much light to several circumstances that follow. The master of the family began the feast with a cup of wine which, having solemnly blessed, he divided among the guests (Luke 22. 17). Then the supper began with the unleavened bread and bitter herbs which, when they had all tasted, one of the young persons present, according to Ex. 12. 26, asked the reason of the solemnity. This introduced the showing forth, or declaration of it; in allusion to which we read of 'showing forth the Lord's death' (1 Cor. 11. 26). Then the master rose up, and took another cup, before the lamb was tasted. After supper, he took a thin loaf, or cake, which he broke, and divided to all at the table; and likewise the cup, usually called the cup of thanksgiving, of which he drank first, and then all the guests. It was this bread and this cup which our Lord consecrated to be a standing memorial of His death"—WESLEY.

3. Then assembled together the chief priests—the principal actors—and the scribes, and the elders of the people—"heads of families. These together constituted the Sanhedrim, or great Council, which had the supreme authority both in civil and ecclesiastical affairs"—WESLEY.

Unto the palace (R.V. "the court") of the high priest. It may be inferred from this mention of the place of meeting—the court, or open space, round which the house of the high priest was built, that "this was not a regular session of the Sanhedrim, but probably only a private meeting of some of its members. Who was called Caiaphas. He was made high priest by the Roman governor who preceded Pilate. The high priesthood had long ceased to be hereditary in the line of Aaron. Annas, the father-in-law of Caiaphas, had been high priest, and still retained the title. (John 18. 13; Acts 4. 6.)

4. Take Jesus by subtilty—as they should find opportunity in the course of events. Even this they had already tried in various forms (ch. 22. 22, 46), and had been openly defeated. Now they are roused to more vigilant and desperate effort.

5. Not on the feast day—that is, as in R.V. "not during the feast," meaning the whole succeeding period of seven days—lest there be an uproar among the people—a reference chiefly to the multitudes of Galilean pilgrims, whose sympathy with Him they feared. (Luke 22. 2.) "This was the result of human wisdom. But when Judas came they changed their purpose. So the counsel of God took place, and the true Paschal Lamb was offered up on the great day of the paschal solemnity"—WESLEY.

"The whole was overruled by Heaven to accomplish its own purposes; which were, not that Christ should be put to death privately by assassination, or even by regular trial, when there should be comparatively few to witness His death, and the strange signs which accompanied it; but that there should be multitudes of witnesses of this event, that it should take place when many thousands of Jews and proselytes from all parts were assembled at Jerusalem, and that the account both of His crucifixion and resurrection should be transmitted by these means to distant places"—R. W.

Vers. 6–13. THE ANOINTING AT BETHANY. (Mark 14. 3–9; John 12. 1–8.)—6. Now when Jesus was in Bethany—namely, as we learn from John, "six days before the Passover." The paragraphs in the beginning of this chapter come in regular sequence. Thus: Jesus announces His approaching Passion; the chief priests, etc., meet and plot His capture, but not during the feast, but "when Jesus was in Bethany, etc., occasion was given for an offer to be made to them, which led to its being effected after all during the feast"—A. Thus we are carried back to the evening of our Lord's last Sabbath on earth, Saturday, Nisan 9. Simon the leper. Now of course healed, and probably by our Lord.

7. A woman—Mary, the sister of Lazarus, not the woman spoken of in Luke 7. 36-50, though it may be with her example in mind. An alabaster box—(R.V. "cruse or flask")—of very precious ointment. (Mark and John, "ointment of spikenard, very costly.") "At Alabastron in Egypt there was a manufactory of small vases for holding perfumes, which were made from a stone found in the neighbouring mountains. The Greeks gave to these vases the name of the city from which they came, calling them alabastrons. At length the term alabaster was applied without distinction to all perfume vessels of whatever material they consisted. The special kind of ointment named by the Evangelists nard, or spikenard, was extracted from the blossoms of the Indian and Arabian nard-grass"—C. B. The meaning of the syllable spike is uncertain, but is most probably genuine or pure. And poured it on His head. Anointing the head of an honoured guest was not unusual. (Ps. 23. 5; Luke 7. 46.) But John records that "she also anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped His feet with her hair, and the house was filled with the odour of the ointment." "The action was remarkable as done, not by the host, but by Mary the sister of Lazarus, one of the guests, and also from the very valuable kind of unction made use of, and the abundance which she poured, not only on our Lord's sacred head, but also on His feet. The whole was the result of Mary's fervent affection for her Lord and Master"—R. W.

8. They had indignation. S. Mark says indefinitely, "some of them"; and S. John, speaking from his personal knowledge and anxious that the unworthy murmuring should be assigned to the right person, says plainly, "Judas Iscariot." Probably the complaint originated with him, and some of the others concurred in it.

9. Might have been sold for much—(Mark and John, "For more than three hundred pence")—that is, more than about £10. And given to the poor. John adds the sad explanation, "Not that he cared for the poor, but because he was a thief, and had the bag"—for which the funds of the little company were kept; "and bare"—probably meaning, as suggested in the R.V., "took away," or stole. "The question has been asked why the office which was itself a temptation was assigned to Judas? The answer, so far as an answer can be given, seems to lie in the nature of things. Temptation commonly comes to us through that for which we are naturally fitted. Judas had gifts of management, we may suppose, and so also the trial which comes through that habit of mind. The work gave him the opportunity of self-conquest"—S. C.

10. When Jesus understood it (R.V. "Jesus perceiving it"). The words imply that they had aimed to conceal their dissatisfaction from Him. He said unto them—not to Judas in particular, whom however He intended more especially to rebuke—Why trouble ye the woman?—why disturb her mind by insinuating scruples of right or fitness? For she hath wrought a good work upon Me. Thus our Lord indirectly assures her that He graciously accepts her act of devotion, and estimates its value by its motive. S. Mark records the additional words, "She hath done what she could"—(comp. Mark 12. 44)—she has seized the fleeting opportunity to testify her grateful love.

11. For ye have the poor always with you. (Deut. 15. 11.) "And whenever ye will, ye may do them good" (Mark). "Such is the wise and gracious providence of God, that ye may have always opportunities of relieving their wants, and so laying up for yourselves treasures in heaven"—WESLEY.

12. She did it for My burial. (2 Chron. 16. 14.) (R.V. "to prepare Me for My burial")—"as it were for the embalming of My body. Indeed, this was not her design; but our Lord puts this construction upon it, to confirm thereby what He had before said to His disciples concerning His approaching death"—WESLEY.

It is not improbable, however, that the thought of His burial was actually in her mind, for she must have heard of our Lord's repeated announcement of His approaching death.

13. Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached, etc. "The only case in which our Lord has made such a promise. We cannot but be struck with the majesty of this prophetic announcement, introduced with the peculiar and weighty, Verily I say unto you—conveying by implication the whole mystery of the good tidings which should go forth from His death as its source; looking forward to the end of time, when it shall have been preached in the whole world, and specifying the fact that this deed should be recorded wherever it is preached"—A. Told for a memorial of her. "Hers was in truth an everlasting deed, bound up in the immortality and unchanging endurance of the imperishable record in which it is commemorated, not for her sake only, but to show in how benign and condescending a manner our blessed Lord accepts everything which is done from an affectionate regard to Him as our Teacher and Redeemer, and to honour Him in the presence of the world. The lovely picture of simple and elevated piety in Mary stands for ever in the record, for the imitation of all. Docility, attention, spirituality, and affection are its characteristics"—R. W.

Vers. 14-16. THE FIRST DEED OF TREACHERY. (Mark 14. 10, 11; Luke 22. 3-6.)—14. Then—probably at the very time of the conference in the court of Caiaphas (vers. 3-5.)—one of the Twelve, called Judas Iscariot—(see on ch. 10, 4)—went unto the chief priests—when consulting with the scribes and others how they might take Jesus by stratagem to put Him to death. S. Mark and S. Luke add, "And they were glad." It was of all things what they most desired, since it was an offer to deliver Him into their hands quietly, "in the absence of the multitude."

15. What will ye give me? His uppermost thought and feeling at that moment. How much he expected we cannot conjecture; but they suggested, and he agreed to take, a sum the very mention of which ought to have thrilled his soul with horror. And they covenanted with him (R.V. "weighed unto him") thirty pieces of silver. The term which the Evangelist uses alludes to the ancient custom of paying money in weight, and also to the prophecy of Zechariah. (Zech. 11. 12, 13; comp. Matt. 27. 9.) The sum specified, "thirty silver shekels," less than four pounds of our money, was the price of a slave. (Ex. 21. 32.) "The Lord was, so to speak, paid for out of the Temple money, which was destined for the purchase of sacrifices; and He who took on Him the form of a servant was sold at the legal price of a slave"—ED. S. Luke introduces the account with the words, "Then entered Satan into Judas." "No other expression seems adequately to explain his wickedness. It began in avarice, disappointment, and jealousy; and when he had long weakened his soul by indulgence in these dark besetting sins, the imaginary loss of the three hundred pence of which he would have had the disposal (John 12. 4, 5; Mark 14. 10), the now undisguised announcement of our Lord that He should be not only rejected, but crucified, the consequent shattering of all messianic hopes, the growing sense that he was becoming distasteful to his Master and his fellows, the open rebuke which he had drawn on his own head by his hypocritic greed at Bethany (John 12. 6), the rumoured hostility of all the most venerated authorities of the nation,—all these formed the climax of his temptation; and then, at last, the tempting opportunity met the susceptible disposition"—C. B.

Vers. 17-30. THE LAST SUPPER. (Mark 14. 12-26; Luke 22. 3-38.)—17. Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread. "Being Thursday, the fourteenth day of the first month (Ex. 12. 6, 15)"—WESLEY.

It began after sunset on Wednesday the 13th. S. Mark adds, "when they killed" (R.V. "sacrificed") "the Passover," and S. Luke, "when the Passover must be killed" (R.V. "sacrificed"). (Comp. 1 Cor. 5. 7, "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us.") The feast began legally on the 15th (Ex. 12. 18, 19; Lev. 23. 5, 6), and ended on the 21st. But as all leaven was carefully collected and destroyed before noon of the 14th, that came to be popularly called "the first day of unleavened bread." Where wilt Thou that we prepare? This would include the killing of the lamb in the court of the Temple, and the procuring of the "unleavened bread," as well as the preparation of the room.

18. Go into the city to such a man. This expression is evidently substituted by the Evangelist for our Lord's definite indication, as recorded by the other Evangelists. The man's name is not mentioned, possibly lest Judas should know the place of meeting and inform the members of the Sanhedrim. S. Mark says that our Lord addressed His instructions to "two of His disciples," and S. Luke states that they were "Peter and John," joining these two together as His messengers now for the first time. (Comp. Acts 3. 1.) The chosen two were told that as they entered the city a man would meet them "bearing a pitcher of water"—a thing rarely to be seen in the East, where the carrying of water is the work of women; that they were to follow him into the house into which he entered, and to say "to the goodman of the house, the Master saith, Where is the guest-chamber where I shall eat the Passover with My disciples?"—a form of demand which seems to imply that it had been already bespoken by our Lord; so does also the solemn announcement which probably preceded it. My time is at hand—the time of His sufferings and death, though neither the man so addressed, evidently a disciple of Christ, nor the two apostles, could have known the true meaning of the words. I will keep the Passover at thy house. Unspeakable distinction! Was it conferred on Joseph of Arimathea or on the father of S. Mark the Evangelist? The latter is highly probable. (See Acts 12. 13, 14.) But we may say with confidence that whoever may have been "the goodman" of that house, his chosen guest-chamber would have, for the apostolic company, the tenderest and deepest sacredness, and would naturally be the upper room in which they spent the ten days of prayer and waiting after the Ascension. (Acts 1. 13, 14.)

20. Now when the even was come—a plain indication of the usual time (Ex. 12. 8), namely, considerably after sunset—He sat down—reclined: "for the recumbent posture at meals, and even at the paschal supper, had long been introduced, although the Israelites were at first commanded to eat it standing, with staffs in their hands, as persons setting out on a journey. The rabbins justified, and indeed enjoined, this departure from the original institution, on the ground that this recumbent posture was symbolical of that rest in the land of Canaan, to which the Israelites at first were but setting out, but which they had attained. With the Twelve. Judas, having transacted his infamous bargain with the chief priests, had taken his place with the rest, little reflecting that he and all his secret negotiations were well under the eye of his omniscient Master"—R. W.

21. And as they did eat. This would be when, after the first cup, they had all washed their hands, as was the invariable usage; and when probably the feet-washing had taken place, as recorded by John (13. 5); when also the first part of the Hallel (O praise, Pss. 113, 114) had been sung, the customary account of the institution of the feast had been given (see on ver. 2), and, with this, the instruction on the symbolical washing of the feet (John 13. 12–20). Then Jesus "was troubled in spirit" (John), and said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray Me.

22. And they were exceeding sorrowful—filled with consternation; so much so that, as they gazed on the signs of their Master's grief, they also "looked" involuntarily "one on another" (John)—and began every one of them to say unto Him, Lord, is it I?

23. He that dippeth his hand with Me in the dish—"probably the vessel containing the sauce called Charoseth, made of dates, figs, and other fruits, mixed with vinegar, into which the herbs, bread, and meat"—morsels of the lamb—"at the Passover, were dipped as they were eaten"—S. C. Judas is not yet particularly pointed out. Our Lord's words are to be understood as a general intimation that one who ate with Him as a friend would be His betrayer. S. John reports another answer as whispered to himself in reply to his own whispered inquiry, "He it is, to whom I shall give a sop when I have dipped it."

24. The Son of Man goeth—"through sufferings to glory—as it is written of Him—yet this is no excuse for him that betrayeth Him; miserable will that man be. It had been good for that man if he had not been born. May not the same be said of every man that finally perishes? But who can reconcile this, if it were true of Judas alone, with the doctrine of universal salvation?"—WESLEY.

Prediction implies predetermination; and S. Luke says, "as it was determined." (Acts 2. 23; 4. 27, 28; Rev. 13. 8.) "It was predicted that He should die, and designed that He should die; but this did not excuse or palliate the acts of the instruments of His death. They followed freely their own will, and gratified their own malignity, and were therefore guilty of the most aggravated crime of religious persecution and murder which ever was or could be committed. Hence our Lord adds with respect to Judas, But woe unto that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed! for the foreknowledge of God cannot any more influence human actions, as foreknowledge, than afterknowledge. To know, is one thing; to influence and compel, another"—R. W.

25. Then Judas, which betrayed Him—after having held his peace until he saw that silence might create a suspicion of his guilt—answered and said, Master, is it I? He said unto him, Thou hast said—a Hebraism for "It is so as thou hast said." "This was probably spoken in a low voice, so that the rest did not distinctly hear it, like the answer of our Lord to John, when He pointed out the traitor; for, as when Judas went out as soon as he had received the sop, the other disciples thought, because he was the purse-bearer, that he was gone to procure things necessary for the feast; this would have been a most improbable supposition, had the words been uttered in their hearing. For the same reason we may conclude that what our Lord said to John when, upon the suggestion of Peter, he asked who should betray Him, was not only heard by the beloved disciple alone, but kept in His bosom, except that he might intimate it to Peter. That after this Judas should remain, and be present at the celebration of the Eucharist, is highly improbable. From S. John we learn that, as soon as he had received the sop, which was during the eating of the Passover, he went out"—R. W.

26. And as they were eating. Our Lord had, on the departure of the traitor, as if suddenly freed from a sense of constraint, burst forth in words of exultation. (John 13. 31, 32.) Then the meal was resumed; the great discourses and prayer in John (ch. 14–17) were spoken, and the third cup, or cup of blessing, was drunk. At this point our Lord instituted His own Supper. Jesus took bread. "The bread or cake which the master of the family used to divide among them, after they had eaten the Passover. This custom our Lord now transferred to a nobler use. This bread is—that is, signifies or represents—My body, according to the style of the sacred writers. Thus (Gen. 40. 12), 'The three branches are three days.' Thus (Gal. 4. 24) S. Paul, speaking of Sarah and Hagar, says, 'These are the two covenants.' Thus, in the grand type of our Lord (Ex. 12. 11), God says of the paschal lamb, 'This is the Lord's Passover.' Now Christ, substituting the Holy Communion for the Passover, follows the style of the Old Testament, and uses the same expressions the Jews were wont to use in celebrating the Passover"—WESLEY.

"Our Lord did not take the flesh of the paschal lamb and make that an element of His own institution. That was all previously eaten according to the Law, which He who came 'to fulfil all righteousness' was scrupulous to observe. Moreover, this might have appeared indicative that animal sacrifices were to be continued under the new dispensation; whereas His offering of Himself once for all abrogated them for ever. He therefore took bread, which, by calling it His body—that is, the emblem or sign of His body, GIVEN for us—preserved as explicitly the essential idea of the sacrificial nature of His death as if He had made the flesh of the paschal lamb the instituted sign"—R. W.

S. Luke adds, "Do this in remembrance of Me." S. Paul, who received the account, as he states, "from the Lord" Himself, gives the same words. (1 Cor. 11. 23–26.)

27. And He took the cup—"after supper"

(Luke). "The third and fourth cups were both taken after the conclusion of the meal,—the former immediately following the blessing after eating the paschal lamb, and was usually called 'the cup of blessing'"—S. C. (See Luke 22. 20; 1 Cor. 10. 16.)

28. This is My blood of the new testament (R.V. "new covenant"). (Acts 3. 25; Heb. 8. 6, 7; 9. 18–23.) This is the sign of My blood, whereby the new testament, or covenant, is confirmed. Which is shed for many—"as many as spring from Adam"—WESLEY. (See on ch. 20. 28.)

29. I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine till I drink it new with you in My Father's kingdom—"that is, I shall taste no more wine till I drink wine of quite another kind in the glorious kingdom of My Father. And of this you shall also partake with Me"—WESLEY.

30. And when they had sung an hymn—the usual hymn, the second part of the Hallel (Pss. 115–118)—He went out into the Mount of Olives—"as He was wont" (Luke 21. 37) during the whole of that awful week. (See John 18. 2.)

Vers. 31–35. PETER'S DENIAL FORETOLD. (Mark 14. 26–31; Luke 22. 32–34.)—31. Then saith Jesus. Most probably as they were on their way to Gethsemane. Our Lord had warned Peter of his approaching failure, but without specifying the time, before they left the upper room. (Luke 22. 31; John 13. 38.) Now He repeats the warning, but first speaks of the flight of the whole company. All ye shall be offended—or caused to stumble. "Something shall happen to Me which will occasion your falling into sin by forsaking Me"—WESLEY.

For it is written (Zech. 13. 7), I will smite the Shepherd. "In the former part of the text quoted by our Lord, He against whom the sword of God is summoned to awake is called My Shepherd, which indeed might apply to any ruler raised up by Him to rule His people the Jews; but when this Shepherd is called THE FELLOW of the Lord of Hosts, no one can be intended but Him who was equal with God, and yet, by becoming Man and a Substitute for guilty men, voluntarily exposed Himself to the sword of the rectoral justice of God, to make atonement for the sins of the world. With the smiting of the Shepherd the prophet connects the scattering of the sheep; and the event, both in time and manner, signally answers to the prophecy—when our Lord was apprehended, all the disciples forsook Him and fled"—R. W.

32. "But—notwithstanding this—after I am risen, I will go before you (as a shepherd before his sheep) into Galilee"—WESLEY.

This allusion to leading like a shepherd (John 10. 4) follows very naturally the words cited. The flock would be scattered, but gathered to the Good Shepherd again. (Ch. 28. 7, 16; Mark 16. 6, 7; 1 Cor. 15. 6.)

33. Peter answered and said, etc. "He said this in great sincerity: the genuineness of Peter's attachment to his Master, and the fulness of his conviction that He was the true Messiah, were equally undoubted. But he knew not himself fully, nor the power of strong temptation upon over-confident and unwatchful minds. Judas' sin was deliberate, Peter's a sin of surprise; Judas' the result of an habitual state of heart, Peter's was an act contrary to his habitual feelings and principles. Judas' fall produced nothing upon reflection but despair and horror, all gracious feelings having been extinguished by avarice; but Peter's fall awoke the sorrows of a generous and affectionate nature, which, but in this sad instance of the effect of sudden fear, had never wavered in its clear and simple devotedness to his beloved Master. No characters could be more unlike; as contrary to each other, indeed, as their respective ends"—R. W.

34. Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny Me thrice—"that is, before three in the morning, the usual time of cock-crowing; although one cock was heard to crow once after Peter's first denial of his Lord"—WESLEY.

S. Mark says, giving the words of our Lord more exactly, "This day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice." "The Jews, in reckoning their days, began with the evenings, according to the Mosaic computation, which called the evening and the morning the first day (Gen 1. 5). And so that which, after sunset, is here called 'this night,' is (Mark 14. 30) called to-day. The expression there is peculiarly significant: 'Verily I say to thee, that thou' thyself, confident as thou art, 'to-day,' even within four-and-twenty hours; yea, 'this night,' or ever the sun be risen; nay, 'before the cock crow twice,' before three in the morning, 'wilt deny Me thrice.' Our Lord doubtless spake so determinately, as knowing a cock would crow once before the usual time of cock-crowing. By Mark 13. 35, it appears that the third watch of the night, ending at three in the morning, was commonly styled the cock-crowing"—WESLEY.

35. Though I should die with Thee (S. Mark, "he spake the more vehemently")—probably in vivid remembrance of the warning given to him so specially and tenderly before the departure from the upper chamber (Luke 22. 31, 32)—Yet will I not deny Thee. Likewise also said all His disciples. "But such was the tenderness of our Lord that He would not aggravate their sin by making any reply"—WESLEY.

36. A place (R.V. Margin, "or enclosed piece of ground") called Gethsemane—that is, oil-press. S. John describes it as "a garden" over the brook, or ravine, usually dry, called Kedron; and adds, that Judas "knew the place, for Jesus ofttimes resorted thither with His disciples" (ch. 18. 2). It was a secluded olive-orchard, containing a press to crush the berry and express the oil, probably belonging to some disciple of Christ. "He might retire to this private place, not only for the advantage of secret devotion, but also that the people might not be alarmed at His apprehension; nor attempt, in the first sallies of their zeal, to rescue Him in a tumultuous manner. Kedron was (as the name signifies) a dark, shady valley, on the east side of Jerusalem, between the city and the Mount of Olives; through which a little brook ran, which took its name from it. It was this brook which David, a type of Christ, went over, with the people weeping, in his flight from Absalom"—WESLEY.

Saith unto the disciples (eight of them), Sit ye here—at the entrance to the garden, as if to watch, and give timely notice of the approach of conspirators.

37. And he took with Him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee—James and John. These who had been witnesses of the peculiar manifestations of His glory are now to witness some signs of His unknown anguish. And began to be sorrowful (S. Mark, "to be sore amazed") and very heavy. "The former word in the original properly signifies, to be penetrated with the most exquisite sorrow; the latter, to be quite depressed, and almost overwhelmed with the load"—WESLEY.

38. My soul—the seat of human affections, of man's inward joys and sorrows, as distinguished from the spirit—man's higher spiritual being, and the seat of religious affections. Our Lord's appropriation of this term is a declaration of His complete oneness with our nature. He had used it only once previously, and then in anticipation of the terror and anguish which had now seized Him (John 12. 27). Is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death—meaning most certainly, that His "soul was crushed down even to death by the weight of that anguish which lay upon Him, and that literally; so that He (as regards His humanity) would have died had not strength (bodily strength, upholding the human frame) been manifested from on high by an angel"—A. Tarry ye here, and watch with Me. These three were His few most trusted friends, and, feeble and faithless though they were, He would have them near Him for the comfort and support which their presence as His friends would afford. Observe His charge to them is, "Watch with Me"; He could not add, and pray with Me. For He must "tread the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with Him" (Isa. 63. 3). "The prospect of death could not cause Him to suffer thus, when He knew that in less than three days He was to be restored to life, and to be brought into an eternity of blessedness. His agony and distress can receive no consistent explanation but on this ground—He SUFFERED, the JUST for the UNJUST, that He might bring US to GOD. O glorious truth! O infinitely meritorious suffering! And O, above all, the eternal love, that caused Him to undergo such sufferings for the sake of sinners!"—C.

39. And He went a little farther—(S. Luke, "about a stone's cast"), so that He was still within sight and hearing of the three; and—first, "He kneeled down" (Luke)—then fell on His face, and prayed, saying, O My Father—the only occasion on which He ever thus used the personal pronoun, "My" Father—if it be possible, let this cup (ch. 20. 22; John 18. 11) pass from Me. He does not pray that the cup of death might be withheld or averted, but that "this cup," then put into His hands, that which He was then drinking, "might pass away from Him." "S. Mark expresses the same thing without a figure. 'He prayed that if it were possible, the hour might pass from Him,' clearly meaning that the duration of His sufferings might be shortened. And S. Luke, still uttering precisely the same idea in somewhat varied phrase, states the prayer of Jesus to be, 'If Thou be willing, remove this cup from Me.' Mightily as He had been strengthened to suffer, He was sinking under a deadly anguish, and prayed that, 'if it were possible,' if it were consistent with the Divine purpose, if it could be done without impairing the efficacy of His atonement and vicarious undertaking, that bitter cup, that cup of trembling and horror, might pass away from Him, yet with entire submission, leaving it to His Father to judge of the fitness of the request"—R. W. "And it did pass away from Him quickly. When He 'cried unto God with strong cries and tears, He was heard in that He feared.' God did take away the terror and severity of that inward conflict"—WESLEY.

For S. Luke adds, "There appeared an angel unto Him from heaven, strengthening Him"—as after the temptation in the wilderness (ch. 4. 11). Of course, bodily support only is intended.) "And His sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground"—added with reference to the entire struggle, and as if to account for the visit of the angel.

40, 41. Saith unto Peter—addressing him, as mentioned by S. Mark, by his proper name, "Simon"; for he did not show himself to be a "Peter" now—What, could ye not watch with Me one hour? Possibly an expression of disappointment, and a gentle chiding, but more probably an utterance of affection and pity; for He added—The spirit indeed is willing—"your spirit; ye yourselves—but the flesh—your nature. How gentle a rebuke was this, and how kind an apology, especially at a time when our Lord's own mind was so weighed down with sorrow"—WESLEY.

42. If this cup may not pass away. Words of composure and meek resignation. Some part of the anguish had already passed away.

43. And He came and found them asleep again. S. Luke adds the explanation, "sleeping for sorrow." "They knew not the full extent of His griefs: He separated Himself from them, but they could not be unobservant of His trouble; and He might not be so far distant but that in the stillness of the night they might hear His 'strong crying,' and when He returned to them after each part of the mighty conflict, might observe His 'tears.' They at least so far knew the moving and mysterious cause as to partake so deeply of His sorrows that their animal spirits were exhausted, through the mixed and painful emotions which oppressed them, and they were thus the more readily overpowered with sleep. All this He knew; and a kind excuse seemed to be called for, by a fault into which they were in part led by the strength of their affection for their Master"—R. W.

45. Sleep on now. I have need no longer of your wakefulness. The period of conflict is passed. Behold, the hour is at hand—that supreme hour of which He had so often spoken; as if Judas and the band had at that moment come into sight. The Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. Not here "sinners of the Gentiles." The sinners were those who had dared to oppose themselves to His holy character and gracious ministry.

Vers. 47–56. THE BETRAYAL (1 A.M.) (Mark 14. 43–50; Luke 22. 47–53; John 18. 3–11.)—47. Lo, Judas, one of the Twelve. So also the other Evangelists speak of him, as if with a shudder of horror. With him a great multitude—which was composed of Roman soldiers, Jewish guards of the Temple, with their captain, certain members of the Sanhedrim, with their servants, and others. (John 18. 3; Luke 22. 52.) With swords and staves. S. John mentions also "lanterns and torches," although the moon was full, as though with desperate determination to provide against any possibility of concealment. They clearly had some vague expectation of having to meet with resistance, attempt to escape, or, it may be, some show of superhuman power.

48. Gave them a sign. S. Mark, "had given them a sign" previously; little anticipating that their Victim would come forward in meek majesty to meet them. Saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss—the customary token of friendship and of homage. (Prov. 24. 26; Ps. 2. 12.) This would be agreed upon for the guidance of the Roman soldiers more especially, for the Jewish officials and chief priests would probably know Him personally. That same is He: hold Him fast—words of caution, which imply an apprehension of flight, or the putting forth of marvellous power in some such manner as Judas would have in vivid remembrance.

49. Hail, Master (R.V. "Hail, Rabbi"), and kissed Him. The Greek word is emphatic, meaning, as given in the margin of the R.V. "kissed Him much," or fervently (hypocrisy, as usual, overacting its part).

50. Friend—or "companion," as in ch. 20. 13; 22. 12—wherefore art thou come? And against whom? "Against Him whom thou hast acknowledged as thy Master and Lord, followed as His disciple, receiving the benefit of His instructions, and by whom thou hast been placed among the number of His friends, and raised to the rank of an apostle; art thou come against HIM?"—R. W. (S. Luke, "Betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss?") This reproachful appeal seems to have suddenly roused in the traitor a sense of guilt and shame, and he shrank back into the ranks of the multitude he led. Then Jesus, confronting them with calm dignity, "said unto them, Whom seek ye? They answered Him" (using His popular designation at the time), "Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am He." "The heroic behaviour of the blessed Jesus, in the whole period of His sufferings, will be observed by every attentive eye, and felt by every pious heart; although the sacred historians, according to their usual but wonderful simplicity, make no encomiums upon it. With what composure does He go forth to meet the traitor! With what calmness receive that malignant kiss! With what dignity does He deliver Himself into the hands of His enemies; yet plainly showing His superiority over them, and even then 'leading,' as it were, 'captivity captive'!"—WESLEY.

This unlooked-for self-surrender and meek boldness filled them with profound veneration and awe. "As soon," S. John continues, "as He had said unto them, I am He, they went backward, and fell to the ground." They retreated from Him as by an involuntary impulse, then fell in deepest reverence at His feet. (Job 1. 20.) Cowered and perplexed, they rose and stood before Him, and "Judas stood with them"; and in order to restore their confidence, He repeated the question, "Whom seek ye? And they said" (not Thee, as might have been expected, but again), "Jesus of Nazareth." And now, His poor people and terrified apostles gathering near to Him, He added, as He serenely confronted the somewhat quailed but resolute company of captors, "I have told you that I am He; if therefore ye seek Me, let these go their way." Was it for the purpose of shielding them that He had advanced alone to meet His foes? Or was it to show them how entirely the act of giving Himself up was the act of His own holy will and purpose? (John 10. 18.) The Apostle John finds in it a fulfilment of the saying, spoken only an hour or two previously, "Of them which Thou gavest Me have I lost none" (ch. 17. 12). This was "one fulfilment, but neither the only nor the chief fulfilment, of what the Lord had said of His effective guardianship of those given to Him"—S. C. "In its deepest sense, this saying, in which He devotes Himself, and sets us free, shadows out the entire significance of the atoning sufferings;

He, and He alone, is made the Victim, that we may go free"—S.

51. One of them which were with Jesus—namely, as might have been conjectured, "Simon Peter" (John)—struck a servant of the high priest's—whose "name was Malchus" (John)—"probably the person that seized Jesus first—and smote off his ear—aiming, it seems, to cleave his head; but that, by a secret providence interposing, the blow was turned aside"—WESLEY.

From S. Luke we learn that Jesus "touched his ear," which may not have been completely cut away, "and healed him." This appears to have been our Lord's last miracle.

52. All they that take the sword—"without God's giving it them; without sufficient authority"—WESLEY.

Shall perish with the sword. (Rev. 13. 10.) A general saying, with particular application to Peter. His life, had not our Lord interposed by an act of miraculous healing, would have been forfeited, and might have perished "by the sword." "But our Lord manifestly designed to teach that injuries for the sake of religion are not to be repelled by retaliative violence, but submitted to with patience; and that His cause was not to be maintained or promoted by the strifes of an earthly warfare, or by civil coercion: 'If My kingdom were of this world, then would My servants fight'; words which show that such as is the nature of the kingdom are the means by which it is appropriately upheld and maintained. In both these views the lesson was most important. The doom of persecuting churches and persecutors is here forewritten by Him who, from the first, disclaimed such officious disciples, even when so far sincere as to believe they were 'doing God service.' 'They that take the sword shall perish with the sword'; by the awakened vengeance, often, of injured communities debarred of the rights of conscience, or the slower but still certain vengeance of Him who especially abhors all zeal which is not animated by the mild flame of charity"—R. W.

53. Shall presently (R.V. "even now") give Me more than twelve legions of angels. The number "twelve" may possibly have alluded to Himself and the eleven apostles. A legion consisted of about six thousand men.

54. That thus it must be. (Isa. 53. 7; Luke 24. 25–46; Heb. 2. 10.) How strangely different was the true tenor of Old Testament teaching concerning the Messiah, from that of pharisaic traditionalism! John records another of our Lord's sublime sayings on this occasion, manifesting the same union of Divine majesty with perfect submission and patience; showing also by an allusion to His prayer in the agony—"O My Father, let this cup pass from Me"—how perfectly His will and that of the Father was one. "The cup which My Father hath given Me, shall I not drink it?"

55. Said Jesus to the multitudes—directing His appeal more particularly to "the chief priests, and captains of the Temple, and the elders" (Luke), who appeared to have now only presented themselves when their Victim had been securely captured, and danger was no longer to be apprehended—Are ye come out as against a thief? (R.V. "a robber")—a brigand who sought concealment from justice, and was ready to defend himself with violence.

56. That the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. It appears from S. Mark's briefer record, "But the Scripture must be fulfilled," that this was a continuation of our Lord's address to the chief priests. S. Luke gives the additional words, "But now is your hour and the power of darkness." A short and illusive triumph! Then all the disciples—including even Peter and John, though they followed at a distance—forsook Him and fled. So soon did He realise that which was distinctly before Him when He said, "Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come . . . when ye shall . . . leave Me alone—and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with Me."

Vers. 57–68. BEFORE ANNAS AND CAIAPHAS (2 A.M.). (Mark 14. 53–65; Luke 22. 54; John 18. 12–14; 19. 1–23.)—57. Led Him away to Caiaphas the high priest. S. John says, "To Annas first, for he was father-in-law to Caiaphas;" and that the aged and sagacious ex-high priest subjected Him to an informal examination respecting His disciples and His teaching. Annas, though deposed from the office of high priest, retained all the authority of the office, and probably continued to preside over the Sanhedrim. (Acts 4 6.) The result of a private preliminary inquiry before him would necessarily have a powerful influence on the decision of the council, which was then hastily coming together. S. John, who was present at this audience (ch. 18. 15), is the only one of the Evangelists who gives any account of it. "Annas," he says, "sent Jesus," after this unofficial examination, "bound unto Caiaphas; where"—in whose chamber—"the scribes and the elders were assembled." S. Mark mentions "the chief priests" also; and that, although it was deep night, and the meeting was quite irregular, the Sanhedrim was present in its completeness. Virtually, this was the trial of our Lord before the Jewish authorities, and the more regular trial which followed at daybreak (ch. 27. 1; Luke 22. 66–71) only gave form and validity to its decisions.

58. Peter followed Him afar off. S. John adds, "And so did another disciple" (no doubt John himself). After the general panic Peter so far regained his self-possession that, accompanied by his friend, he ventured to follow at a distance. "Variously agitated by conflicting passions: love constrained him to follow his Master; fear made him follow afar off"—WESLEY.

Unto the high priest's palace (R.V. "Unto the court of the high priest"). The open quadrangular court surrounded by chambers. "We may suppose that in this court was the entrance to the room in which our Lord was examined before Annas, and also into that in which Caiaphas and the Sanhedrim met"—S. C. The entrance from the street was through a passage or porch (ver. 71). (Mark 14. 68.) Annas and Caiaphas probably resided in different parts of the same large building.

59. Sought false witness against Jesus. Notwithstanding that, according to the Talmuds, or authorised collections of rabbinical rules and traditions, to procure false witnesses was a capital crime, and even to seek witnesses at all was unlawful. To put Him to death. To supply a ground of condemnation to death, the execution of the sentence being left to the Roman governor. (John 18. 31.)

60. But found none—"on whose evidence they could condemn Him to die. At the last came two false witnesses. Such they were, although part of what they said was true; because our Lord did not speak some of those words at all, nor any of them in this sense"—WESLEY.

61. I am able to destroy the temple of God (S. Mark, "I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands"). It is clear from this definite reference to the material Temple that they intentionally misrepresented our Lord's words (John 2. 19), and that they aimed to convict Him of having spoken slightingly of the Temple, which they held to be constructive blasphemy (Acts 6. 13); and to have asserted superhuman power, which was also blasphemous. Yet, that His real meaning was generally understood may be sufficiently inferred from the representation to Pilate after His death. (Ch. 27. 63.)

63. But Jesus held His peace. He would say nothing in reply to an accusation which the judges and witnesses alike secretly felt to be insincere. "He knew that the wisdom of God had appointed that He should be found guilty upon a charge which was in fact the great truth by which He was glorified, namely, that He professed to be the Son of God; and His silence wholly baffled the intention of the high priest, who evidently was not quite bold enough to pronounce sentence upon so vague a charge without fortifying it by what he might draw forth from our Lord Himself. To that charge therefore our Lord answered nothing; and the high priest wholly quits it in order to question Him upon a higher and graver matter"—R. W. I adjure Thee by the living God. This was the formula used for putting witnesses on their oath; and the only allowable answer was, Yea, or Nay. That Thou tell us whether Thou be the Christ, the Son of God. (Ch. 14. 33; 16. 16; comp. Ps. 2. 7.) The latter term, affirming His personal dignity, was the great foundation of the charge of blasphemy.

64. Thou hast said (S. Mark, "I am"), Hereafter (R.V. "Henceforth") shall ye see the Son of Man. "He speaks in the third person, modestly, and yet plainly. Our Lord looked very unlike the Person represented by Daniel (ch. 7. 13, 14) now; but nothing could be more awful, more majestic and becoming, than such an admonition in such circumstances"—WESLEY. (Comp. ch. 16. 27; 24. 30; 25. 31.)

"The words refer more especially to our Lord's final coming, but include all that is implied in His 'coming in His kingdom' from the day of His ascension. Indeed, His glorification is 'said by Himself to begin with His betrayal' (John 13. 31). 'Henceforth'—from this time—from the accomplishment of this trial now proceeding. In what follows, the whole process of the triumph of the Lord Jesus even till the end is contained. Shall ye see—ye, the representatives of the chosen people so soon to be judged by Him to whom all judgment is committed; sitting—even as they now sat to judge Him—on the right hand of power—in contrast to His present weakness—and coming in the clouds of heaven—looks onward to the awful time of the end when every eye shall see Him"—A.

65. Then the high priest rent his clothes. "Though the high priest was forbidden to rend his clothes (that is, his upper garment) in some cases where others were allowed to do it (Lev. 21. 10); yet in case of blasphemy, or any public calamity, it was thought allowable. Caiaphas hereby expressed, in the most artful manner, his horror at hearing such grievous blasphemy"—WESLEY.

66. He is guilty of death. We concur in thy decision; His life is forfeited to the law. He was not now condemned in regular form, but from this moment He was looked upon as sentenced to death. Then—"after He had declared He was the Son of God, the Sanhedrim doubtless ordered Him to be carried out, while they were consulting what to do. And then it was that the soldiers who kept Him began these insults upon Him"—WESLEY.

This may be inferred from the record of S. Luke, "The men that held Jesus" (in custody) "mocked Him," etc. But S. Matthew gives no indication of who they were who inflicted the insults he describes, and S. Mark uses only the vague term "some." It is certain, however, that they acted with the full permission and approval of the council. Spit in His face—an expression of extreme contempt. (Num. 12. 14; Deut. 25. 9; comp. Isa. 50. 6.) Buffeted Him—struck Him with the fist. Smote Him with the palms of their hands—probably also with rods or sticks.

68. Prophesy unto us, Thou Christ—after having "blindfolded Him" (Luke)—Who is he that smote Thee? Such is the first affecting scene of our Lord's humiliation and passion. "One word, and His smiters might have been laid low in death. But as He had begun and continued, He would end—as self-restrained in the use of His awful powers on His own behalf as if He had been the most helpless of men—Divine patience and infinite love knew no wearying."

Vers. 69-75. PETER'S THREEFOLD DENIAL (between 2 and 5 A.M.) (Mark 14. 66–72; Luke 22. 55–62; John 18. 15–18, and 25–27.)

69. Now Peter sat without in the palace (R.V. "in the court"). (See on ver. 58.) "The first three Evangelists give the denials of Peter in a continuous narrative, which, as being distinct from, though contemporaneous with, the trial of our Lord, was a matter of indifference. It was also, as Macknight observes, optional whether it was related before or after our Lord's trial. The first two Evangelists narrate it after, S. Luke before; but 'S. John has preserved the exact order of the proceedings, beginning with the first denial, which happened immediately after Peter entered the court of the high priest's house, then giving the history of the trial as the principal fact, and concluding with the subsequent denials'"—R. W. S. John states that he himself gained admission into the court through his acquaintance with the high priest, and that Peter was admitted at his request; that it was cold, that "the servants" of the high priest, and the "officers" or Levitical guard, "kindled a fire," and that "Peter stood with them and warmed himself." And a damsel—"one of the maids of the high priest" (Mark), "earnestly looking upon him" (Luke)—came unto him, saying, Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee. Peter was thus taken by surprise. He became confused and distracted; his attention was divided between himself and his revered Master, standing at that moment before Annas and Caiaphas in the raised chamber opening upon the court; and he probably saw that the eyes of the men among whom he stood at the fire were turned sharply upon him as the woman put her startling question.

70. But He denied before them all, saying, I know not what thou sayest. But the woman refused to accept his professed ignorance of her meaning. She repeated her charge more emphatically, and said, now addressing the men who stood or sat by the fire, "This man was also with Him. And he denied Him, saying, Woman, I know Him not" (Luke). Miserably disconcerted, in dread of other questionings or charges, and at a loss how to support his false declarations, he quietly crept away, and stole towards the entrance, anxious perhaps, if he found the opportunity, to escape from the place altogether.

71. And when he was gone out into the porch—hesitating, perhaps, whether to go forward through the arched gateway into the lonely and silent street, or to linger a little longer in the embarrassing place and company in which he so distressingly found himself—just at that moment a neighbouring "cock crew" (Mark); which, if he heard and heeded it, must have added greatly to his perplexity. There also another maid saw him—a fellow-servant, no doubt, of the porteress who had admitted him, and with whom she had probably been gossiping—and said unto them that were there, This fellow was also with Jesus of Nazareth. The recognition, or fancied recognition, now became general; and "after a little while" (Luke), when Peter had ventured to creep back to the fire (John), one of the men said to him, "Thou also art one of them" (Luke); and another, "Art not thou also one of His disciples?" (John).

72. And again he denied with an oath—"to which possibly he was not unaccustomed before our Lord called him"—WESLEY.

73. And after a while. So also S. Mark. S. Luke says, "About the space of an hour after, came unto him they that stood by"—amongst them being a kinsman of Malchus, who identified him (John). And said to Peter, Surely thou also art one of them; for thy speech bewrayeth thee. The inquiries before Annas and Caiaphas being prolonged, and as no regular meeting of the Sanhedrim could take place before the early dawn, Peter had probably sought to divert attention from himself by entering with as much apparent composure as possible into conversation with the group around the fire. But he thus unwittingly supplied them with further means of detection. His speech proved him to be a Galilean, and confirmed them in the belief that he was one of the chosen followers of the Prisoner.

74. Then began he to curse—to invoke curses from heaven upon him if he did not speak the truth—and to swear—in the name of God—"having now quite lost the reins, the government of himself"—WESLEY.

And immediately the cock crew (S. Mark, "And the second time the cock crew"). "And at the fulfilment of this signal, we learn from S. Luke that 'the Lord turned and looked upon Peter.' The interior of the vestibule or hall in which our Lord was enduring His trial was within view of those who were in the court, so distant that they could not hear distinctly what was said, but near enough for our Lord to convey by His look to Peter that He knew what had occurred, that He felt that he had committed the sin against which He had warned him, and to fix his attention upon the crowing of the cock as the accomplishment of His prediction"—R. W.

75. He went out—smitten to the heart. "Overwhelmed by remorse and shame, he left the place, going out of the court, probably into some secret place. And wept bitterly—the depth of his sorrow, and the abundance of his tears, poured forth from a truly broken and a contrite spirit, answering to the greatness of his offence. S. Mark has expressed this with inimitable pathos and simplicity: 'And when he thought thereon, he wept'"—R. W.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Vers. 1, 2. GIVEN OVER TO PILATE. (Mark 15. 1; Luke 22. 66–71.)—1. When the morning was come (S. Mark, "Straightway in the morning"; S. Luke, "As soon as it was day") —about 5 A.M., the earliest hour at which the great council could be legally convened. Virtually the main purpose of their meeting was accomplished. They had already, in the residence of Caiaphas, informally but unanimously pronounced our Lord guilty of death. But as "the Sanhedrim met in one of the courts of the Temple, which was never opened in the night, they were forced to stay till the morning, before they could proceed regularly in the resolution they had taken to put Him to death"—WESLEY.

"Two things had to be done. One was to obtain the confirmation of their sentence from Pilate; the other, so to mix up charges of seditious designs against the Roman power with the pretended offence against their religion, as to engage the Roman governor to take His execution upon himself, and to carry it into effect in the Roman mode by crucifixion"—R. W. All the chief priests and elders of the people. S. Mark and S. Luke include the scribes, and designate the meeting as that of the "whole council."

2. And when they had bound Him—for the third time (John 18. 12, 24); now to signify that His guilt had been proved; or "to secure Him from any danger of an escape as He passed through the streets of Jerusalem"—WESLEY.

They led Him away—as a criminal, "followed by the whole multitude" (Luke)—and delivered Him to Pontius Pilate the governor—as His judge, to be dealt with as they, His ignorant and prejudiced "kinsmen after the flesh," should maliciously dictate! The usual residence of the governor was in Cæsarea (Acts 23. 33; 25. 1, 4, 6, 13); but during the great festivals he was present with soldiers in Jerusalem. Where he resided then is not quite certain. "Formerly the general opinion was that when the Roman procurator visited Jerusalem he took up his quarters in the castle of Antonia, at the north-west of the Temple enclosure. . . . At present the prevalent view is that the Prætorium (the official residence) was the magnificent palace which had been lately erected or rebuilt by Herod near the gate of Jaffa, on the north-west of Mount Zion. . . . It must also be admitted that this view suggests thoughts of exceeding interest. As our Lord's first trial had taken place in the palace of the high priest—His own representative—and the second trial in His father's house, so the third and last was on the site of the castle of David, His great earthly ancestor, and in the presence of a multitude representing all classes of His own people"—S. C. The Sanhedrim had no power at this period to inflict the punishment of death; and therefore, having found our Lord guilty, as they alleged, of a capital crime, they conducted Him in bonds, as a condemned criminal, and, according to an old tradition, with a cord round His neck, to the heathen governor or procurator, who had full judicial authority, in the expectation that he would at once recognise their competency to deal with the case, and, on hearing from them the grounds of their accusations, comply with their requests. But Pilate, weak, cruel, and selfish as he was, knew too well the duties and responsibilities of his office to condemn the great Accused without a personal hearing (Acts 25. 16), though he ultimately pronounced the awful sentence in violation of his own convictions of truth and justice.

Vers. 3–10. REMORSE AND DEATH OF JUDAS (peculiar to Matthew).—3. Then Judas—after the regular meeting of the Sanhedrim—when he saw his Master conducted in dismal procession, headed by the rulers, to Pilate, and knew therefore that He was condemned to die, repented himself. "He had obtained the cursed pelf, the hope of which had blinded his judgment and stifled the struggles of his better feelings; and, the infatuating prize being in possession, the passion had subsided, reason had resumed her functions, the whole extent of his baseness and guilt flashed upon his soul, with the fears of the righteous retribution which awaited him. He 'repented himself,' indeed; he would probably have parted with the world for the moment, avaricious as he was, if the foul, the damning deed could have been undone; but the result proved that, strong and agonising as this feeling was, it was not 'godly sorrow, which worketh repentance unto salvation'; it was the repentance of the damned at the day of judgment, when the gate of mercy is for ever shut; for the woe was upon him, the woe of Him whom he had basely betrayed. Still, before he was permitted to execute upon himself that last act which was to seal his eternal destiny, his remorse was so overruled as to force from even him a public declaration of the blameless character of the Master of whom he had been so unworthy and false a disciple; a testimony which was to be perpetuated by the purchase of a field, and the imposition of a new name upon it, arising out of the circumstance of its purchase, which should render it a public monument for time to come, both of the truth of the fact and the evidence it affords to the innocency of our Lord and the malice of His unjust judges"—R. W.

4. They said, What is that to us? see thou to that. "As though they were not equally guilty who used a wicked instrument to accomplish an unjust purpose, as the instrument himself; and as though they were not bound to receive this evidence of a repenting traitor in His favour, and give it its due weight in their representation of the case to the Roman governor. Thus the judges, by proclaiming their own guilt, demonstrated by their sanguinary obduracy, as fully as Judas by his remorse, the triumphant innocence of our blessed Lord of everything which could render Him, according to their unjust sentence, 'guilty of death'"—R. W.

5. In the Temple (properly, as in the R.V. "Into the sanctuary," the holy place). The name may be used here to include the court of the priests; and Judas may have stood at the entrance and flung in the silver pieces, or indeed he may have entered the court in his own right, for there is nothing to preclude the supposition that he was himself a priest. Hanged himself. "This is quite reconcilable with the account in Acts 1. 18, which implies that he fell headlong, whether from a hastily erected pole or the branch of a tree"—S. C.

6. It is not lawful, etc.—alluding probably to Deut 23. 18. "Thus they verified our Lord's words, 'Straining out the gnat, and swallowing a camel,' purchasing innocent blood with the money, and yet scrupling to deposit it in a sacred place; but thus tacitly and unintentionally declaring that it had been the wages of iniquity, and was itself polluted by the unholy purpose to which it had been appropriated"—R. W.

7. The potter's field—"well known, it seems, by that name. This was a small price for a field so near Jerusalem; but the earth had probably been digged for potters' vessels, so that it was now neither fit for tillage nor pasture, and consequently of small value"—WESLEY.

To bury strangers in—foreign Jews and proselytes.

8. Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood—"Aceldama" (Acts 1. 19). "Not, we may well conjecture, from the imposition of that name upon it by the chief priests, but by popular and habitual designation. Thus it remained marked with this new and expressive name, both as a proof of the fact, if it should be hereafter questioned, and a memorial of that remorse of Judas for his treachery, which afforded so striking a proof of the guiltlessness of his betrayed Master"—R. W. Unto this day—the time when S. Matthew wrote this Gospel, which must have been some years after the event. This is important; for as the Evangelist "could not relate a fact so notorious to all the inhabitants without being contradicted, if not truly stated, so, the fact being established, the history with which it stood connected was confirmed by a durable and visible monument"—R. W. It was situated in the valley of Hinnom, and was used as a burial-place for centuries.

9. Then was fulfilled—"what was figuratively represented of old was now accomplished—by Jeremy the prophet. The word Jeremy, which was added to the text in later copies, and thence received into many translations, is evidently a mistake; for he who spoke what S. Matthew here cites, or rather paraphrases, was not Jeremy, but Zechariah"—WESLEY. (Zech. 11. 12.)

Vers. 11–26. TRIAL BEFORE PILATE. (Mark 15. 2–15; Luke 23. 1–24; John 18. 29–19. 16.)

11. And Jesus stood before the governor. (Ver. 2.) After having been led into his official residence, the "Prætorium" (Mark 15. 16); or, as the same word is variously rendered, "the judgment hall" (John 18. 28), and in Matt. 27. 27, "the common hall." Pilate had been made to feel that the case was one of extraordinary importance—first, by the application to him the preceding evening for a detachment of soldiers to accompany the guards of the Temple in their midnight expedition in search of our Lord, and now by the whole Sanhedrim presenting Him before the imperial tribunal at the earliest moment at which a Roman court could be held. He was therefore quite prepared to give prompt and careful attention to their representations. From S. John we learn that he met them courteously in the open space at the entrance of his residence, "the Prætorium,' and demanded a formal accusation of their Prisoner, which they hesitated to give, having, as they proudly intimated, tried Him, and found Him guilty themselves—"If He were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered Him up unto thee." But Pilate refused to recognise their judicial authority, and they then brought forward their threefold charge of "perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying that He Himself is Christ a King" (Luke). This was not said in His presence, for the soldiers had already conducted Him "into the judgment hall" (John 18. 28–33), His accusers scrupulously standing without. "Then Pilate"—taking up the third part of the charge—"entered into the judgment hall again, and called Jesus"—to stand before his judgment seat—"and said unto Him"—with evident signs of pity and surprise—"Art Thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest." (Ch. 26. 25.) "Jesus before Caiaphas avows Himself to be the Christ (ch. 26. 64); before Pilate to be a King; clearly showing thereby that His answering no more was not owing to fear"—WESLEY.

"Our Lord without hesitation declared that He was the King of the Jews, but showed that He knew the authors of the charge of sedition thus suggested by asking, 'Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee of Me?' At the same time He takes care that Pilate should not proceed in ignorance upon the malicious suggestions of the priests, that He had professed to be the King of the Jews politically, by explaining His meaning, 'My kingdom is not of this world,' it is not a civil but a spiritual reign; and this was done that Pilate might know that Cæsar had nothing to fear from Him. There was great artifice in preferring so dangerous a charge against Him before the Roman governor"—R. W. See the detailed account of this private examination in John 18. 32–38. It is called by S. Paul our Lord's "good confession." (1 Tim. 6. 13.)

12. And when He was accused of the chief priests and elders. After Pilate had returned to them and declared his conviction that the charge of sedition was groundless ("I find no fault in this man," Luke 23. 4; John 18. 31), He answered nothing (Isa. 53. 7). He might have instantly put His enemies to shame; and Pilate would have been glad to hear their accusations refuted, and to have acquitted the Object of their misrepresentations: but that would have been contrary to His own mysterious purpose. His hour was come (John 12. 23–28; 13. 1).

13. Hearest Thou not how many things they witness against Thee?—an expression of impatience. He could not undertake the defence of the innocent One, but he had hoped to hear something from His lips which might ostensibly justify His release. What "things they witnessed against Him" are stated by S. Luke, who adds that the mob crowded around them "became the more fierce"; and that Pilate gathering from their clamour that He was a Galilean, "and that He belonged to Herod's jurisdiction, sent Him to Herod, who himself was also at Jerusalem at that time," thus striving to escape from further embarrassment and responsibility. (Luke 23. 6–13.) But Herod also became satisfied that the charges brought against the great Prisoner were fictitious, and after subjecting Him to cruelly contemptuous treatment, sent Him back to Pilate. During the pause in the proceedings before the governor another expedient suggested itself, which he now resolved to try.

15. Now, at that feast—the Passover—the governor was wont to release unto the people a prisoner, whom they would—an act which, whenever it may have originated, was evidently meant to gratify their pride, and soften their prejudices against the hated Roman rule. Pilate then would resort to this. It might be successful, and if it failed, it would at least make more clear the popular will, and relieve his own burdened conscience.

16. A notable prisoner, called Barabbas. S. John marks him as a man of violence, "a robber"; and S. Mark and S. Luke say that he had committed murder in an insurrection.

17. Therefore when they were gathered together—"called together" by Pilate (Luke), after our Lord had been sent back to the Prætorium by Herod (probably about 7 A.M.). They had lingered around the palace in excited groups while Jesus was being led, guarded by soldiers, from Pilate to Herod, and from Herod, arrayed in a "gorgeous robe" to excite the derision of the mob, back to Pilate. The popular interest had become intense, and people of all ranks thronged up to the governor's residence in ever-increasing numbers to see and hear all that was possible. Pilate said unto them—appealing to the populace, the immense moving crowd, rather than to the Sanhedrim, as their representatives—Whom will ye that I release unto you?—as an act of grace, placing the falsely and the truly accused on the same level—Barabbas, or Jesus which is called Christ?

18. For he knew that for envy they had delivered Him. "As well as from malice and revenge: they envied Him because the people magnified Him"—WESLEY.

19. When he was set down. "For he had stood and delivered a formal speech (Luke 23. 14–16) before he appealed to the crowd to declare their choice; and in his agitation seems to have involuntarily stood and sat by turns. On the judgment seat—probably an extemporised or moveable tribunal, which was placed on an elevated and conspicuous spot 'called the Pavement,' on account of a beautiful piece of mosaic work with which the floor was adorned"—WESLEY.

"But in the Hebrew, Gabbatha" (John)—that is, high place, or ridge. His wife sent unto him. She had probably heard before retiring to rest of the application made to him by the Jewish authorities for a company of his soldiers to arrest Jesus; she had some knowledge of His history and character, as her message implies; and the thought of His being apprehended and put upon His trial may have caused her sleep to be imperfect and broken by frightful dreams. Have thou nothing to do with that just Man. "Thus Judas, by his confession; the false witnesses, by their disagreement; the judges, by their violence, manifest injustice, and the vagueness of their charges; Pilate's wife, by her message to her lord; and Pilate himself—all proclaimed the perfect innocence of the Victim, who was nevertheless yielded up to the clamours of His persecutors. How strange are these events; and yet how perfectly they accord with the true character and design of our Saviour's passion and death!"—R. W.

20. But the chief priests and elders persuaded—(S. Mark says, "moved"—instigated—"the multitude")—appealing to their prejudices and worst passions. This would be while Pilate, staggered and awe-stricken by the mysterious message from his wife, was labouring to understand the requirements of his situation in mute perplexity. Little as the members of the council mixed with the common people or regarded their wishes ordinarily, they now went familiarly among them, and used all their arts of persuasion to induce them to raise their voices on behalf of Barabbas—their imprisoned friend—the man who had shown himself ready at all personal risks to deliver them from oppression! As for Jesus, the Galilean, was it not enough to know that He had been fairly tried and condemned by their recognised national authorities? If He had not been proved to be a malefactor, would

He have been delivered up to the detested Roman judge? Not improbably at this stage Barabbas was brought out and made to stand by the side of Jesus. Then, recovering his self-confidence,

21. The governor answered and said unto them—appealing once more to the frenzied throng for a declaration of their choice—Whether of the twain will ye that I release unto you? "Look here, on this picture, and on this!" And despite the contrary advice of your Sanhedrim, will you not accept my offer to release this calm and dignified, because, as I have found, innocent Man? They said—with one voice (the voice, not of reason, but of their excited feelings and prejudices)— Barabbas! "Then cried they all again, saying, Not this Man, but Barabbas" (John). (See Acts 3. 14, 15.)

22. What shall I do then with Jesus? He saw with alarm how serious a mistake he made when he appealed for guidance to a fanatical and excited mob. Barabbas should be set at liberty, since this was their demand. But would they not consent to the release of Jesus also, if by an act of extraordinary clemency this could be done? This may have been suggested seriously, or with disdain and in desperation. They all say unto him—the chief priests no doubt starting the cry—Let Him be crucified. "The punishment which Barabbas had deserved; and this probably made them think of it. But in their malice they forgot with how dangerous a precedent they furnished the Roman governor. And indeed, within the compass of a few years, it turned dreadfully upon themselves"—WESLEY.

23. Why, what evil hath He done? This question he now repeats for "the third time," and S. Luke says that he added to it the declaration, "I have found no cause of death in Him," and proposed to inflict chastisement, "and let Him go" (Luke 23. 22). But they cried out the more—fiercely, with loud voices —Let Him be crucified.

24. When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing—an unheard-of example of weakness on the part of a Roman ruler—but that rather a tumult was made—which he could not suppress or resist (Luke)—he took water, and washed his hands. (Deut. 21. 6; Ps. 26. 6.) "A custom frequently used among the heathen, as well as among the Jews, in token of innocency"—WESLEY.

Saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just Person—whom nevertheless he had offered to scourge as a criminal—see ye to it. "Pilate reasoned as ill as he acted. He vainly hoped to transfer the guilt from himself to the Jews; and because he had attempted in vain to persuade them to desist from their purpose, thought himself excused in yielding to the difficulties to which their violence and threats exposed him. He washed his hands; but his conscience was still left black with the very guilt which he declared would be upon the Jews—the guilt of innocent blood"—R. W.

25. His blood be on us, and on our children. "As this imprecation was dreadfully answered in the ruin so quickly brought on the Jewish nation, and the calamities which have ever since pursued that wretched people, so it was peculiarly fulfilled by Titus, the Roman general, on the Jews whom he took during the siege of Jerusalem. So many, after having been scourged in a terrible manner, were crucified all round the city, that in a while there was not room near the walls for the crosses to stand by each other. Probably this befel some of those who now joined in this cry, as it certainly did many of their children: the very finger of God thus pointing out their crime in crucifying His Son"—WESLEY.

26. Then released he Barabbas—the convicted murderer—unto them; and "with full consciousness of the injustice, in cowardly compliance with their will"—(S. C.)—he delivered that absolutely "just Person," as he felt constrained to pronounce Him, echoing the epithet used by his wife, to be crucified. Not, however, without another attempt to save Him. He scourged Jesus. This was the usual preliminary to crucifixion, but Pilate cherished some faint hope that in this case the ignominious and cruel torture of the lash might suffice, and that thus he might gain the assent of the people to our Lord's release. If this did not move them to pity, he must give up the case as lost. "The unhappy sufferer was publicly stripped, was tied by the hands in a bent position to a pillar, and then, on the tense, quivering nerves of the naked back, the blows were inflicted with leathern thongs, weighted with jagged edges of bone and lead; sometimes even the blows fell by accident—sometimes, with terrible barbarity, were purposely struck—on the face and eyes. It was a punishment so hideous that, under its lacerating agony, the victim generally fainted, often died. And this awful cruelty, on which we dare not dwell—this cruelty which makes the heart shudder and grow cold—was followed immediately by the third (Luke 22. 63–65; 23. 21, 22) and bitterest derision, the derision of Christ as King"—F.

27. Then—immediately after the scourging which took place in public in front of the tribunal—the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into the common hall—the "Prætorium" (Mark)—and gathered unto Him—in one of its principal courts—the whole band —that is, the whole cohort, at least two hundred men; it may be many more.

28. And they stripped Him—probably of that "gorgeous robe," or white festal mantle in which, after He had been "set at nought by Herod and his men of war," He had been sent back to Pilate (Luke 23. 11). This which they had thrown over Him after the scourging they now removed; and in place of it, put on him a scarlet robe—"such as kings and generals wore; probably an old tattered one"—WESLEY.

29, 30. A crown of thorns—in mock imitation of the diadem worn by Jewish kings, or of the laurel wreath of the emperors. A reed in His right hand—to represent a kingly sceptre. And they bowed the knee before Him—in feigned homage—saying, Hail, King of the Jews—Thou who hast weakly claimed the title. "In that vast royal hall some hundreds of soldiers passed in procession saluting Him as 'King of the Jews'; till, as their excitement increased, they spat upon Him, following the example of the chief priests (ch. 26. 67), and, taking the sceptre from His hand, smote Him on the head repeatedly"—S. C. And now occurred that unspeakably pathetic scene, in which Pilate made his last desperate attempt to liberate his great Prisoner. The mocking, like the previous scourging, had taken place in his presence, but within his palace. He will now lead Him forth to them, with the hope that when they saw Him exhausted, bleeding, horribly insulted, and degraded, yet so calm and patient, the spectacle would go to their hearts, and cause them to exclaim, Enough. Let Him be released. "Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns and the purple robe, and Pilate saith unto them, Behold the Man" (John). Will not this suffice? But the only answer was the same hateful, monotonous demand, "Let Him be crucified."

31. Led Him away to crucify Him. "The person crucified was nailed to the cross as it lay on the ground, through each hand, extended to the utmost stretch, and through both the feet together. Then the cross was raised up, and the foot of it thrust with a violent shock into a hole in the ground prepared for it. Excepting the support afforded by a short projecting piece of wood in the principal beam, the whole weight of the body hung upon the nails, till the person expired through mere dint of pain. This kind of death was used only by the Romans, and by them inflicted only on slaves and the vilest criminals"—WESLEY.

Vers. 32-66. THE CRUCIFIXION (9 A.M.). (Mark 15. 21-41; Luke 23. 16-56; John 19. 17-42.)—32. As they came out—from the city gate. Criminals usually bore the cross on which they were to suffer for themselves, and our Lord bore His until they were "without the gate." (Heb. 13. 12.) They found a man of Cyrene. "Our Saviour, probably exhausted by previous ill-usage, appears to have sunk under the weight of His burden; so that, meeting Simon, a Cyrenian, coming, says S. Mark, out of the country, him they compelled to bear His cross—they pressed him into this service, as the word imports. He was of Cyrene, a city of Lybia, where many Jews were located, but was now probably a resident at Jerusalem, and was returning thence from the country. It is not unlikely that he was singled out at the instigation of the Jews as a favourer of Christ; for, S. Mark adds, he was the father of Alexander and Rufus, both celebrated among the first Christians"—R. W. S. Luke records that "there followed Him a great company of people and of women," who showed signs of sympathy and sorrow, and that our Lord, who had borne in silence the hideous indignities inflicted upon Him by priests and soldiers, quickly answered their lamentations with words of deepest tenderness. Also that two malefactors were "led with Him to be put to death."

33. Golgotha (S. Luke, "Calvary"), which is the same name in Latin, signifying, a place of a skull. Why so called, and where it was situated, is uncertain. "It was nigh to the city" (John), probably on a thoroughfare (Luke); "and in the place there was a garden" (John). These facts we know; and we may infer from the name that the spot was slightly raised; but it is nowhere called a hill.

34. They gave Him vinegar (R. V. "wine") to drink mingled with gall (S. Mark, "wine mingled with myrrh"). This "vinegar" was the sharp common wine usually drunk by the Roman soldiers. "This wine was often mixed with certain bitter herbs, to impart to it an intoxicating quality, and was given to criminals before their execution. It was a custom for the honourable women of Jerusalem to prepare wine of this kind, and to give it freely to those about to suffer death, to render them less sensible of pain. We have no intimation that our Lord experienced this attention from this class of women, but some of His friends might thus minister to Him; but when He had tasted thereof, He would not drink, resolved to sustain the whole weight of His sufferings, and not to submit to have His senses or reason dulled by any stupefying draught"—R. W.

35. And they crucified Him. Probably it was at this awful moment, when He lay stretched upon the cross, and the soldiers were driving ragged nails through the palms of His hands, that He prayed, "Father, forgive them"—the great example and enforcement of His own precept (ch. 5. 44)—"for they know not what they do." This simple and most gracious petition referred immediately to His actual executioners, but also to their masters, to the Jewish people, whose agents they were, and to the world of sinners, whom they may be truly said to have represented. (Isa. 53. 12.) "Our Lord passed most of the time on the cross in silence; yet seven sentences which He spoke thereon are recorded by the four Evangelists, though no one Evangelist has recorded them all. Hence it appears, that the four Gospels are as it were four parts, which, joined together, make one symphony; sometimes one of these only, sometimes two or three, sometimes all, sound together. 'Father'—so He speaks both in the beginning and at the end of His sufferings on the cross—'forgive them.' How striking is this passage! While they are actually nailing Him to the cross, He seems to feel the injury they did to their own souls, more than the wounds they gave Him; and, as it were, to forget His own anguish out of a concern for their own salvation"—WESLEY.

And parted His garments. S. John describes this act in minute detail (19. 23, 24). "The garments of the crucified by Roman custom belonged to the executioners; in this case, to the four soldiers who crucified our Lord"—S. C. Casting lots. This was for the vest, or closely-fitting inner tunic. The large outer garment was easily torn into four parts, and so distributed "to every soldier a part." But the inner "coat was without seam, woven, from the top throughout." Worked for Him, perhaps, by His mother. "They said among themselves, Let us not rend it, but cast lots for it whose it shall be" (John). That it might be fulfilled (Ps. 22. 18). "In this scripture, as in many others, the prophet seems to have been thrown into a preternatural ecstasy, wherein, personating the Messiah, he spoke barely what the Spirit dictated, without any regard to himself"—WESLEY.

The same Psalm is cited in vers. 39, 43, and 46. "Several MSS. and versions wanting this quotation, it has been supposed that the words were written in the margin from S. John's Gospel, where they are unquestionably found. Still it may be observed, that it is quite in the manner of S. Matthew to notice, for the conviction of the Jews, the fulfilment of the ancient prophecies respecting the Messiah, and especially those which are expressed in a particular and minute manner. The whole Psalm from which this quotation is made, must be understood of Messiah."

36. They watched Him there—kept guard, as was usual, to prevent any attempt to take Him down from the cross.

37. And set up over His head His accusation written—as was customary with the Romans in extraordinary cases. This was a white tablet, stating the name and crime of the Sufferer. It was suspended from His neck and carried before Him, on His way to the place of death, and nailed up over His head when on the cross. This was written by Pilate, "in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin" (John). "In Latin; for the majesty of the Roman empire; in Hebrew, because it was the language of the nation; and in Greek, for the information of the foreign Jews who spoke that language, and came in great numbers to the feast"—WESLEY.

THIS IS JESUS, THE KING OF THE JEWS. The four Evangelists give this superscription, but each of them in a slightly different form,—Mark, "The King of the Jews"; Luke, "This is the King of the Jews"; John, "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews." Probably the wording varied to suit the three different languages, and that the Evangelists give the sense rather than the exact words. S. Matthew's is a combination of the three. It will be observed that neither of them is an accusation. S. John states that the chief priests attempted to get the inscription altered, so as to affirm that the crime was the usurpation of kingly rights, but that Pilate obstinately refused to comply with their wishes. "The Christian Fathers were neither weak nor superstitious in noticing Pilate's last formal if unconscious testimony to the truth"—S. C.

38. Two thieves (R.V. "robbers"). They were led out to Calvary with our Lord (Luke), and appear to have been crucified at the same time as He, by separate quaternions of soldiers. "Here, too, another signal accomplishment of prophecy may be noticed, which is stated by S. Mark, 'And the Scripture was fulfilled, which saith, And He was numbered with the transgressors' (Isa. 53. 12). It is remarkable also, that our Lord, some time before this, applied this prophecy to Himself"—R. W. (Luke 22. 37.)

39–43. And they that passed by—on the adjoining highway. At this Passover season these would be numerous, many of them no doubt going in that direction for the purpose of witnessing the revolting scene. Reviled Him (R.V. "Railed at Him"). The word used by the first two Evangelists is very strong, "They blasphemed Him." "The words of reviling show what charges had been urged most successfully by the chief priests"—S. C. (John 19. 7.) Wagging their heads. "A usual mark of malevolent derision and exultation; but, in this, unconsciously fulfilling the words of the Psalm above quoted, which prophetically describes the sufferings of Messiah: 'All they that see Me laugh Me to scorn, they shoot out the lip, they shake the head' (Ps. 22. 7). To this sarcastic mockery and contempt was our Saviour exposed from the common people, who taunted Him, according to the perverted testimony of the false witnesses, on His trial, with His threat of destroying the temple in three days, and bade Him, if such was His power, to save Himself, and if He was the Son of God, to come down from the cross; nor could the chief priests, and scribes, and elders, restrain themselves from this brutal mockery, but joined in the insults; but this also was signally overruled for the fulfilment of another portion of the same prophetic Psalm; for in nearly the words of that sacred composition they said, He trusted in God; let Him deliver Him now, if He will have Him. Thus they undesignedly applied the prophecy to our Lord, and themselves fulfilled it. For He said, I am the Son of God. It is to be remarked that the Jews mainly reproach Christ, not with the crime for which He was actually put to death by Pilate, a seditious assertion of sovereignty in opposition to the Roman power, for which, notwithstanding their hypocritical pretence of respect for the rights of Cæsar, they would have honoured Him, but for the very profession on which their own council had condemned Him—'For He said, I am the Son of God,' thus confessing that they had urged upon Pilate a false pretence, and that the ground of their hatred to Him was His assumption of a Divine character, and the spirituality of His kingdom"—R. W.

44. Cast the same in His teeth (R.V. "Cast upon Him the same reproaches"). At first they both did this,—perhaps to win the favour of the "chief priests, and scribes, and elders," who were leading the raillery by a pretended zeal for the Law; or it may be because they found a morbid gratification in seeing that another was the object of popular blame and indignation rather than themselves. For the beautiful and instructive story of the conversion of one of them, and our Lord's second saying from the cross, see Luke 23. 39–43; and for the precious words spoken about the same time to His mother and the Apostle John—the third saying—see John 19. 26, 27.

45. Now from the sixth hour—noon; after our Lord had hung upon the cross about three hours (Mark 15. 25)—there was darkness over all the land. "Insomuch, that even a heathen philosopher seeing it, and knowing it could not be a natural eclipse, because it was at the time of the full moon, and continued three hours together, cried out, 'Either the God of nature suffers, or the frame of the world is dissolved'"—WESLEY.

"This was the first of the miraculous events which accompanied the crucifixion of our Saviour. The great Sacrifice for the sins of the world was now offering; and as on great occasions God had been wont to show His acceptance of sacrifices by some visible token and preternatural phenomena, so on this, the greatest, the most solemn, and most important, the Father testifies from heaven that a more than ordinary death was undergoing, to mark which, the sun itself was darkened, and the face of heaven veiled"—R. W.

46. And about the ninth hour (3 P.M.)—after three hours of supernatural darkness, during which He suffered in silence, "what was unutterable. My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me? "Our Lord hereby at once expresses His trust in God, and a most distressing sense of the letting loose of the powers of darkness upon Him, withdrawing the comfortable discoveries of His presence, and filling His soul with a terrible sense of the wrath due to the sins which He was bearing"—WESLEY.

"It was a deeper anguish which extorted this mournful cry than that produced by corporal suffering, which the doctrine of the atonement can alone account for, although it is a mystery which none can explain. They are not the words of complaint, as implying reluctance to suffer, but as expressive of deep internal agony, internal desertion of sensible support and consolation; in a word, the completion of what was begun in the garden, the drinking of the last dregs of bitterness out of the cup of wrath, when He, having placed Himself voluntarily in the room and stead of the guilty, was dealt with as though He were really such. Yet was there no distrust in God, for He almost immediately adds, 'Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit'"—R. W. "It is certain that the words would not have been ascribed to Him had they not been distinctly uttered; they would be irreconcilable with all that we read of our Lord's demeanour from the moment of His arrest, were they not explained by truths revealed afterwards to Christians. The why, indeed, proposes a question not to be answered save by reference to the highest doctrines; to answer it the Christian has the words of Gethsemane and the teaching of the Spirit to guide him; the atonement depended on the complete fulfilment of the will of God by the Son accepting the only commensurate punishment of sin"—S. C. "The mysteries of those hours of darkness, when with the sufferings of the agonised body mingled the sufferings of the sacred soul, the struggles with sinking nature, the accumulating presence of the burden of a world's sin, the momently more and more bitter foretastings of that which was its wages and its penalty, the clinging desperation of the last assaults of Satan and his mustered hosts, the withdrawal and darkening of the Paternal Presence,—mysteries such as these, so deep and so dread, it was not meet that even the tongues of apostles should be moved to speak of, or the pen of evangelists to record"—E. For the true and only satisfactory explanation of them we must ponder in penitence and prayer such sayings as these: Isa. 53. 4–6, 12; Gal. 3. 13; Rom. 3. 24–27; 4. 25; 1 Cor. 15. 2; 2 Cor. 3. 14–19; 1 Pet. 3. 18; 1 John 4. 10.

47. This Man calleth for Elias. "This arose from our Lord having used the term Eli, or Eloi, My God. Either the Hellenistic Jews, who were not familiar with the language, mistook the word, or in the crowd some heard indistinctly, or, what is more probable, the whole was a continuance of the raillery exercised upon His claim as the Messiah; for a common notion among the Jews was that Elias would precede the Messiah"—R. W.

48. And straightway one of them—he must have been a soldier, or he would not have had access to the wine—ran and took a spunge. Our Lord had just cried, in utter exhaustion, "I thirst" (John 19. 18). This was His fifth saying, and the only one of the seven which referred to His bodily suffering. Filled it with vinegar—that is, sour wine and water, the usual drink of Roman soldiers—and put it on a reed (John, "upon hyssop")—a reed or stalk of hyssop two or three feet long; for it is evident from all that took place around the cross that it was comparatively low, probably not raised more than twelve or eighteen inches above the ground—and gave Him to drink. (Ps. 69. 21; John 19. 28.) This was an instinctive act of compassion, yet even this was not unmixed with a continuance of real or assumed contempt, expressed in words of cruel mockery.

49. The rest said, Let be. Perhaps addressed to some who objected to His receiving this small relief. Let this be done, and let it suffice. But there was even, so understood, an undertone of bitter jesting. Let us see whether Elias will come to save Him. He expects Elijah to help Him; this will contribute to keep Him alive till Elijah comes! "According to S. Mark, the man himself cries, 'Let be'; according to S. Matthew, the others cry out thus to him as he offers the drink; according to S. John, several ('they') filled the spunge with the sour wine. Combining the statements together, we have a natural picture of the excitement caused by the loud cry"—C. B.

50. Jesus, when He had cried again with a loud voice. (S. John, "When Jesus had received the vinegar, He said, It is finished.") This was His sixth word from the cross—a single word in the original—spoken with a "loud voice"—calmly exclaimed by the great Sufferer as His word of triumph. Immediately after this He uttered His seventh and last saying, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit." (Ps. 31. 5; 1 Pet. 2. 23; comp. Ps. 22. 22–31.) Yielded up the ghost—surrendered His spirit. "When all was accomplished, when the work of atonement was perfected, when the foundations of the kingdom of evil had been overthrown, then, and not till then, the Lord of Life yielded up His spirit to the Father"—S. C. It is to be specially noted that each of the Evangelists speaks of our Lord's death as an act of His own will, it may be with allusion to His repeated prayer in the garden (ch. 26. 42), and to show how perfectly His will and the will of the Father were one; but more especially with reference to His own peculiar saying, "No man taketh it—My life—from Me, but I lay it down of Myself" (John 10. 18); and in harmony with the uniform testimony of His apostles. (Gal. 2. 20; Eph. 5. 2; 1 Pet. 2. 24.) To say this, however, is only to say how freely He gave Himself up to the necessary consequences of the extremity of anguish through which He passed; how literally He "was obedient unto death, even the death of the cross" (Phil. 2. 8).

Vers. 51–56. SIGNS FOLLOWING THE DEATH. (Mark 15. 38–41; Luke 23. 46, 47–49.)—51. And, behold, the veil of the Temple was rent in twain. This was the inner veil. (Ex. 26. 31; Heb. 9. 2, 3.) It "separated the holy of holies from the court of the priests, and though made of the richest and strongest tapestry, was rent in two, from the top to the bottom. So that while the priest was ministering at the golden altar, it being the time of the sacrifice, the sacred oracle, by an invisible power, was laid open to full view; God thereby signifying the speedy removal of the veil of the Jewish ceremonies, the casting down the partition wall, so that the Jews and Gentiles were now admitted to equal privileges, and the opening a way through the veil of His flesh for all believers into the most holy place"—WESLEY.

The earth did quake. Earthquakes are frequent in Jerusalem. But this was not a mere coincidence at this moment; nor did it result from natural causes, but from the interposition of Divine power. Its "symbolical import was probably the destruction of the Jewish state; for as the rending of the veil intimated the abolition of the religion of the Jews, by the bringing in of a 'better hope,' and the opening of a 'new way to God,' so as earthquakes, in prophetic language, signify the subversion of kingdoms, this shaking of the earth was a real symbol of those convulsions which should entirely destroy their civil polity, and overwhelm them in inevitable destruction"—R. W. And the rocks rent—the natural effect of the earthquake.

52, 53. And the graves were opened—that is, the natural rock-tombs, or such as had been excavated in the rocks. These were "shattered and laid open by the earthquake; and while they continued unclosed (and they must have stood open all the Sabbath, seeing the Law would not allow any attempt to close them), many bodies of holy men were raised—perhaps Simeon, Zacharias, John the Baptist, and others who had believed in Christ, and were known to many in Jerusalem. And coming out of the tombs after His resurrection, went into the holy city—Jerusalem—and appeared to many—who had probably known them before. God thereby signifying, that Christ had conquered death, and would raise all His saints in due season"—WESLEY. (1 Cor. 15. 20–23.)

"This was the most extraordinary prodigy of all, and the moral is equally obvious: the death of Christ gives life to the very dead, and the first-fruits of the general resurrection appear visibly among men! That the earthquake was the instrument employed in opening the sepulchres is clear from the narrative; that it could not give life to the bodies contained in them is certain; so that in this we have another instance of the direct employment of the power of God, marking the death of His Son with such events as never occurred at the death of a mere mortal, or the holiest martyr, or the most useful apostle. . . . To the question, What became of them? there is no reasonable reply; but that as our Lord existed in secret until His ascension, so were they also hidden; and that they returned with Him to heaven, and are there as the pledges, to angels and to us, that the general resurrection of all the saints shall most certainly take place in the fulness of time"—R. W.

54. "The centurion—the officer who commanded the guard—and they that were with him feared, saying, Truly this was the Son of God—referring to the words of the chief priests and scribes (ver. 43), 'He said, I am the Son of God'"—WESLEY.

Probably also to the impatient appeal of His accusers to Pilate (John 19. 7). "According to S. Luke, the centurion's words were, 'Certainly this was a righteous Man.' He might, and probably did, use both expressions, as it is not likely that he restrained his strong emotions unto one exclamation; and the one implied the other. If Christ was the Son of God incarnate, He was also a righteous Man, innocent of all guilt; and if a righteous Man, He was then the Son of God, because He professed Himself to be so, which, in the sense in which our Lord used the term, no mere man could profess and be righteous"—R. W.

55, 56. And many women were there beholding afar off. (Comp. Luke 8. 1–3.) There may be an allusion in the words "afar off" to Ps. 38. 11; but "very near approach was not permitted by the soldiers, but the ridge on which the holy women sat was not so far distant as to prevent their hearing our Lord's words. S. Luke states, further, that 'all His acquaintance were there' (comp. Luke 2. 44), a fact not mentioned by S. Matthew and S. Mark. What struck them specially was that women, contrary to all usage, should be present"—S. C. "These heroic women had followed Him out of Galilee, and some of them were in opulent circumstances; they ministered to Him, and by their grateful benevolence He appears to have been chiefly supported during the latter period of His ministry. So dependent did the Lord of all voluntarily render Himself! These beheld afar off, as prevented by delicacy or fear from mingling with the multitude. The mother of Jesus stood by the cross, with S. John; she being, no doubt, treated with some respect from natural pity, and S. John being regarded in the light of her protector. Encouraged by the presence of these two, some of these women, who at first stood at a distance, seem afterwards to have approached nearer: of these was Mary Magdalene, or Mary of Magdala, a respectable woman, out of whom our Lord had cast seven devils, whose power over her was her affliction, not crime"—R. W. Mary the mother of James. Called by S. Mark "James the less"—"to distinguish him from the other James, the brother of S. John; probably because he was less in stature"—WESLEY.

Vers. 57–66. THE BURIAL. (Mark 15. 42–47; Luke 23. 50–56; John 19. 38–42.)—57. When the even was come—that is, towards sunset, when the Sabbath began, before which the bodies had to be removed. (Deut. 21. 23.) S. Mark explains that it was "the preparation, that is, the day before the Sabbath." There came—apparently to the place of execution, where the disciples just mentioned were grouped together—a rich man—(S. Mark, "an honourable counsellor"—that is, a member of the Sanhedrim)—of Arimathea—probably Ramathaim, the birthplace of Samuel. (1 Sam. 1. 1.) S. Luke describes him as "a good man and a just," and says that he had not consented to the decision "and deed" of the rest, in putting Christ to death. Named Joseph, who also himself was Jesus' disciple. (S. John says, "But secretly, for fear of the Jews.")

58. He went to Pilate. (S. Mark says, "went in boldly unto Pilate.") His natural timidity conquered by his Lord's last sayings and acts, and by the supernatural occurrences which followed His death. Only a man of wealth and rank could have had access to Pilate; even in his case the application was an act of daring. Pilate was surprised to hear of His death, for crucified persons sometimes lingered two or three days on the cross; and sent for the centurion in charge to confirm the statement (Mark). Then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered—without a bribe; in ready recognition of Joseph's station and character, and probably from reverence for Christ Himself.

59. And when Joseph had taken the body—with the aid of Nicodemus, as mentioned by S. John, and after the soldiers had taken down the cross and removed the nails—he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth. "Doubtless after the last usual rites, the ablution, the last kiss impressed on the lips by mother and dearest friends. The head was then covered with the kerchief, and the body wrapped in broad bands of finest linen. These rites may have been rendered hastily, and the last formal enfolding of the body in the bands with aromatic spices delayed until the Sabbath was past; but no long time would be required, the tomb being close at hand, within two hundred yards"—S. C.

60. His own new tomb—(Isa. 53. 9)—hewn out—no doubt at great expense, not downwards, as with us, but almost horizontally—in the rock. "In front of a tomb belonging to a rich family there was generally a vestibule, open to the air; then a low entrance—sometimes, as in this case, on the side of a rock—leading into a square chamber of moderate dimensions, on one side of which was a place for the body, either cut, some seven feet into the rock, or lengthways, three feet deep, with a low arch over it"—S. C.

61. The other Mary. (S. Mark, "The mother of James the less"), ver. 56. Mary, the mother of Jesus, had been taken home by S. John.

62. Now the next day, that followed the day of the preparation. "The day of preparation was the day before the Sabbath, whereon they were to prepare for the celebration of it. The next day then was the Sabbath, according to the Jews. But the Evangelist seems to express it by this circumlocution to show the Jewish Sabbath was then abolished"—WESLEY.

63. That deceiver said, while He was yet alive, After three days I will rise again. "We do not find that He had ever said this to them, unless when 'He spoke of the temple of His body' (John 2. 19, 21). And if they here refer to what He then said, how perverse and iniquitous was their construction on these words when He was on His trial before the council! (Matt. 26. 61). Then they seemed not to understand them"—WESLEY.

65. Ye have a watch—an expression of consent; given in the Margin of the R.V. "Take a guard."

66. Make the sepulchre sure. "They set Pilate's signet, or the public seal of the Sanhedrim, upon a fastening which they had put on the stone. And all this uncommon caution was overruled by the providence of God, to give the strongest proofs of Christ's ensuing resurrection, since there could be no room for the least suspicion of deceit when it should be found that His body was raised out of a new tomb, where there was no other corpse; and this tomb hewn out of a rock, the mouth of which was secured by a great stone, under a seal, and a guard of soldiers"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Vers. 1-15. THE RESURRECTION (Mark 16. 1-8; Luke 24. 1-12; John 20. 1-10.)—1. In the end of the Sabbath—about sunset on Saturday evening, when the Jewish Sabbath ended—as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week. The whole period of darkness being "regarded as anticipatory of the dawn. (Comp. Luke 23. 54.) Hence the Jews sometimes called the evening of Friday, 'the daybreak'"—C. B. Came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary. These two faithful women had lingered lovingly and pensively at the sacred spot after all others appeared to have withdrawn. They had spent the Sabbath in quiet meditation (Luke); and so soon as the Sabbath closed, they characteristically hastened back. To see the sepulchre. Finding all as they expected, they returned into the city; and in company with Salome, they "brought sweet spices" (Mark), and "perfumes" (Luke), for the embalming which Joseph and Nicodemus began on Friday evening but left incomplete, because the "Sabbath drew on." The hours of darkness slowly passed away, and "very early in the morning," of Sunday (Luke)—"when it was yet dark" (John), these three, and probably others with them, set out afresh for their pious work. Mary Magdalene, as we learn from S. John, pressed forward in advance of the rest, and was the first to arrive at the spot (probably about 5.30 A.M.). Startled and alarmed to find the sepulchre open, she ran back to inform Peter and John; but as she probably took another and nearer route into the city, she did not meet her companions, who continued to walk together towards the tomb. "There is no discrepancy in the different narratives, although, as we might have expected, they are fragmentary, and seem to reflect the varied and tumultuous emotions of those who were the first to see the Lord. The Easter music, as Lange says, is not a monotonous chorale, but an impassioned fugue"—C. B.

2. And, behold, there was—shortly before any of the women arrived—a great earthquake—probably quite local, but evidently supernatural. On their way they had said anxiously one to another, "Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?" (Mark). But on their arrival they found in dismay that the supposed difficulty did not exist. "An angel of the Lord had rolled away the stone, and sat upon it. S. Luke and S. John speak of two angels that appeared, but it seems as if only one of them had appeared sitting on the stone without the sepulchre; and then, going into it, was seen with another angel, sitting, one where the head, the other where the feet, of the body had lain"—WESLEY.

3. His countenance (R.V. "his appearance") was like lightning — in intense brightness. (Dan. 10. 6.)

5. Fear not ye. "The holy women saw at once that the entrance of the tomb was open, and on entering the vestibule found the angel sitting on the great stone which had been rolled back. They started back in terror, not convulsed, like the soldiers on guard, then lying prostrate before the angel, but they were at once consoled by his words, 'Fear not ye.' You have no cause for fear; for I know the piety and love which brought you hither"—S. C.

6. He is risen, as He said—a mild intimation that they ought to have understood and remembered this. (Ch. 16. 21; 17. 23.)

7. And go quickly, and tell His disciples. (S. Mark, "and Peter"—probably the most disquieted and despondent of the whole sorrowing company.) There shall ye see Him—"in His solemn appearance to them all together. But their gracious Lord would not be absent so long; He appeared to them several times before then. Lo, I have told you—a solemn confirmation of what He had said"—WESLEY. (Ch. 26. 32; Mark 14. 28.)

8. And they departed quickly. (S. Mark adds, "For they trembled and were sore amazed.") Their alarmed and distracted state of feeling, their confused impressions and their hasty movements, should be specially noted. From the narrative of Luke (24. 10) we may infer that this Mary, the mother of James, and Salome, had no sooner ran from the spot after having inspected the vacant tomb, than another party of women, including Joanna, arrived. They also saw a vision of angels, who informed them of the great event as the fulfilment of our Lord's pre-announced purpose (Luke 24. 7–9), and bade them return immediately and convey the joyful tidings to the apostles. Then it was, probably, that Mary Magdalene returned, bringing with her Peter and John; and after their departure, as she lingered on the ground, and "stood without at the sepulchre weeping," Jesus made His first appearance. (John 20. 11–18; Mark 16. 9.)

9. Behold, Jesus met them. The foregoing clause, as they went to tell His disciples, is omitted from the R.V. It is no doubt spurious. The fact to be understood is, that after having conveyed their message to the apostles, and when they were again on their way to the sepulchre, Jesus met them, saying, All hail—Rejoice! A word of friendly salutation, spoken to inspire confidence and joy. They came—came near to Him. Held Him by the feet. "An action which expressed the deepest reverence, mingled with the strongest affection. By embracing His feet they were also assured that it was not a phantom which they beheld, but the body of the real Jesus. And worshipped Him. Although the original word will not of itself prove that this was an act of Divine worship, who can reasonably doubt it, when His resurrection had indeed demonstrated Him to be the SON OF GOD, a title to which all the Jews attached ideas of Divinity? Nor did Jesus, after His resurrection, prescribe that proper worship which we know the disciples publicly and constantly paid to Him after His ascension; because it followed of course from His being thus proved to be what He had professed, THE SON OF THE LIVING GOD"—R. W.

10. Go tell My brethren. So He had just previously called them in His commission to Mary. (John 20. 17.) Our Lord never applied this term in a direct form, at least, to His disciples before His death. It indicates the beginning of a higher and more intimate spiritual fellowship than had been hitherto possible to them. (Comp. Heb. 2. 11, 12.)

11. Some of the watch came into the city, and showed unto the chief priests all the things that were done. "This was the only course open to them. What they would report would, of course, be that, after a shock of earthquake, such as was common, especially after a previous shock, they had seen a vision of dazzling brightness, and that the stone was rolled away"—S. C.

12. And when they were assembled, with the elders. "This was a meeting of the Sanhedrim, but surely hardly an official and open one; does not the form of the narrative rather imply that it was a secret compact between those (the majority) who were bitterly hostile to Jesus? The circumstance that Joseph had taken no part in their council before leads us to think that others may have withdrawn themselves from the meeting, e.g. Gamaliel, who could hardly have consented to such a measure as this"—A.

13. Say ye, His disciples came by night, and stole Him away while we slept. "Is it possible that any man of sense should digest this poor, shallow inconsistency? If ye were awake, why did you let the disciples steal Him? If asleep, how do you know they did?" —WESLEY.

"We must take into account that they were men judicially given up by God to the blind and malevolent passions of their own bad hearts. That they were guilty of both a wicked and a clumsy fiction is seen from this, that afterwards they manifestly appear to have been ashamed of avowing it, and that it was adopted in haste as a temporary expedient. Of this we have a striking, though an incidental, proof in the words of Gamaliel, in this very council, who, when Peter and the other apostles were brought before them for preaching the very fact of Christ's resurrection, and they were disposed to put them to death, said, 'If this counsel and work be of men, it will come to nought; but if it be of God ye cannot overthrow it' (Acts 5. 38, 39);—words which presupposed that the resurrection might be true, and which could not have been uttered had the council continued to maintain the story they taught to the Roman soldiers. Still, it was something that they had originated a tale which ignorance and prejudice made long current among the vulgar; for the Evangelist adds, And this saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day"—R. W.

Vers. 16–20. THE APPEARANCE IN GALILEE, AND THE GREAT COMMISSION.—16. Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee—not immediately; not until He had made several distinct appearances to them, and had definitely established the fact of His resurrection in their minds. As yet He had revealed Himself only (1) to Mary Magdalene, and (2) to the little company of women on their way to the tomb; in the course of that Day of days (3) to Peter (Luke 24. 34; 1 Cor. 15. 5); towards the evening (4) to the two disciples walking in sadness, full of depressing thoughts of the failure of their expectations, to the village of Emmaus (Luke 24. 13, 35), probably somewhat late in the evening; (5) to the assembled apostles in the absence of Thomas (John 20. 19; Mark 16. 14; Luke 24. 36). After the expiration of a week, He appeared again (6) to the Eleven in Jerusalem. His next recorded appearance was (7) to seven disciples "at the sea of Tiberias" (John 21. 1–23). All these appearances, except the first two, S. Matthew passes over in silence, and hastens to this, the long foreordained, specially promised, and repeatedly referred to manifestation in Galilee, in which the designs of the whole wondrous history are centred and summed up. This, to which we are now brought, was not His final appearance. (8) "After this He was seen of James" (the Lord's brother), then, at the ascension (9), "of all the apostles." (1 Cor. 15. 7.) Thus, including this, with which S. Matthew's Gospel so triumphantly ends, ten separate manifestations of the Risen Lord are specially recorded. But it is certain on many grounds that there were other occasions when "He showed Himself alive after His passion—unto the apostles whom He had chosen—being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." A hint to this effect is implied in the clause which follows. Into a mountain—"the" mountain where Jesus had appointed them—as though the appointed place of meeting had been previously mentioned. The expression implies that the appointment was made at some interview with His disciples, perhaps before they left Jerusalem, which is not on record. Where this mountain was can only be conjectured, but we naturally think of the neighbourhood of Capernaum, where our Lord's followers had been most numerous.

17. And when they saw Him they worshipped Him—prostrated themselves before Him in humble and devout adoration. "It is characteristic of S. Matthew's Gospel that this word, which indicates the homage and prostration before a king, should occur twelve times, whereas it is found twice only in each of the other Synoptics"—C. D. But some doubted. "Not some of the apostles, but of the disciples then with them; for now our Lord fulfilled His promise to appear to His disciples generally in Galilee; and this was probably the time when He was seen of 'five hundred brethren at once'"—R. W. When He first became visible at a distance from the place where they were assembled in the expectation of seeing Him, some failed to identify Him.

18. And Jesus came—came near—and spake to them—and with His approach, and within hearing of His voice, doubt was quickly scattered—saying, All power (R.V. "authority") is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Thus has the Divine King come into full possession of the kingdom of His grace, in glorious fulfilment of the purposes of His self-humiliation. "The kingdom of God has come with power." "Every creature, through the wide realms of space, is subjected to the rule of THE GOD-MAN-MEDIATOR; all are made subservient to the working out of His grand design, the restoration of our world from sin and misery, rendered wretched by sin; and the manifestation, through successive ages, of His own rectoral justice, boundless mercy, and infinite wisdom. And this His authority shall, in the fulness of time, be acknowledged even by those who have most rebelliously struggled against it. By the conquests of grace or power all shall be subdued"—R. W. (Dan. 7. 13, 14; Eph. 1. 20, 21; Phil. 2. 8, 9; Col. 2. 10; 1 Pet. 3. 22; comp. Acts 2. 24, 36.)

19. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations. (Literally, as in R.V. "make disciples of all the nations.") Since I am rightful "Lord of all"; since, in virtue of My having redeemed all the nations to God with My blood, I have authority to claim the subjection of the world to My dominion, Go ye, and proclaim My character, My rights, and My gospel of reconciliation to all the nations, and thus make them My disciples. "This includes the whole design of Christ's commission. Baptizing and teaching are the two great branches of that general design. And these were to be determined by the circumstances of things; which made it necessary in baptizing adult Jews or heathens, to teach them before they were baptized; in disciplining their children, to baptize them before they were taught; as the Jewish children, in all ages, were first circumcised, and after taught to do all God had commanded them"—WESLEY.

Baptizing them in—into—the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Thus baptism is the open declaration of a covenant, and is to be administered and received in the recognition of personal and most sacred spiritual relations to God. Baptizing them into—not in, as if to be a mere declaration of the authority with which they acted—into the name—not the names—of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. It may be confidently assumed that during the forty days since His resurrection, when our Lord so frequently appeared to His apostles, and taught them "the things concerning the kingdom of God," He gave them more definite instruction than He could possibly have given to them previously respecting the tri-personal nature of God, and thus prepared them for this most significant and peculiar form of words. And as they now had some conception, however dim, of this mysterious truth, they would quickly apprehend what He meant by administering the rite which they understood to be the symbol of purity, as the means of bringing believing men, expressly and formally, as they had themselves already come actually, into the deepest sacred connection with that awful name. They knew that the name of God represented His glorious Being and character, as revealed in the covenant engagement He had made with their fathers. They knew that when the high priest pronounced the prescribed form of benediction which from time to time renewed that covenant, —"Jehovah bless thee and keep thee; Jehovah make His face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee; Jehovah lift up His countenance upon thee and give thee peace,"—he was said to have regularly "put the name of God upon the children of Israel" (Num. 6. 24-27). They knew that to put the name of God upon a place was to set it apart formally as a place consecrated to His service (Deut. 12. 5); that to call the name of the Lord upon a people was to assert His supreme authority over them as "a holy people," and to declare His presence with them as their Ruler and Guardian (Isa. 63. 19; Jer. 7. 10, 11; 14. 9). And knowing all this, how naturally would they understand that to baptize a penitent believer in Jesus into the name of the Triune God would be to declare that he had come into covenant allegiance to God, to assure him of being a partaker of covenant rights, and at the same time to pledge him to a faithful fulfilment of covenant requirements.

S. MARK.

THE BOOK AND ITS AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR.

THE Author of this Gospel has been universally believed to be John, whose surname was Mark. (Acts 12. 12.) John (the grace of God) was his Jewish name, which gradually gave place to his Latin surname Marcus, which may mean "Manly." The places in the New Testament enable us to trace the steps which led to the change. The John Mark of Acts 12. 12, 25, and the John of Acts 13. 5, 13, becomes Mark only in Acts 15. 39; Col. 4. 10; 2 Tim. 4. 11; Philem. 24. The change of John to Mark is analogous to that of Saul to Paul. The change was natural when he came to preach chiefly among the Gentiles in the Roman Empire. Of his father we know nothing. His mother was a certain Mary, a Jewish matron of some position, who dwelt at Jerusalem (Acts 12. 12), and was probably born of an Hellenistic family in that city, i.e. a Jewish family who had adopted the Greek civilisation. Mark was cousin to Barnabas of Cyprus, the great friend of S. Paul. (Col. 4. 10.) "His mother would seem to have been intimately acquainted with S. Peter, and it was to her house, as to a familiar home, that the apostle repaired (A.D. 44) after his deliverance from prison. This accounts for S. Mark's intimate acquaintance with the apostle, to whom also he probably owed his conversion, for S. Paul calls him his son (1 Pet. 5. 13)"—CAMBRIDGE BIBLE. An event of the night of our Lord's betrayal, related by S. Mark alone, is a page of his own life, many have thought. "There followed Him a certain young man having a linen cloth cast about his naked body; and the young men laid hold on him, and he fled" (Mark 14. 51, 52). Other Evangelists introduce themselves in the same unobtrusive manner. We hear of S. Mark for the first time in Acts 12. 12, in connection with his mother's house. Then soon after, in Acts 12. 25, where we find him accompanying Paul and Barnabas on their return from Jerusalem to Antioch (A.D. 45). Next, on the occasion of the earliest missionary journey of the same apostles (A.D. 48), [when he joined them as their minister (Acts 13. 5), their lay-helper, to provide for their personal wants when travelling. "For some unrecorded reason, possibly want of courage, or home-sickness, or over-anxious care about the mother whom he had left at Jerusalem, he drew back at Perga in Pamphylia from the work to which they were sent, and returned home (Acts 13. 13)"—PLUMPTRE. Afterwards, he nobly redeemed his reputation, and was restored to the favour both of Barnabas and Paul. "We find him by S. Paul's side during his first imprisonment at Rome (A.D. 61–63); and he is acknowledged by him as one of his few fellow-labourers who had been a comfort to him during the weary hours of his imprisonment (Col. 4. 10, 11; Philem. 24). We next have traces of him in 1 Pet. 5. 13: 'The Church that is at Babylon saluteth you, and so doth Marcus my son.' From this we infer that he joined his spiritual father, the great friend of his mother, at Babylon, then, and for some hundred years afterwards, one of the chief seats of Jewish culture. From Babylon he would seem to have returned to Asia Minor; for during his second imprisonment (A.D. 68) S. Paul, writing to Timothy, charges him to bring S. Mark with him to Rome, on the ground that he was profitable unto him for the ministry (2 Tim. 4. 11). From this point we gain no further information from the New Testament respecting the Evangelist. It is not improbable, however, that He did join the apostle at Rome. After the martyrdom of S. Peter and S. Paul, ecclesiastical tradition affirms that S. Mark visited Egypt, founded the Church of Alexandria, and died by martyrdom"—CAMBRIDGE BIBLE.

THE BOOK.

Nothing certain beyond possibility of doubt can be stated as to the date, for the Gospel itself affords no information. Irenæus says it was written after the deaths of the apostles S. Peter and S. Paul, and therefore not before A.D. 63. "Again we may as certainly conclude that it was not written after the destruction of Jerusalem, for it is not likely that he would have omitted to record so remarkable a fulfilment of our Lord's predictions. Hence, A.D. 63–70 become our limits, but nearer than this we cannot go"—MACLEAR. The weight of testimony is in favour of the belief that this Gospel was written and published at Rome. In this, Clement, Eusebius, Jerome, Epiphanius, all agree. The Gospel was written in Greek, then the literary language of the world. It was written for the Gentile Christians, and especially for the Romans. All reference to the Jewish Law is omitted. Words are explained which could not be understood by Gentile readers. Jewish usages are illustrated, and genealogical notices of our Lord's descent omitted. The testimony of the Early Church is unanimous that the Evangelist composed his Gospel under the eye and direction of S. Peter. "S. Mark's is especially the Gospel for the Romans, and those of Roman characteristics. For the Roman, the mighty worker and conqueror of the world, Jesus is held up as the Divine Almighty Worker and Victor, the Lion of the tribe of Judah. It presents the Divine power and activity of our Lord, and views His career as one of conflict and conquest, ending in the universal sway of the Kingdom of God"—PROF. GREGORY. It is in some respects unlike the other three Gospels. It tells us nothing about the birth and early life of our Lord Jesus Christ. It contains comparatively few of His sayings and discourses. It is terse, brief, and graphic. Of all the four inspired histories, this is the shortest.

CHAPTER I.

Vers. 1–8. PREPARING THE WAY.—"The object of S. Mark being to relate the official life and ministry of our Lord, he begins with His baptism, and as a necessary introduction to it, with the preaching of John the Baptist"—ALFORD. "S. Mark's 'beginning' is not 'the beginning.' Behind this Gospel there are these events:—

The Word (John 1. 1–18).
Preface to Luke's Gospel (Luke 1. 1–4).
The Forerunner announced (Luke 1. 5–25).
The Annunciation to Mary (Luke 1. 26–38).
The Magnificat (Luke 1. 46–55).
Birth of John the Baptist (Luke 1. 56–80).
Birth of Jesus and Song of Angels (Luke 2. 1–20).
Presentation at the Temple (Luke 2. 21–39).
Visit of Wise Men from the East (Matt. 2. 1–12).
Massacre of the Innocents and Flight into Egypt (Matt. 2. 13–18).
Childhood of Jesus (Luke 2. 40–52).

"The ministry of John the Baptist is the beginning of the manifestation of Jesus. He is His forerunner. The meaning of the word translated Gospel is 'good news.' In the New Testament it always bears a special significance, 'the news of salvation.' Eastern conquerors were accustomed to send a herald before them to call the people of the countries through which they passed to prepare for their coming. On such an occasion, to make a 'king's highway' valleys had to be filled, hills levelled, byepaths straightened. Modern travellers tell us that to-day Eastern countries are so destitute of roads, that if you come to a passable piece you are sure to be told that it was built for the Prince of Wales, or the Empress Eugenie, or the Khedive, or Napoleon the Great. In a moral and spiritual sense John the Baptist came to prepare the way. 'Every unregenerate human heart is a wilderness abounding in obstacles to the coming of its King; mountains of selfishness and pride and prejudice, and sins of every kind, are to be levelled; crooked places of wrong-living, and wrong-doing, and bad habits are to be made straight; many a sin of omission and neglect is to be filled up, and many a rough place of temper, of manner, and of heart, is to be made smooth'"—PELOUBET. The New Testament idea of repentance is that of a change of mind, of purpose, a change of conduct certainly, but first of all a change of disposition.

1. The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ. "The Evangelist speaks with strict propriety, for the beginning of the Gospel is, in the account of John the Baptist, contained in the first paragraph; the Gospel itself in the rest of the book"—WESLEY.

4. Preaching the baptism of repentance—"that is, preaching repentance, and baptizing as a sign and means of it"—WESLEY.

7. The latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose—"that is, to do Him the very meanest service"—WESLEY.

9–11. BAPTISM OF JESUS. (See on Matt. 3. 13–17; Luke 3. 21, 22.)

12, 13. THE TEMPTATION. (See on Matt. 4. 1–11; Luke 4. 1–13.)

12. And immediately the Spirit thrusteth Him out into the wilderness. "So, in all the children of God, extraordinary manifestations of His favour are wont to be followed by extraordinary temptations"—WESLEY.

13. And He was there forty days tempted by Satan—"invisibly. After this followed the temptation by him in a visible shape, related by S. Matthew. And He was with the wild beasts—though they had no power to hurt Him. S. Mark not only gives us a compendium of S. Matthew's Gospel, but likewise several valuable particulars which the other Evangelists have omitted"—WESLEY.

14–20. CHRIST BEGINS HIS GALILEAN MINISTRY. (See on Matt. 4. 12–22.)

15. The time is fulfilled—"the time of My kingdom, foretold by Daniel, expected by you, is fully come"—WESLEY.

18. Straightway leaving their nets, they followed Him. "From this time they forsook their employ, and constantly attended Him. Happy they who follow Christ at the first call!"—WESLEY.

21–39. MIRACLES OF HEALING—The Man with an unclean spirit (vers. 21–28).—23. A man with an unclean spirit—"in an unclean spirit," as Wyclif rendered it; Tyndale and Cranmer paraphrased it, "vexed with." In the power, under the influence of an unclean spirit. Jesus rebuked him. Old translators have "reproved, threatened." Hold thy peace—"be muzzled."

The wisest will acknowledge that he who knows the most knows but little of demoniac possession. There were such of old; probably are such still. But how far possession is explainable as diseases are—how far unexplainable—where the natural and the supernatural meet and part, we cannot tell. Silence is here the loftiest speech; and a frank confession of ignorance the wisest wisdom. The universe is large. There are many things in heaven and earth. Christ is Lord of all.

26. A loud noise—"for he was forbidden to speak. Christ would neither suffer those evil spirits to speak in opposition, nor yet in favour of Him. He needed not their testimony, nor would encourage it, lest any should infer that He acted in concert with them"—WESLEY.

Ver. 31 is full of graphic touches. He went to the sufferer. He took her by the hand. He lifted her up. The fever quitted her; and she began to minister unto them. When the sun did set. It was a religion with the Jews to do as little as possible on the Sabbath. Suffered not the demons to speak. He would not be indebted to evil. S. Matthew connects the cures now wrought with the prophecy of Isaiah—Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses.

The Cure of Peter's Wife's Mother (vers. 29–31).—Our Lord had been to church. (See ver. 21 seq.) Note that He attended church everywhere—in the small town of Nazareth and the large city of Capernaum. Capernaum was the meeting-place of nations, the centre of commerce, like London, Liverpool, and Glasgow. A city church differs from a country church. Many young people who are devout worshippers in the village neglect to enter the church when they come to the town. Here Christ is our Example. Where is He not? From the church He goes to the home. He sanctified all places, honoured all relations. The house of Simon and Andrew in Capernaum was to our Lord what the house of Mary and Martha was in Bethany. He had no home of His own. On the Sabbath, after worship and work in the synagogue, He went to the apostle's house to eat bread. There He found sickness, and in His presence it fled. Disease could not exist in the presence of the Lord of Life. The description of the healing is very graphic. He went to the sufferer. He took her by the hand. He lifted her up. The fever quitted her. She began to minister unto them

A City's Sick (vers. 32–34).—All three Evangelists carefully record that it was not till the sun was setting, or had actually set, that these sick were brought to Jesus. The reason of this probably was—(1) either that they waited till the mid-day heat was past, and the cool of the evening was come; or (2) the day being the Sabbath (Mark 1. 29–32), they were unwilling to violate the sacred rest of the day, and so waited till it was ended. What a crowd of sick! You can judge the size of a city by the number of its hospitals and infirmaries. Those who are dependent upon the hospitals of London are the same in number as the population of Wolverhampton. Amongst the many reasons for the miracles of Jesus there is this: they enable us to see the miracles of common life. We understand the miracle of the annual harvest when we read the feeding of the five thousand. We see the mercy of God in medical skill when we watch the healing of a crowd of sick folk. These healed ones are unnamed. Their cures are not detailed. S. John, in his language of metaphor, wrote, "There are also many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself would not contain the books that should be written."

Solitary Prayer (ver. 35).—From work to worship our Lord went. "A remarkable feature of the Lake of Gennesaret," Dean STANLEY writes, "was that it was closely surrounded with desert solitudes. These desert places, thus close at hand on the tablelands or in the ravines of the eastern and western ranges, give opportunities of retirement for rest or prayer. Rising up early in the morning while it was yet dark, or passing over to the other side in a boat, He sought these solitudes sometimes alone, sometimes with His disciples. The Lake in this double aspect is thus a reflex of that union of energy and rest, of active labour and deep devotion, which is the essence of Christianity, as it was of the life of Him in whom that union was first taught and shown."

32. When the sun was set—"and, consequently, the Sabbath was ended, which they reckoned from sunset to sunset"—WESLEY.

33. And the whole city was gathered together at the door. "Oh what a fair prospect was here! Who could then have imagined that all these blossoms would die away without fruit?"—WESLEY.

34. He suffered not the devils to say that they knew Him—"that is, according to Dr. Mead's hypothesis (that the scriptural demoniacs were only diseased persons), 'He suffered not the diseases to say that they knew Him!'"—WESLEY.

35. Rising a great while before day—"so did He labour for us both day and night"—WESLEY.

The Home Missionary (vers. 36–39).—His heart was wide as the world. Every man He called brother. Whosoever has gone to church and come away without a deeper sense of his relations to his fellows, has gone to church in vain. Christ belonged to all. His gospel is designed for all.

The Incurable Cured (vers. 40–45).—The most terrible of all maladies was leprosy. It was a living death, a slow decay of every limb. It was death's own mark. But Christ is Lord of All. Nothing is impossible to God. (See on Matt. 8. 1–4; Luke 5. 12–16.)

44. See thou say nothing to any man. "But our blessed Lord gives no such charge to us. If He has made us clean from our leprosy of sin, we are not commanded to conceal it. On the contrary, it is our duty to publish it abroad, both for the honour of our Benefactor, and that others who are sick of sin may be encouraged to ask and hope for the same benefit. But go, show thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing what Moses commanded for a testimony to them. The priests seeing him, pronouncing him clean

(Lev. 13. 17, 23, 28, 37), and accordingly allowing him to offer as Moses commanded (Lev. 14. 2–7), was such a proof against them, that they durst never say the leper was not cleansed; which, out of envy or malice against our Saviour, they might have been ready to say, upon his presenting himself to be viewed, according to the Law, if, by the cleansed person's talking much about his cure, the account of it had reached their ears before he came in person. This is one great reason why our Lord commanded this man to say nothing" —WESLEY.

45. So that Jesus could no more openly enter into the city. "It was also to prevent this inconvenience that our Lord had enjoined him silence"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER II.

Vers. 1–12. HEALING OF THE PARALYTIC. (See on Matt. 9. 1–8; Luke 5. 17–26.)—A Great Crowd (vers. 1, 2).—Some knowledge of Eastern life and architecture is necessary to picture the scene. Fortunately, Eastern travellers are so numerous, we are placed in the position of those who attend a panorama, and see, cast upon the sheet, cities and provinces they have never visited. "If we may judge from the ruins on the site of the town," says GEIKIE, "the house was only a single storey high, with a flat roof, reached by a stairway from the yard or court, and Jesus may have stood near the door, in such a position as to be able to address the crowd outside, as well as those in the chamber. Possibly, however, there were two storeys in this particular house, as there must have been in some in the town, and in that case the upper one would likely be a large room—the upper and best chamber—such as was often used elsewhere by rabbis for reading and expounding the Law to their disciples, and Jesus may have stood near the open window, so as to be heard both outside and within." All the avenues of approach to the house were blocked, and the courtyard or vestibule was filled. Houses of the better sort were built around a four-sided court—an interior space frequently paved. Into this area a passage from the street led. The materials still employed in the construction of roofs are beams placed about three feet apart, across which sticks are arranged close together, and covered with a thickly-matted thorn-bush; over this is placed a coat of thick mortar, and above that, marl or earth. To the crowd He preached. The healthy were attracted to the Teacher; the sick to the Healer. All found some point of contact in Jesus Christ. It is so still. He does not belong to this class or that; He belongs to none, because He belongs to all. He is the Saviour of the poor; but is He not the Saviour of the rich? The children of the well-to-do need His virtue not less than the children of the gutter and the alley. Let teachers emphasise this. So much is said to-day of the need of religion for the masses —the residuum, the outcasts—we are in danger of forgetting that the classes—the wealthy, the refined, the aristocrats—cannot save themselves. Jesus dominated the city of Capernaum. When will He dominate the cities of London, Manchester, Liverpool, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, New York, Sydney, Calcutta? Is He not the Saviour still?

A Great Sufferer (vers. 3–5).—In its worst forms the palsy was miserable; in any form it was a serious drain upon the springs of life. The man had need of help, but the difficulties were many. He could not bring himself. His friends could not carry him through the crowd. But they were resourceful. They dug through the roof. Having ascended, they broke up the tiling or thin stone slabs, as some suppose; or if the roof was made of earth and matted thorn-bush only, as others imagine (for both methods are still adopted), they tore them up and let down their precious burden into the midst of the astonished crowd. Never was a patient so introduced before. Shall we name it Triumph over Hindrances? Our Lord marked their faith especially. Their act showed this. They believed that if they brought the sufferer to the sympathising Saviour, it would not be in vain. What does the incident mean to-day? We can help and bless each other. A scholar can speak a loving word to another who may be angry, or poor, or in pain. A teacher may pray for those she teaches. A wife may bring a husband to Christ, and a parent may direct a child's conscience. Sometimes it may be necessary for parent, teacher, friend, and minister—like the four friends of the narrative —to carry the need and sin and shame and sorrow of some one to God. It has been noted that in this story of healing each one gets what he goes after—the sick man obtains forgiveness and health; the four gain the blessing they sought for their neighbour; the critics and fault-finders see the faults which they came to find. You may have seen two pictures entitled "THE ROCK OF AGES." In one a person is clinging with both hands to a cross on a rock in the stormy sea. In the other, with one hand the saved person is clinging to the cross, with the other she is reaching out and drawing another drowning one from the raging waves to the safety of the cross on the rock.

A Great Doubt (vers. 6, 7).—Christ spoke His great word, Thy sins be forgiven thee. A startling word indeed. Prophets had wrought miracles, but they had not forgiven sins. This was the prerogative of God only. Sins are against God, and therefore only God can forgive them. Perhaps the listeners recalled the penitent prayer of their celebrated king—"Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned, and done that which is evil in Thy sight; that Thou mayest be justified when Thou speakest, and be clear when Thou judgest." The claim to forgive sins implied a claim to distinct equality with God in respect to one of His most incommunicable attributes. These thoughts, and thoughts like these, were in the minds of the listening Pharisees and lawyers. Could this Rabbi be from God? Was He greater than Abraham, Elijah, Jonah? They did not forgive men's sins. These thoughts were unspoken. Our word "dialogue" comes from the original of this word "reasoning." They spake, held a dialogue in the inner world of their thoughts. And what a world that is! How many thoughts we think but dare not speak. God knows our thoughts. The Lord Christ saw the reasonings of the scribes just as He had seen the faith of the bearers, and the penitence of him whom they carried. "Thou God seest me" is a wide text. God is the All-seer; the One who sees everything and misses nothing. Now and again we catch ourselves saying, "No one saw me," and instantly we reflect—"Yes, One." And that One is THE ONE. Remember the Eye of God to make you careful; remember the Eye of God to make you bold: careful not to do wrong, bold in doing right. For God's watchfulness is loving watchfulness. He delighteth in our goodness. All His commandments—positive and negative—are for our good—always to keep us.

A Great Challenge (vers. 8, 9).—Observe, our Lord does not say, Whether is it easier to forgive sins or to heal? The possibility of forgiveness was the point in dispute. But He says, Whether is it easier to say this or that; to claim these powers. It would be easier to claim the power to forgive because that could not be demonstrated. To claim the power to heal would be more difficult, because they would say, "Show us the man healed." So that our Lord says, I will prove My right to say, "Thy sins be forgiven thee," by saying, Arise, and walk, and the latter miracle wrought before your eyes will lead you to ask whether there may reside in Me the power to forgive. The Bible compares God's forgiving love to the sea, which buries all in its great depths. When the burden fell from the back of Bunyan's Pilgrim, he leaped for joy. The forgiven live a new life, following the commandments of God, and walking in His holy ways.

A Great Victory (vers. 10–12).—The man's faith was tested by the word of command, Arise, take up thy bed, and go. How could helplessness rise and weakness carry? Power went with the word. God's "do" always includes "I will help thee." He went forth at the bidding of the Christ of God. And EDERSHEIM, being himself a Jew, and finding points of contact between the Old Testament and the New, which we Gentiles might overlook, says: "The wrath of these scribes praised God, and the remainder of wrath did He restrain. As the healed man slowly rose, and, still silent, rolled up his pallet, a way was made for him between this multitude which followed him with wondering eyes. Then, as first mingled wonderment and fear fell on Israel on Mount Carmel, when the fire had leaped from heaven, devoured the sacrifice, licked up the water in the trench, and even consumed the stones of the altar, and then all fell prostrate, and the shout rose to heaven, 'Jehovah, He is the Elohim!' so now, in view of this manifestation of the Divine Presence among them. The amazement of fear fell on them in this Presence, and they glorified God, and they said, We have never seen it on this wise."

1. And again—"after having been in desert places for some time, He returned privately to the city. In the house—in Peter's house"—WESLEY.

2. And many were gathered together. "Hitherto continued the general impression on their hearts. Hitherto, even at Capernaum, all who heard received the word with joy"—WESLEY.

4. They uncovered the roof—"or, took up the covering, the lattice or trap-door which was on all their houses, being flat-roofed; and, finding it not wide enough, broke the passage wider to let down the couch"—WESLEY.

6. But certain of the scribes. "See whence the first offence cometh! As yet not one of the plain unlettered people were offended. They all rejoiced in the light, till these men of learning came to put darkness for light, and light for darkness. Woe to all such blind guides! Good had it been for these if they had never been born. O God, let me never offend one of Thy simple ones! Sooner let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth!"—WESLEY.

12. They were all amazed. "Even the scribes themselves for a time"—WESLEY.

Vers. 13–17. LEVI'S (OR MATTHEW'S) CALL AND FEAST. (See on Matt. 9. 9–13; Luke 5. 27–32.)—13, All the multitude came to Him—"namely, by the seaside. And He as readily taught them there as if they had been in a synagogue"—WESLEY.

15. Many publicans and notorious sinners sat with Jesus. "Some of them, doubtless, invited by S. Matthew, moved with compassion for his old companions in sin. But the next words, For they were many, and they followed Him, seem to imply that the greater part, encouraged by His gracious words and the tenderness of His behaviour, and impatient to hear more, stayed for no invitation, but pressed in after Him, and kept as close to Him as they could"—WESLEY.

16. And the scribes and the Pharisees said. "So now the wise men, being joined by the saints of the world, went a little further in raising prejudices against our Lord. In His answer He uses, as yet, no harshness, but only calm, dispassionate reasoning"—WESLEY.

17. I came not to call the righteous—"therefore, if these were righteous, I should not call them. But now they are the very persons I came to save"—WESLEY.

Vers. 18–22. DISCOURSE ON FASTING. (See on Matt. 9. 14–17; Luke 5. 33–39.)

Vers. 23–28. PLUCKING CORN-EARS ON THE SABBATH. (See on Matt. 12. 1–8; Luke 6. 1–5.)—26. In the days of Abiathar the high priest. "Abimelech, the father of Abiathar, was high priest then; Abiathar himself, not till some time after. This phrase, therefore, only means in the time of Abiathar, who was afterwards the high priest"—WESLEY.

27. The Sabbath was made for man—"and therefore must give way to man's necessity"—WESLEY.

28. Moreover, the Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath—"being the supreme Lawgiver, He hath power to dispense with His own laws; and with this in particular"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER III.

Vers. 1–12. HEALING A WITHERED HAND, AND SUBSEQUENT RETIREMENT. (See on Matt. 12. 9–21; Luke 6. 6–11.)—1. He entered again into the synagogue—"at Capernaum on the same day"—WESLEY.

2. And they—"the scribes and Pharisees—watched Him, that they might accuse Him. Pride, anger, and shame, after being so often put to silence, began now to ripen into malice"—WESLEY.

4. Is it lawful to save life, or to kill?—"which He knew they were seeking occasion to do. But they held their peace—being confounded, though not convinced"—WESLEY.

5. Looking round upon them with anger, being grieved—"angry at the sin, grieved at the sinner: the true standard of Christian anger. But who can separate anger at sin from anger at the sinner? None but a true believer in Christ"—WESLEY.

6. The Pharisees going out—"probably leaving the scribes to watch Him still—took counsel with the Herodians—as bitter as they usually were against each other!"—WESLEY.

8. From Idumea—"the natives of which had now professed the Jewish religion above an hundred and fifty years. They about Tyre and Sidon—the Israelites who lived in those coasts"—WESLEY.

10. "Plagues or 'scourges' (so the Greek word properly means) seem to be those very painful or afflictive disorders which were frequently sent, or at least permitted of God, as a scourge or punishment of sin"—WESLEY.

12. He charged them not to make Him known—"it was not the time; nor were they fit preachers"—WESLEY.

Vers. 13–19. THE TWELVE APOSTLES CHOSEN. (See on Luke 6. 12–19.)—13. He calleth whom He would. "With regard to the eternal states of men God always acts as just and merciful. But with regard to numberless other things He seems to us to act as mere Sovereign"—WESLEY.

16. He surnamed them sons of thunder—"both with respect to the warmth and impetuosity of their spirit, their fervent manner of preaching, and the power of their word"—WESLEY.

Vers. 20–30. JESUS HEALS A DEMONIAC, AND HIS ENEMIES BLASPHEME. (See on Matt. 12. 22–37; Luke 11. 14–26.)—20. To eat bread—"that is, to take any subsistence"—WESLEY.

21. His relations—"His mother and His brethren (ver. 31). But it was some time before they could come near Him"—WESLEY.

22. "The scribes and Pharisees (Matt. 12. 24) who had come down from Jerusalem—purposely, on the devil's errand, and not without success, for the common people now began to drink in the poison from these learned, good, honourable men! He hath Beelzebub—at command, is in league with him. And by the prince of the devils casteth He out devils. How easily may a man of learning elude the strongest proof of a work of God! How readily can he account for every incident without ever taking God into the question!"—WESLEY.

30. Because they said, He hath an unclean spirit. "Is it not astonishing that men who have ever read these words should doubt what is the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost? Can any words declare more plainly that it is 'the ascribing those miracles to the power of the devil which Christ wrought by the power of the Holy Ghost'?"—WESLEY.

Vers. 31–35. HIS MOTHER AND BRETHREN COME TO HIM. (See on Matt. 12. 46–50; Luke 8. 19–21.)—31. Then come His brethren and His mother—"having at length made their way through the crowd, so as to come to the door. His brethren are here named first, as being first and most earnest in the design of taking Him, for 'neither did' these of 'His brethren believe on Him.' They sent to Him, calling Him—they sent one into the house, who called Him aloud by name"—WESLEY.

34. Looking round on them who sat about Him—"with the utmost sweetness. He said, Behold My mother and My brethren. In this preference of His true disciples, even to the Virgin Mary, considered merely as His mother after the flesh, He not only shows His high and tender affection for them, but seems designedly to guard against those excessive and idolatrous honours which He foresaw would, in after ages, be paid to her"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER IV.

Vers. 1–34. PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM. (See on Matt. 13. 1–23, 31, 32; Luke 8. 4–18.)—I. Parabolic Teaching.—To-day we enter the charmed circle of the Parables of our Saviour. One who was writing a Life of Christ, pausing in a moment of exultation, said, "Twenty men could not, in a lifetime, write all I now see: how can I put it into one book?" How can the Parables of the Kingdom be put into one lesson? They are seven:

1. The Parable of the Sower.
2. The Parable of the Tares.
3. The Parable of the Drag Net.
4. The Parable of the Mustard Seed.
5. The Parable of the Leaven.
6. The Parable of the Hidden Treasure.
7. The Parable of the Pearl of Great Price.

This is not exactly the order in which they were given. Nor were they all spoken at one time. "With many such parables spake He the word unto them, as they were able to hear it." It was the method of His teaching. A parable is a Divine painting concealing truth from the foolish, but revealing it to the wise, always founded on analogy from nature or daily life. In the New Testament two Greek words have been rendered by this one English term. One of these is almost peculiar to S. John, seeing that he uses it four times: "This parable spake Jesus unto them" (ch. 10. 6); "These things have I spoken unto you in parables; the hour cometh when I shall no more speak unto you in parables" (ch. 16. 25); "Lo, now speakest Thou plainly, and speakest no parable" (ver. 29). The Revised Version has the word "proverb" sometimes in the text and at others in the margin. In the only other passage in which the word occurs (2 Pet. 2. 22) both the Authorised and the Revised have "proverb." The other and more common term, which is never used by S. John, while it is the one employed by the other Evangelists, is simply the English word in Greek letters—parable. It means to throw or place side by side; the placing one thing by the side of another for the purpose of comparison.

In its more restricted sense, it is the name given to a connected narrative, whether of events in human life or of a process in nature, by which some great spiritual truth is illustrated or enforced. The little girl was very near the mark when she said that "a parable is an earthly story with a heavenly meaning." All things are double. The sun shines to give light and life, but he is also a great preacher of moral and spiritual truths. When wise men look into his face they think of the Maker, of whom it is said, "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all." Our Lord found God everywhere, suggestions of spiritual truths in all things. "This world, with all its forces and powers, is patterned after spiritual things, and seems made purposely to express invisible forms, as in an incarnation, the invisible facts of the spiritual world. Thus many of our words for immaterial things are derived from the material world. Spirit is derived from breath; heaven is that which is heaved up; heart-courage is from our physical heart. Hence the ease and naturalness of illustrations from nature. Christ took almost as many texts from the works as from the words of God"—PELOUBET. Stanley, Thomson, Tristram, and other travellers have pointed out that the scenery round the Lake suggested many of the details of the parables of the kingdom: (1) on the shore was the vast multitude gathered "out of every city" (Luke 8. 4); (2) from the fishing-boat the eye of the Divine Speaker would rest on (a) patches of undulating cornfields with the trodden pathway running through them, the rocky ground of the hillside protruding here and there, the large bushes of thorn growing in the very midst of the waving wheat, the deep loam of the good rich soil which distinguishes the whole of the Plain of Gennesaret descending close to the water's edge; (b) the mustard tree, which grows especially on the shores of the Lake; (c) the fishermen connected with the great fisheries, which once made the fame of Gennesaret, plying amidst its marvellous shoals of fish the drag net or "hauling net" (Matt. 13. 47, 48), the casting net (Matt. 4. 18; Mark 1. 16), the bag net, and basket net (Luke 5. 4–9); (d) the women and children employed in picking out from the wheat the tall green stalks called by the Arabs Zuwân, Greek Zizania, the Lollia of the Vulgate, the tares of our version; (e) the countless flocks of birds, aquatic fowl by the Lake side, partridges and pigeons hovering over the rich plain. A Jewish proverb says four characteristics distinguish those that sit in the presence of the sages in order to study: they are either like a sponge, or a funnel, or a strainer, or a sieve. The sponge sucketh in everything without discrimination; the funnel receiveth at one end and poureth out at the other, not retaining anything; the strainer allows the liquor to escape, and retains the dregs; the sieve separates the chaff from the fine flour. Some who listened to Christ were made more blind by the light. "He spake the word unto them as they were able to hear it." "He said unto the Twelve, Unto you is given the mystery of the kingdom of God; but unto them that are without, all things are done in parables: that, seeing, they may see and not perceive, and hearing they may hear and not understand." He gave parables not to produce moral blindness, but because it existed. "Did He speak in parables because He did not wish them to know and to enjoy? Everything the reverse. But He was aware that in consequence of the inveteracy of their prepossession, they could not, in the first instance, see the secret of the kingdom without being repelled in spirit and confirmed in their dissent and dislike. He wished, therefore, that they should not see. But at the same time He graciously wished that they should look, and keep looking, so that they might, if possible, get such a glimpse of the inner glory as might fascinate their interest and attention, and by and by disarm their prejudices, so that they might with safety be permitted to see"—MORISON.

II. Parables of Growth.—The seed growing secretly is the only parable which is peculiar to S. Mark, and seems to take the place of the leaven recorded by S. Matthew (Matt. 13. 33). The emphasis is on the secret energy of the seed, which grows on whilst the sower sleeps. "The earth beareth fruit of herself." This thought occurs again in the narrative of S. Peter's deliverance from prison; the gate opened to them of its own accord. Man's part in the growth is inconsiderable. The seed is not his. He sows it; but he does not make it grow. When we look upon a plant, we say "It grew." But what growth is, who can say? We know it in its effects rather than in itself. The seed is sown, but its growth goes on dependent on the laws of growth, as we say; on seed and soil, on rain and sunshine; in one word, on God. So will our work ripen. We do our task; it is God who holds in His hands the consequences. "The working passes along, in trust, as it were, now through man, now from man, now to man"—MORISON.

By and by comes the harvest-home. The parable of the mustard seed would recall to the Jewish hearers pages in the scrolls of Ezekiel and Daniel (Dan. 4. 10-12; Ezek. 17. 22-24; 31. 3-9). The intensive power of the kingdom was marked in the parable of the leaven: its extensive power in the parable of the mustard seed. The smallness of the mustard seed had become proverbial. It was used, not only by our Lord, but frequently by the rabbis, to indicate the smallest amount. When grown, it is a tree in comparison with other garden herbs; and a tree whose branches afforded lodgment to the birds of heaven was a familiar Old Testament figure for a mighty kingdom that gave shelter to the nations. Expansiveness is the idea. The kingdom of heaven began with twelve disciples, but it is yet to cover the world. In another narrower sense this is the law of all we do, either for good or evil. Beginnings are small, but endings are not. So with goodness in the heart. Small at the outset, it grows until it controls the entire heart and intellect and life. The Cross of Christ is a symbol of victory over a ransomed world. The kingdoms of earth often begin full of promise and end in ruin. Not so the kingdom of God. God's works all commence small, according to worldly measurements. In spite of persecution and violence, the Church has grown and will continue. A Luther, a Knox, a Calvin, a Wesley, under God, may turn a nation upside down. The despised Christ is King of kings and Lord of lords.

2. He taught them many things by parables—"after the usual manner of the Eastern nations, to make His instructions more agreeable to them, and to impress them the more upon attentive hearers. A parable signifies, not only a simile or comparison, and sometimes a proverb, but any kind of instructive speech, wherein spiritual things are explained and illustrated by natural. 'To understand a proverb, and the interpretation' (Prov. 1. 6). The proverb is the literal sense, the interpretation is the spiritual: resting in the literal sense killeth, but the spiritual giveth life"—WESLEY.

3. Hearken. "This word He probably spake with a loud voice, to stop the noise and hurry of the people"—WESLEY.

10. When He was alone—"that is, retired apart from the multitude"—WESLEY.

11. To them that are without—"so the Jews termed the heathens; so our Lord terms all obstinate unbelievers; for they shall not enter into His kingdom; they shall abide in outer darkness"—WESLEY.

12. So that seeing they see, and do not perceive. "They would not see before; now they could not, God having given them up to the blindness which they had chosen"—WESLEY.

13. Know ye not this parable—"which is as it were the foundation of all those that I shall speak hereafter; and is so easy to be understood"—WESLEY.

19. The desire of other things choke the word—"a deep and important truth! The desire of anything, otherwise than as it leads to happiness in God, directly tends to barrenness of soul. Entering in—where they were not before. Let him, therefore, who has received and retained the word, see that no other desire then enter in, such as perhaps till then he never knew. It becometh unfruitful—after the fruit had grown almost to perfection"—WESLEY.

21. And He said, Is a candle. "As if He had said, I explain these things to you, I give you this light, not to conceal, but to impart it to others. And if I conceal anything from you now, it is only that it may be more effectually manifested hereafter"—WESLEY.

24. Take heed what ye hear—"that is, attend to what you hear, that it may have its due influence upon you. With what measure ye mete—that is, according to the improvement you make of what you have heard, still further assistance shall be given. And to you that hear—that is, with improvement"—WESLEY.

25. He that hath—"that improves whatever he has received, to the good of others, as well as of his own soul"—WESLEY.

26. So is the kingdom of God. "The inward kingdom is like seed which a man casts into the ground. This a preacher of the gospel casts into the heart. And he sleeps, and rises night and day—that is, he has it continually in his thoughts. Meantime it springs and grows up he knows not how—even he that sowed it cannot explain how it grows. For as the earth by a curious kind of mechanism, which the greatest philosophers cannot comprehend, does as it were spontaneously bring forth first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear; so the soul, in an inexplicable manner, brings forth, first weak graces, then stronger, then full holiness; and all this of itself, as a machine, whose spring of motion is within itself. Yet observe the amazing exactness of the comparison: the earth brings forth no corn, as the soul no holiness, without both the care and toil of man, and the benign influence of heaven"—WESLEY.

29. He putteth in the sickle. "God cutteth down and gathereth the corn into His garner"—WESLEY.

33. He spake the word as they were able to hear—"adapting it to the capacity of His hearers, and speaking as plain as He could without offending them. A rule never to be forgotten by those who instruct others"—WESLEY.

Vers. 35–41. THE STILLING OF THE TEMPEST. (See on Matt. 8. 23–27; Luke 8. 22–25.)—36. They take Him as He was in the vessel—"they carried Him immediately in the same vessel from which He had been preaching to the people"—WESLEY.

38. On the pillow. "So we translate it, for want of a proper English expression for that particular part of the vessel near the rudder on which He lay"—WESLEY.

39. Peace. "Cease thy tossing. Be still. Cease thy roaring—lit. 'be thou gagged'"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER V.

Vers. 1–21. HEALING OF THE GADARENE DEMONIAC. (See on Matt. 8. 28–34; 9. 1; Luke 8. 26–40.)

I. Possessed.—Glorious cure of the Gadarene demoniac is the heading we may place above this miracle. We may confess at once that there is a strangeness, a weirdness, a mystery about it, that requires us to remember that it was the power of the Son of God which cast out the evil spirits. Forgetful of reverence, some have made merry with the story of the swine. Let us rather confess that our knowledge of the other world is too vague, our knowledge of the possibilities of brute-life is too limited, to interpret fully and absolutely all that we read here. But that Lord of nature who, in the previous chapter, hushed the winds to silence, and made the waves obedient to His word, is also the Lord of Life who has the hearts of all men at His disposal, and turneth them as seemeth best to His godly wisdom. The man who refused to send for a doctor because he could not understand all the laws of cure would hardly be as wise as Solomon. How demons can possess swine we may not understand: but do we understand how they possess men? The union of mind and body is a mystery of spiritual influence. Evil thoughts come unbidden, even to the good. Some angels are not good angels, as a night stroll in any city will testify. There are sins that are naked and open to the sight of men; others are only set in the light of God's countenance. S. Mark, the inspired man, puts in the front how it befell him that was possessed. It is on the picture of the man that attention is fixed. What a subject for an artist:—

First panel.—The raving man, naked and bleeding, fierce and furious—the terror of the neighbourhood.

Second panel.—The dispossessed man, calm and tranquil, clothed and cleansed, sitting at the feet of Jesus, and in his right mind.

Each Evangelist adds something to complete the picture of the terrible visitation under which the possessed man laboured—S. Matthew, that he made the way impassable for travellers (ch. 8. 28); S. Luke, that he was without clothing (ch. 8. 27); S. Mark, that he cried night and day, and cut himself with stones (ch. 5. 5). He lived, too, among the tombs. He is described broadly as a man with an unclean spirit. Can we find any present-day lessons here? A man with an unclean spirit—is he living still? Could we find him if we made a diligent search? "As drunk as a lord," and "He swore like a trooper," are no longer true to a proverb. We have to ransack history to ascertain what such phrases mean. A country gentleman of the present day would not become intoxicated by rule. English officers would exclude from the mess-room a brother officer who uttered oaths and curses. And yet drunkenness and impurity are in all classes of society. Thousands of the lower classes are brutalised. The life of many of the young men of the middle classes is that of sowing to the flesh. In some circles the possibility of purity is received with a sneer. Temptation has a demoniac deceptiveness. This poor man of the Gospel history dwelt among the tombs, wore no clothes, fought with wild beasts, and thought himself the companion of the dead. And "stealing my master's money" is veiled under "appropriating for a time," "using for a temporary convenience." Let us strip falsehood of its disguises. "Due mental reserve" plain men call "lying." "Appropriating" is "stealing." "Outwitting" is no more honest than "highway robbery." The uneducated poor may be men of unclean spirits, so may the educated rich. This is not a question of money, station, or influence. It is more moral than intellectual. In an exhibition of pictures there was a show picture which all the world ran to see. It was called "The Road to Ruin." It consisted of five panels: College, Ascot, Arrest, Struggles, The End. It portrayed the road to ruin of a rich young gambler. But most likely his head was emptier than his purse. There was another picture of greater significance. It was poor Richard Savage sleeping in Covent Garden Market. Here is the man: An earl's son, a shoemaker's apprentice, who had seen life in all its forms, who had feasted among blue ribands in St. James's Square, and had lain with fifty pounds' weight of iron on his legs in the condemned cell of Newgate. This man had, after many vicissitudes of fortune, sunk at last into abject and hopeless poverty. His pen had failed him. He now lived by begging. He dined on venison and champagne whenever he had been so fortunate as to borrow a guinea. If his questing had been unsuccessful, he appeased the rage of hunger with some scraps of broken meat, and lay down to rest under the piazza of Covent Garden. That is Lord Macaulay's description, and the picture was painted to illustrate it. That Richard Savage became a helpless and hopeless beggar is fuller of meaning than that Mr. Frith's gambler blew his brains out. The science of astronomy does not lead all our Magi to Christ. The inspiration of poetry is not always associated with the inspiration of a holy life. To be able to write wise precepts is not necessarily to possess the power to practise them. Did not Jesus Christ say that tombs might be whitewashed? Was not His law this, "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." "Not that which entereth into a man defileth a man." "By their fruits ye shall know men." Their position, their influence, their authority shall not be safe signs that they are not "men with unclean spirits."

II. Confronted.—When he saw Jesus afar off, he ran and worshipped. According to another Evangelist, there were two demon-possessed men. S. Mark only speaks of one. Probably one was much better known in the country round than the other, or one was so much fiercer that the other was hardly taken any account of. The demons knew and named Jesus Christ. Hades recognises heaven. Profligacy worships purity. Whatever men practise, they believe in a life Divine as Christ's. This is not the only instance in the Gospels of the recognition of our Lord by demonised men. Indeed, few things are more noteworthy in His life than the way in which the outcasts of society gathered to Him. The most hopeless gathered hope from His tone and look. As the demoniac man drew near, Jesus said, Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit. Fear took possession of him. As he bowed to worship, he cried with a loud voice, What have I got to do with Thee, Jesus? Was this the man's question? or did the demon speak through him? We know not. This we know, moral evil dreads the presence of Jesus. The Great White Throne is described as terrible. And "the wrath of the Lamb" is one of the weirdest pictures in the Bible. The demonised acknowledged the Son of God. And in reply, He said, What is thy name? It is the only instance on record of our Lord asking a distinctive name. But a name is the outward sign of personality—of responsibility. There will be a great naming at the Judgment Day. My name is Legion, answered the man. The presence of Roman armies in Palestine had rendered every Jew too well acquainted with the word legion as descriptive of a multitude. The man was confused. The possession led him to believe that a multitude of unseen spirits ruled him. His personality was destroyed. And he besought Him much that He would not send him away out of the country. Or, as S. Matthew, "If Thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine." Or, as S. Luke, "They besought Him that He would not command them to go out in the deep." Are the demons powerless except they take some bodily form? Must it be men or swine? But we have said already that speculation here is useless, if indeed it be not irreverent. We know that a rider communicates his exultation or his fear to the horse on which he rides, or the dog which accompanies him. We know that though man's control over the brute creation is curtailed, it is yet considerable. But we do not know enough of that other world to do more than read vers. 12, 13. The man was saved, the swine were lost.

III. Healed.—They came to Jesus from the surrounding country, stirred by the strange tale, and saw him which was possessed sitting clothed and in his right mind. He who had been always night and day in the mountains was sitting. He who could not be bound, and wore no clothes, was clothed. The man who had been crying and cutting himself with stones was at the feet of Jesus. Christianity clothes the naked, moderates the madness of passion, and brings all to the feet of Jesus, to learn lessons of life, and receive strength to live lives of godliness. Literally, many a one has been clothed. He who had a ragged coat and an empty pocket before conversion, now has a purse and two coats. The cost of religion is less than the cost of wickedness. This healed man is another picture of the seeking love of Christ, of the unmeasured love of God. Divine pity stoops to the lowliest and most degraded. Generally our Lord enjoined silence on those He blessed. Now He commands speech. Go home to thy friends and tell them. And the man departed and began to publish. Thus He who took away their swine sent them a missionary.

2. There met Him a man with an unclean spirit. "S. Matthew mentions two. Probably this, so particularly spoken of here, was the most remarkably fierce and ungovernable"—WESLEY.

9. My name is Legion; for we are many. "But all these seem to have been under one commander, who accordingly speaks all along both for them and himself"—WESLEY.

15. And they were afraid. "It is not improbable they might otherwise have offered some rudeness, if not violence"—WESLEY.

19. Tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee. "This was peculiarly needful there, where Christ did not go in person"—WESLEY.

20. He published in Decapolis—"not only at home, but in all that country where Jesus Himself did not come"—WESLEY.

Vers. 22–43. RAISING OF THE DAUGHTER OF JAIRUS, AND HEALING OF THE WOMAN WITH AN ISSUE OF BLOOD. (See on Matt. 9. 18–26; Luke 8. 41–56.)

We must think chiefly of the act of the Lord of Life in raising the child of Jairus. But we are not forbidden to consider the new life poured into the veins of the pain-stricken woman. For amongst those who thronged our Lord (see ver. 24), she was the most important. And, indeed, the two wonderful deeds are hardly separable. The special point is that in going to help one sufferer Jesus Christ paused to help another. Misery never wearied Him. There is no sign in the four Gospels of weariness, still less of impatience, at the constant claims on His attention. He came into the world with distinct reference to misery. He never grew tired of helping. Misery was never in His way. On the appeal of Jairus He started to the house of mourning. They were joined by a curious and expectant crowd. Many had seen, more had heard, about the miracles of healing: the demon-possessed man in the synagogue; the paralytic let down through the roof; the centurion's servant; Simon's mother-in-law; and the nobleman's son—all of which occurred in this city. On the way He paused. A woman compelled, not by curiosity, but by need, came behind Him and touched His garments. He turned Him about in the press and said, Who touched My clothes? The people denied; the disciples remonstrated. Jesus insisted, Somebody hath touched Me. At last the poor woman pressed through the throng, and falling down before Him, told Him all the truth. While He yet spake, they come from the ruler of the synagogue's house, saying, Thy daughter is dead. Entering the house, He silenced the mourners, and broke upon the stillness of death by His word of command, Damsel, I say unto thee, arise. And straightway the damsel rose up, and walked. One miracle is embedded in the other.

I. Here are two sorrows brought to one Sympathiser. (Read vers. 23 and 25, and compare with Matthew and Luke.)—The sorrow of Jairus trembled in the words which told it. My little daughter, my only daughter, is a dying; she is at the point of death; she is perhaps even now dead. Come into the house, lay Thy hands on her, and she shall live. Sentences are broken by sobs of grief; words are dropped as if forgotten. As for the woman, it is easy to see how the thought of coming grew in her mind. The tide of His fame had rapidly risen. Her money gone, further application to the many physicians was impossible, and, with her experience, quite as useless. So when she heard of Jesus she came. We hear her muttering as she comes, If I may touch but His clothes, I shall be whole!

A dying child, and death lingering ere it take the aged, such is the picture The one had twelve years of life, and the other twelve years of suffering. In one case the lamp of life was going out, in the other it was burning low. Both were women. Daughters of the first sinner, they are sharers in their mother's suffering. Youth and age met in that circle of suffering, the circumference of which embraces the race.

Trouble invades palace and cottage alike. Jairus in his agony, and the woman in her suffering, came to Jesus in the last extremity. The servant of the centurion and the son of the nobleman were at the point of death. The impotent man had lain thirty-eight years at the Pool of Bethesda. Sorrow realises the unseen. Pain, tears, and death, are the gate of another world. We come to the Bible in trouble. When death enters and shatters the affections like a dropped vase, it puts a new meaning into S. Paul's description of "the God of Consolation." And so the miracles of healing are parables for all time.

II. Here is one pause for two purposes.—A motley group was this as it defiled through the streets of Capernaum: Jairus, consumed by his fears; a crowd moved with curiosity and sympathy; hesitating disciples, and a suffering woman trembling at her own audacity. Christ paused for the sake of all, but specially for the sake of the two sufferers: (1) To correct their knowledge.—Jairus' faith in the healing power was tremulous; his knowledge of the Healer was imperfect. He must have a presence and a touch: Come into the house; lay Thy hands upon her that she may be healed. The woman must have hold of the hem. Both were slaves of second causes. Both these sufferers were far behind that Roman centurion who came with his tale of distress to Christ, "Lord, my servant lieth at home sick. Jesus said, I will come and heal him. The centurion answered, Lord, I am not worthy that Thou shouldest come under my roof, but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed." They learnt that not in the hem, nor in the touch, but in the wondrous Personality the virtue dwelt. He paused.

(2) To interpret, test, and strengthen their faith.—The woman, though inferior to Jairus in knowledge, was superior to him in faith. Her difficulties were many and great. She was a woman, and, according to Jewish Law, unclean. There was a throng to be jostled aside. Her modesty would naturally shrink. But necessity knows no law. She broke down every barrier. To Jairus the pause was frightful. Every moment involved life and death. He needed the assuring word, Fear not, only believe. It is an instance of the value of hindrances. The halt to bless the woman prepared Jairus to trust the Healer. It gave the onlookers evidence of His universal sympathy. To the woman He speaks after the cure; to Jairus, before it.

III. Here are two touches with one object.—(1) The touch of the woman.—It was according to Levitical Law an impure touch, but to Him it could impart no impurity. Light reveals dirt, but does not borrow it. It was an almost despairing touch. She had tried all others in vain. It was a confiding touch. She flings herself upon the mightiness of this last Helper. She only touched, she did not grasp. She touched His clothes, not Himself. Yet the healing virtue went out to that trembling body. Go in peace, and be whole of thy plague. (2) The touch of Christ.—It was a grasp. He took the child by the hand. He had wrought a miracle of omniscience in discerning the outflow of virtue; now He works a miracle of control. Life touches death, and is victorious over it. There is a staying point in the miraculous. God does not do what man can accomplish. He commanded that something be given her to eat. Before Lazarus came from his grave the stone had "to be rolled away." And after he had risen, human hands must remove the grave-clothes. Where men's power ends the power of God begins.

22. One of the rulers of the synagogue. "To regulate the affairs of every synagogue, there was a council of grave men. Over these was a president, who was termed the ruler of the synagogue. Sometimes there was no more than one ruler in a synagogue"—WESLEY.

37. John the brother of James. When S. Mark wrote, not long after our Lord's ascension, the memory of S. James, lately beheaded, was so fresh, that his name was more known than that of John himself.

40. Them that were with Him—"Peter, James, and John"—WESLEY.

43. He charged them that no man should know it—"that He might avoid every appearance of vain-glory, might prevent too great a concourse of people, and might not further enrage the scribes and Pharisees against Him; the time for His death, and for the full manifestation of His glory, being not yet come. He commanded something should be given her to eat—so that when either natural or spiritual life is restored, even by immediate miracle, all proper means are to be used in order to preserve it"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER VI.

Vers. 1–6. CHRIST REJECTED AT NAZARETH. (See on Matt. 13. 54–58.)—3. Is not this the carpenter? "There can be no doubt, but in His youth He wrought with His supposed father, Joseph"—WESLEY.

5. He could do no miracle there—"not consistently with His wisdom and goodness: it being inconsistent with His wisdom to work them there, where it could not promote His great end; and with His goodness, seeing He well knew His countrymen would reject whatever evidence could be given them. And, therefore, to have given them more evidence would only have increased their damnation"—WESLEY.

6. He marvelled—"as man. As He was God, nothing was strange to Him"—WESLEY.

Vers. 7–13. MISSION OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. (See Luke 9. 1–6.)—8. He commanded them to take nothing for the journey—that they might be always unencumbered, free, ready for motion—save a staff only. He that had one might take it; but he that had not was not to provide one. (Matt. 10. 10.)

9. Be shod with sandals—"as you usually are. Sandals were pieces of strong leather or wood, tied under the sole of the foot by strings, something resembling modern clogs. The shoes, which they are in S. Matthew forbidden to take, were a kind of short boots, reaching a little above the mid-leg, which were then commonly used in journeys. Our Lord intended by this mission to initiate them into their apostolic work. And it was, doubtless, an encouragement to them all their life after, to recollect the care which God took of them when they had left all they had, and went out quite unfurnished for such an expedition. In this view our Lord Himself leads them to consider it. 'When I sent you forth without purse or scrip, lacked ye anything?' (Luke 22. 35)"—WESLEY.

13. They anointed with oil many that were sick—"which S. James gives as a general direction (ch. 5. 14–15), adding those peremptory words, 'And the Lord shall heal him.' He shall be restored to health; not by the natural efficacy of the oil, but by the supernatural blessing of God. And, it seems, this was the great standing means of healing desperate diseases in the Christian Church, long before extreme unction was used or heard of, which bears scarce any resemblance to it; the former being used only as a means of health; the latter, only when life is despaired of"—WESLEY.

Vers. 14–29. HEROD AND THE BAPTIST. (See on Matt. 14. 1–12; Luke 9. 7–9.)

I. A Lesson on Conscience.—The narrative is a Lesson on Conscience, unfolded in a dramatic passage in the life of King Herod. We must have two Gospels open at the same time—S. Mark, here; S. Matthew (ch. 14). The fame of the wonderful words and deeds of Jesus Christ had reached the palace, and Herod said, "It is John whom I beheaded," others said Elijah or one of the prophets.

Such is the power of personality. At the moment of writing a distinguished Englishman is ill, and princes, members of Parliament, churchmen of many opinions, and simple Christians from many lands are standing by to watch the fight between death and life. Jesus was a great Personality. He could not be hid. But if with others it was a question of curiosity, with Herod it was a question of conscience. It is John, whom I beheaded. The emphasis is on "I." Cruel, crafty, voluptuous, Herod may have been, but he was weak as well as wicked. He allowed himself to be led into evil; he did not resist; he did not say No; hence his sufferings. BUNYAN says, "Of all the men I met in my pilgrimage, Shame, I think, bears the wrong name. He is a bold villain." But shame must follow sin. Wrong is the mother of fear. Theoretically a king like Herod should fear naught; but let him sin, and every shaking leaf will make him quake. DANIEL WEBSTER said, "There is no evil that we cannot either face or flee from, but the consciousness of duty disregarded. It is omnipresent like the Deity. We cannot escape its power, nor fly from its presence." Or, as a great writer has said, "Conscience is a thousand swords." And in God's own word do we not read, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth unto his own flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption."

II. A Gay World.—Many things we may do, but leave one important thing undone. Herod feared John, knowing that he was a righteous man and a holy, and kept him safe. And when he heard him he was much perplexed; and he heard him gladly. But when John said, It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife, he did not listen and answer, "You are right, I will not." This is the Herodias mentioned in our lesson. Her daughter danced before the king and his feasting nobles. Outwardly it was a gay scene; but within there was moral rottenness. Herod's sin of passion led to his sin of murder. The sixth and seventh commandments are printed together in the twentieth chapter of the Book of Exodus. They are often closely associated in life. It is a delicate and difficult task, but ministers and teachers must tell young men and maidens that this way danger lies. Love, courtship, and marriage are solemn realities. The biblical rule is to marry only in the Lord. Our own Church requires that law to be distinctly stated. Sins of the flesh are ruinous. A gay life spells dishonour, disgrace, death. How low this princess stooped. She, Herod's own niece, a grand-daughter of Herod the Great and of Mariamne, a descendant therefore of Simeon the high priest, and of the great line of Maccabæan princes, sank to the position of a shameless public dancer. There is nothing royal, nothing noble in evil. Herod and Herodias had their chance. The fearless Baptist had told them the plain truth. For, fearing God, John the forerunner knew no other fear. He bearded the lion in his den. Nor was it a sudden sin of passion. Both Herod and Herodias calculated their chances. They schemed before they acted; and now it has ended here in a degraded exhibition, which demeaned a king's household and a nation's court. Sin has two faces. At first she is a beautiful tempting one; afterwards an ugly reproachful hag. Herod and Herodias in New Testament story recall the Old Testament pages that are filled with the deeds of Ahab and Jezebel.

III. Weakness growing into wickedness.—

> "It is a great sin to swear unto a sin,
> But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.
> Who can be bound by any solemn vow
> To do a murderous deed?"

Herod began by desiring something he ought not to possess. He schemed for it. He passed by the warning of the prophet of God. He imprisoned the truth-speaker because he did not like the truth. He got what he foully sought for. Now Herodias' turn has come. The king said unto the damsel, Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom. And she went out, and said unto her mother, What shall I ask? And she said, The head of John the Baptist. What a request! And from a woman, too. "No jewelled trinket, no royal palace, no splendid robe, should be the reward of her daughter's feat,—'Ask,' said she, 'for the head of John the Baptizer.'" It seems incredible. Mother and daughter in council; mother misleading daughter; both joining in a murderous deed. What meaneth this? "The heart is deceitful above all things." If when Herod sat listening to John's preaching he had been told that he would stain his hands with the prophet's blood, he would have recoiled with horror. But he let "I dare not" wait upon "I would." When the daughter of Herodias made her strange request, the king was exceeding sorry; but for the sake of his oaths, and of them that sat at meat, he would not reject her. On account of his oaths. He had repeated and perhaps repeated his oath. "Was it right in Herod, it has often been asked, to choose not to displease Salome, and consequently to murder John? It is sufficient to answer that it can never be right to do wrong. But what then of the obligation of his oaths? He was conscious of their force; but still they could not bind him to do wrong. No power in the universe can ever make it right to do wrong. But is it not doing wrong to violate an oath? No, if the oath were itself wrong. The making of such an oath is the first wrong-doing; the keeping of it is the second"—MORISON. Right is right, wrong is wrong, all the world over; at all times, and under all circumstances.

IV. The daring urgency of evil.—There is a contrast between the king and the damsel. But they are alike in the swift passage from sin to sin. Social restraints are not very binding under strong temptations. Passion has great force; it is a giant armed from toe to teeth. The girl should not have forgotten her modesty—but she did. The king should have listened to the prophet—but he did not. Neither would end there. Mark the boldness of the girl's I will, and the madness of the king's repeated oath. The rest is soon told; a word to the executioner, and the deed is done. The deed is done, but not done with. Long after Herod recalls it in his dreams, and Christ's wonders seem to him a resurrection of the power he once admired and then destroyed. Says Bishop BUTLER, "If conscience had the power, as it has the right, it would rule the world." Let us take care that it rule us. Nobody has painted the death of John. Who saw it? Was he alone with the officer—none to applaud, none to encourage? This is another of the blanks in the story—the silences of the Bible.

15. A prophet, as one of the prophets—"not inferior to one of the ancient prophets"—WESLEY.

16. But Herod hearing thereof—"of their various judgments concerning him still—said, It is John"—WESLEY.

20. And preserved him—"against all the malice and contrivances of Herodias. And when he heard him—probably sending for him, at times, during his imprisonment, which continued a year and a half, he heard him gladly—delusive joy, while Herodias lay in his bosom!"—WESLEY.

21. A convenient day—"convenient for her purpose. His lords, captains, and principal men of Galilee—the great men of the court, the army, and the province"—WESLEY.

23. To the half of my kingdom—"a proverbial expression"—WESLEY.

26. Yet for his oath's sake, and for the sake of his guests. "Herod's honour was like the conscience of the chief priests. (Matt. 27. 6.) To shed innocent blood wounded neither one nor the other"—WESLEY.

Vers. 30–56. MIRACLES OF FEEDING, AND CONTROL OF NATURE. (See on Matt. 14. 13–36; Luke 9. 10–17; John 6. 1–24.)—Amongst the peculiarities of S. Mark's narrative we may mention: the disciples telling what they had taught; the press of the crowd; the teaching; the estimate of cost; the order of rank; and the gathering up of the fishes. We are indebted to S. John for a definite note of place. The desert place was over the Sea of Galilee, which is the Sea of Tiberias. S. Luke adds another link to the chain, "belonging to the city called Bethsaida." The people saw them departing, and ran round by the head of the Lake, and taking one of the fords of the river, met Jesus as He reached the other side.

32. They departed—"across a creek, or corner of the Lake"—WESLEY.

34. Coming out—"of the vessel"—WESLEY.

40. They sat down in ranks. "The word properly signifies a parterre or bed in a garden; by a metaphor, a company of men ranged in order. By hundreds, and by fifties—that is, fifty in a rank, and an hundred in file. So an hundred multiplied by fifty made just five thousand"—WESLEY.

43. Full of the fragments—"of the bread"—WESLEY.

45. He constrained His disciples—"who did not care to go without Him"—WESLEY.

48. And He saw them—"for the darkness could veil nothing from Him. And would have passed by them—that is, walked as if He was passing by"—WESLEY.

52. Their heart was hardened—"and yet they were not reprobates. It means only, they were slow and dull of apprehension"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER VII.

Vers. 1–23. CLEAN AND UNCLEAN. (See on Matt. 15. 1–20.)—1. Coming from Jerusalem—"probably on purpose to find occasion against Him"—WESLEY.

4. Washing of cups and pots, brazen vessels, and couches. "The Greek word 'baptisms' means, indifferently, either washing or sprinkling. The cups, pots, and vessels were washed; the couches sprinkled"—WESLEY.

5. The tradition of the elders—"the rule delivered down from your forefathers"—WESLEY.

15. There is nothing entering into a man from without which can defile him. "Though it is very true, a man may bring guilt, which is moral defilement, upon himself, by eating what hurts his health, or by excess either in meat or drink; yet even here the pollution arises from the wickedness of the heart, and is just proportionable to it. And this is all that our Lord asserts"—WESLEY.

19. Purging all meats—"probably the seat was usually placed over running water"—WESLEY.

22. Wickedness. "The word means ill-nature, cruelty, inhumanity, and all malevolent affections. Foolishness—directly contrary to sobriety of thought and discourse; all kind of wild imaginations and extravagant passions"—WESLEY.

Vers. 24–37. THE FRIEND OF STRANGERS. (See on Matt. 15. 21–31.)

I. The barrier broken down.—It has never been easy for people to cordially recognise those of another nation. Such words as "barbarians," "foreigners," carry in them memories of reproach. The Jews—the children of the kingdom, as they proudly described themselves—were wont to designate the heathen as "dogs." In the East, now, the Mohammedans apply this name to the Christians. And if Chinese exclusiveness still speaks of other peoples as "foreign demons," American exclusiveness calls Chinese residents "heathen." In spite of all our boasted civilisation, we do not yet disregard the differences of clime and colour. Although our Lord stands alone, having no parallel, it sometimes makes His life vivid by recalling similar acts in the lowlier lives of men. Elijah the Prophet and Paul the Apostle wandered in regions then considered foreign and outcast. Martin Luther found in the Wartburg what was denied to him in Wittenberg. John Wesley prepared himself in Georgia for the work he did in Britain. Our Lord's travelling towards the borders of Tyre and Sidon was the prophetic and symbolic representation of the future progress of Christianity. From Jews it would pass to Gentiles, from civilisation to heathendom, until the earth be filled with the knowledge of the Lord.

II. The Woman of Canaan.—In His wanderings He came to the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entered into the house of some friend or dependant. But He could not be hid. His fame crossed the border and brought to Him a heathen woman, a Gentile, viewed generally—more specially, a Syrian—still more specially a Phenician. She appears to have first called after Christ and His disciples, and afterwards was admitted into the house. She had no petition for herself. She was the mother of a sick child, and her mother-love gave wings to her feet as she swept across the country to find the Miracle-Worker of whom so many tongues were speaking. S. Mark passes more briefly over the interview than S. Matthew. We must compare the records. There were three stages of this woman's trial:—

1. Silence.—"He answered her not a word" (Matt. 15. 23). It is the first and only instance of our Lord's refusal to perform a miracle. It was not absolute and permanent. His silence could not have been intended simply as a test. In one sense she had no claim upon His attention. His mission was to the Jews. "He came unto His own." No doubt He desired to make clearer to her who He was, and why He came.

2. Refusal.—"I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. 15. 24). He came first to them. When they rejected Him, He passed to the Gentiles. His heart was wide as the world. Misfortune naturally appealed to Him. But He could not bless, except under conditions. In one place it is said, "He could not do many mighty works, because of their unbelief." The preparation of the heart was important. Only to receptiveness could He communicate blessing.

3. Reproach.—"It is not meet to take the children's bread and cast it to the dogs" (Matt. 15. 26). "Two reasons," says FARRAR, "suggest themselves as explaining His present action. He may have desired to test the feelings of His disciples, who might be unprepared to see Him grant His blessings, not only to a Gentile but a Canaanite. He may have desired to test yet further the woman's faith, both that He might crown it with a more complete and glorious reward, and that she might learn something deeper respecting Him than the mere Jewish title that she may have accidentally picked up. At any rate, He strangely repulsed her for a time." "But in spite of all she persevered, and finally conquered. The daughter was healed in consequence of the mother's faith, and in answer to her prayers. This is an instance of a cure effected at a distance. Other instances are (1) the nobleman's son at Capernaum, whom our Lord healed while Himself at Cana (John 4. 46); (2) the centurion's servant (Luke 7. 6). The case also of this lonely woman not suffering the Lord 'to go' until He had blessed her (comp. Gen. 32. 24-32) is the greatest of the three ascending degrees of faith, as it manifests itself in the breaking through of hindrances which would keep us from Christ. The paralytic broke through the outward hindrances, the obstacles of things merely external (Mark 2. 4); blind Bartimæus through the hindrances opposed by his fellow-men (Mark 10. 48); but this woman, more heroically than all, through apparent hindrances, even from Christ Himself"—TRENCH and MACLEAR. Every miracle is rich in moral significance. This is no exception. For all time it will encourage men and women and children, teaching them to persevere in spite of appearances, and to trust God when they cannot trace Him.

III. Deaf and Dumb.—Passing on, our Lord came through Sidon unto the Sea of Galilee, through the midst of the borders of Decapolis. And, S. Matthew tells us, there came unto Him great multitudes, having with them the lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others, and they cast them down at His feet, and He healed them, insomuch that the multitude wondered when they saw the dumb speaking, the maimed whole, and the lame walking, and the blind seeing; and they glorified the God of Israel. S. Mark selects one of these cases of healing, distinguished from the rest, perhaps, by the special circumstances of being a double defect of hearing and of speech. It arrests our attention by the elaborateness of the cure. Usually a single word or a simple touch effected the cure. Not so here. The people were foreigners—heathen, too, and believed in magical powers. Christ was to them almost unknown. By this new method of healing, if we may so speak of it, their attention was directed to the Personality; and their weak faith, aided by the use of means, which would suggest the relations of cause and effect. There were evidently circumstances in the man's case which rendered it necessary that his cure should be gradual, and effected by visible signs. And so our Lord—(a) took him aside from the multitude; (b) put His fingers into his ears; (c) touched his tongue with the moisture of His mouth; (d) looked up to heaven, and sighed; and (e) spake the one word Ephphatha. The upturned look was natural to Jesus Christ. He dwelt in heaven, even when on earth. His thoughts were always ascending thither. As He looked at the deaf and dumb man He sighed. "We may well believe," as TRENCH says, "that this poor helpless creature now brought before Him, this living proof of the wreck which sin had brought about, of the malice of the devil in deforming the fair features of God's original creation, wrung the groan from His heart." The human sympathies of the Saviour were as broad as human suffering and sorrow. Ephphatha is the actual Aramaic word used by our Lord. It is like "Abba" and "Talitha cumi," a bit of His native home speech. The people broke the command to be silent. They were beyond measure astonished, saying, He hath done all things well: He maketh even the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak. Our Christian institutions for the deaf and dumb are an abiding monument of that miraculous healing in the mountains. The deaf and dumb man is a type of us. We are deaf to Divine voices, and dumb when we ought to be praising Him "who hath done all things well."

26. The woman was a Greek—"that is, a Gentile, not a Jew; a Syrophenician, or Canaanite. Canaan was also called Syrophenicia, as lying between Syria, properly so called, and Phenicia"—WESLEY.

33. He put His fingers into his ears—"perhaps intending to teach us, that we are not to prescribe to Him, as they who brought this man attempted to do; but to expect His blessing by whatsoever means He pleases; even though there should be no proportion or resemblance between the means used, and the benefit to be conveyed thereby"—WESLEY.

34. Ephphatha. "This was a word of SOVEREIGN AUTHORITY; not an address to God for power to heal. Such an address was needless; for Christ had a perpetual fund of power residing in Himself to work all miracles whenever He pleased, even to the raising the dead. (John 5. 21, 26)"—WESLEY.

36. Them—"the blind man, and those that brought him"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER VIII.

Vers. 1–26. FOUR THOUSAND FED. (See on Matt. 15. 32–16. 12.)—8. So they did eat. "This miracle was intended to demonstrate that Christ was the true bread which cometh down from heaven; for He who was almighty to create bread without means to support natural life could not want power to create bread without means to support spiritual life. And this heavenly bread we stand so much in need of every moment, that we ought to be always praying, 'Lord, evermore give us this bread'"—WESLEY.

11. Tempting Him—"that is, trying to ensnare Him"—WESLEY.

12. Why doth this generation—"that is, these scribes and Pharisees—seek a sign—not out of sincerity, but out of hypocrisy"—WESLEY.

15. Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of Herod—"or of the Sadducees: two opposite extremes"—WESLEY.

17, 18. "Our Lord here affirms of all the apostles (for the question is equivalent to an affirmation) that their hearts were hardened; that having eyes they saw not, having ears they heard not; that they did not consider, neither understand: the very same expressions that occur in Matt. (ch. 13). And yet, it is certain, they were not judicially hardened. Therefore all these strong expressions do not necessarily import anything more than the present want of spiritual understanding"—WESLEY.

23. He led him out of the town. "It was in just displeasure against the inhabitants of Bethsaida, for their obstinate infidelity, that our Lord would work no more miracles among them, nor even suffer the person He had cured, either to go into the town or to tell it to any therein"—WESLEY.

24. I see men as trees, walking—"he distinguished men from trees only by their motion"—WESLEY.

The narrative of the healing of the blind man (vers. 22–26) is the only recorded example of a progressive cure.

Vers. 27–38. S. PETER'S CONFESSION. (See on Matt. 16. 13–20; Luke 9. 18–20.)

I. Confession.—Our Lord and His disciples set out in a northerly direction, and travelled along the eastern banks of the Jordan, and beyond the waters of Merom, seeking solitude among the mountains. At length they reached the neighbourhood of the remote city of Cæsarea Philippi. This was the northernmost point of His wanderings. "Cæsarea Philippi lay on the north-east of the reedy and marshy plain of El Huleh, close to Dan, the extreme north of the boundaries of ancient Israel." "(1) Its earliest name, according to some, was Baal-Gad (Josh. 11. 17; 12. 7; 13. 5), or Baal-Hermon (Judg. 3. 3; 1 Chron. 5. 23), when it was a Phenician or Canaanite sanctuary of Baal under the aspect of 'Gad,' or the god of good fortune. (2) In later times it was known as Panium, or Paneas, a name which it derived from a cavern near the town, abrupt, prodigiously deep, and full of still water, adopted by the Greeks of the Macedonian kingdom of Antioch as the nearest likeness that Syria afforded of the beautiful limestone grottoes which in their own country were inseparably associated with the worship of the sylvan Pan and dedicated to that deity. Hence its modern appellation Baneas. (3) The town retained the name under Herod the Great, who built here a splendid temple of the whitest marble, which he dedicated to Augustus Cæsar. (4) It afterwards became part of the territory of Herod Philip, tetrarch of Trachonitis, who enlarged and embellished it, and called it Cæsarea Philippi, partly after his own name, and partly after that of the Emperor Tiberius. It was called Cæsarea Philippi, to distinguish it from Cæsarea Palestinæ or Cæsarea on the sea. Dean Stanley calls it a Syrian Tivoli, and certainly there is much in the rocks, caverns, cascades, and the natural beauty of the scenery to recall the Roman Tibur. Behind the village, in front of a great natural cavern, a river bursts forth from the earth, the upper source of the Jordan. Inscriptions and niches in the face of the cliffs tell of the old idol-worship of Baal and of Pan."—MACLEAR and TRISTRAM. It was in this desert region that the apostles on one occasion found their Lord engaged in solitary prayer (Luke 9. 18), a significant action which had preceded several important events in His life, as (a) the baptism, (b) the election of the Twelve, and (c) the discourse in the synagogue of Capernaum. It was now the precursor of a solemn and momentous question, Who do men say that I am? Hitherto He is not recorded to have asked the Twelve any question respecting Himself. The hour had come. He was testing His work. It is not wrong, then, to desire the good opinion of the wise and good. We cannot do the best work well without the encouragement of some success. Nor can teacher, or church, or institution, or government be indifferent to opinion. Our Lord's question had many answers. He was well known, but not rightly known. And they told Him, saying, John the Baptist; and others, Elijah; but others, One of the prophets. S. Matthew adds, "and others, Jeremiah." These were the opinions of outsiders. Disciples must now be tested. And He asked them, But who say ye that I am? Peter answereth and saith unto Him, Thou art the Christ. S. Matthew calls himself by the despised name "the Publican," but the other disciples do not. S. Mark, writing under the eye of S. Peter, records our Lord's rebuke to S. Peter, but does not record the word of commendation. S. Matthew, however, records it: "Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build My Church; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." S. Peter modestly kept this out of his Gospel. In such side-lights as these we read character.

II. Anticipation.—The question of our Lord and the answer it called forth were alike preparatory to the strange and mournful tidings which He now began to reveal distinctly. Clear and full before Him rose the garden of agony and the cross of shame. "He began to teach them that the Son of Man must suffer many things, and be rejected by the elders, and the chief priests, and the scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again." That is a Divine "must." It indicates our Lord's perfect consciousness of a Divine plan ruling His life from first to last. As He said at another time, "I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected." And after His resurrection, "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into His glory?" There was nothing haphazard in the Life of lives. From the word He here uses to describe His sufferings has come such words as "The Passion," "Passion Week." S. Mark adds the word of strong rebuke, Peter took Jesus and began to rebuke Him. But He, turning about and seeing His disciples, rebuked Peter, and saith, Get thee behind Me, Satan: for thou mindest not the things of God, but the things of men. As if He had said, What! is Satan come again to tempt Me as he did of old? Avaunt! thou adversary: get thee hence! Had He listened and turned aside, our redemption would not have been accomplished.

III. Association.—Calling to Him the multitude, He addressed to them, as well as to His apostles, deep teaching concerning cross-bearing. Not He only would carry a cross. It would enter into all lives—literally into some. Sorrow is in the way to the city of God. Through much tribulation they would all enter the kingdom. He, too, had just been tempted to turn aside; so would they be. Whosoever would save his life shall lose it, and whosoever shall lose his life for My sake and the gospel's shall save it. For what doth it profit a man to gain the whole world, and forfeit his life? For what should a man give in exchange for his life? Gain is sometimes loss: loss is often gain. Some things may be bought too dear. Conscience is more than fame; conviction is a greater possession than gold. Place highest that which is highest. A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things that he possesseth. He is greater than what he has. Then, in language of awful solemnity, of great dignity, and of astonishing claims, our Lord added, For whosoever shall be ashamed of Me and of My words in this adulterous and sinful generation, the Son of Man also shall be ashamed of him when He cometh in the glory of His Father with the holy angels. These are not the words of a man. They are too bold. The Divinity of Jesus is in them. ME is emphatic. He claims the loyalty of the heart and the submission of the life. At the day of His coming, judgment will begin. They who confess Christ will be acknowledged by Him; those who are ashamed of Him He will reject.

30. "He enjoined them silence for the present—(1) that He might not encourage the people to set Him up for a temporal king; (2) that He might not provoke the scribes and Pharisees to destroy Him before the time; and (3) that He might not forestall the brighter evidence which was to be given of His divine character after His resurrection"—WESLEY.

32. He spake that saying openly—"or in express terms. Till now He had only intimated it to them. And Peter taking hold of Him—perhaps by the arm or clothes"—WESLEY.

33. Looking on His disciples—"that they might the more observe what He said to Peter"—WESLEY.

34. And when He had called the people—"to hear a truth of the last importance, and one that equally concerned them all. Let him deny himself—his own will, in all things, small and great, however pleasing, and that continually. And take up his cross—embrace the will of God, however painful, daily, hourly, continually. Thus only can he follow Me, in holiness, to glory"—WESLEY.

38. Whosoever shall be ashamed of Me and My words—"that is, of avowing whatever I have said, particularly of self-denial and the daily cross, both by word and action"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER IX.

Vers. 1–13. THE TRANSFIGURATION. (See on Matt. 17. 1–13; Luke 9. 28–36.)—1. Till they see the kingdom of God coming with power. "So it began to do at the day of Pentecost, when three thousand were converted to God at once"—WESLEY.

2. By themselves—"that is, separate from the multitude. Apart—from the other apostles. And was transfigured. The Greek word seems to refer to 'the form of God' and 'the form of a servant,' mentioned by S. Paul (Phil. 2. 6, 7), and may intimate that the Divine rays, which the indwelling God let out on this occasion, made the glorious change from one of these forms into the other"—WESLEY.

3. White as snow; such as no fuller can whiten—"such as could not be equalled either by nature or art"—WESLEY.

4. Elijah—"whom they expected. Moses—whom they did not"—WESLEY.

7. There came a bright luminous cloud, overshadowing them. "This seems to have been such a cloud of glory as accompanied Israel in the wilderness, which, as the Jewish writers observe, departed at the death of Moses. But it now appeared again, in honour of our Lord, as the great Prophet of the Church, who was prefigured by Moses. Hear ye Him—even preferably to Moses and Elijah"—WESLEY.

12. Elijah verily coming first restoreth all things: and how it is written—"that is, and He told them how it is written; as if He had said, Elijah's coming is not inconsistent with My suffering. He is come; yet I shall suffer. The first part of the verse answers their question concerning Elijah; the second refutes their error concerning the Messiah's continuing for ever"—WESLEY.

Vers. 14–32. HEALING OF A DEMONIAC. (See on Matt. 17. 14–23; Luke 9. 37–45.)—15. All the multitude seeing Him were greatly amazed—"at His coming so suddenly, so seasonably, so unexpectedly; perhaps also at some unusual rays of majesty and glory which yet remained on His countenance"—WESLEY.

17. And one of the multitude answering. "The scribes gave no answer to our Lord's question. They did not care to repeat what they had said to His disciples. A dumb spirit—a spirit that takes his speech from him"—WESLEY.

20. When he saw Him. "When the child saw Christ; when his deliverance was at hand. Immediately the spirit tore him—made his last grand effort to destroy him. Is it not generally so before Satan is cast out of a soul of which he has long had possession?"—WESLEY.

22. If Thou canst do anything—"in so desperate a case—have compassion on us—me, as well as him"—WESLEY.

23. If thou canst believe. "As if He had said, The thing does not turn on My power, but on thy faith. I can do all things; canst thou believe?"—WESLEY.

24. Help Thou mine unbelief. "Although my faith be so small that it might rather be termed unbelief, yet help me"—WESLEY.

25. Thou deaf and dumb spirit—"so termed because he made the child so. When Jesus spake the devil heard, though the child could not. I command thee—I Myself now; not My disciples"—WESLEY.

26. Having rent him sore. "So does even the body sometimes suffer when God comes to deliver the soul from Satan"—WESLEY.

30. They passed through Galilee—"though not through the cities but by them, in the most private ways. He was not willing that any should know it. For He taught His disciples—He wanted to be alone with them some time, in order to instruct them fully concerning His sufferings. The Son of Man is delivered—it is as sure as if it were done already"—WESLEY.

32. They understood not the word—"they did not understand how to reconcile the death of our Saviour (nor, consequently, His resurrection, which supposed His death) with their notions of His temporal kingdom"—WESLEY.

Vers. 33-50. STRIFE AMONG THE TWELVE. (See on Matt. 18. 1-9; Luke 9. 46-50.)—34. Who should be greatest—"prime-minister in His kingdom"—WESLEY.

35. Let him be the last of all—"let him abase himself the most"—WESLEY.

37. One such little child—"either in years or in heart"—WESLEY.

38. And John answered Him—"as if he had said, But ought we to receive those who follow not us? Master, we saw one casting out devils in Thy name—probably this was one of John the Baptist's disciples who believed in Jesus, though he did not yet associate with our Lord's disciples. And we forbade him, because he followeth not us. How often is the same temper found in us! How readily do we also 'lust to envy'! But how does that spirit become a disciple, much more a minister of the benevolent Jesus? S. Paul had learned a better temper when he rejoiced that Christ was preached even by those who were his personal enemies. But to confine religion to them that follow us is a narrowness of spirit which we should avoid and abhor"—WESLEY.

39. Jesus said. "Christ here gives us a lovely example of candour and moderation. He was willing to put the best construction on doubtful cases, and to treat as friends those who were not avowed enemies. Perhaps, in this instance, it was a means of conquering the remainder of prejudice, and perfecting what was wanting in the faith and obedience of these persons. Forbid him not—neither directly nor indirectly discourage or hinder any man who brings sinners from the power of Satan to God, 'because he followeth not us' in opinions, modes of worship, or anything else which does not affect the essence of religion"—WESLEY.

40. For he that is not against you is for you. "Our Lord had formerly said, 'He that is not with Me is against Me,' thereby admonishing His hearers that the war between Him and Satan admitted of no neutrality, and that those who were indifferent to Him now would finally be treated as enemies. But here, in another view, He uses a very different proverb, directing His followers to judge of men's characters in the most candid manner, and charitably to hope that those who did not oppose His cause wished well to it. Upon the whole, we are to be rigorous in judging ourselves, and candid in judging each other"—WESLEY.

41. For whosoever shall give you a cup. "Having answered S. John, our Lord here resumes the discourse which was broken off at ver. 37"—WESLEY.

42. "On the contrary, whosoever shall offend the very least Christian"—WESLEY.

43. "And if a person cause thee to offend. The discourse passes from the case of offending to that of being offended. If one who is as useful or dear to thee as an hand or eye hinder or slacken thee in the ways of God, renounce all intercourse with him. This primarily relates to persons; secondarily, to things"—WESLEY.

44. Where their worm—"that gnaweth the soul (pride, self-will, desire, malice, envy, shame, sorrow, despair) dieth not—no more than the soul itself. And the fire (either material or infinitely worse) that tormenteth the body is not quenched for ever"—WESLEY.

49. Every one—"who does not cut off the offending member, and consequently is cast into hell, shall be, as it were, salted with fire — preserved, not consumed, thereby; whereas every acceptable sacrifice shall be salted with another kind of salt—even that of Divine grace, which purifies the soul (though frequently with pain) and preserves it from corruption"—WESLEY.

50. "Such salt is good indeed; highly beneficial to the world, in respect of which I have termed you 'the salt of the earth.' But if the salt—which should season others—have lost its own saltness, wherewith will ye season it? Beware of this; see that ye retain your savour; and, as a proof of it, have peace one with another. More largely this obscure text might be paraphrased thus:—As every burnt-offering was salted with salt, in order to its being cast into the fire of the altar, so every one who will not part with his hand or eye shall fall a sacrifice to Divine justice, and be cast into hell fire, which will not consume but preserve him from a cessation of being. And, on the other hand, every one who, denying himself and taking up his cross, offers up himself as a living sacrifice to God, shall be seasoned with grace, which, like salt, will make him savoury, and preserve him from destruction for ever. As salt is good for preserving meats, and making them savoury, so it is good that ye be seasoned with grace, for the purifying your hearts and lives, and for spreading the savour of My knowledge, both in your own souls and wherever ye go. But as salt, if it loses its saltness, is fit for nothing, so ye, if ye lose your faith and love, are fit for nothing but to be utterly destroyed. See, therefore, that grace abide in you, and that ye no more contend who shall be greatest"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER X.

Vers. 1-12. JESUS SPEAKS ON DIVORCE. (See on Matt. 19. 1-12.)—6. From the beginning of the creation. "Therefore Moses in the first of Genesis gives us an account of things from the beginning of the creation. Does it not clearly follow that there was no creation previous to that which Moses describes? God made them male and female —therefore Adam did not at first contain both sexes in himself, but God made Adam, when first created, male only; and Eve female only. And this man and woman He joined together, in a state of innocence, as husband and wife"—WESLEY.

11, 12. "All polygamy is here totally condemned"—WESLEY.

Vers. 13–16. LITTLE CHILDREN BROUGHT TO CHRIST. (See on Matt. 19. 13–15; Luke 18. 15–17.)—Christ and little children. This is the children's page of the New Testament; pictures, poems, addresses, stories innumerable, have been grouped around this scene. They brought to some house where Jesus was staying young children. S. Luke calls them babes, small enough to be carried in one's arms. Their mothers brought them. Mothers are always anxious to bring us within reach of blessing; beyond the power of harm. No greater gift can God give to us than that first great gift—a mother's love. These mothers brought their children to Jesus Christ that He should touch them. S. Matthew says that He should put His hands on them and pray. The Jews were accustomed to value the blessing of the rabbis. The Talmud says, "After the father of the child had laid his hands on his child's head, he led him to the elders, one by one, and they also blessed him, and prayed that he might grow up famous in the law, faithful in marriage, and abundant in good works." We sometimes read of the patron saint of children; but it is not S. Nicholas, nor S. Martin, nor the Archangel Michael—it is the LORD JESUS CHRIST. We never read of our Lord embracing grown-up people. More than once we do read that He embraced children. A dozen of the tenderest scenes in the Gospels are connected with Jesus and the children. Speaking of bringing children to Jesus, Dr. PELOUBET says, "We bring the children to Jesus—(1) by daily, constant, earnest prayers on their behalf; (2) by teaching them the truth; (3) by consecrating them to God for this life and the life to come; (4) by training them up for Christ."

In almost fierce impatience at the theory, half-consciously held by so many, that children must first sin greatly, and then suffer the agonies of remorse before Christ will welcome them, Dr. BUSHNELL says, "The true idea of Christian education is that the child is to grow up a Christian, and never know himself as being otherwise. Infancy and childhood are the ages most pliant to good. And who can think it necessary that the plastic nature of childhood must first be hardened into stone, and stiffened into enmity toward God and all duty, before it can become a candidate for Christian character? 'Train up a child in the way he should go, that when he is old he may not depart from it.'" The venerable Dr. TYNG almost goes further when he says, "In all my ministry, when the choice must be made between one child and two adults, I have never hesitated to take the child. It seems to me that the devil would never ask anything more of a minister than to have him look upon his mission as chiefly to the grown-up members of his congregation, while somebody else was to look after the children." And Mr. SPURGEON says, "Of the many boys and girls whom we have received into Church fellowship, I can say of them all that they have gladdened my heart, and I have never received any with greater confidence than I have these. And this I have noticed about them, they have greater joy and rejoicing than any others. Among those I have had at any time to exclude from Church fellowship, out of a church of 2700 members, I have never had to exclude a single one who was received while yet a child." Whom Christ receives, the Church must not reject. She has often done so, acting like the disciples of to-day's lesson. The mothers brought their children to Christ. They came with them. Sometimes parents send their children to church, but do not come themselves. Even Sunday-school teachers speak of a Saviour who is to them a stranger. Experience is the greatest help in teaching and training. Word and example should be like voice and echo. As truth is many-sided, the preceding paragraph must be interpreted in the light of the wise words of Mr. GLOVER: "Our Lord's word, 'Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God,' certainly does not mean that children are so holy that they are naturally in the kingdom of God without any change of heart, in the face of such declarations as John 3. 5, but that children can most easily have the childlike spirit, and enter the kingdom, and that they are the most helpful material for the Church; and the fact that they are not sinless gives all the more hope to the children of God who are conscious of imperfection, while they know they are trusting and loving as children to a parent. The kingdom of God means the saved family of God on earth." When children die they do not pass out of God's care. Heaven and earth are two wings of God's home. Jesus is the Friend of children, the Founder of infant baptism, infant schools, infant catechising, and of all good institutions that care for children. Our High Priest, who bears the whole world on His heart, takes the children into His arms. To every child we may say in Christ's name, "Come, and welcome—a thousand welcomes!" To bring them to Him is the end of all our labours, the reward of all our patience.

14. Jesus seeing it, was much displeased—"at their blaming those who were not blameworthy, and endeavouring to hinder the children from receiving a blessing. Of such is the kingdom of God—the members of the kingdom which I am come to set up in the world are such as these, as well as grown persons of a childlike temper"—WESLEY.

15. Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child — "as totally disclaiming all worthiness and fitness, as if he were but a week old"—WESLEY.

Vers. 17–31. THE RICH YOUNG RULER. (See on Matt. 19. 16–30; Luke 18. 18–30.)

Vers. 17–21 constitute a paragraph parallel to Matt. 19. 16–26 and Luke 18. 18–27. Good Master (lit. "Good Teacher"). Why callest thou Me good? "Our Lord does not decline the appellation good. He repels it only in the superficial sense of the questioner, who regarded Him merely as a good Rabbi. The young man was ignorant (1) of our Lord's character, (2) of his own heart"—C. B. All these have I kept. We are told that when the Angel of Death came to fetch the Rabbi Chanina, he said, "Go and fetch me the book of the Law, and see whether there is anything in it which I have not kept." Jesus, beholding him, loved him. Many have wondered at this statement. Even Dr. ALEXANDER says, "Most probably love, as in many other places, denotes, not moral approbation, nor affection founded upon anything belonging to the object, but a sovereign and gratuitous compassion, such as leads to every act of mercy upon God's part. The sense will then be, not that Jesus loved him on account of what he said, or what he was, or what he did, but that, having purposes of mercy towards him, He proceeded to unmask him to himself, and to show him how entirely groundless, although probably sincere, was his claim to have habitually kept the Law. The Saviour's love is, then, mentioned, not as the effect of what precedes, but as the ground or motive of what follows." Dr. MORISON says, "It should, however, be borne in mind, that those who love both wisely and well take cognisance invariably of lovable qualities in the objects of their love. It would not be to the glory of any being to love the utterly unimportant, insignificant, and unlovely. Beauty of moral character may, indeed, be wanting; but excellency of capability, or superiority of constitution, or some other beauty or worth, must be discernible, as an indispensable condition of such love as challenges the approbation of conscience and the admiration of intelligence. Love of compassion is never absolutely separated from love of appreciation. Our Saviour's love would be no exception. He would discern in the young man not a little that was really amiable, the result of the partial reception and reflection of gracious Divine influences. There was ingenuousness, for instance, and moral earnestness. There was restraint of the animal passions, and an aspiration of the spirit towards the things of the world to come. There was still, indeed, one thing that was wanting, one thing that was wrong: and in that one thing many things would be involved. But there were other things that were the fit objects of complacency." How hardly shall they that have riches. The favourites of fortune have their drawbacks as well as advantages.

20. He answering said to Him, Master. "He stands reproved now and drops the epithet 'good'"—WESLEY.

21. Jesus, looking upon him—"and looking into his heart—loved him—doubtless for the dawnings of good which He saw in him. And said to him—out of tender love—One thing thou lackest—the love of God, without which all religion is a dead carcase. In order to this, throw away what is to thee the grand hindrance of it. Give up thy great idol, riches. Go, sell whatsoever thou hast"—WESLEY.

24. Jesus saith to them, Children. "See how He softens the harsh truth, by the manner of delivering it, and yet without retracting or abating one tittle. How hard is it for them that trust in riches—either for defence or happiness, or deliverance from the thousand dangers that life is continually exposed to. That these cannot enter God's glorious kingdom is clear and undeniable. But 'it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye' than for a man to have riches and not trust in them. Therefore, 'it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter the kingdom'"—WESLEY.

28. Lo, we have left all — "though the young man would not"—WESLEY.

30. He shall receive an hundredfold, houses, etc.—"not in the same kind—for it will generally be with persecutions—but in value; an hundredfold more happiness than any or all of these did or could afford. But let it be observed, none is entitled to this happiness, but he that will accept of it with persecutions"—WESLEY.

I. The setting of the Story.—It may have been accidental, as men speak, but it is none the less interesting, that this story of the young inquirer follows the narrative of the blessing of little children. All ages as well as ranks came within the sympathy of the Son of Man. For us men, and for our salvation, He came down from heaven. The incarnation brought Him within touch of every one of us. As Mediator between God and man, He laid His hand upon both and atoned—set at one again. But as Man amongst men He lived a child's life, and passed through the experience of youthhood. It was like Him, if we may speak thus without irreverence, to take the children into His arms, and immediately afterwards welcome the youth who came, under the excitement of enthusiasm, to inquire into the secret of eternal life. "Jesus," as Dr. LANGE teaches us, "is the Friend of children, the great Friend of the little ones; the Founder of infant baptism, infant schools, infant catechising, and of all good institutions that care for children." KLOPSTOCK, with a poet's fancy, brings many souls of children, before they are conducted by angels into human bodies, to the cross of Christ, in order that they may receive a deep impression of it, such as will fit them afterwards to receive the doctrine of the Crucified. This is a poet's fancy, but it impresses the fact of Christ's love for youth, and the possibility of early consecration to Christ. Jesus and children are closely connected ideas. And our schools have not done their work when they have taught Bible truth, and interested scholars in Bible study, but when they have led them to the children's Saviour.

II. The suggestiveness of the Story. — 1. The value of feeling. — The young man of this Gospel page had been moved by the teaching, attracted by the personality of Jesus. Such a Master, he thought, might win disciples; such a Teacher should be inquired of. He came running — kneeling — asking. These simple words carry in them interest, feeling, a measure of earnestness, lovableness. And Jesus, beholding him, loved him. Christ, who was in harmony with all natural beauty, was in harmony with all natural virtue. He saw that the young man did protest too much. He knew the chain that bound him. None the less did He rejoice in the youthful enthusiasm and the feeling doomed to failure and disappointment. 2. The insufficiency of feeling.—It often places words in the stead of deeds. Good Master. Why callest thou Me good? Solemn, indeed, is the meaning of words. A simple vow to lead a simply religious life involves self-sacrifice and much self-knowledge. If Christ was really the Good Master, then at all cost He must be obeyed, and obedience, however painful, would be the only way of safety. If Christ was really the Good Teacher, then all other voices must be unheeded that were not echoes of His. But when Christ bade the young man do a hard thing he went away sorrowful, but not strong enough for the task. He had kept the commandments. Now he was to learn how spiritual, deep, incisive, controlling they were, and the lesson was too difficult for him to learn. Feeling must have conviction behind it: conviction is born of a sense of duty; and duty is the stern daughter of God. 3. The control of feeling.—Translate it into conduct. Life is the safety-valve of emotion. Fear is destroyed by trust, and doubt removed by action. None can tell what he is able to do until he tries; none can know the reality of a purpose till he turns will into deed, word into service. Do not dream about duty—do it. Do not admire Christ—obey Him. Do not narrow law by current interpretation; see how large the word of Jesus, how fruitful the life of Jesus, make law to be. Thou knowest not what surrender may mean in thy case; how great self-sacrifice Christ may require at thy hands. Be certain of this, that none can enter the kingdom of God who is not prepared to lay down the riches of the purse, the riches of the intellect, the riches of good opinion, at the imperious call of conscience, of duty, of God. Sorrow cannot take the place of sacrifice. Feeling is not an end, but a means to an end. Virtue is not a dull level plain of monotonous duty for all feet alike; some are called to noble heroism, lofty endeavour, complete self-abandonment, for Christ's sake.

Vers. 32–45. Fuller Announcement of His Suffering, and Ambition of James and John. (See on Matt. 20. 17–28; Luke 18. 31–34.)

Selfish ambition.—There came near unto Him James and John, and with them their mother Salome (Matt. 20. 20), to ask the same favour. We learn her name by comparison of Matt. 27 56 with Mark 15. 40. If disciples called to be apostles were not free from evil, may not all learn a lesson of humility? "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed." Master, we would that Thou shouldst do for us whatsoever we shall desire. Strong importunity is expressed in the form of the sentence. (Comp. Bathsheba's request to Solomon, 1 Kings 2. 20.) But instead of promising beforehand, like Solomon and Herod, to grant the request whatever it might be, our Lord, though perfectly aware of it, requires it to be plainly stated for their conviction and reproof. What do ye wish Me to do for you? Grant that we may sit one on Thy right hand and the other on Thy left. The desire may have been nurtured by the honour which He had already put upon these two with S. Peter, and by the place which S. John appears to have occupied at table next to Christ, and therefore leaning or reclining on His bosom. The expression of it may have been called forth at this time by the recent promise that in the regeneration or reorganisation of the Church, the Twelve should sit upon as many thrones, judging the tribes of Israel. (Matt. 19. 28; Luke 22. 30.) They ask that they may fill the nearest seats to that of Christ Himself. Ye know not what ye ask. "They had no sort of presentiment what terrible places of honour they would shortly have attained if their wish had been accorded them, namely, the place of the two thieves who were crucified with Jesus, at His right hand and at His left" —Lange. Are ye able to drink the cup that I drink? This is the first time that He employs this figure. (Comp. Ps. 75. 8; Isa. 51. 17.) The same thought is then clothed in another figure, that of baptism or purifying, washing. This expression is peculiar to S. Mark. And they said, We are able. "If their declaration, 'We can,' be estimated according to its real worth, it cannot be mistaken that our Lord acknowledges in some measure the truth of their declaration. He does not at all announce to them, as to S. Peter, that in the hour of affliction they would deny Him. He acknowledges that these Sons of Thunder, in their eager attachment to Him, in their fiery enthusiasm and magnanimity, and possessing the germs of the Spirit, could already accomplish something considerable"—Lange. The prediction was fulfilled in both the brothers, but in a very different manner. S. James was the first apostolical martyr. (Acts 12. 2.) S. John was the last survivor of the Twelve, making up, as has been well said, by the variety and length of his distresses for the absence of the crown of blood. Even if the legend of the poison and the boiling oil is unhistorical, it is still true that S. John, as well as S. James, pre-eminently shared his Master's cup and baptism. The highest places are not awarded out of caprice or mere favour. The most endowed will have the greatest responsibility, the most faithful the greatest honour. In the remaining verses our Lord declares the law of service. They who would rule must learn to obey. Ambition is blind and o'erleaps itself. Christ, who is Lord of All, became the Servant of All. In the kingdoms of the world a man is called great when he rules; in the kingdom of grace when he serves many. He came, not to be served, but to serve.

32. They were in the way to Jerusalem; and Jesus went before them: and they were amazed—"at His courage and intrepidity, considering the treatment which He had Himself told them He should meet with there. And as they followed they were afraid—both for Him and themselves. Nevertheless, He judged it best to prepare them, by telling them more particularly what was to ensue"—WESLEY.

35. Saying—"by their mother. It was she, not they, that uttered the words"—WESLEY.

38. Ye know not what ye ask. "Ye know not that ye are asking for sufferings, which must needs pave the way to glory. The cup—of inward; the baptism—of outward sufferings. Our Lord was filled with sufferings within, and covered with them without"—WESLEY.

40. Save to them for whom it is prepared—"them 'who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honour, and immortality.' For these only eternal life 'is prepared.' To these only He will 'give it' in that day; and to every man his own reward, according to his own labour"—WESLEY.

45. A ransom for many—"even for as many souls as needed such a ransom. (2 Cor. 5. 15)"—WESLEY.

Vers. 46-52. BLIND BARTIMÆUS HEALED. (See on Matt. 20. 29-34; Luke 18. 35-43.)—50. Casting away his garment—"through joy and eagerness"—WESLEY.

A Story of two blind men.—S. Matthew says there were two blind men; S. Mark and S. Luke represent but one. A similar case occurs in the account of the demoniac of Gadara. S. Matthew and S. Mark say that the miracle was performed on Christ's departure from Jericho; S. Luke, as He came nigh Jericho. One of the two following explanations is the most probable: "It is not inconsistent with the narrative that the blind man made his first appeal to the Saviour as the latter was entering the city, but for some reason was not at first answered; perhaps he was not heard; perhaps Jesus would develop his faith. The next morning he stationed himself at the gate through which the Saviour would pass on leaving the city, and renewed his application to Him, now accompanied by another. All difficulty is removed if we suppose the words 'on the morrow' to be understood in Luke 18. 38 thus: 'And (on the morrow) he cried,' etc."—HACKETT. FARRAR quotes from Macknight the supposition, and Godet quotes it from a German periodical of 1870, that the healing occurred at a point between the old and the new city, and so could be described as occurring either when they went out from Jericho, or as they drew near to Jericho. Of the two sufferers, one has gained the distinct title, The Blind Man. A crowd, composed of people going up to keep the Passover, and swollen by continual accessions from the towns and neighbourhoods through which they passed, accompanied Jesus Christ when the cries of Bartimæus fell on their ears. Bartimæus means son of Timæus, but was used as a proper name, like our Johnson or Thomson. It is said in Palestine and on the Lower Nile one adult out of five has some affection of the eyes. Blindness and poverty are almost synonymous words. On the Continent the beggars gather about church doors. As Mr. GLOVER well says, "Beggars know that godliness and kindness go together, and they always congregate where God's worshippers are found." The Christian Church has always found in this blind beggar of the Gospel a picture of those who wander through the world without God. As THOMAS À KEMPIS says, "That man only is poor in this world who lives without Jesus; and that man only is rich with whom Jesus delights to dwell." Suddenly and unexpectedly the poor man of the narrative came into contact with Christ; earnestly, with the resistless earnestness of need, he told his tale of sorrow, and besought relief. He prayed a short, direct, earnest prayer. He continued to cry until he was heard and answered. He was blind in body, but not in soul. The eyes of his understanding were opened. "He who moves the universe is held by the prayer of this man"—THOMAS. He was made whole — complete, sound, nothing wanting. The blindness of blindness is not to see God: to be ignorant of the way of duty. LONGFELLOW has a beautiful poem on Blind Bartimæus, which teachers will do well to read. GEORGE MACDONALD also has one touchingly beautiful in its simplicity and trust. We append two verses:—

"As Jesus went into Jericho town,
'Twas darkness from toe to crown
About Blind Bartimæus.
He said, 'When eyes are so very dim
They are no use for seeing Him;
No matter—He can see us.'

"Cry out, cry out, blind brother, cry—
Let not salvation dear go by,—
'Have mercy, Son of David.'
Though they were blind, they both could hear;
They heard, and cried, and He drew near,
And so the blind were saved."

CHAPTER XI.

Vers. 1–11. CHRIST'S TRIUMPHAL ENTRY. (See on Matt. 21. 1-9; Luke 19. 29-40; John 12. 12-19.)—1. To Bethphage and Bethany, at the Mount of Olives. "The limits of Bethany reached to the Mount of Olives, and joined to those of Bethphage. Bethphage was part of the suburbs of Jerusalem, and reached from the Mount of Olives to the walls of the city. Our Lord was now come to the place where the boundaries of Bethany and Bethphage met"—WESLEY.

Vers. 1–10 contain the approach to the capital city by way of Bethany and Bethphage. The paragraph corresponds to Matt. 21. 1–11; Luke 19. 29–38; John 12. 12–15. The order of events at this point, says the Cambridge Bible, needs explanation: (1) The Saviour apparently reached Bethany on the evening of Friday, Nisan 8; there (2) in quiet retirement He spent His last earthly Sabbath; and (3) in the evening sat down to a festal meal provided by the sisters of Lazarus at the house of one Simon, who had been a leper (Matt. 26. 6; John 12. 1); (4) at this feast He was annointed by Mary (John 12. 3); and (5) during the night a council of the Jews was convened to consider the propriety of putting, not Him only, but Lazarus also to death (John 12. 10). The Evangelist, passing over for the present the peaceful scene at the festal meal (Mark 14. 3-9), translates us at once to Palm Sunday as to time, and as to place to the region between Bethany and the Mount of Olives. Bethphage—all trace of this village seems to have disappeared. Bethany has lingered on to the present day; but it is, as TRISTRAM calls it, "a miserable village." "Bethany," says Dr. ROBINSON, "is a poor village, of some twenty families; its inhabitants are without thrift or industry." And yet, when Dr. MORISON visited it in 1855, he found, among the children who were clustering about, a boy carrying an inkhorn by his side. On being asked if he could write, he answered in the affirmative, and wrote with his reed on the blank leaf of a New Testament the words, in Arabic, "God is Love." It was of his own accord that he selected the words. At the Mount of Olives—the procession moved in the direction of the Mount of Olives. The Mount of Olives, or the mountain of the olive trees, was the natural name of the beautiful mountain that rises close to Jerusalem on the east. "The sides of the mountain," says Dr. ROBINSON, "are still sprinkled with olive trees, though not thickly, as was probably the case of old." "At present," says HACKETT, "the mountain exhibits, on the whole, a desolate appearance. Rocky ridges crop out here and there above the surface, and give to the hill a broken, sterile aspect. Yet the mount is not wholly destitute of verdure even now. A few spots are planted with grain; and fruit trees, such as almonds, figs, pomegranates, olives, are scattered up and down its sides. The olives take the lead, decidedly, and thus indicate the propriety of the ancient name." The mountain rises about 220 feet above Mount Moriah, over against it on the west, and affords a magnificent and most commanding prospect. "Surely," says Dr. BARCLAY, "there is not in all the world a prospect so delightful to behold as the panorama to be enjoyed by ascending the minaret alongside the Church of Ascension that now crowns the elevation nearest the city." "Observe the minuteness of the circumstances specified in the directions given to the disciples. They would find the colt tied; it had never been ridden; it would be found outside, at the door of the house, in the open street; and persons would be near it, and the words which they would speak are predicted, and the answer is prescribed which the apostles were to make"—C. B. The owner may have been a secret disciple. "Secret disciples, such as the five hundred who afterwards gathered to one spot in Galilee, and the hundred and twenty who met after the resurrection (1 Cor. 15. 6; Acts 1. 15), were scattered in many places."

I. KING JESUS.—"The expectation of the Messiah," says LANGE, "was the expectation of His kingdom; hence the salutation of Messiah was the salutation of His kingdom. Christ and His kingdom are not to be separated; but the kingdom of His cross and the kingdom of His glory are to be distinguished, even as the glorified Christ is distinguished from the Christ in the form of a servant." "By Thine agony and bloody sweat; by Thy Cross and Passion; by Thy precious Death and Burial; by Thy glorious Resurrection and Ascension, and by the Coming of the Holy Ghost, good Lord, deliver us." In these words the Church has prayed for three hundred years. And in some such form Christians have pleaded ever since the day when the lions of Roman emperors were fed with the flesh of the followers of the Nazarene who suffered under Pontius Pilate. But, mark it well, the Church does not pray:—By the miracle of Thy Transfiguration, by the majesty of Thy triumphal entry, good Lord, deliver us. It is not so much in the Lord's superiority that she takes refuge, as in His sympathy. Yet Christ, be it ever remembered, is Lord as well as Saviour; King not less than Priest and Prophet. We may not crown Him; He is crowned. We can only, like the Wise Men who came to His cradle, fall down and worship Him. And though we have no treasures of gold and spices to spread before Him we may offer the frankincense of devotion and a golden obedience. Between Palm Sunday and Easter Day there stands Good Friday. The Lord of the dead and living gave up His life. But He never resigned His Lordship. He was King of Hades; He is King of men. (Read the narrative of the entry in the Four Gospels, and mark the Kingship of Jesus.)

II. INDICATIONS OF KINGSHIP.—The Kinglike Speech.—Go into the village. . . . Say the Lord hath need of him. If these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out. The reference to the stones is a covert intimation of the destruction of Jerusalem. It is not unlike the old English legends based upon the ultimate revelations of wrong. "Murder will out." "A bad deed cannot be buried." The rocks, too, have borne their testimony to Christianity. Discoveries have cast a flood of light on biblical truth.

He is King over the irrational world.—Loose and bring. Did He ever ride before? Probably not. This time He rode an animal whereon no man ever yet sat. "In the action which the Lord contemplated He meant to be no man's successor." Unused animals were put to sacred purposes. (See Num. 19. 2; Deut. 21. 3; 1 Sam. 6. 7.) But we may see in this little scene a picture of the subjection of things to Christ. The beasts of the field shall honour Him.

He is King of men.—If any man say aught unto you, say the Lord hath need of him. Unto one He saith go, and he goeth; to another come, and he cometh; and to His servants do this, and they do it. For He is Lord.

He is King in all places.—He entered into the Temple and cast out. At the beginning of His ministry He had swept its courts. At the end He vindicates it against those who polluted it, and converted the House of Prayer into a den of thieves. And the blind and the lame came to Him in the Temple, and He healed them.

III. HE STILL CLAIMS FEALTY AND SERVICE.—King Jesus claims all men's homage.—Who composed this procession? The crowd. The children. The Pharisees. Our Lord's disciples. The blind man healed at Jericho's gate. Possibly Lazarus, whose recent resurrection was not yet forgotten. So various the elements, so wide-embracing His influence. He remaineth ever.

King Jesus claims all kinds of homage.—Some cast their garments. Others cut down branches. Others sang Hosanna. At His birth wealthy Magi brought gifts; poor shepherds, delighted hearts and willing tongues. The pardoned woman bathed His feet. The rich Arimathæan lent Him a grave. Nicodemus brought spices. Every man in his own order.

King Jesus claims genuine homage.—The Hosanna of the lip. The homage of the life. Christ still reigns over thoughts and dispositions: in society, art, and literature. All things are not yet put under Him. But He is King, and destined to rule over all nations. "The kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever."

Vers. 12–26. THE BARREN FIG TREE. (See on Matt. 21. 18–22; Luke 19. 45–48.)—And on the morrow. The triumphal entry being on the first day of the week, the following day was Monday. A fig tree afar off, having leaves. "It stood alone, a single fig tree by the wayside (Matt. 21. 19), and presented an unusual show of leaves for the season. The time of figs was not—that is, the ordinary fig season had not yet arrived. The rich verdure of this tree seemed to show that it was fruitful, and there was every probability of finding upon it either the late violet-coloured autumn figs, which often hung upon the tree all through the winter, and even until the new spring leaves had come, or the first ripe figs (Isa. 28. 4; Jer. 24. 2; Hos. 9. 10; Nah. 3. 12), of which Orientals are particularly fond. But this tree had nothing but leaves. It was the very type of a fair profession without performance; a very parable of the nation, which, with all its professions, brought no fruit to perfection. (Comp. Luke 8. 14)"—C. B. Our Lord's coming to the fig tree was a parable in act. His own physical hunger was the outward and visible sign of His inward and spiritual hunger for the nation's well-being. And He answered. "The tree," as BENGEL remarks, "is regarded as having refused to give fruit. The nation had leaves of profession, but refused to show the fruits of obedience." No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever. That word, BROWN remarks, did not make the tree barren, but sealed it up in its own barrenness. And His disciples heard it. They were in an attitude of attention. The consequences of His word they did not discover until the next day. They come to Jerusalem: and Jesus went into the Temple, and began to cast out. A similar proceeding is described by S. John (ch. 2. 14–16) as having taken place at the first Passover after the commencement of His public ministry. And He taught, and said to them. Our Lord gave reasons for His conduct. Is it not written, My house shall be called a house of prayer for all the nations? but ye have made it a den of robbers. And the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might destroy Him. Destroyed He must be, but how, and when? For they feared Him. A strange power went forth from Him, attaching friends and alarming foes. And when even was come He went out of the city—back probably to Bethany. And in the morning, as they passed by, they saw the fig tree dried up from the roots. The blight operated from within outward. And Peter calling to remembrance. Peter was often the mouthpiece of his brethren. Behold the fig tree which Thou cursedst is withered. Have faith in God—"very literally, 'Have faith of God.' The genitive, however, represents the object, not the subject of the faith, and hence the translation given in our A.V. is correct. The same construction occurs in Gal. 2. 16–20, where we read of 'the faith of Jesus Christ' and 'the faith of the Son of God,' rather obscure expressions in English idiom. We can readily speak of 'the love of God,' meaning, according to circumstances, either the love of which He is the subject, or the love of which He is the object. But the phrase, the faith of God, or the faith of Christ, has not got fixed, in its objective signification, into an easy-going idiom"—MORISON. Verily I say unto you. Our Lord's formula of solemn assurance. Whosoever shall say to this mountain. "Language like this," says MACLEAR, "was familiar in the schools of the Jews. They used to set out those teachers among them that were more eminent for the profoundness of their learning, or the splendour of their virtues, by such expressions as these, He is a rooter up or remover of mountains. They called Rabbah Bar Nachmani a rooter up of mountains, because he had a piercing judgment."

13. For it was not a season of figs. "It was not, as we say, a good year for figs; at least not for that early sort, which alone was ripe so soon in the spring. If we render the words, 'It was not the season for figs,' that is, the time of gathering them in, it may mean, 'The season was not yet'; and so (enclosing the words in a parenthesis, 'And coming to it, He found nothing but leaves') it may refer to the former part of the sentence, and may be considered as the reason of Christ's going to see whether there were any figs on this tree. Some who also read that clause in a parenthesis, translate the following words, 'For where He was, it was the season of figs.' And it is certain this meaning of the words suits best with the great design of the parable, which was to reprove the Jewish Church for its unfruitfulness at that very season when fruit might best be expected from it"—WESLEY.

Figurative Meaning of the Miracle.—"Our Saviour was not expecting to find figs in order to satisfy His bodily hunger. His mind was bent on higher things. 'He came to the tree,' says ZWINGLE, 'not for the sake of eating, but for the sake of performing an adumbrative action.' It was true He was hungry. His hunger, too, was the occasion that gave shape to His adumbrative action when He went to the leafy tree to see if there was fruit on it. But in every step that He took toward the tree, and in every act that He performed after He reached it, as in all the details of His engagements before and after in those memorable Jerusalem days, He was actuated by a far profounder hunger than that of the body. If this be ignored, the whole action of our Lord in the case before us, and the whole peculiarity and mystery of His life and death, become an inexplicable enigma"—MORISON. 'Our Lord's action was emblematical, according to the usual custom of the sages of the East to express things by symbolical actions. It was also prophetic. Our Lord intended to prove that His power to punish the disobedient was as great as that to confer benefits. It was, moreover, to prefigure the destruction of the perverse Jews, because in the time of fruits they had borne none, and likewise to read a very important lesson to all His disciples of every age—that if the opportunities God gives for approving themselves virtuous be neglected, nought will remain but to be withered by the fiat which shall consign them to everlasting destruction"—BLOOMFIELD.

16. He suffered not that any one should carry a vessel through the Temple—"so strong notions had our Lord of even relative holiness; and of the regard due to those places, as well as times, that are peculiarly dedicated to God"—WESLEY.

18. They feared Him—"that is, they were afraid to take Him by violence, lest it should raise a tumult—because all the people was astonished at His teaching—both at the excellence of His doctrine, and at the majesty and authority with which He taught"—WESLEY.

22. Have faith in God—"and who could find fault, if the Creator and Proprietor of all things were to destroy, by a single word of His mouth, a thousand of His inanimate creatures, were it only to imprint this important lesson more deeply on one immortal spirit"—WESLEY.

25. When ye stand praying. "Standing was their usual posture when they prayed. Forgive—and on this condition ye shall have whatever ye ask without wrath or doubting"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XII.

Vers. 1–12. PARABLE OF THE WICKED HUSBANDMEN. (See Matt. 21. 28–46; Luke 20. 9–18.)—12. They feared the multitude. "How wonderful is the providence of God, using all things for the good of His children! Generally, the multitude is restrained from tearing them in pieces only by the fear of their rulers. And here the rulers themselves are restrained through fear of the multitude!"—WESLEY.

Vers. 13–40. QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS. (See on Matt. 22. 15–46; Luke 20. 20–47.)

17. They marvelled at Him—"at the wisdom of His answer"—WESLEY.

25. "When they rise from the dead, neither men marry, nor women are given in marriage."—WESLEY.

27. He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living—"that is, if the argument be proposed at length, Since the character of His being the God of any persons plainly intimates a relation to them not as dead, but as living; and since He cannot be said to be at present their God at all, if they are utterly dead, nor to be the God of human persons, such as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, consisting of souls and bodies, if their bodies were to abide in everlasting death, there must needs be a future state of blessedness, and a resurrection of the body to share with the soul in it"—WESLEY.

28. Which is the first commandment—"the principal, and most necessary to be observed"—WESLEY.

29. The Lord our God is one Lord. "This is the foundation of the first commandment, yea, of all the commandments. The Lord our God, the Lord, the God of all men, is one God, essentially, though three Persons. From this unity of God it follows, that we owe all our love to Him alone"—WESLEY.

30. With all thy strength—"that is, the whole strength and capacity of thy understanding, will, and affections"—WESLEY.

31. The second is like unto it—"of a like comprehensive nature; comprising our whole duty to our fellow-creatures, as the other does our whole duty to God. There is no other moral, much less ceremonial, commandment greater than these"—WESLEY.

33. To love Him with all the heart—"to love and serve Him with all the united powers of the soul in their utmost vigour. And to love his neighbour as himself—to maintain the same equitable and charitable temper and behaviour toward all men, as we, in like circumstances, would wish for from them toward ourselves, is a more necessary and important duty than the offering the most noble and costly sacrifices"—WESLEY.

34. Jesus said to him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. "Reader, art not thou? Then go on: be a real Christian; else it had been better for thee to have been afar off"—WESLEY.

38. Beware of the scribes. "There was an absolute necessity for these repeated cautions. For, considering their inveterate prejudices against Christ, it could never be supposed the common people would receive the gospel till these incorrigible blasphemers of it were brought to just disgrace"—WESLEY.

"Yet He delayed speaking in this manner till a little before His Passion, as knowing what effect it would quickly produce. Nor is this any precedent for us; we are not invested with the same authority"—WESLEY.

13. "Pharisees—a religious party, or school, amongst the Jews at the time of Christ, so called from a Hebrew word which signified 'separated.' The name does not occur either in the Old Testament or in the Apocrypha. A cursory perusal of the Gospels is sufficient to show that Christ's teaching was in some respects thoroughly antagonistic to theirs. He denounced them in the bitterest language, and made against them as a class sweeping charges of hypocrisy"—Smith's Bible Dictionary. "Herodians. Just as the partisans of Marius were called Mariani, of Pompeius, Pompeiani, of Otho, Othoniani, so the partisans of Herod the Great and his successors were called Herodiani. The sect was rather a political than a religious body. Adopting Sadducean opinions, they held that the hopes of the Jewish nation rested on the Herods as a bulwark against Roman ambition, and almost looked to them for a fulfilment of the prophecies respecting the advent of the Messiah. They favoured the compromise between the ancient faith and later civilisation, which Herod inaugurated, and his successors endeavoured to realise. On one occasion our Lord warns His disciples against 'the leaven of Herod,' in close connection with 'the leaven of the Pharisees' (Mark 8. 15; Luke 12. 1)"—C. B. "The Pharisees were the heroic national party; while the Sadducees were the priestly-aristocratic party, who allied themselves always with the ruling power, even when that power was anti-national in its aims. In our Lord's time, the names had gradually come to connote differences which were religious as well as political. The Sadducees may broadly be described as rationalists, the Pharisees as ritualists, names which, though not rigidly accurate, convey, on the whole, a true impression of their respective positions"—FARRAR. And they send. A series of distinct attacks was now made upon our Lord. (a) The Pharisees took the lead with theirs, one most cleverly devised; (b) the Sadducees followed; and then (c) came the scribes of the Pharisees' party. "It was," to quote FARRAR'S phrase, "the day of temptations, the last and greatest day of the public ministry of Jesus." Dr. MACLEAR distinguishes it as "the day of questions." That they might catch Him in His words. The verb rendered "they might catch" is a hunting word. They hoped to take Him off His guard by flattery, and then twist His confessions into a charge of heresy, or national disloyalty. Is it lawful to give tribute? Judas the Gaulonite (Acts 5. 37) and his followers keenly resented the capitation tax levied by the Roman government. If our Lord held the payment unlawful, He would be liable to punishment by the Romans; if He sanctioned it, He would lose the confidence of the national party. But He, knowing their hypocrisy. They said, Thou art true; He knew they were not. Bring me a penny. "They would not be likely," says FARRAR, "to carry with them the hated Roman coinage, with its heathen symbols, though they might have been at once able to produce from their girdles the Temple shekel. But they would only have to step outside the Court of the Gentiles and obtain from the money-changers' tables a current Roman coin. A penny, literally a denarius, of the value of 7½d. of our money. Whose is this image and superscription?—"as if," says MORISON, "He had said, 'The coin, I perceive, has the likeness of some royal personage stamped upon it, and it bears an inscription or legend. Whose is the likeness? Whose name is mentioned in the legend?'" And they said unto Him, Cæsar's. Then said Jesus, Give Cæsar his right. You use his coin. You share his protection. Give as well as receive. And as you render to Cæsar that which is his, render to God whatsoever He rightly claims. And they marvelled at Him. He had silenced Pharisees and Herodians. Then come the Sadducees. "Few, rich, and dignified," they had rather stood aloof from the Man of Nazareth. They denied the resurrection and immortality. They denied the existence of angel or spirit. "They deny," says JOSEPHUS, "the immortality of the soul, and the punishments and rewards of Hades:" Christ refers them to the Book. "Have ye not read in the Book of Moses, how, in the bush, God spake unto him, saying, I am the God of Abraham," etc. In the bush means here, in the section of the Book of Exodus (ch. 3. 1), called "The Bush." In the Koran the chapters are named after the matter they contain, and so also the Homeric poems. Wyclif gives the right meaning: "Have ye not read in the book of Moyses on the bousche, how God said to him."

Vers. 41–44. THE WIDOW'S TWO MITES. (See on Luke 21. 1–4.)—41. He beheld how the people cast money into the treasury. "This treasury received the voluntary contributions of the worshippers who came up to the feast; which were given to buy wood for the altar, and other necessaries not provided for in any other way"—WESLEY.

43. I say to you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all. "See what judgment is cast on the most specious outward actions by the Judge of all! And how acceptable to Him is the smallest which springs from self-denying love!"—WESLEY.

"As Temple offerings are needed still, for the service of Christ at home and abroad, so looking down now, as then up, He sees who cast in, and how much. Christ's standard of commendable offering is not our superfluity but our deficiency — not what will never be missed, but what costs us some real sacrifice, and just in proportion to the relative amount of that sacrifice"—BROWN.

CHAPTER XIII.

Vers. 1–37. PROPHECY OF THE DESTRUCTION OF JERUSALEM. (See on Matt. 24. 1–51 and Luke 21. 5–36.)—In one of the best Commentaries this important chapter is divided into six parts, which we will abridge:—

A. The occasion (vers. 1–4).—S. Mark brings before us a single speaker, who pointed out to the Lord the splendour of the Temple; while S. Luke speaks of several; S. Matthew, of the disciples in general. One might imagine it was S. Andrew who furnished in this manner the occasion, entering as he did this time into the circle of the intimate few. If it were not he, then it was most probably S. Peter. The disciples intercede, so to speak, for the Temple. The thought that such a building should be destroyed was too sad for them.

B. The world's course to the world's end in general. The last things of the Christian (vers. 5–13).—The warning against the false Christs is common to all the Synoptists; S. Luke alone has the addition that the time draws near. The representation of the wars of the nations is in S. Mark the shortest. The signs of the world's development are given by S. Luke most complete; earthquakes, famines, pestilence, terrors, and signs in the heavens. S. Mark depicts the persecutions of the Christians. These were weighty words spoken for Roman Christians at a time when the martyrdom of S. Peter and S. Paul in Rome was about to take place. Then, as early as the tenth verse, he gives the concluding statement of S. Matthew regarding the preaching of the gospel in all the world.

C, D. The destruction of Jerusalem, and the interval between this and the end of the world; or the world's course to the end from the predominating point of view of the Jewish Theocracy (vers. 14–20; 21–23).—The presage of the destruction of Jerusalem is given more briefly than by S. Matthew, still in biblical form; not as in S. Luke, who declares plainly the besieging and destruction of the city. The conclusion is in the highest degree impressive: Take ye heed; behold, I have told you all things beforehand.

E. The end of the Cosmos (vers. 24–27).—S. Mark, as well as S. Matthew, draws a very sharply-defined distinction between the time of the destruction of Jerusalem and the time when the sign of the end of the world shall appear.

F. The parable of the sudden irruption of the catastrophe, and the exhortation to watchfulness (vers. 28–37).—To the end of ver. 32, S. Mark writes to quite the same import as S. Matthew; then, however, a different statement comes in: Of that day and that hour knoweth . . . not the angels, . . . neither the Son. At this point the three Synoptists separate, and take different ways. S. Matthew represents the Lord as here pointing back to the days of Noah, as being symbols of the days of the world's end. The surprise of that day is depicted by him in a particular way. The parable of the midnight has its characteristic point in the coming thief; and succeeding this is another parable of the lord who, in coming home, surprises his servants. S. Mark has the exhortation, Watch, for ye know not when the lord of the house cometh (R.V.), which is found in S. Matthew. But then he adds a parable, peculiar to himself, of the lord going away upon a journey, appointing special duties to his trusted servants; and in this parable the chief person is the lowest servant, the porter, who must keep watch; while S. Matthew makes him the steward, who had charge of the house. It is evident that the parables are distinct. S. Matthew selected the steward, because watchful honesty seemed to him the chief thing; S. Mark selected the porter, because honest watchfulness seemed to him the chief thing. S. Matthew may have had before him, in his selection, the picture of the Jewish high priest; and S. Mark, the picture of a porter attached to some noble Roman house. S. Mark notices the different hours in which the master may return, marking them out sharply by the statement of the divisions of the night. S. Luke brings prominently forward the common danger to man—the heart must not be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness and cares of this life; the momentous day is compared by him to a snare. S. Mark concludes with the word Watch! "It may be," writes Archdeacon FARRAR, "that the shadows of His thought gave a strange solemnity to His attitude and features as He sat there silent among the silent and saddened band of His few faithful followers. Not without a touch of awe His nearest and most favoured apostles—Peter and James and John and Andrew—came near to Him, and as they saw His eye fixed on the Temple, asked Him privately, When shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the world? (Matt. 24. 3.) Their 'when?' remained for the present unanswered. It was the way of Jesus, when some ignorant or irrelevant or inadmissible question was put to Him, to rebuke it, not directly, but by passing it over, and by substituting for its answer some great moral lesson which was connected with it, and could alone make it valuable. Accordingly, this question of the apostles drew from Him the great Eschatological Discourse, or Discourse of the Last Things, of which the four moral key-notes are, BEWARE! and WATCH! and ENDURE! and PRAY! S. Matthew, writing for Jews, speaks of the restoration of the Temple; S. Mark, for Romans, its size and strength; S. Luke, for humanity, its beauty. But neither strength, nor beauty, nor historical interest, could save it. City and Temple fell in 'the most soul-stirring struggle of all ancient history.' Serious conflicts had occurred from time to time before Titus appeared before the walls of Jerusalem. Josephus states that more than a million perished during the siege, and nearly a hundred thousand were carried captive during the whole war. These numbers may be somewhat exaggerated, but, after fair deduction, the figures will be startling. On certain days, handed down by tradition as 'days of wretchedness,' the most desperate hand-to-hand encounters took place, some in the passages from the Antonia to the cloisters, some in the cloisters themselves—the Romans endeavouring to force their way in, the Jews preventing them. But the Romans gradually gained ground. It is said the Temple was fired by the wanton act of a soldier, contrary to the intention of Titus; and in spite of every exertion he could make to stop it, the sanctuary itself was fired. Now the whole of the city was demolished; the aged and infirm were killed; the children under seventeen were sold as slaves; the rest were sent, some to the Egyptian mines, some to the provincial amphitheatres, and some to grace the triumph of the conqueror. The demolition was complete—so complete that, Josephus being our assurance, 'the whole was so thoroughly levelled and dug up, that no one visiting it would believe it had ever been inhabited.' The same authority says the Temple was built of white stones of great size—the length of each about thirty-seven and a half feet, some even forty-five feet; the thickness twelve feet, and the breadth eighteen. Need we wonder that the disciples said, Master, behold, what manner of stones, and what manner of buildings (R.V.). Nor can we conceive the astonishment and alarm with which they would hear the terrible words, Seest thou these great buildings? there shall not be left here one stone upon another which shall not be thrown down (R.V.). And if Christ's words have been true in their fulfilled portions, will they fail in their fulfilment in the great future? Does He not still speak to us and to all? Watch, therefore! The past accredits the Prophet of God, so shall the future."

4. "Two questions are here asked; the one, concerning the destruction of Jerusalem; the other, concerning the end of the world"—WESLEY.

11. "The Holy Ghost will help you. But do not depend on any other help; for all the nearest ties will be broken"—WESLEY.

14. Where it ought not—"that place being set apart for sacred uses"—WESLEY.

19. In those days shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of the creation. "May it not be doubted, whether this be yet fully accomplished? Is not much of this affliction still to come?"—WESLEY.

20. The elect—"the Christians. Whom He hath chosen—that is, hath taken out of, or separated from, the world, 'through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth.' He hath shortened—that is, will surely shorten"—WESLEY.

24. But in those days—"which immediately precede the end of the world. After that tribulation—above described"—WESLEY.

29. He is nigh—"the Son of Man"—WESLEY.

30. All these things—"relating to the Temple and the city"—WESLEY.

32. Of that day. "The day of judgment is often in the Scriptures emphatically called 'that day.' Neither the Son—not as man: as man he was no more omniscient than omnipresent; but as God He knows all the circumstances of it"—WESLEY.

34. "The Son of Man is as a man taking a far journey. Being about to leave this world and go to the Father, He appoints the services that are to be performed by all His servants, in their several stations. This seems chiefly to respect ministers at the day of judgment; but may be applied to all men, and to the time of death"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XIV.

Vers. 1-11. THE CHIEF PRIESTS CONSPIRE WITH JUDAS ISCARIOT. (See on Matt. 26. 1-16; Luke 22. 1-6; John 12. 1-11.)—4. Some had indignation—"being incited thereto by Judas—and said—probably to the woman"—WESLEY.

10. Judas went to the chief priests—"immediately after this reproof, having anger now added to his covetousness"—WESLEY.

At this point it is not easy to fix a note of time with certainty. S. Mark says, "After two days was the feast of the Passover," and then introduces the anointing at Bethany. S. John says, "Jesus, six days before the Passover, came to Bethany." The general opinion is that S. John fixes the exact date. On the Sabbath evening, or Saturday night, Jesus sat down to supper at Bethany, and received the homage of the alabaster box. S. Mark, having to refer to the Sanhedrim in council, whose plans depended on the treachery of Judas, steps backward a few days to introduce an incident that awakened the slumbering greed of Judas. This supposition tempts Wordsworth to some beautiful allegorising. This supper at Bethany was probably on the Sabbath before His death. It was on a Sabbath—the Sabbath before that great Sabbath on which Christ rested in the grave and fulfilled the Sabbath, and prepared the grave as a place of rest for all who pass from this life in His faith and fear. He also allegorises on the meaning of Bethany, a house of passage, as prefiguring the passage to the spiritual banquet in Paradise. Simon the leper—Simon, or Simeon, was a common name among the Jews, hence it was necessary to distinguish particular individuals. This man had been a leper, and may have been cured by our Lord. His leprosy had been removed, otherwise he would have been an outcast from society. In the absence of definite information, it has been conjectured that he was the father of Martha, Mary, and Lazarus. Others have supposed that he was the husband of Mary. The mention of Lazarus, it has been pointed out by WESTCOTT, as one of those present, hardly falls in with the idea that he and his sisters were the hosts. It may have been that the villagers provided the feast in the house of Simon. The Jews were fond of giving entertainments at the close of the Sabbath. As He sat at meat—more literally, as He was reclining (at table). There is reference to the recumbent position which, in imitation of the Greeks and Romans, had been adopted for banquets by the Jews. There came a woman. Her name is suppressed both by S. Matthew and S. Mark; S. John tells us that it was Mary, the sister of Martha and Lazarus. Having an alabaster box of ointment. There is no word for box in the original. The Revisers use the word "cruse," and put in the margin, "flask." The expression in the original is simply, "having an alabaster of ointment." At Alabastron, in Egypt, there was a manufactory of small vases for holding perfumes, which were made from a stone found in the neighbouring mountains. The Greeks gave to those vases the name of the city from which they came, calling them alabastrons. This name was eventually extended to the stone of which they were formed. Spikenard. In the margin the Revisers place, "Greek, pistic nard," pistic being, perhaps, a local name. Others take it to mean genuine; others liquid. Genuine, pure, unadulterated nard is probably the best meaning. Very precious—very expensive, very costly; precious being used in the old and strict sense of the English word. It was the costliest anointing oil of antiquity. Poured it on His head (R.V. "over His head")—it may have run down the person to the feet, "thus reconciling," as Dr. ALEXANDER says, "the statement of S. John that she anointed the feet of Jesus." "She broke the narrow neck of the cruse," says Dr. MACLEAR, "and poured the perfume first on the head, and then on the feet of Jesus (a point mentioned only by S. John, ch. 12. 3), drying them with the hair of her head, though it was a disgrace to a Jewish woman to unbind the hair in public." She did not wish to keep or hold back anything. She offered up all, gave away all, and her "all" was a tribute worthy of a king. Some that had indignation. A veil is here drawn. S. Matthew tells us they were the disciples, and S. John that the irritability was first shown in Judas the Traitor. Three hundred pence. The denarius was the ordinary wage for a day's work. They murmured against her. The word in the original suggests the roar of a lion and the snort of a horse. Let her alone; why trouble ye her? Our Lord always defended the defenceless. She hath wrought a good work on Me—a noble and beautiful work—this is what the word means. She is come aforehand to anoint My body to the burying ("She hath anointed My body aforehand for the burying," R.V.). The words must have fallen with a strange sound on the ears of all who were gathered at the village feast. The custom of embalming was common in Eastern lands. Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her—not the written Gospel merely, but the history of these events, transmitted through the generations. "The striking originality of the saying common to two Gospels," says Dr. SANDAY, "though not quite in the same order, and the large claim which it makes, are evidence of its origin from Him who spake as never man spake." "The word used for memorial is connected with Mnemosyne, the mother of the Muses, and so called," says MORISON, "because before the invention of writing, a capacious and tenacious memory was a prime pre-requisite in every effort of literary genius."

Vers. 12-26. THE PASSOVER AND THE LAST SUPPER. (See on Matt. 26. 17-30; Luke 22. 7-23, 39; John 13. 21-30.)—13. Go into the city, and there shall meet you a man. "It was highly seasonable for our Lord to give them this additional proof both of His knowing all things, and of His influence over the minds of men"—WESLEY.

15. Furnished. "The word properly means, spread with carpets"—WESLEY.

24. This is My blood of the new testament—"that is, This I appoint to be a perpetual sign and memorial of My blood, as shed for establishing the new covenant; that all who shall believe in Me may receive all its gracious promises"—WESLEY.

25. I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, till I drink it new in the kingdom of God—"that is, I shall drink no more before I die: the next wine I drink will not be earthly, but heavenly"—WESLEY.

Vers. 27-31. JESUS FORETELLS TREACHERY. (See on Matt. 26. 31-35; Luke 22. 31-38; John 13. 36-38.)—27. This night. "The Jews, in reckoning their days, began with the evening, according to the Mosaic computation, which called the evening and the morning the first day. (Gen. 1. 5.) And so that which after sunset is here called 'this night,' is (ver. 30) called to-day. The expression there is peculiarly significant: Verily I say to thee, that thou, thyself, confident as thou art, to-day, even within four-and-twenty hours; yea, this night, or ever the sun be risen; nay, before the cock crow twice, before three in the morning, wilt deny Me thrice. Our Lord, doubtless, spake so determinately, as knowing a cock would crow once before the usual time of cock-crowing. By ch. 13. 35, it appears that the third watch of the night, ending at three in the morning, was commonly styled the cock-crowing"—WESLEY.

Vers. 32-42. THE AGONY. (See on Matt. 26. 36-46; Luke 22. 39-46.)—33. Sore amazed. "The original word imports the most shocking amazement mingled with grief: and that word in the next verse which we render sorrowful, intimates that He was surrounded with sorrow on every side, breaking in upon Him with such violence as was ready to separate His soul from His body"—WESLEY.

36. Abba, Father. "S. Mark seems to add the word 'Father,' by way of explication"—WESLEY.

37. Saith to Peter—"the zealous, the confident Peter"—WESLEY.

Vers. 43-52. BETRAYAL AND APPREHENSION OF JESUS. (See on Matt. 26. 47-56; Luke 22. 47-53; John 18. 1-12.)—44. Whomsoever I shall kiss—"probably our Lord, in great condescension, had used (according to the Jewish custom) to permit His disciples to do this, after they had been some time absent"—WESLEY.

51. A young man. "It does not appear that he was one of Christ's disciples. Probably, hearing an unusual noise, he started up out of his bed, not far from the garden, and ran out with only the sheet about him, to see what was the matter. And the young men laid hold on him—who was only suspected to be Christ's disciple; but could not touch them who really were so"—WESLEY.

Vers. 53-65. JESUS ARRAIGNED, CONDEMNED, AND SHAMEFULLY ENTREATED. (See on Matt. 26. 57-68; Luke 22. 54; John 18. 13-18.)—55. All the council sought for witness, and found none. "What an amazing proof of the over-ruling providence of God, considering both their authority and the rewards they could offer, that no two consistent witnesses could be procured to charge Him with any gross crime!"—WESLEY.

56. Their evidences were not sufficient. "The Greek words, literally rendered, are, 'were not equal': not equal to the charge of a capital crime. It is the same word in the fifty-ninth verse"—WESLEY.

58. We heard Him say. "It is observable, that the words which they thus misrepresented were spoken by Christ at least three years before. (John 2. 19.) Their going back so far, to find matter for the charge, was a glorious, though silent, attestation of the unexceptionable manner wherein He had behaved through the whole course of His public ministry"—WESLEY.

Vers. 66-72. PETER'S DENIALS AND REPENTANCE. (See on Matt. 26. 69-75; Luke 22. 55-62; John 18. 26, 27.)—72. And he covered his head—"which was a usual custom with mourners, and was fitly expressive both of grief and shame"—WESLEY.

I. The unfaithful disciple.—In comparing the records of the Evangelists, concerning the denial of Peter, we find minor variations with essential coincidences, proving the independence of the Evangelists and confirming the truth of their narrative. In this instance specially, and in similar difficulties generally, we may ponder the wise words of Dean Alford. Whether we can arrange them or not, being thoroughly persuaded of the holy truthfulness of the Evangelists, and of the Divine guidance under which they wrote, our faith is in no way shaken by such discrepancies. We value them rather as testimonies to independence; and are sure that, if for one moment we could be put in complete possession of all the details as they happened, each account would find its justification, and the reasons of all the variations would disappear. And this I firmly believe will one day be the case. Meanwhile Dr. LANGE arranges them in the following order:—

First denial.—Immediately on entering the palace (John 18. 17), and on the charge of the maid who kept the door. According to Matthew (26. 69), in the court; according to John and Mark, at the fire, where the servants warmed themselves; according to Luke, by the light of the fire.

Second denial.—According to John's narrative, Peter was still standing by the fire and warming himself, probably with the design of covering a speedy retreat by assuming the appearance of unconcern. According to Matthew, he was now about to leave, when another maid attacked him, and people gathered around him in the porch. Luke reports one of these bystanders as already expressing the general feeling in the words: "Thou art also of them."

Third denial.—Again Peter had tarried for some time in the porch. The false oath which he had taken had allayed the rising indignation of the people, when another fancied that he recognised him by his speech. Soon the servants declared that his speech betrayed him. Such a recognition would involve imminent peril of life. For, according to John, a relative of Malchus maintained that he had seen him in the garden with Jesus. Then Peter began to curse and swear, and immediately the cock crew (a second time), reminding and warning him. It appears that he had scarcely given any heed to the first crowing of the cock (Mark). This picture of the denial of the Lord, as exhibited by the fall of that disciple who had been the first to confess Christ, has its peculiar and eternal import in the history of the Church. Hence we should study its causes, its stages, the repentance that followed it, and the true life that showed how real was the penitence. Christ was the faithful witness; Peter the unfaithful disciple. Christ was the incarnation of love; Judas the incarnation of hypocrisy. Peter's fall is a beacon to the Church and every individual Christian. He was too self-confident; declared himself ready for prison or for death. He got into bad company, amongst the foes of Christ. He proved a moral coward, and ended in open denial, falsehood, and profanity. His sin was of no common magnitude—a disciple, an apostle, one of the favoured three, one who had beheld special miracles. He had been forewarned, and should have been forearmed. "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall."

II. The penitent apostle.—The look of the Lord broke unfaithful Peter's heart. The crowing of the cock recalled the Saviour's warning—a warning Peter has too soon forgotten. Nature has warning tokens as well as comforting messages. A small matter, like this servant girl's word, makes a man fall when God does not support him; a small matter, as the crowing of a cock, may raise him again when God's grace makes use of it. The Bible has a good deal to say about the look of God. The silent look of Jesus is several times mentioned. Peter went out and wept bitterly. He went out into the blackness of night, but not into the blackness of despair. He is in his repentance the David of the New Testament.

III. The restored apostle.—Forgiveness was not assured to him publicly until after the crucifixion and resurrection (John 21. 15–17). The First Epistle of Peter shows the reality of his restoration. In the light of his fall and repentance, read 1 Pet. 1. 13; 2. 1, 11; 3. 12, 15. The threefold "Lovest thou Me" is the counterpart of the threefold temptation and denial. As the lesson of to-day is fraught with spiritual significance, and especially capable of personal, practical application, let us conclude by reading the opinions of some of the leading students and interpreters of the Word of God. "Peter's denial," says one, "is remarkable in the evangelical history, in the history of the human heart, and in the history of the suffering and death of our Lord. Peter and Judas may be compared in their sins, and contrasted in their penitence." "Passion week," remarks THOLUCK, "brings to view in Peter how great the wavering may be even in a human heart that has already confessed itself to have found the words of eternal life with Jesus." "If any have fallen, even in the most dreadful manner, let them think of Peter's recovery, and not despair, and let them recollect the words of Christ as well as their own sins, that their fears, confessions, and humiliations may be mingled with hope. And let us all frequently remember our past follies, and manifold instances of ingratitude, that we may learn watchfulness, humility, caution, and compassion for the tempted and fallen, by the experience of our own numerous mistakes, sins, and recoveries"—SCOTT. "Tradition reports that ever after, when S. Peter heard the crowing of a cock, he fell upon his knees and moaned; others say that he was wont to rise at midnight and spend the time in penitent devotion between cock-crowing and daylight. Peter went out into the black night, but not as Judas into the blackness of despair. Weeping bitterly, he awaited the dawn of another and a better morning. The angel of mercy accompanied him on that heavy road to spiritual self-condemnation which issued in the death of his old man, more especially of his former pride and self-confidence. And thus it came that he really accompanied Christ unto death, though in a very different and much better sense than he had intended. His repentance had to be completed; he had to obtain peace and reconciliation from the mouth of Christ Himself before he could offer the requisite satisfaction for his guilt towards man, by making such a grand confession as would efface and obliterate the offence of his grand denial"—LANGE. "Whoever is too eager to vindicate Peter makes his repentance an exaggerated melancholy, and thereby actually declares that our Lord dealt with him afterwards almost too severely; on the other side, we may undoubtedly, in mitigation of his guilt, point to the fact that he denied the Lord only with his mouth, but not with his heart, and sought to make good the error of a single night by a whole life of unwearied faithfulness"—OOSTERZEE. "The fall and repentance of Peter was one of the most powerful means by which he was trained into one of the most eminent of the apostles. A character like his would never have mounted so high if it had not fallen so low"—LANGE.

CHAPTER XV.

Vers. 1–20. JESUS BEFORE PILATE. (See on Matt. 27. 1, 2, 11–31; Luke 23. 1–6, 13–25; John 18. 28–19. 16.)—7. Insurrection—"a crime which the Roman governors, and Pilate in particular, were more especially concerned and careful to punish"—WESLEY.

9. Will ye that I release to you the King of the Jews? "Which does this wretched man discover most—want of justice, or courage, or common sense? The poor coward sacrifices justice to popular clamour, and enrages those whom he seeks to appease by so unseasonably repeating that title, 'the King of the Jews,' which he could not but know was so highly offensive to them"—WESLEY.

16. Prætorium—"the inner hall, where the prætor, a Roman magistrate, used to give judgment. But S. John calls the whole palace by this name"—WESLEY.

17. Purple. "As royal robes were usually purple and scarlet, S. Mark and S. John term this a purple robe, S. Matthew a scarlet one. The Tyrian purple is said not to have been very different from scarlet"—WESLEY.

Vers. 1–37. CRUCIFIXION AND DEATH OF THE LORD JESUS. (See on Matt. 27. 32–50; Luke 23. 26–46; John 19. 17–30.)—21. The father of Alexander and Rufus. "These were afterwards two eminent Christians, and must have been well known when S. Mark wrote"—WESLEY.

24, 25. "S. Mark seems to intimate that they first nailed Him to the cross, then parted His garments, and afterwards reared up the cross"—WESLEY.

34. My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?—"thereby claiming God as His God; and yet lamenting His Father's withdrawing the tokens of His love, and treating Him as an enemy, while He bare our sins"—WESLEY.

Vers. 38–47. SIGNS FOLLOWING. (See on Matt. 27. 51–66; Luke 23. 45, 47–56; John 19. 31–42.)—41. Who served Him—"provided Him with necessaries"—WESLEY.

42. Because it was the day before the Sabbath—"and the bodies might not hang on the Sabbath day; therefore they were in haste to have them taken down"—WESLEY.

43. Honourable—"a man of character and reputation. A counsellor—a member of the Sanhedrim. Who waited for the kingdom of God—who expected to see it set up on earth"—WESLEY.

46. He rolled a stone—"by his servants. It was too large for him to roll himself"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XVI.

Vers. 1–18. APPEARANCES AFTER HIS RESURRECTION. (See on Matt. 28. 1–10, 16–20; Luke 24. 1–51; John 20. 1, 2, 11–29.)—2. At the rising of the sun. "They set out 'while it was yet dark,' and came within sight of the sepulchre, for the first time, just as it grew light enough to discern that the stone was rolled away. (Matt. 28. 1; Luke 24. 1; John 20. 1.) But by the time Mary had called Peter and John, and they had viewed the sepulchre, the sun was rising"—WESLEY.

3. Who shall roll us away the stone? "This seems to have been the only difficulty they apprehended. So they knew nothing of Pilate's having sealed the stone, and placed a guard of soldiers there"—WESLEY.

7. And Peter—"though he so oft denied his Lord. What amazing goodness was this!"—WESLEY.

13. Neither believed they them. "They were moved a little by the testimony of these, added to that of S. Peter. (Luke 24. 34.) But they did not yet fully believe it"—WESLEY.

15. Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. "Our Lord speaks without any limitation or restriction. If, therefore, every creature in every age hath not heard it, either those who should have preached or those who should have heard it, or both, made void the counsel of God herein"—WESLEY.

16. And is baptized—"in token thereof. Every one that believed was baptized. But he that believeth not—whether baptized or unbaptized, shall perish everlastingly"—WESLEY.

17. And these signs shall follow them that believe. "An eminent author subjoins, 'That believe with that very faith mentioned in the preceding verse.' (Though it is certain that a man may work miracles, and not have saving faith, Matt. 7. 22, 23.) 'It was not one faith by which S. Paul was saved, another by which he wrought miracles. Even at this day, in every believer, faith has a latent miraculous power, every effect of prayer being really miraculous; although in many, both because of their own littleness of faith, and because the world is unworthy, that power is not exerted. Miracles in the beginning were helps to faith; now also they are the objects of it. At Leonberg, in the memory of our fathers, a cripple that could hardly move with crutches, while the Dean was preaching on this very text, was in a moment made whole.' Shall follow—the word and faith must go before. In My name—by My authority committed to them. Raising the dead is not mentioned. So our Lord performs even more than He promises"—WESLEY.

18. If they drink any deadly thing—"but not by their own choice. God never calls us to try any such experiments"—WESLEY.

Vers. 19–20. THE ASCENSION, AND TRIUMPHANT PROCLAMATION OF THE GOSPEL THEREAFTER.—19. So then, after the Lord—"an epithet applied to Jesus by this Evangelist only in the two concluding verses, when he comes to His glorious Ascension, and its subsequent fruits. It is most frequent in Luke. Had spoken unto them, He was received up into heaven. (See on Luke 24. 50–51.) And sat on the right hand of God. This great truth is here only related as a fact in the Gospel history. In that exalted attitude He appeared to S. Stephen (Acts 7. 55, 56), and it is thereafter perpetually referred to as His proper condition in glory. And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following. Amen. We have in this closing verse a most important link of connection with the Acts of the Apostles, where He who directed all the movements of the infant Church is perpetually styled THE LORD, thus illustrating His own promise for the founding and building up of the Church LO, I AM WITH YOU ALWAY!"—BROWN.

19. The Lord. "How seasonably is He called by this title! After He had spoken to them—for forty days"—WESLEY.

20. They preached everywhere. "At the time S. Mark wrote, the apostles had already gone into all the known world. (Rom. 10. 18.) And each of them was there known where he preached. The name of Christ only was known throughout the world"—WESLEY.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO

S. LUKE.

THE BOOK AND ITS AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR.

LET us get some concise account of the man. Neither as to the person or history of the third Evangelist is much known that is perfectly certain. From the Epistles of S. Paul we learn that he held high rank among the friends and fellow-labourers of the great Apostle of the Gentiles. In the letter to Philemon, S. Luke is reckoned among S. Paul's fellow-workers. And in the last imprisonment S. Luke is honourably mentioned as being S. Paul's only companion. To the Colossians he is described as the beloved physician. From the repeated occurrence of the pronoun "we" in the Acts of the Apostles, it is generally inferred that S. Luke, the writer, was with the apostle whenever the first person is used. If so, he joined S. Paul at Troas and crossed with him to Philippi, where he remained till the apostle returned, after which he accompanied him to Jerusalem, and, having stayed by his side during his imprisonment at Cæsarea, went in the same ship to Rome, sharing, not only his privations and shipwreck by the way, but also his imprisonment there.

According to an ancient tradition, S. Luke was not only a physician, but a distinguished painter; while another legend places him among the Christian martyrs. But these are of no value. After the death of S. Paul his movements are lost in obscurity. "It is perhaps as the Evangelist wishes it to be; we only know him whilst he stands by the side of his beloved Paul; when the master departs, the history of the follower becomes confusion and fable." According to Nicephorus, S. Luke suffered martyrdom in Greece, where he was, for want of a cross, nailed to the nearest olive tree, in the eightieth year of his age. Legend says that, being a painter, he painted the portraits of our Lord, the Virgin, and the principal apostles.

THE BOOK.

This third Gospel has often been styled "The Gospel of S. Paul," and there is no doubt that S. Luke shows much of the tolerance and large-heartedness of the Apostle of the Gentiles. He was a Gentile by birth. He traces Christ's lineage up to Adam, that thus He might be presented as the Saviour of the world. He speaks far more than the other Evangelists of "grace," "glad tidings," "salvation," and a "Saviour." The parables and deeds of mercy, which he has specially related, point largely to Jesus as the Saviour of all mankind. He proclaims the Lord as "a Light to lighten the Gentiles," as well as to be "the glory of Israel." He recalls the works of mercy in heathen districts, and reveals the tolerance of Jesus. The outcasts are in this Gospel brought within the range of Christ's influence. S. Luke alone relates the pardon of the woman which was a sinner; the conversion of the chief publican, Zacchæus; and the penitence of the dying thief. To this narrator we are indebted for the parables of the importunate friend; the rich fool; the barren fig tree; the lost piece of silver; the prodigal son; the good Samaritan; the unjust steward; the rich man and Lazarus; and the Pharisee and Publican.

Here alone, too, are recorded the raising of the widow's son at Nain; the healing of the woman with the spirit of infirmity; of the man who had the dropsy; and of the ten lepers. In the closing hours of the Saviour's life, S. Luke alone preserves for us the weeping of Jesus over Jerusalem, His bloody sweat in the Garden of Gethsemane, the healing of the ear of Malchus, the sending of Jesus from Pilate to Herod, the solemn address to the daughters of Jerusalem, the prayer on the cross, "Father, forgive them," the account of the penitent robber, the appearance of the risen Lord to the two disciples going to Emmaus, and the particulars of the Ascension. Oftener than the rest he reveals Christ in prayer, and dwells upon His tender human sympathy.

He dwells most upon spiritual agencies; and his glimpses of the future state are remarkably vivid and powerful. "The third Gospel," as LANGE has said, "is pre-eminently that of perfect humanity—human mercy presented in the light of Divine grace, the transformation of all human kindness to Divine love." "Universality," says ALFORD, "is throughout the characteristic of this Gospel. Christ is not the Messiah of the Jew only. He is the desire of all nations."

CHAPTER I.

Vers. 1-4. This short, weighty, artless, candid DEDICATION belongs to the Acts, as well as the Gospel of S. Luke—1. Many have undertaken. He does not mean S. Matthew or S. Mark; and S. John did not write so early. For these were eyewitnesses themselves, and ministers of the word.

3. To write in order. S. Luke describes in order of time, first, the acts of Christ,—His conception, birth, childhood, baptism, miracles, preaching, passion, resurrection, ascension; then the Acts of the Apostles. But in many smaller circumstances he does not observe the order of time. Most excellent Theophilus. This was the appellation usually given to Roman governors. Theophilus (as the ancients inform us) was a person of eminent quality at Alexandria. In Acts 1. 1, S. Luke does not give him this title. He was then, probably, a private man.

After the Preface S. Luke gives us the History of Christ, from His coming into the world to His ascension into heaven.

5. The course of Abia. "The priests were divided into twenty-four courses, of which that of Abia was the eighth. (1 Chron. 24. 10.) Each course ministered in its turn, for seven days, from Sabbath to Sabbath. And each priest of the course, or set in waiting, had his part in the Temple service assigned him by lot"—WESLEY.

6. Walking in all the moral commandments and ceremonial ordinances blameless. "How admirable a character! May our behaviour be thus unblamable, and our obedience thus sincere and universal!"—WESLEY.

10. The people were praying without at the time of the incense—"so the pious Jews constantly did. And this was the foundation of that elegant figure by which prayer is in Scripture so often compared to incense. Perhaps one reason of ordaining incense might be to intimate the acceptableness of the prayer that accompanied it, as well as to remind the worshippers of that 'sacrifice of a sweet-smelling savour,' which was once to be 'offered to God' for them, and of that incense which is continually 'offered with the prayers of the saints, upon the golden altar that is before the throne' (Rev. 8. 3, 4)"—WESLEY.

12. Zacharias was troubled. "Although he was accustomed to converse with God, yet we see he was thrown into great consternation at the appearance of His angelic messenger, nature not being able to sustain the sight. Is it not then an instance of the goodness as well as the wisdom of God that the services which these heavenly spirits render us are generally invisible?"—WESLEY.

13. Thy prayer is heard. "Let us observe with pleasure, that the prayers of pious worshippers come up with acceptance before God; to whom no costly perfume is so sweet as the fragrancy of an upright heart. An answer of peace was here returned, when the case seemed to be most hopeless. Let us wait patiently for the Lord, and leave to His own wisdom the time and manner wherein He will appear for us. Thou shalt call his name John. 'John' signifies, 'the grace and favour of Jehovah'; a name well suiting the person who was afterwards so highly in favour with God, and endued with abundance of grace, and who opened a way to the most glorious dispensation of grace in the Messiah's kingdom. And so Zacharias' former prayers for a child, and the prayers which he as the representative of the people was probably offering at this very time for the appearing of the Messiah, were remarkably answered in the birth of His forerunner"—WESLEY.

15. He shall be great before the Lord—"God the Father. Of the Holy Ghost and the Son of God mention is made immediately after. And shall drink neither wine nor strong drink—shall be exemplary for abstemiousness and self-denial; and so much the more filled with the Holy Ghost"—WESLEY.

16. And many of the children of Israel shall he turn. "None therefore need be ashamed of preaching like John the Baptist. To the Lord their God—to Christ"—WESLEY.

17. He shall go before Him—Christ—in the power and spirit of Elijah—"with the same integrity, courage, austerity, and fervour; and the same power of God attending his word. To turn the hearts of the fathers to the children—to reconcile those that are at variance, to put an end to the most bitter quarrels, such as are very frequently those between the nearest relations. And the hearts of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just—and the most obstinate sinners to true wisdom, which is only found among them that are righteous before God"—WESLEY.

18. Zacharias said, Whereby shall I know this? "In how different a spirit did the blessed Virgin say, 'How shall this be?' Zacharias disbelieved the fact; Mary had no doubt of the thing, but only inquired concerning the manner of it"—WESLEY.

19. I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God. "Seven angels thus stand before God (Rev. 8. 2), who seem the highest of all. There seems to be a remarkable gradation in the words, enhancing the guilt of Zacharias' unbelief. As if he had said, I am Gabriel, an holy angel of God—yea, one of the highest order. Not only so, but I am now peculiarly sent from God; and that with a message to thee in particular. Nay, and to show thee glad tidings, such as ought to be received with the greatest joy and readiness"—WESLEY.

20. Thou shalt be dumb. "The Greek word signifies deaf, as well as dumb; and it seems plain that he was as unable to hear as he was to speak; for his friends were obliged to make signs to him, that he might understand them (ver. 62)"—WESLEY.

21. The people were waiting—"for him to come and dismiss them, as usual, with the blessing"—WESLEY.

24. Hid herself. "She retired from company, that she might have the more leisure to rejoice and bless God for His wonderful mercy"—WESLEY.

25. He looked upon me, to take away my reproach. "Barrenness was a great reproach among the Jews, because fruitfulness was promised to the righteous"—WESLEY.

26. In the sixth month—"after Elizabeth had conceived"—WESLEY.

27. Espoused. "It was customary among the Jews for persons that married to contract before witnesses some time before; and as Christ was to be born of a pure virgin, so the wisdom of God ordered it to be of one espoused; that, to prevent reproach, He might have a reputed father according to the flesh"—WESLEY.

28. Hail, thou highly favoured; the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women. "Hail is the salutation used by our Lord to the women after His resurrection. 'Thou art highly favoured,' or 'hast found favour with God' (ver. 30), is no more than was said of Noah, Moses, and David. 'The Lord is with thee,' was said to Gideon (Judg. 6. 12); and, 'Blessed shall she be above women,' of Jael (Judg. 5. 24). This salutation gives no room for any pretence of paying adoration to the Virgin; as having no appearance of a prayer, or of worship offered to her"—WESLEY.

32. He shall be called the Son of the Highest—"in this respect also; and that in a more eminent sense than any, either man or angel, can be called so. The Lord shall give Him the throne of His father David—that is, the spiritual kingdom, of which David's was a type"—WESLEY.

33. He shall reign over the house of Jacob—"in which all true believers are included"—WESLEY.

35. The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee. "The power of God was put forth by the Holy Ghost as the immediate Divine agent in this work; and so He exerted the power of the Highest as His own power who, together with the Father and the Son, is the Most High God. Therefore also—not only as He is God from eternity, but on this account likewise, He shall be called the Son of God"—WESLEY.

36. And, behold, thy cousin Elizabeth. "Though Elizabeth was of the house of Aaron, and Mary of the house of David, by the father's side, they might be related by their mother's. For the Law only forbade heiresses marrying into another tribe. And so other persons continually intermarried, particularly the families of David and of Levi"—WESLEY.

38. And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord. "It is not improbable, that this time of the Virgin's humble faith, consent, and expectation, might be the very time of her conceiving"—WESLEY.

39. A city of Judah—"probably Hebron, which was situated in the hill country of Judea, and belonged to the house of Aaron"—WESLEY.

41. When Elizabeth heard the salutation of Mary—"the discourse with which she saluted her, giving an account of what the angel had said, the joy of her soul so affected her body, that the very child in her womb was moved in an uncommon manner, as if it leaped for joy"—WESLEY.

45. Happy is she that believed—"probably she had in her mind the unbelief of Zacharias"—WESLEY.

46. And Mary said—"under a prophetic impulse, several things, which perhaps she herself did not then fully understand"—WESLEY.

47. My spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour. "She seems to turn her thoughts here to Christ Himself, who was to be born of her, as the angel had told her He should be, the Son of the Highest, whose name should be JESUS, THE SAVIOUR. And she rejoiced in hope of salvation through faith in Him, which is a blessing common to all true believers, more than in being His mother after the flesh, which was an honour peculiar to her. And certainly she had the same reason to rejoice in God her Saviour that we have. Because He had regarded the low estate of His handmaid. In like manner has He regarded our low estate; and vouchsafed to come and save her and us, when we were reduced to the lowest estate of sin and misery"—WESLEY.

51. He hath wrought strength with His arm—"that is, He hath shown the exceeding greatness of His power. She speaks prophetically of those things as already done, which God was about to do by the Messiah. He hath scattered the proud—visible and invisible"—WESLEY.

52. He hath put down the mighty—"both angels and men"—WESLEY.

54. He hath helped His servant Israel—"by sending the Messiah"—WESLEY.

55. To his seed—"His spiritual seed; all true believers"—WESLEY.

56. Mary returned to her own house—"and thence soon after to Bethlehem"—WESLEY.

60. His mother said—"doubtless by revelation, or a particular impulse from God"—WESLEY.

66. The hand of the Lord—"the peculiar power and blessing of God"—WESLEY.

67. And Zacharias prophesied—"of things immediately to follow. But it is observable, He speaks of Christ chiefly; of John only, as it were, incidentally"—WESLEY.

69. An horn—"signifies honour, plenty, and strength. An horn of salvation— that is, a glorious and mighty Saviour"—WESLEY.

70. His prophets, who have been since the world began—"for there were prophets from the very beginning"—WESLEY.

74. To serve Him without fear—"without any slavish fear. Here is the substance of the great promise, that we shall be always holy, always happy; and being delivered from Satan and sin, from every uneasy and unholy temper, we shall joyfully love and serve God, in every thought, word, and work"—WESLEY.

76. And thou, child. "He now speaks to John; yet not as a parent, but as a prophet" —WESLEY.

77. To give knowledge of salvation, by the remission of sins—"the knowledge of the remission of our sins being the grand instrument of present and eternal salvation. (Heb. 8. 11, 12.) But the immediate sense of the words seems to be, to preach to them the gospel doctrine of salvation by the remission of their sins"—WESLEY.

78. The dayspring—"or the rising sun; that is, Christ"—WESLEY.

In this opening chapter of the Gospel it seemed best not to break the continuity of Mr. Wesley's teaching, but we may now look back upon the chapter and note a few of the more important things.

ANGELS.—"The appearance of an angel in ver. 11 is the first note in that overture of angels which introduced Christ to the world." —ABBOT. In ver. 19 he gives his name Gabriel, i.e. "Hero of God." The same angel appeared to Daniel. This is the first message of God recorded in the Bible for four hundred years since the time of Malachi. "The ministry of angels is undoubtedly a deep subject. Nowhere in the Bible do we find such frequent mention of them as in the period of our Lord's earthly ministry. At no time do we read of so many appearances of angels as about the time of our Lord's incarnation and entrance into the world"—RYLE. This chapter is known as the Gospel History before the birth of Christ. It announces the birth of the forerunner, the annunciation to the mother of Jesus, the Magnificat, and the birth of John the Baptist.

MARY THE MOTHER OF JESUS—(1) Her name.—Mary, or Miriam, being the name of the great sister of Moses, was one of the most common of Jewish female names. (2) Lineage. —Very little is told us of Mary's parentage, but it is continually implied that she is of the royal line of David. Tradition calls her mother's name Anna. If the genealogy given in Luke is really that of Mary (and of Joseph only by marriage and adoption, as is almost certain), then her father's name is Heli. (3) The Annunciation.—While Mary was betrothed, but before her marriage, it was announced to her that she should be the mother of the Saviour of the world. Jesus Himself was the Eternal Son of God, the Creator of the heavens and the earth. (John 1. 1–3.) But in order that He might be the Saviour of men, it was necessary that He should partake of human nature.

SONGS OF THANKSGIVING.—Interwoven with the history in this first chapter of Luke are two hymns of praise, so Jewish in form and language, that comparisons have been made with the song of Hannah (1 Sam. 2. 1–10), and other Old Testament Scriptures. But with the letter of the Old they infuse the spirit of the New Testament. These hymnists of the olden time stood on a border line of two dispensations. Coming events were casting their shadows before. "It is striking, that whilst it is said of both Elizabeth and Zacharias, before they uttered their songs, that they were filled with the Holy Spirit, the same is not said of Mary. The Spirit seems no longer to have come upon her after the Old Testament manner, for a few moments, but to have dwelt in and acted upon her in the gospel manner. The royal spirit is more expressed in her song; the priestly character in that of Zacharias; in his, the Old Testament type, in hers, the New prevails"—OOSTERZEE. "The song of praise uttered by Zacharias," says LANGE, "depicts the form and stature of his faith; it is the expression of the gospel, as his heart had received it. It is with a truly priestly intuition that Zacharias sees the reconciliation and transformation of the world in the advent of the Messiah, and his people celebrating the service of God in perpetual freedom. It is this that is his heart's delight as a priest. His heart's delight as a father is, that his son John should be the herald of the Lord, to give the knowledge of His salvation, even to them who sit in darkness and the shadow of death." "O blessed hymn of joy and praise!" exclaims S. AUGUSTINE, "divinely inspired by the Holy Ghost, and divinely pronounced by this venerable priest, and daily sung in the Church of God. O may thy words be often in my mouth, and the sweetness of them always in my heart. The expressions thou usest are the comfort of my life; and the subject thou treatest of, the hope of all!"

CHAPTER II.

OUR LORD FROM HEAVEN.—Son of God and Son of Man. How familiar these words are, and yet how far off from ordinary experience. It is the mystery of mysteries. But life is a mystery; thought is a mystery; sleep and awaking, birth and burial, are mysterious. Growth is an ever-present miracle of God. Jesus was God's great gift. He came down from heaven for us men and our salvation. But He was set in the centre of the history of the period. The time of Herod is the turning-point between the old and new dispensations. Time, place, and circumstances were all selected. Prophets of olden time had spoken of the coming One. Micah had mentioned Bethlehem-Ephratah as the little one among the thousands of Judah, out of which should come the Ruler in Israel. A decree or edict went forth from the all-powerful Cæsar that all the world should be enrolled, their numbers and names taken, for taxing or military purposes, or both. From every village they must go to the town of their district or clan. Joseph was of the house and lineage of David; hence, accompanied by Mary, he journeyed to Bethlehem. The hand of the clock of the Divine purpose was reaching the hour. JESUS was born.

1. That all the world should be enrolled—"that all the inhabitants, male and female, of every town in the Roman empire, with their families and estates, should be registered"—WESLEY.

2. When Cyrenius was governor of Syria—"when Publius Sulpicius Quirinus governed the province of Syria, in which Judea was then included"—WESLEY.

6. And while they were there, the days were fulfilled that she should be delivered. "Mary seems not to have known that the Child must have been born in Bethlehem, agreeably to the prophecy. But the providence of God took care for it"—WESLEY.

7. She laid Him in the manger. "Perhaps it might rather be translated 'in the stall.' They were lodged in the ox-stall, fitted up, on occasion of the great concourse, for poor guests. There was no room for them in the inn—now also, there is seldom room for Christ in an inn"—WESLEY.

THE MANGER-CRADLE.—Bethlehem was a poor place, and its inn was probably an enclosed space surrounded by open recesses, of which the paved floor is raised a little above the ground. The traveller pays a trifle for food and water. If the inn be crowded, the traveller must be content with a corner of the courtyard, or enclosed place, among the cattle, or else in the stable. The stable is often a limestone cave or grotto, and there is a very ancient tradition that this was the case in the khan of Bethlehem. If, as is probable, the traditional site of the Nativity is the real one, it took place in one of the caves where S. Jerome spent so many years as a hermit, and translated the Bible into Latin. The Apocryphal Gospels tell wonderful stories of miracles connected with the Babe in the Manger-Cradle; but the Gospels are simple and artlessly beautiful. As one has said, "The unfathomable depths of the Divine counsels were moved; the fountains of the great deep were broken up; the healing of the nations was issuing forth: but nothing was seen on the surface of human society but this slight rippling of the water."

> "The manger and the straw He bore,
> The cradle did He not abhor."

He was not ashamed to be The Child Jesus, who was Lord of angels and Judge of men. But if He had no honour upon earth He was not forgotten in heaven. The first gospel upon earth was preached by an angel of the Lord. The greatest event in human history is recorded in few words, with little embellishment and no exaggeration. The Apocryphal Gospels, on the contrary, abound in miraculous details, often trifling, sometimes absurd. Some, however, are not wanting in naturalness, and enable us to realise how the reverent imagination of early times regarded these sacred events. It happened, say these old legends, as Mary and Joseph were going up towards Bethlehem, that the time came when Jesus should be born, and Mary said to Joseph, "Get me down from my ass," and he took her down from her ass, and said to her, "Where shall I take thee, for there is no inn here?" Then he found a cave near the grave of Rachel, the mother of Joseph and Benjamin; and light never entered the cave, but it was always filled with darkness, and the sun was then just going down. But when Mary entered the cave it was presently filled with light, and beams, as if of the sun, shone around; and thus it continued, day and night, while she remained in it. In this cave the Child was born, and the angels were around Him at His birth, and worshipped the new-born, and said, Glory to God in the highest, and peace on earth and goodwill to men. Meanwhile, Joseph wandered about seeking help, and when he looked up he saw that the pole of the heavens stood still, and the birds of the air stopped in the midst of their flight, and the sky was darkened. And looking on the earth he saw a dish full of food, prepared, and workmen resting round it, but the faces of all were turned upwards. And he saw sheep which were being driven along, and the sheep stood still, and the shepherd lifted his hand to strike them, but it remained uplifted. And he came to a spring, and saw the goats with their mouths touching the water, but they did not drink; for all things at that moment were turned from their course. But if wonders such as these were wanting, the birth of the Saviour was not without signs of His Divine glory. If His birth was mean on earth below, as men assert, it was celebrated with hallelujahs by the heavenly host in the air above. Why did our Lord choose a stable? asks S. Bernard. And he answers his own question. Evidently that He might reprove the glory of the world, and condemn the vanities of this present life. His very infant body has its speech. Christ has consecrated all the hard places where His people have to lie. As OOSTERZEE finely says, "When we are once convinced who it is that came, the manner in which He came becomes a manifestation, not only of the love of the Father, but also of the grace of the Son. The lowly birth of the Saviour of the world coincides exactly with the nature of His kingdom. The origin of His kingdom was not of earth, its fundamental law was to deny self, and for love to serve others; its end, to become great through abasement, and to triumph by conflict; all this is here exhibited before our eyes."

" Wrapt in His swaddling bands,
And in His manger laid,
The hope and glory of all lands,
Is come the world to aid.
No peaceful home upon His cradle smiled,
Guests rudely went and came
Where slept the ROYAL CHILD."

11. To you — "shepherds; Israel; mankind"—WESLEY.

14. Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, goodwill toward men. "The shouts of the multitude are generally broken into short sentences. This rejoicing acclamation strongly represents the piety and benevolence of these heavenly spirits—as if they had said, Glory be to God in the highest heavens; let all the angelic legions resound His praises. For with the Redeemer's birth, peace and all kind of happiness come down to dwell on earth: yea, the overflowings of Divine goodwill and favour are now exercised toward men"—WESLEY.

THE PILGRIM SHEPHERDS.—But some guests went and came not rudely. "God sent visitors of His own to pay court to the new-born King." These were simple shepherds; but they belonged to the true aristocracy. "Like Simeon, they were among the waiters for the Consolation of Israel." "And if the simplicity of their rustic minds, their quiet occupation, the stillness of the midnight hours, and the amplitude of the deep blue vault above them for the heavenly music which was to fill their ear, pointed them out as fit recipients for the first tidings of an infant Saviour; so also," Dr. BROWN says, "the congenial meditations and conversations by which, we may suppose, they would beguile the tedious hours, would perfect their preparation for the unexpected visit. Thus was Nathanael engaged, all alone but not unseen, under the fig tree, in unconscious preparation for his first interview with Jesus. (John 1. 48.) But if the shepherds in His immediate neighbourhood had the first, others from afar had the next sight of the new-born King. Even so still, simplicity first, science next, finds its way to Christ. In Bible history God has singularly honoured toil. While Moses watched the flock, the Angel of the Covenant came. David was anointed, and Jacob blest, tending the flock. To the shepherds the first tidings were given. The quiet in the land are not forgotten of God."

" In quiet ever and in shade
Shepherd and Sage may find,
They who have bowed untaught to Nature's sway,
And they who follow Truth along her star-pav'd way."

The Festival of Christmas is a children's festival. It leads us to a Child, and it fills the world of children with joy. Children think of it as a holiday time. And we do well if we remember the connection between holiday and holy day. The celebration of Christmas was not generally introduced into the Church till about four hundred years after the birth of the Saviour. The day of the birth is traditional. It may or may not have been in December. God conceals what it is not necessary for us to know. The Saviour was born in the fulness of time, when the world most needed Him. He was born at Bethlehem, where David had pastured his flocks. He was announced to the shepherds by an angel, to the sages by a star. Thus it is still. The lowly and the lofty may find their way to Christ.

A SONG OF TWO WORLDS.—A multitude of the heavenly host suddenly joined the announcing angels, praising God, and saying, Glory. Peace. The angels are represented as the body-guard of the Lord. They surrounded His cradle. They guarded His grave. They were with Him in the glory of His transfiguration and the anguish of the garden. "There is something unspeakably great and glorious in this union of earthly obscurity with heavenly splendour, of angels with shepherds, of the form of a servant with the majesty of a King" —OOSTERZEE. The song was of Two Worlds: Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace. The temple of Janus was closed at the time of the Nativity. The angels sang of an ultimate peace, but, alas! it is slow in coming, yet it is slowly coming. But there is a peace of God within that is not dependent upon outward circumstances. Yet the good time will come — must come; because it is in harmony with the will of God. "Sacred poetry was born with religion, and the poetry of the Church is the echo and response to the poetry and music of angels in heaven." The angels came and then returned: the Lord remained. Angels sang; shall we be silent?

HEAVEN AND EARTH UNITED.—"The shepherds," GEIKIE says, "must have been men looking out, in their simple way, towards the Invisible and Eternal, and seeking that kingdom of God for themselves which was one day, as they believed, to be revealed in their nation at large. Only that mind which has sympathy with external nature can receive in their true significance the impressions it is fitted to convey, and only the heart which has sympathy with spiritual things can recognise their full meaning; poetic sensibility is required in the one case, and religious in the other. In each case it is the condition of sincere emotion. The stillness over hill and valley, broken only by the bleating of the sheep; the unclouded brightness of the Syrian sky, with its innumerable stars; and the associations of these mountain pastures, dear to every Jew as the scene of David's youth, were over and around them." And now, lo, an angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were sore afraid. And the angel said, Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, and saying:

> Glory to God in the highest,
> And on earth peace,
> Goodwill toward men.

20. For all the things that they had heard—"from Mary. As it was told them—by the angels"—WESLEY.

21. To circumcise the child — "that He might visibly be 'made under the Law,' by a sacred rite which obliged Him to keep the whole Law; as also that He might be owned to be the seed of Abraham, and might put an honour on the solemn dedication of children to God"—WESLEY.

22. The days—"the forty days prescribed. (Lev. 12. 2–4)"—WESLEY.

24. A pair of turtle-doves or two young pigeons. "This offering sufficed for the poor"—WESLEY.

OUR LORD'S INFANCY.—"Of many a wonder," says FARRAR, "which rooted itself in the earliest traditions, there is no trace whatever in the New Testament. The inventions of man differ wholly from the dealings of God. Four events only of our Lord's infancy are narrated by the Gospels, namely, the circumcision, the presentation in the Temple, the visit of the Magi, and the flight into Egypt. Of these the first two occur only in S. Luke, the last two only in S. Matthew. The accurate and detailed sequence of biographical narrative from the earliest years of life was a thing wholly unknown to the Jews, and alien alike from their style and temperament. Anecdotes of infancy, incidents of childhood, indications of future greatness in boyish years, are very rare phenomena in ancient literature. It is only since the dawn of Christianity that childhood has been surrounded by a halo of romance. As Jesus was the first great Teacher of men who showed a genuine sympathy for childhood, so in the life of the Child Jesus we discover the secret of the romance and reverence with which Christendom has ever since invested early life." "Can we think," asks Dr. PUSEY, "that Holy Scripture thus tells us of the sacred Childhood of Jesus, and means us not to reverence childhood? Feel we not a drawing forth of our inmost hearts towards them—a tender love, a reverence for them, which, alas! we cannot have for ourselves, and often not for others of riper years?"

GIVEN TO GOD.—Of the Circumcision scarcely any mention is made in the Apocryphal Gospels; but to the Christian it has its own solemn meaning. It shows that Christ came, not to destroy the Law, but to fulfil. Thus it became Him to fulfil all righteousness. Thus early did He suffer pain for our sakes, to teach us the spiritual Circumcision — the circumcision of the heart—the circumcision of all our bodily senses. As the East catches at sunset the colours of the West, so Bethlehem is a prelude to Calvary; and even the Infant's cradle is tinged with a crimson reflection from the Redeemer's cross. It was on this day, too, that Christ first publicly received that name of Jesus, already announced by the angel Gabriel. On the fortieth day after the Nativity, the Virgin presented herself, with her Babe, for their purification in the Temple at Jerusalem. "Thus, then," says S. BONAVENTURA, "do they bring the Lord of the Temple to the Temple of the Lord." The proper offering on such occasions was a yearling lamb for a burnt-offering, and a young pigeon or a turtle-dove for a sin-offering. But the Law that honoured poverty provided for it. The poor might bring instead two turtle-doves or two young pigeons. With this small offering the mother of Jesus presented herself and presented her first-born to God. Of the purification and presentation no further details are given to us. The rite was much the same as churching is with us. The ceremony is still in force among the Jews, handed down in all its main features from earliest times. Dr. GEIKIE gives a picture of the ceremony as still observed. The Hebrew father invites ten friends and a rabbi, who must be a Cohen,— that is, one reputed to belong to the house of Aaron,—to his house, on the thirty-first day after the child's birth. The infant is then brought in by him and laid on the table before the rabbi, with a sum of money, which, in England, if the father be about ordinarily well-to-do, generally amounts to twelve shillings. He then formally tells the rabbi that this is his first-born son, which, therefore, he now gives to the rabbi, as the representative of God. "Which would you, then, rather do?" asks the rabbi; "give up your first-born to Jehovah, or redeem him for five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, which is five gerah?" The father, of course, answers that he wishes to redeem his child. "This is my first-born," says he; "here, take unto thee the five shekels due for his redemption." As he hands the money to the rabbi, he praises God for the day, "Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, who hast maintained us, and preserved us, to enjoy this season." The rabbi then takes the money, and, after passing the coin round the child's head, as a symbol of redemption, lays his other hand on its brow, with the words, "This child is instead of this money, and this money instead of this child: may this child be brought to the life, to the Law, and to the fear of Heaven; and as he has been brought to be ransomed, so may he enter into the Law and good deeds." He then places both his hands on the child's head and prays, "God make thee as Ephraim and Manasseh. The Lord help and preserve thee. The Lord lift up His countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. Length of days, years, and peace be gathered to thee: and God keep thee from evil, and save thy soul."

25. The consolation of Israel. "A common phrase for the Messiah, who was to be the everlasting consolation of the Israel of God. The Holy Ghost was upon Him—that is, He was a prophet"—WESLEY.

27. By the Spirit—"by a particular revelation or impulse from Him"—WESLEY.

30. Thy salvation—"thy Christ, thy Saviour"—WESLEY.

32. And the glory of Thy people Israel. "For after the Gentiles are enlightened, 'all Israel shall be saved'"—WESLEY.

33. Joseph and His mother marvelled at those things which were spoken—"for they did not yet thoroughly understand them"—WESLEY.

34. Simeon blessed them—"Joseph and Mary. This child is set for the fall and rising again of many—that is, He will be 'a savour of death' to some, to unbelievers; 'a savour of life to others, to believers. And for a sign which shall be spoken against—a sign from God, yet rejected of men; but the time for declaring this at large was not yet come. That the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed—the event will be, that, by means of that contradiction, the inmost thoughts of many, whether good or bad, will be made manifest"—WESLEY.

35. A sword shall pierce through thy own soul—"so it did, when He suffered; particularly at His crucifixion"—WESLEY.

RECOGNITION OF THE INFANT SAVIOUR.—Legend has been busy with the name of Simeon. In the Arabic Gospel of the Infancy, he recognises Jesus because he sees Him shining like a pillar of light in His mother's arms. Scripture is reticent, according to its custom. He was "a just man and devout," says S. Luke. "Too old to care for longer life, so far as earth alone was concerned, his heart yet beat warmly for his downtrodden nation, and for man at large, sunk in heathen darkness. He would fain wait among the living till the appearance of the Consolation of Israel—the familiar name by which his race, in their deep yearning for deliverance, had come to speak of the long-expected Messiah, as the sure Restorer of its glory. He had a premonition, divinely sent, that he should have this joy, and had come this morning, 'by the Spirit,' into the Temple. How he knew it, we cannot tell; but, as Mary stood presenting her child, he recognised in Him the Messiah of God. Anna the prophetess caught his words of welcome as she passed, and told to all who looked for the Redemption of God that the Salvation of the ages had come. In the night of age, Simeon and Anna sang unto the Lord; in the night of national decadence they heralded a good time coming."

37. Fourscore and four years. "These were the years of her life, not her widowhood only. Who departed not from the Temple—who attended there at all the stated hours of prayer. But served God with fastings and prayers—even at that age. Night and day—that is spending therein a considerable part of the night, as well as of the day"—WESLEY.

38. To all that were waiting for redemption. "The sceptre now appeared to be departing from Judah, though it was not actually gone; Daniel's weeks were plainly near their period; and the revival of the spirit of prophecy, together with the memorable occurrences relating to the birth of John the Baptist and of Jesus, could not but encourage and quicken the expectation of pious persons at this time. Let the example of those aged saints animate those whose hoary heads, like theirs, are 'a crown of glory,' being 'found in the way of righteousness.' Let those venerable lips, so soon to be silent in the grave, be now employed in the praises of their Redeemer. Let them labour to leave those behind, to whom Christ will be as precious as He has been to them, and who will be waiting for God's salvation, when they are gone to enjoy it"—WESLEY.

The joy awakened in the shepherds, the Magi, Simeon, and Anna, is a prophecy of the ministry of Christianity. The world is yet to rejoice in the Lord.

40. And the child grew—"in bodily strength and stature. And waxed strong in spirit—the powers of His human mind daily improved. Filled with wisdom—by the light of the indwelling Spirit, which gradually opened itself in His soul. And the grace of God was upon Him—that is, the peculiar favour of God rested upon Him even as man"—WESLEY.

43. The child Jesus. "S. Luke describes in order, Jesus 'the fruit of the womb' (ch. 1. 42); 'an infant' (ch. 2. 12); 'a little child' (ver. 40); 'a child' here; and afterwards 'a man.' So our Lord passed through and sanctified every stage of human life. Old age only did not become Him"—WESLEY.

44. Supposing Him to be in the company—"as the men and women usually travelled in distinct companies"—WESLEY.

46. After three days. The first day was spent in their journey, the second in their return to Jerusalem, and the third in searching for Him there. They found Him in the Temple—in an apartment of it. Sitting in the midst of the doctors. "Not one word is said of His disputing with them, but only of His asking and answering questions, which was a very usual thing in these assemblies, and indeed the very end of them. And if He was, with others, at the feet of these teachers, where learners generally sat, He might be said to be in the midst of them, as they sat on benches of a semicircular form, raised above their hearers and disciples"—WESLEY.

49. Why sought ye Me? "He does not blame them for losing, but for thinking it needful to seek Him; and intimates that He could not be lost or found anywhere but doing the will of an higher Parent"—WESLEY.

50. "It is observable that Joseph is not mentioned after this time, whence it is probable he did not live long after"—WESLEY.

52. Jesus increased in wisdom—"as to His human nature—and in favour with God—in proportion to that increase. It plainly follows, that though a man were pure, even as Christ was pure, still he would have room to increase in holiness, and, in consequence thereof, to increase in the favour as well as in the love of God"—WESLEY.

THE HOLY CHILD AT HOME.—Almost every traveller who has visited Nazareth speaks of it with enthusiasm. One, long ago, compared it to a rose; like the rose, it has the same rounded form, enclosed by mountains, as the flower by its leaves. A modern traveller says Nazareth was a small town in a hollow, opening broadly at the summit of a group of mountains which close the plain of Esdraelon on the north. The population is now from three to four thousand, and it can never have varied much. The cold is sharp in winter, and the climate very healthy. The town, like all small Jewish towns at this period, was a heap of huts built without style. The environs are charming, and no place in the world was so well adapted for dreams of perfect happiness. In our times Nazareth is still a delightful abode, the only place, perhaps, in Palestine, in which the mind feels itself relieved from the burden which oppresses it in this unequalled desolation. "To the question," says Dr. WHEDON, "what sort of a boy was Jesus? this brief passage from the whole Scripture answers. He had a true human soul as well as body. He was a genuine natural child, infant, and boy. When as an infant the shepherds paid to Him their homage, and the Magi presented their gifts, He was, probably, totally unconscious of the nature of the transactions. When at the age of two and a half years His parents brought Him from their flight into Egypt to the hills of Nazareth, His body grew; and amid the bold scenes of hill and dale, with the blue Mediterranean in the distance, His mind received its expansion. As the synagogue and the lessons at home unfolded the truths of the Old Testament to His view, telling of the Messiah to come, it is wonderful to think what may have been the first presentiments to His mind that He was Himself that Messiah." "Christ," says Mr. VALLINGS, "passed through all the stages of life, to redeem and consecrate all. He was a real Child, as well as a real Man. He spake as a child, thought as a child, understood as a child. The history of the Divine Childhood is summed up in the words of S. Luke (ch. 2. 40, 52). There was a natural development of body, soul, and spirit. None of the Nazarene townsfolk remembered or recorded any extraordinary feats of mind or body on His part. As upon Samuel, the grace of God was upon Him. It was a permanent, not a special or official, endowment. The attractiveness of transparent innocence, the beauty of ideal holiness, drew ever the increasing favour of men. The divineness of child-life, and of the eternal childhood, which with all other perfectness exists in God, was here exhibited. The Epiphany of the Divine Boyhood follows in nature and in spirit the Epiphany of the Divine Infancy. The darkness lifts for a moment, and the light breaks upon a boyish figure and character. He is seen in His Father's house. The act is typical. It is the Epiphany of the Divine Boyhood." "And so," as Bishop RYLE says, "He who died on the cross was once a boy Himself, and feels a special interest in boys and girls."

THE FIRST VISIT TO THE METROPOLIS.—It was a critical age for a Jewish boy. Up to this period he was called little; afterwards he was called grown-up, and became a son of the Law. At twelve, according to Jewish traditions, Moses left the house of Pharaoh's daughter; Samuel heard the voice of God; Solomon judged between the contending women; and Josiah dreamed of his great reformation. In going from Nazareth to Jerusalem they would pass through fields made sacred by many a struggle for freedom, and hallowed by recollections of Divine intervention. At the setting and striking of the tents many a lesson concerning God's guidance and governance in national affairs would be taught the children of the encampment. And when they neared the city there would be the same fascination as is felt by a boy coming from the provinces to London. The city of Jerusalem was the Holy City; but the Temple was the Holy Place. Thither they went. There the Holy Child remained. Lost to His earthly parents, He was found in His Heavenly Father's house. He was not disputing with the doctors, but sitting in their midst, both hearing them and asking them questions. "A lecturing, demonstrating child would have been an anomaly, which the God of order would never have exhibited"—OLSHAUSEN.

THE FIRST RECORDED WORDS.—How is it that ye sought Me? wist ye not that I must be in My Father's house? He never said Our Father, although He taught us to say it. This My is a profound word. The Child of Nazareth was the Child of Heaven. He must be about His Father's matters. The must was an inward must. The Law of God was in His heart. It is as if He had said, "Where should a child be but in his father's house?" The parents understood not—then. He went down with them, and came to Nazareth: and He was subject unto them.

CHAPTER III.

BAPTISM AND PREACHING OF JOHN THE BAPTIST.—"S. Luke here gives a sixfold intimation of the date—a method characteristic of his learned and careful research. If the accession of Tiberius be dated from the death of Augustus, Aug. 19, A.U.C. 767, this would make our Lord thirty-two at His baptism. S. Luke, however, follows a common practice in dating the reign of Tiberius from the period of his association with Augustus as joint Emperor, A.U.C. 765. (Tac. Ann. i. 3; Suet. Aug. 97; Vell. Paterc. 103.) Our Lord's baptism thus took place in A.U.C. 780. By thus giving precise dates, S. Luke becomes, as Ewald says, 'the first writer who frames the Gospel history into the great history of the world'" —C. B. (Parallel accounts.—The Ministry of John in the wilderness (vers. 1-18) is also described in Matt. 3. 1-12, and Mark 1. 1-8; the baptism of Jesus (vers. 21, 22) in Matt. 3. 13-17; Mark 1. 9-11; John 1. 33; the imprisonment of John (vers. 19, 20) in Matt. 4. 12; 14. 3-5; Mark 1. 14; 6. 17-20.)

1. The fifteenth year of Tiberius—"reckoning from the time when Augustus made him his colleague in the empire. Herod being tetrarch of Galilee. The dominions of Herod the Great were, after his death, divided into four parts or tetrarchies. This Herod, his son, was tetrarch of Galilee, reigning over that fourth part of his dominions. His brother reigned over two other fourth parts, the region of Iturea and that of Trachonitis, that tract of land on the other side Jordan, which had formerly belonged to the tribe of Manasseh. And Lysanias (probably descended from a prince of that name, who was some years before governor of that country) was tetrarch of the remaining part, Abilene, which was a large city of Syria, whose territories reached to Lebanon and Damascus, and contained great numbers of Jews"—WESLEY.

2. Annas being high priest and Caiaphas. "There could but be one high priest, strictly speaking, at once: Annas was the high priest at that time, and Caiaphas his sagan or deputy"—WESLEY.

3. JOHN'S BAPTISM.—The baptism of John was a baptism of repentance. It was intended first as a symbol of purification, and then as an initiation into the kingdom which was at hand; it was a public confession of sin, and a public profession of religiousness. John the Baptist is the Elijah of the New Testament. Both suddenly appeared. Both dwelt apart from men. Both scourged the evil-doers of their times. Note the close connection between repentance and forgiveness (vers. 7-14). We have in these verses a specimen of John the Baptist's ministry. How direct, intense, personal, stern, dauntless, and practical it was.

5. Every valley shall be filled, etc.—"that is, every hindrance shall be removed" —WESLEY.

6. The salvation of God—"the Saviour, the Messiah"—WESLEY.

8. Say not within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father—"that is, trust not in your being members of the visible Church, or in any external privileges whatsoever; for God now requires a change of heart; and that without delay"—WESLEY.

11. He answering. "It is not properly John, but the Holy Ghost, who teaches us in the following answers, how to come ourselves, and how to instruct other penitent sinners to come to Christ, that He may give them rest. The sum of all is, 'Cease to do evil, learn to do well.' These are the 'fruits worthy of repentance'"—WESLEY.

15. The deep impression made by John's preaching was only temporary. There was a general expectation that the Messiah would speedily come.

16, 17. JOHN'S SELF-FORGETFULNESS.—He was only the servant, the Master was yet to come. He would baptize them in the Holy Spirit and with fire. This baptism by the Spirit had been foretold in Isa. 44. 3; Joel. 2. 28. Its first obvious fulfilment was at Pentecost, but it is fulfilled to all Christians.

18. And many other things. The record gives but specimens of John's preaching through the almost two years of his mission.

19. Herod the tetrarch. A title of the governors of any smaller Roman provinces. Herod Antipas became tetrarch soon after the birth of Jesus. Being reproved by him concerning Herodias. Herod Antipas put away his true wife, the daughter of Aretas, an Arabian king, and then stole the affections of his beautiful niece Herodias, the wife of his brother Philip. All the evils which Herod had done. His revellings, oppressions, and murders. He was notoriously evil.

20. He shut up John. "This circumstance, though it happened after, is here mentioned before, our Lord's baptism, that His history (that of John being concluded) may then follow without interruption"—WESLEY.

21, 22. THE BAPTISM OF JESUS.—S. Luke's narrative must be supplemented by particulars derived from S. Matthew (3. 13-17), who alone narrates the unwillingness of the Baptist, and the memorable conversation between him and Jesus. S. Mark (1. 9-11) mentions that Jesus went into the river, and that it was He who first saw the cleaving heavens and the Spirit descending. Why was Christ baptized? He Himself said, "To fulfil all righteousness." He came not to destroy the Law, but to fulfil. The Church fathers have suggested other reasons, as (1) that He baptized the water "to sanctify water to the mystical washing away of sin"; or (2) that He was baptized, as it were, vicariously, as Head of His body the Church; or (3) as a consecration of Himself to His work, followed by the special consecration from the Father; or (4) as a great act of humility.

21. Jesus praying, the heaven was opened. "It is observable that the three voices from heaven (see Luke 9. 35, 36; John 12. 28) by which the Father bore witness to Christ were pronounced, either while He was praying, or quickly after it"—WESLEY.

S. Luke, more than all the Evangelists, calls attention to the prayers of Jesus.

22. The Holy Ghost descended. This was seen by John the Baptist (John 1. 34), and by Jesus (Mark 1. 10), but not apparently by others. In a bodily shape. This addition is peculiar to S. Luke, and is probably added to show the distinctness and reality of what Theodoret calls the Spiritual Vision.

23, et seq. THE GENEALOGY.—23. And Jesus was. "John's beginning was computed by the years of princes; our Saviour's by the years of His own life, as a more august era. About thirty years of age. He did not now enter upon His thirtieth year, as the common translation would induce one to think, but He now entered on His public ministry; being of such an age as the Mosaic Law required. Our great Master attained not, as it seems, to the conclusion of His thirty-fourth year. Yet what glorious achievements did He accomplish within those narrow limits of time! Happy that servant who with any proportionable zeal despatches the great business of life; and so much the more happy, if his sun go down at noon! For the space that is taken from the labours of time shall be added to the rewards of eternity. The son of Heli—that is, the son-in-law; for Heli was the father of Mary. So S. Matthew writes the genealogy of Joseph, descended from David by Solomon; S. Luke, that of Mary, descended from David by Nathan. In the genealogy of Joseph, recited by S. Matthew, that of Mary is implied, the Jews being accustomed to marry into their own families"—WESLEY.

38. Adam the son of God—"that is, whatever the sons of Adam receive from their human parents, Adam received immediately from God, except sin and misery"—WESLEY.

The genealogy opens with the name Jesus, and closes with the name Son of God. Our Lord had many names—Jesus, Christ, Second Adam, Advocate, Amen, High Priest, Author of our Faith, Bread of Life, Captain of our Salvation, Dove, Firstborn, Forerunner, Foundation, Judge, King, Lamb, Light, Lord, Master, Mediator, the Resurrection and the Life, Shepherd, Teacher, the Way, the Truth, Vine, Bright and Morning Star.

CHAPTER IV.

1. The wilderness—"supposed by some to have been in Judea; by others to have been that great desert of Horeb or Sinai, where the children of Israel were tried for forty years, and Moses and Elijah fasted forty days"—WESLEY.

"Time.—Probably about January, A.D. 27, directly after His baptism.

"Place.—There is no hint given as to the place where Jesus went to be tempted, but most authorities incline to the northern part of the wilderness of Judea, between Jerusalem and Jericho on the west and the Jordan and the upper part of the Dead Sea on the east. Tradition places it in Mount 'Quarantania,' not far from Jericho, near the Jordan. It was named 'Quarantania' (which means a space of forty days), because Jesus was supposed to have passed His forty days of fasting in one of its caves. It is high and precipitous, and abounds in caves. Others think that He went into the wilderness of Sinai, where Moses had his forty years of training in solitude (Ex. 3. 1-6; Acts 7. 30), and fasted forty days (Ex. 34. 28), and where Elijah fasted forty days and had a marvellous experience with God. (1 Kings 19. 8-14.) (Parallel accounts.—Matt. 4. 1-11; Mark 1. 12, 13.)

"Source of this Account.—There can be but one source, and that is the Lord Himself. He must have revealed to His disciples, with His own lips, the story of His temptations, for there was no one there to witness it and to report. The private life of Jesus in His Nazareth home, and His long, silent preparations, ended when He was about thirty years old. Then by His baptism He stood upon the threshold of His great life work, consecrated and made ready by the baptism of the Holy Spirit. But one thing yet remained. As the first Adam, the head of the race, must be tempted and tested at the beginning of his career, so must the Second Adam, the Head of the redeemed people of God, be tempted and tested at the beginning of His work; the first Adam failed, and changed Paradise into a desert; the Second Adam gained the victory, and changed a desert into a paradise"—From Peloubet's Select Notes.

I. PREPARATION.—Our Lord was prepared both without and within. Having fasted and become weakened and wearied, He was the more ready for assault. Having been filled with the Spirit of God, He was the better able to confront the spiritual foe. He did not go into the wilderness of His own accord. He was led by the Spirit in the wilderness. S. Mark uses a strong phrase, "Straightway the Spirit driveth Him forth into the wilderness." He who taught us to pray, "Lead us not into temptation," did not go thither except by a Divine command. It is safe to go anywhere when God bids us. The tense in the original implies a continuous leading during all the forty days, as well as a continuous temptation. A Divine impulse led Him to face the hour of peril alone. S. Mark uses the more intense expression, "immediately the Spirit driveth Him forth." He only devotes two verses (Mark 1. 12, 13) to the Temptation, but adds the graphic touch, that "He was with the wild beasts" (comp. Ps. 91. 13), and implies the continuous ministration of angels to Him"—C. B. Our Lord was always in the power of the Spirit, for to Him the Spirit was given without measure. As Milton sings—

"Thou Spirit, who ledd'st this glorious Eremite
Into the desert, His victorious field,

Against the spiritual foe, and brought'st Him thence,
By proof the undoubted Son of God."

II. THE TEMPTATION.—We had better not confuse ourselves by rash intrusions into the mysteries of our Lord's Divine and human natures by inquiring whether Christ's sinlessness arose from a "possibility of not sinning," or from an "impossibility of sinning." It is enough for us to know that "He was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Nor need we concern ourselves as to the degree of outwardness in the Temptation. Was Satan visibly present? Or did he merely suggest, as he does to us? The temptation is equally real, whether it came from without or from within. As Dr. STALKER reverently says, "It is with awe we think of these suggestions presenting themselves to the holy soul of Jesus. Could He be tempted to distrust God, and even to worship the Evil One? No doubt the temptations were flung from Him, as the impotent billows retire broken from the breast of the rock on which they have dashed themselves. But these temptations pressed in on Him, not only at this time, but often before in the valley of Nazareth, and often afterwards in the heats and crises of His life. We must remember that it is no sin to be tempted, it is only sin to yield to temptation. And, indeed, the more absolutely pure a soul is, the more painful will be the point of the temptation, as it presses for admission into his breast." In the life of Abraham we read, "After these things God did tempt Abraham." Then follows the offering up of Isaac. But many trials preceded this greatest trial of all. So Christ's temptation did not stand alone.

The Tempter.—"The Greek word is diabolos —slanderer, accuser; the Hebrew, Satan, is one who opposes—an adversary. The Greek word conveys the additional ideas of—(1) deceiving, (2) calumniating, (3) accusing"—C. B. "It is no more unreasonable to believe in a personal devil than in bad men, bad leaders on earth. To deny the existence of the devil is to lay much heavier charges of evil on the nature of man than does the belief in Satan"—PELOUBET. "Satan and his angels were once in heaven (2 Pet. 2. 4; Jude 6). (2) Satan is the father of lies (John 8. 44). (3) Satan blinds men's spiritual vision (2 Cor. 4. 4). (4) Satan can assume very winning forms (2 Cor. 11. 14). (5) Satan is the great tempter and adversary of men (1 Pet. 5. 8; Luke 22. 31). (6) Satan is very powerful (Eph. 6. 12)"—A. F. SCHAUFFLER, D.D. Let us, however, avoid idle discussion concerning the form and appearance of Satan. He comes to us; he came to Christ.

The First Temptation—To distrust God.—If Thou art the Son of God, command this stone that it become bread (R.V.). "Forty days and nights He had fasted and was hungry. Had God forgotten Him? Was He to be left to perish?" "Art Thou Son of God?" said Satan, "then exercise Thy right. Show Thyself. Be independent. Command." The answer came from the Book—It is written. The words of all three answers to the tempter came from two chapters of Deuteronomy. He used the word of God, which we may use too.

Second Temptation.—To be independent of God.—The tempter showed Him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time, and said, To Thee will I give all this authority and the glory of them; for it hath been delivered unto me. He had come as Messiah, to be the world's Conqueror. Now, by one stroke, He may achieve the victory. Bow, and all shall be Thine. But He will not have to-day what belongs to to-morrow. He has His day, His hour. God's time is best. With another It is written He spurns the temptation.

Third Temptation—To presume on God. —He set Him on the pinnacle of the Temple, and said, Cast Thyself down. The devil has an "It is written." But he quotes partially and thus falsely. (See Ps. 91. 11.) Another word of God is His defence. Thou shalt not is sufficient for Him; it must be for us.

III. VICTORY.—Satan retired, and angels appeared. He who came to destroy sin and conquer death had vanquished Satan.

6. I give it to whomsoever I will. "Not so, Satan. It is God, not thou, that puttest down one, and setteth up another; although sometimes Satan, by God's permission, may occasion great revolutions in the world"—WESLEY.

13. A convenient season—"in the garden of Gethsemane. (Luke 22. 53)"—WESLEY.

14. Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit—"being more abundantly strengthened after His conflict"—WESLEY.

15. Being glorified of all. "So God usually gives strong cordials after strong temptations. But neither their approbation continued long, nor the outward calm which He now enjoyed" —WESLEY.

16. He stood up—"showing thereby that He had a desire to read the Scriptures to the congregation. On which the book was given to Him. It was the Jewish custom to read standing, but to preach sitting"—WESLEY.

It behoved Him to fulfil all righteousness. He was found in His seat in the synagogue. Now He is no longer the learner, but the Teacher. Many important events have taken place, but their record is reserved for the other Evangelists. He has been baptized at the Jordan, and tempted in the desert. He has selected His disciples, wrought the miracle at Cana of Galilee, attended the Passover, instructed Nicodemus, proclaimed Himself to the woman at the well, and healed the son of the nobleman. Now He reappears in His native place, and in the seat of the synagogue, perhaps where He had sat before. The public reading in the synagogue consisted of a portion of the Law, which in regular order was followed by a section of the Prophets. A priest or a Levite, or a respectable stranger, was invited by the reader to be the expositor. The attendant handed our Lord the roll. The lesson for the day was in Isaiah. For aught we know to the contrary, it was the very portion He expounded; or He may have selected the passage for its special signification. He quoted the well-known passage: — The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He anointed Me to preach good tidings to the poor; He hath sent Me to proclaim release to the captives, and recovery of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord. It was the ministry of the Lord Jesus in outline; the gospel of the grace of God in brief. And the manner as well as the matter was gracious and winning. For ■ while the audience listened as under a spell; but when He had shown the sterner side of His gospel, they cast Him forth out of the city, and He came to the synagogue at Capernaum, and showed Himself a Prophet in deed as well as in word.

JESUS IN THE SYNAGOGUE.—Hitherto He had been a silent worshipper: now He becomes a public teacher. "A synagogue (a congregation, a gathering together, and hence a place of assembling) was in the form of a common modern church, nearly square. The platform and pulpit for preaching was at one end, and behind it was the ark containing the rolls or books. The reading-desk was on a platform in the centre. At the end opposite to the pulpit was the women's gallery. The arrangement can be seen in the modern synagogues of the Jews. The men always wear their hats while in the synagogue. The services consist of prayers in the form of liturgy, with responses by the people standing; singing of psalms; the reading of the Law and the Prophets, followed by an address, the service closing with a short prayer. It did not require ordination to preach in the synagogue; but any prominent man or distinguished rabbi, known to be in town, was asked to speak, usually before the time of service. This practice, and the absolute liberty of teaching, subject to the authority of the chief ruler of the synagogue, formed important links in the Christianisation of the world. The popular preacher was one who had a good figure and melodious voice, his words like those of the bride to the bridegroom, his speech sweet as honey, his diction richly adorned, like a bride on her wedding-day"—Condensed from EDERSHEIM. "It is supposed that the little village only possessed a single synagogue. After our Lord, or another, had read the first lesson, which was always from the Pentateuch, the clerk handed to him the roll of Isaiah, which contained the second lesson. The word used leaves it uncertain whether the finding was what man calls accidental, or whether it was the regular lesson of the day. Our Lord seldom used texts as the basis of His discourses, more often He made events the occasion of His speech. But here He selected a great text, from which He preached a gracious sermon. He proclaimed Himself as the World's Hope. He declared that He came to the least and lowliest. He opened up the long dim vista of a better time coming. Help for the helpless, succour for the needy, freedom for those in bondage, vision for the blind, consolation for the sufferers,—these elemental truths, so familiar to us now, were strange then.

"1. Poor. 2. Captives. 3. Blind—Representatives of suffering humanity.
1. Light. 2. Health. 3. Liberty—Images of Christ's Salvation"—VAN DOREN.

Gracious words fell from His lips that day. "The word grace does not here mean mercy or favour, but beauty and attractiveness. This verse and John 7. 46 are the chief proofs that there was in our Lord's utterance an irresistible majesty and sweetness. (Comp. Ps. 45. 2; John 1. 14)"—FARRAR. Alford thinks we have here merely the substance of a more expanded discourse.

17. He found. "It seems, opening upon it, by the particular providence of God"—WESLEY.

18. He hath anointed Me — "with the Spirit. He hath, by the power of His Spirit which dwelleth in Me, set Me apart for these offices. To preach the gospel to the poor—literally and spiritually"—WESLEY.

"How is the doctrine of the ever-blessed Trinity interwoven even in those scriptures where one would least expect it? How clear a declaration of the great Three-One is there in those very words, The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me! To proclaim deliverance to the captives, and recovery of sight to the blind; to set at liberty them that are bruised. Here is a beautiful gradation, in comparing the spiritual state of men to the miserable state of those captives who were not only cast into prison, but, like Zedekiah, had their eyes put out, and were laden and bruised with chains of iron"—WESLEY.

19. The acceptable year—"plainly alluding to the year of jubilee, when all, both debtors and servants, were set free"—WESLEY.

21. To-day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears—"by what you hear Me speak"—WESLEY.

22. The gracious words which proceedeth out of His mouth. "A person of spiritual discernment may find in all the discourses of our Lord a peculiar sweetness, gravity, and becomingness, such as is not to be found in the same degree, not even in those of the apostles"—WESLEY.

23. Ye will surely say — "that is, your approbation now outweighs your prejudices. But it will not be so long. You will soon ask, Why My love does not begin at home? Why

I do not work miracles here, rather than at Capernaum? It is because of your unbelief. Nor is it any new thing for Me to be despised in My own country. So were both Elijah and Elisha, and thereby driven to work miracles among heathens, rather than in Israel"—WESLEY.

24. No prophet is acceptable in his own country—"that is, in his own neighbourhood. It generally holds, that a teacher sent from God is not so acceptable to his neighbours as he is to strangers. The meanness of his family, or lowness of his circumstances, bring his office into contempt. Nor can they suffer that he, who was before equal with or below themselves, should now bear a superior character"—WESLEY.

25. When the heaven was shut up three years and six months. "Such a proof had they that God had sent Him. In 1 Kings 18. 1, it is said, 'The word of the Lord came to Elijah in the third year,' namely, reckoning not from the beginning of the drought, but from the time when he began to sojourn with the widow of Sarepta. A year of drought had preceded this, while he dwelt at the brook Cherith. So that the whole time of the drought was (as S. James likewise observes) three years and six months"—WESLEY.

28. And all in the synagogue were filled with fury—"perceiving the purport of His discourse, namely, that the blessing which they despised would be offered to, and accepted by, the Gentiles. So changeable are the hearts of wicked men! So little are their starts of love to be depended on! So unable are they to bear the close application even of a discourse which they most admire!"—WESLEY.

30. Passing through the midst of them—"perhaps invisibly; or perhaps they were overawed; so that though they saw, they could not touch, Him"—WESLEY.

31. He came down to Capernaum—"and dwelt there, entirely quitting His abode at Nazareth"—WESLEY.

JESUS ON THE HILL.—There were mutterings in the synagogue, Is not this Joseph's son? "The Jews, in their synagogues, did not sit in silence, but were accustomed to give full expression to their feelings, and to discuss and make remarks aloud"—C. B. He answered these by showing the method of the Divine selection (vers. 23-27). A sudden irruption of anger possessed them, and they led Him to the brow of the hill. But His time was not yet come. And some have thought it unnecessary to call in the aid of the miraculous here. They have pointed to His calmness, to the majesty of His personality, and assumed that He walked quietly through the hostile crowd. They have reminded us of the power of Wesley and Whitefield, in dealing with angry mobs. "He beholds them," says Stier, "with a look of His hitherto restrained majesty, by which they are bound and incapable of touching Him." Be this as it may, it was not at Nazareth that the end was to come. He had work to do, and time in which to do it.

Vers. 33-37. In the synagogue there was a man which had the spirit of an unclean demon. We know too little of the unseen world to be sure that we understand all that is implied in this and similar narratives. Let it be sufficient to learn that Christ is Lord of the unseen as well as of the seen, of the world of spirit as of the world of nature. We know, too, that acts become habits, and men may speak impure words and do impure deeds until impurity is the atmosphere in which they live. The man was healed: the impure spirit exorcised.

34. What have we to do with Thee? "Thy present business is with men, not with devils. I know Thee who Thou art—but surely he did not know a little before that He was 'God over all, blessed for ever,' or he would not have dared to tell Him, 'All this power is delivered to me, and I give it to whomsoever I will.' The Holy One of God—either this confession was extorted from him by terror (for 'the devils believe and tremble'), or he made it with a design to render the character of Christ suspected. Possibly it was from hence the Pharisees took occasion to say, 'He casteth out devils by the prince of the devils'"—WESLEY.

Vers. 38, 39. THE HEALER IN THE HOME.—Simon's wife's mother was holden with a great fever. They besought Him for her. He stood over her, rebuked the fever, and it left her. S. Mark notes that He took her by the hand. Christ was the Life, and He seized the hand of sickness. He came into contact with sufferers. In this we may follow Him. And in her devotion to the common task, as soon as this sufferer was healed, we may imitate her.

Vers. 40, 41. BENEFICENT ACTIVITY.—When the sun was set—"and, consequently, the Sabbath ended, which they reckoned from sunset to sunset"—WESLEY.

All that had any sick brought them, and He healed every one. In the by-ways of the Gospels we shall find lessons of life. All that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto Him; and He laid His hands on every one of them, and healed them. "All." When we speak of the miracles of Christ, we usually think of thirty-three recorded wondrous works; but these are only specimens. His life was as full of deeds of mercy as the sky of stars. Let us place together a few passages. "Jesus went about all Galilee healing all manner of disease and all manner of sickness among the people. And they brought unto Him all that were sick, holden with divers diseases and torments, possessed with devils, and epileptic, and palsied; and He healed them" (Matt. 4.). And if any distinction need be made when the Son of God puts forth the right hand of power, great diseases are specially enumerated: the demon-possessed, the epileptic, and the palsied; Peter's wife's mother had "a great fever"; the centurion's servant was "grievously tormented." "Wheresoever He entered, into villages, or into cities, or into the country, they laid the sick in the market-places, and besought Him that they might touch if it were but the border of His garment: and as many as touched Him were made whole" (Mark 6.). "Jesus withdrew Himself, and many followed Him; and He healed them all" (Matt. 12.). "There came unto Him great multitudes, having with them the lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others, and they cast them down at His feet; and He healed them: insomuch that the multitude wondered, when they saw the dumb speaking, the maimed whole, and the lame walking, and the blind seeing" (Matt. 15.). What a variety of diseases! But He was not baffled. His ministry was a ministry of healing. The great majority of His miracles were miracles of healing. He was the Saviour of the body as well as the soul. And in this He hath left us an example. We must feed the hungry, clothe the naked, shelter the outcast, as well as erect schools and circulate Bibles. Sometimes we can only save the soul by saving the body. Our Lord's miracles were parables, acted instead of spoken. Behind the diseases of the body we behold the diseases of the soul. Blindness, dumbness, deafness, paralysis, death—these terms have a moral application; and as the eye is often a better teacher than the ear, we may preach the gospel of the grace of Jesus through these pictures of bodily salvation. The Great Physician is able and willing to heal every kind of disease of mind and heart. To Him only must we turn.

Vers. 42–44. The miracles were only breaks in the ministry of teaching. The great Itinerant resumed His task.

CHAPTER V.

Vers. 1–11. A MIRACULOUS DRAUGHT OF FISHES. (Comp. John 1. 35–42; Matt. 4. 18–22).—S. John records the first call of the disciples, or perhaps, more strictly, their first communion with Jesus. S. Matthew narrates the second call. Some Bible students hold this to be an abbreviated statement, of which S. Luke's, in these verses, is a vivid and circumstantial account. The important point is that the calls were progressive, as has often been God's method from that time to this. If we regard S. Matthew's and S. Luke's narratives as identical, the third call was in the choice of the Twelve to be apostles. Adopting this view, these stages have been thus arranged:—

1. Reception as disciples in the most general sense—Catechumens.
2. Selection for service by continuous following of the Lord—Evangelists.
3. Selection to be the representatives of the Lord, with bestowal of the power to work miracles—Apostles.

It has been said, "He commands them to launch out into the deep, partly to exhibit the miraculous draught of fishes as contrary to all the rules of fishing, and partly also to withdraw from the eyes of the people the miracle, which was a sign given to the apostles, in confirmation of the promise accompanying their call." It was a test of faith, and a call to labour. The fishes were sent into the net, not directly into the boat. Heaven helps those who help themselves. Our Lord revealed Himself to Peter along the line of his calling. Fear spoke loftily (ver. 8) concerning the Master's glory; it mistook the Master's pity. Fear is not a safe guide. Fear not is spoken with a different accent in the word of truth. Labour is unproductive without God's blessing, but labour cannot be dispensed with. Peter, James, and John were not disobedient to the heavenly vision (ver. 11). They rose, went forth, and followed Christ. Thus the miracle of wonder became a message of salvation. It always is.

6. Their net brake—"began to tear"—WESLEY.

8. Depart from me, for I am a sinful man—"and therefore not worthy to be in Thy presence"—WESLEY.

11. They forsook all, and followed Him. "They had followed Him before (John 1. 43), but not so as to forsake all. Till now, they wrought at their ordinary calling"—WESLEY.

Vers. 12–26. THE SAVIOUR OF THE BODY.—In one of the cities, "probably the village of Hattîn, for we learn from S. Matthew's definite notice that this incident took place on descending from the Mount of Beatitudes. (See Matt. 8. 1–4; Mark 1. 40–45.) S. Mark seems to imply that it was in a house. Chronologically, the call of S. Matthew, the choosing of the Twelve, and the Sermon on the Mount, probably intervene between this incident and the last"—C. B. We must remember that this is not the first proof of the Physician's skill. The wonderful healing of a demoniac and of the sick at sunset find record in the fourth chapter. S. Luke, being a physician, is especially at home in delineating the Saviour of the body. And in pondering the marvellous deeds of Christ, we must remember the wise words of Mozley, "Miracles are not contrary to nature, but beyond and above it." The picture of Jesus moving about among the sick and tortured crowd, with word and touch of healing, is worthy Him who came the world to save. Godet speaks of periods when the miraculous power of Jesus was most abundantly displayed. He cites ch. 4. 40, 41. He finds also a similar rhythm in the career of the apostles. "Peter at Jerusalem (Acts 5. 15, 16), and Paul at Ephesus (19. 11, 12), exercise their miraculous power to a degree in which they appear to have exhibited it at no other time in their life; it was at the same time the culminating point of their ministry of the word." And we may agree with the beautiful expression of JEAN

PAUL. "Miracles on earth are nature in heaven." The Son of God appeared that He might destroy the works of evil. There are many sicknesses, but only one Physician: many souls, but one Saviour: many sorrows, but one sympathizer—

> "The Great Physician now is near,
> The sympathising Saviour."

The Leper (vers. 12–16).—"Leprosy was in every point of view a most frightful malady: (1) In its physical aspects it was a whitish pustule, eating away the flesh, attacking member after member, and at last eating away the very bones; it was attended with burning fever, sleeplessness, and nightmare, without scarcely the slightest hope of cure. Such were its physical characteristics: it was a living death. (2) In the social point of view, in consequence of the excessively contagious nature of his malady, the leper was separated from his family, and from intercourse with men, and had no other company than that of others as unhappy as himself. Lepers ordinarily lived in bands, at a certain distance from human habitations. (2 Kings 7. 3; Luke 17. 12.) Their food was deposited for them in convenient places. They went with their head uncovered, and their chin wrapped up; and, on the approach of any persons whom they met, they had to announce themselves as lepers. (3) In the religious point of view, the leper was Levitically unclean, and consequently excommunicate. His malady was considered a direct chastisement from God. In the very rare case of a cure, he was only restored to the theocratic community on an official declaration of the priest, and after offering the sacrifice prescribed by the Law"—GODET. And behold a man. His approach was not expected: he comes like an apparition. It was only by stealth that he could get so near. He was full of leprosy: his countenance was lividly white. Having discovered Jesus, he rushes towards Him; the moment he recognises Him he is at His feet. S. Luke says, "falling on his face"; S. Mark, "kneeling down"; S. Matthew, "he worshipped." All the Evangelists say "cleanse" instead of "heal," on account of the notion of uncleanness attached to this malady. He stretched forth His hand and touched him. Leprosy was so contagious, that this act excited the liveliest emotion in the crowd. Christ confronted the impurity of our nature, and yet remained unsullied. S. Matthew says, "his leprosy was cleansed"; regarding it from a ceremonial point of view. S. Luke simply says, "the leprosy departed from him"; looking at it from a human point of view. To prevent popular excitement, our Lord imposed silence upon the healed man. Leprosy has always been regarded as a type of sin. But over "this sacrament of death," leprosy, our Lord's power was supreme. Hence we may come to Him for the removal of our moral maladies. Christ's miracles of healing have been regarded as—(1) Witness of His gospel, (2) Works of love, (3) Seals of His power, (4) Signs of New Testament freedom, (5) Keys of Divine glory, and (6) Revelations of God to man. The leper said, Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean. The Lord said, I will: be thou made clean. Two words only, our Lord spoke; "a prompt echo to the ripe faith of the leper." The leper carried his malady in his face, so the drunkard shows his lack of self-control; the impure his unholiness. Sin writes its marks on the fleshly tablets of the body. But Christ is all powerful: Christ is nigh at hand. "Our Lord's first miracles were done with a glad spontaneity in answer to faith. But when men had ceased to believe in Him, their lack of faith rendered His latter miracles more sad and more delayed (Mark 6. 5; Matt. 13. 58). We never, however, hear of a moment's delay in attending to the cry of a leper. When the sinner cries from his heart, 'I have sinned against the Lord,' the answer comes instantly, 'The Lord also hath put away thy sin' (2 Sam. 12. 13)"—C. B. Although great multitudes came together to hear and to be healed by Him of their infirmities, He withdrew Himself in the deserts, and prayed. Virtue was going out of Him, therefore strength must enter into Him. S. Luke, above other Evangelists, notes the prayers of Jesus Christ. We who work for God must take care to pray to God. "S. Luke's," says Farrar, "is eminently the Gospel of prayer and thanksgiving."

16. He withdrew. "The expression in the original implies that He did so frequently"—WESLEY.

The Paralytic (vers. 17–26).—"A threefold miracle demands our attention in these verses. At one and the same time we see our Lord forgiving sins, reading men's thoughts, and healing a palsy. He that could do such things, and do them with such perfect ease and authority, must indeed be very God. Power like this was never possessed by man"—RYLE. "It is a remarkable instance on the human side of triumph over hindrances. They were partly in the man—a paralytic; helpless and practically incurable. In the circumstances: the occasion and the crowd. But the hindrances were triumphed over by resolution born of necessity and ingenuity, bold enough to execute itself. On the Divine side it was human weakness coming to Omnipotence, and not coming in vain. The miracle was momentarily deferred because of the strange inward questionings of the scribes and the Pharisees. Anyone might say, thy sins have been forgiven, without any visible sign, whether his words had any power or not; no one could by a word make a man rise and walk, who had not received power from God. But our Lord had purposely used words which, while they brought the earthly miracle into less prominence, went to the very root of the evil, and implied a yet loftier prerogative"—C. B. All the Evangelists who narrate the miracle emphasise the carrying the bed whereon the paralytic lay. It is in contrast with the man's previous helplessness—"borne of four." While he departed to tell his friends and glorify the God of deliverance, the onlookers were astonished and filled with fear, saying, We have seen strange things to-day.

17. Sitting by—"as being more honourable than the bulk of the congregation, who stood. And the power of the Lord was present to heal them—to heal the sickness of their souls, as well as all bodily diseases"—WESLEY.

19. "Not being able to bring him in through the multitude, they went round about by a back-passage, and going up the stairs on the outside they came upon the flat-roofed house, and let him down through the trap-door, such as was on the top of most of the Jewish houses; doubtless with such circumspection as the circumstances plainly required" WESLEY.

26. We have seen strange things to-day—"sins forgiven, miracles wrought"—WESLEY.

27–39. This section relates the call of Levi, the feast he provided, and the table-talk of Jesus.

27, 28. THE CALL.—Levi was a publican, a tax-collector. Those who, like Matthew, were of Jewish origin were hated and despised by their fellow-countrymen, more even than the heathen themselves. The Levi of this Gospel is the Matthew the publican of the other Gospels. Probably his former name was Levi, and Jesus gave him the surname of Matthew, "Gift of God," just as He gave Simon the surname of Peter.

29–32. THE FEAST.—Levi gave up his wealth to follow Christ. Leaving all—"his business and gain"—WESLEY.

This feast has been called Levi's first missionary effort. He strove to bring his old friends and Jesus together. Eating together all the world over, is the sign of close intimacy. The house of an Oriental is perfectly open, and anyone who likes may enter it, hence the presence of the Pharisees and scribes.

29. And Levi made Him a great entertainment—"it was necessarily great, because of the great number of guests"—WESLEY.

33–39. INSTRUCTIONS CONCERNING FASTING.—In ver. 32 our Lord announced His mission to the outcasts. His enemies asked, Why do not your disciples fast, like the disciples of John and of the Pharisees? Jesus compares the days of His presence on the earth to a marriage feast. (See John 3. 29.) In the midst of this feast the heart of Jesus is overflowing with joy, but "the shadow of a painful vision passes across His brow."

35. The days will come. The veil of the future is not often lifted.

36. A PARABLE. — He spake also a parable — "taken from clothes and wine; therefore peculiarly proper at a feast"—WESLEY.

Our Lord delighted in these homely metaphors, which brought the truth within the comprehension of the humblest. To put a piece of a new garment upon an old would rend the new to patch the old, and increase the rent of the old, and after all be a strange mixture. Christianity would supersede Judaism.

37–39. SECOND PARABLE. — Teaching the same lesson. Our Lord often illustrates two aspects of the same truth by a pair of parables (e.g. The Hid Treasure and The Pearl, The Sower and the Tares).

39. And no man having drunk old wine—"and, besides, men are not wont to be immediately freed from old prejudices"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER VI.

1. The first Sabbath — "so the Jews reckoned their Sabbaths, from the Passover to Pentecost; the first, second, third, and so on, till the seventh Sabbath after the second day. This immediately preceded Pentecost, which was the fiftieth day after the second day of unleavened bread"—WESLEY.

(See on Matt. 12.) Our Lord was walking along in a path between two fields. He was walking apart from His disciples, and did not Himself pluck the corn. Jesus would have had no difficulty in showing that the act of the disciples, although opposed perhaps to the Pharisaic code, was in perfect agreement with the Mosaic commandment (Deut. 23. 25). But our Lord raised the question. He knew how eagerly and instantly the Pharisees would clutch at the chance of finding fault. He refers to the conduct of David, showing that when a moral obligation clashes with a ceremonial law, the latter ought to yield (vers. 3–5).

Vers. 6–11. A SECOND SABBATH SCENE.—In nothing did our Lord come into collision with His enemies more than the Sabbath. They watched Him, not to see the miracle of healing, and give God thanks, but to note any breaking of the least of their commandments. His answer was sharp and clear, Is it lawful on the Sabbath to do good or to do harm, to save a life or to destroy it?

9. To save life, or to kill. "He just then, probably, saw the design to kill Him rising in their hearts"—WESLEY.

A word of command bidding the man what seemed impossible, and the miracle of mercy was accomplished.

Vers. 12–19. THE SELECTION OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES.—Our Lord commenced and closed all great occasions with prayer.

12. In the prayer of God. "The phrase is singular and emphatical, to imply an extraordinary and sublime devotion"—WESLEY.

LISTS of the TWELVE APOSTLES are given in four passages of Scripture in the following order:—

MATT. X. 2-4.	MARK III. 16-19.	LUKE VI. 14-16.	ACTS I. 13.
Simon	Simon	Simon	Peter
Andrew	James	Andrew	James
James	John	James	John
John	Andrew	John	Andrew
Philip	Philip	Philip	Philip
Bartholomew	Bartholomew	Bartholomew	Thomas
Thomas	Matthew	Matthew	Bartholomew
Matthew	Thomas	Thomas	Matthew
James of Alphæus	James of Alphæus	James of Alphæus	James of Alphæus
Lebbæus	Thaddeus	Simon Zelotes	Simon Zelotes
Simon the Canaanite	Simon the Canaanite	Judas of James	Judas of James
JudasIscariot	JudasIscariot	Judas Iscariot	Judas Iscariot

First Section.—Active men, leaders of the sacred band. Second Section.—Contemplative men. Third Section.—Comparatively unknown men. Christian disciples who never wholly broke from Judaism. Simon Zelotes is called by S. Matthew the Canaanite. He belonged to a sect of fanatics, who thought any deed of violence justifiable to obtain national freedom.

Vers. 20-49. THE SERMON.—This is a shortened form of the Sermon on the Mount. "The main differences between S. Matthew's and S. Luke's record of the Sermon on the Mount are explained by the different objects and readers of these Gospels; but in both it is the Inaugural Discourse of the Kingdom of Heaven:—(1) S. Matthew writes for the Jews, and much that he records has special bearing on the Levitic Law (vers. 17-38), which S. Luke naturally omits as less intelligible to Gentiles. Other parts here omitted are recorded by S. Luke later on (ch. 11. 9-13; Matt. 7. 7-11). (2) S. Matthew, presenting Christ as Lawgiver and King, gives the Sermon more in the form of a code. Kurn Hattîn is for him the new and more blessed Sinai; S. Luke gives it more in the form of a direct homily, Yours, etc., not 'Theirs' (ch. 6. 20; Matt. 5. 3; and comp. 6. 46, 47 with Matt. 7. 21, 24). (3) Much of the Sermon in S. Matthew is occupied with the contrast between the false righteousness—the pretentious orthodoxy and self-satisfied ceremonialism — of the Pharisees, and the true righteousness of the Kingdom, which is mercy and love. Hence, much of his report is occupied with spirituality as the stamp of true religion, in opposition to formalism, while S. Luke deals with love in the abstract. (4) Thus in S. Matthew, we see mainly the law of love as the contrast between the new and the old; in S. Luke the law of love as the central and fundamental idea of the new"—C. B. "The Sermon may be thus arranged: (1) The members of the new society (vers. 20-26; Matt. 5. 1-12). (2) The fundamental principle of the new society (vers. 27-45; Matt. 5. 13; 7. 12.) (3) The judgment of God on which it rests (vers. 46-49; Matt. 7. 13-27),—in other words (1) the appeal; (2) the principles; (3) the sanctions"—GODET. As the Sermon has been fully expounded in S. Matthew, it will be sufficient here simply to append Mr. Wesley's Notes:—

17. On a plain—"at the foot of the mountain"—WESLEY.

20. "In the following verses, our Lord, in the audience of His newly-chosen disciples, and of the multitude, repeats, standing on the plain, many remarkable passages of the Sermon he had before delivered sitting on the Mount. He here again pronounces the poor and the hungry, the mourners and the persecuted, happy; and represents as miserable those who are rich and full and joyous and applauded, because generally prosperity is a sweet poison, and affliction a healing, though bitter, medicine. Let the thought reconcile us to adversity, and awaken our caution when the world smiles upon us; when a plentiful table is spread before us, and our cup is running over; when our spirits are gay; and we hear (what nature loves) our own praise from men. Happy are ye poor—the word seems here to be taken literally; ye who have left all for Me"—WESLEY.

24. Miserable are ye rich—"if ye have received or sought your consolation or happiness therein"—WESLEY.

25. Full—"of meat and drink and worldly goods. That laugh—that are of a light, trifling spirit"—WESLEY.

26. Woe to you, when all men shall speak well of you—"but who will believe this?" WESLEY.

27. But I say to you that hear.—"Hitherto our Lord had spoken only to particular sorts of persons; now He begins speaking to all in general"—WESLEY.

29. To him that smiteth thee on the cheek—taketh away thy cloak. "These seem to be proverbial expressions, to signify an invasion of the tenderest points of honour and property. Offer the other—forbid not thy coat—that is, rather yield to his repeating the affront or injury than gratify resentment in righting yourself, in any method not becoming the Christian love"—WESLEY.

30. Give to every man—"friend or enemy, what thou canst spare, and he really wants. And of him that taketh away thy goods—by borrowing, if he be insolvent, ask them not again"—WESLEY.

32. "It is greatly observable, our Lord has so little regard for one of the highest instances of natural virtue, namely, the returning love for love, that He does not account it even to deserve thanks. For even sinners, saith He, do the same—men who do not regard God at all. Therefore he may do this who has not taken one step in Christianity"—WESLEY.

38. Into your bosom—"alluding to the mantles the Jews wore, into which a large quantity of corn might be received. With the same measure that ye mete with, it shall be measured to you again. Amazing goodness! So we are permitted even to carve for ourselves! We ourselves are, as it were, to tell God how much mercy He shall show us. And can we be content with less than the very largest measure? Give, then, to man what thou designest to receive of God"—WESLEY.

39. He spake a parable. "Our Lord sometimes used parables, when He knew plain and open declarations would too much inflame the passions of His hearers. It is for this reason that He uses this parable. Can the blind lead the blind—can the scribes teach this way which they know not themselves? Will not they and their scholars perish together? Can they make their disciples any better than themselves? But as for those who will be My disciples, 'they shall be all taught of God,' who will enable them to 'come to the measure of the stature of the fulness of' their Master. Be not like their disciples, censuring others, and not amending yourselves"—WESLEY.

46. And why call ye Me, Lord, Lord—"what will fair professions avail, without a life answerable thereto?"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER VII.

Ver. 1. CAPERNAUM.—Capernaum was a fishing and agricultural and a mercantile centre. It was a bright and populous little town, at the very centre of what has been called the manufacturing district of Palestine; from it roads branched to the chief cities. Capernaum is in all probability Tell Hûm. It is now a heap of desolation, with little to mark it except the ruins of one white synagogue, possibly the very one built by the friendly centurion.

Vers. 1–10. HEALING OF THE CENTURION'S SERVANT. — The healing of the centurion's servant gave the occasion for the most striking instance of faith that Jesus had met with up to this time; and, what was most astonishing, He was indebted for this surprise to a Gentile. Only twice do we read in the Gospel that the Saviour marvelled: once at the unbelief of His fellow-citizens at Nazareth (Mark 6. 6); once at the faith of this heathen. The centurion was probably a Roman soldier in the service of Herod; he was a proselyte, and had even manifested special zeal on behalf of his new faith (ver. 5). He sent a deputation of the elders to Jesus. They could more easily explain to Jesus "the honourable facts which made in favour of the centurion than he could himself." When the centurion saw Jesus approaching, his veneration made him afraid to receive Him under his roof; he sends therefore a second deputation (vers. 6–8). "Faith vies with humility in this man." As ALFORD says: "The centurion heard that the Lord was coming, and sent friends to Him with this second and still humbler message. He knew and felt himself to be out of the fold of God, a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel, and therefore unworthy to receive under his roof the Redeemer of Israel." "But," as S. AUGUSTINE says, "while owning himself unworthy the Lord should enter his house, he was accounted worthy the Lord should enter his heart. The more humility, the more room, and the more fulness. The proud hill-tops let the rain run off; the lowly valleys are richly watered." The centurion was accustomed to brief command and prompt obedience, and to him there was no difficulty in the thought that this King of the hosts of Heaven should speak and be obeyed. A word of commendation was scarcely spoken ere they that were sent returned to the house and found the servant whole. The centurion stood before a threefold tribunal—(1) The judgment of men, He is worthy; (2) The judgment of conscience, I am not worthy; (3) The judgment of the Lord, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel. The cure of the nobleman's son, recorded in S. John (ch. 4), is similar, and the recollection of it may have inspired the centurion's faith. For the first time we find here in the Gospel of Luke witnesses of a miracle at a distance. The moral significance of this and similar works of mercy is well expressed in Stalker's Life of Christ:—"His miracles were symbols of His spiritual and saving work. You have only to consider them for a moment to see that they were, as a whole, triumphs over the misery of the world. Mankind is the prey of a thousand evils, and even the frame of external nature bears the mark of some past catastrophe. The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain. This huge mass of physical evil in the lot of mankind is the effect of sin. Not that every disease and misfortune can be traced to especial sin, although some of them can. The consequences of past sin are distributed in detail over the whole race. But yet the misery of the world is the shadow of its sin. Material and moral evil, being thus intimately related, mutually illustrate each other. When He healed bodily blindness, it was a type of the healing of the inner eye; when He raised the dead, He meant to suggest that He was the Resurrection and the Life in the spiritual world as well; when He cleansed the leper, His triumph spoke of another over the leprosy of sin; when He multiplied the loaves, He followed the miracle with a discourse on the bread of life; when He stilled the storm, it was an assurance that He could speak peace to the troubled conscience. Thus His miracles were a natural and essential part of His messianic work. They were an excellent means of making Him known to the nation. They bound those whom He cured to Him with strong ties of gratitude; and without doubt, in many cases, the faith in Him as a miracle-worker led on to a higher faith. So it was in the case of His devoted follower, Mary Magdalene, out of whom He cast seven devils." And, referring to the fact that our Lord healed without entering the house, Wordsworth remarks: "Christ did not enter the centurion's house, but his servant was healed by Him, present in majesty but absent in body; so to Israel and to them alone He showed Himself in the flesh, but to the Gentiles He was preached by others." "A greater miracle of healing than this," says Bishop RYLE, "is nowhere recorded in the Gospels. Without even seeing the sufferer, without touch of hand or look of eye, our Lord restores health to a dying man by a single word. He speaks, and the sick man is cured. He commands, and the disease departs. We read of no prophet or apostle who wrought miracles in this manner. We see here the finger of God." Word and work are united in the ministry of Jesus.

Vers. 11–17. THE RAISING OF THE SON OF THE WIDOW OF NAIN.—"This narrative is one of those which clearly revealed our Lord's tenderness of heart, and the power which human grief exerted over Him. It is only related by S. Luke. The life of Jesus presented such a rich storehouse of miraculous incidents, that no one ever dreamed of giving a complete record of them. Jesus alludes to miracles performed at Chorazin, none of which are related in our Gospels. With a single exception, we are equally ignorant of all that were wrought at Bethsaida. It is very remarkable that, amongst all the miracles which are indicated summarily in our Gospels (ch. 4. 23, 40, 41; ch. 6. 18, 19, and parall.; ch. 7. 21, etc.; John 2. 23; 4. 45; 6. 1; 20. 30; 21. 25), one or two only of each class are related in detail. It appears that the most striking example of each class was chosen, and that from the first no attempt was made to preserve any detailed account of the others. For edification, which was the sole aim of the popular preaching, this was sufficient. Ten cures of lepers would say no more to faith than one"—GODET. "The unique faith of the straightforward soldier was the spark which kindled the prophetic fire. By a natural association of ideas, Jesus already saw in him the march of a vast army of like-minded soldiers of Christ (Matt. 8. 10–12). The reward of faith was followed by a miracle where no faith could have found place, or is unrecorded (Luke 7. 11). Victory over death follows victory over disease. On the next day, or shortly after, still accompanied by crowds, sailing perhaps down the lake, and then taking one of the still existing roads, Christ came to what was then a city, Nain, some twenty miles from Capernaum. Nain, in 'its green nest' on the edge of 'Little Hermon,' well deserved its descriptive name, 'the pleasant.' The name Nain still lingers over the squalid huts which mark the site. The two streams met at the gate, probably on the east, where 'the rough rock was full of sepulchral caves, which still exist.' The only Son of His mother feels for the mother of an only son—and she a widow. The body lay face upwards and hands folded on the breast, like an effigy on a cathedral sepulchre. The bier was open. Jesus came and touched it. The initiative was His own. In an instant the spirit of life returned to the dead young man. Fear falls upon the whole multitude, mourners with the tears yet upon their cheeks, and these who had now witnessed a greater triumph than any that went before. What was the spiritual link between the Divine power and the lifeless youth? Some think he died with an intense prayerful yearning for life. We would rather leave it among the unrevealed mysteries and suggested potencies of blessed hope"—VALLINGS. If there be any difference of degree, where all is miraculous, this was one of the greatest miracles of our Lord. But it was a miracle of pity. When He felt compassion, He instantly brought relief. He was the Lord, as He is sublimely described in ver. 13, a mode of description almost peculiar to S. Luke among the Evangelists. Ponder it, and parable and miracle become harmonious. Christ is the Vanquisher of Death.

Vers. 18–25. THE MESSAGE FROM THE BAPTIST. (See on Matt. 11.)—"Scripture never presents the saints as ideally faultless, and therefore with holy truthfulness never conceals any sign of their imperfection or weakness. Nothing is more natural than that the great Baptist—to whom had been granted but a partial revelation—should have felt deep anguish at the calm and noiseless advance of a kingdom for which, in his theocratic and messianic hopes, he had imagined a very different proclamation. Doubtless, too, his faith, like that of Elijah (1 Kings 19. 4), of Job in his trials (Job 3. 1), and of Jeremiah in prison (Jer. ch. 27), might be for a moment eclipsed"—C. B. The Church to-day has her miracles to show, and when men come asking for proofs of Christianity, she can answer, like her Master, The dead in sin are quickened, the blind are restored to sight, and the poor have glad tidings proclaimed to them.

22. To the poor the gospel is preached—"which is the greatest mercy, and the greatest miracle of all"—WESLEY.

24. When the messengers were departed. "He did not speak the following things in the hearing of John's disciples, lest He should seem to flatter John, or to compliment him into an adherence to his former testimony. To avoid all suspicion of this kind, He deferred His commendation of him till the messengers were gone, and then delivered it to the people, to prevent all imaginations, as if John were wavering in his judgment, and had sent the two disciples for his own rather than their satisfaction"—WESLEY.

28. There is not a greater prophet than John—"a greater teacher. But he that is least in the kingdom of God—the least teacher whom I send forth"—WESLEY.

29. And all the people. "Our Lord continues His discourse. Justified God—owned

His wisdom and mercy in thus calling them to repentance, and preparing them for Him that was to come"—WESLEY.

30. But the Pharisees and scribes—"the good, learned, honourable men—made void the counsel—the gracious design—of God toward them. They disappointed all the methods of His love, and would receive no benefit from them"—WESLEY.

32. They are like children sitting in the market place—"so froward and perverse, that no contrivance can be found to please them. It is plain our Lord means that they were like the children complained of, not like those that made the complaint"—WESLEY.

35. But wisdom is justified by all her children. "The children of wisdom are those who are truly wise—wise unto salvation. The wisdom of God in all these dispensations, these various methods of calling sinners to repentance, is owned and heartily approved by all these"—WESLEY.

Vers. 36–50. JESUS IN THE HOUSE OF SIMON.—This incident is related only by S. Luke. It is not the anointing at the house of Simon, spoken of in Matt. 26. 6–13; Mark 14. 3–9; John 12. 2–9. For the two similar anointings were—(1) At different places: this one in Galilee; that at Bethany, near Jerusalem. (2) At different times: this one in the middle of His ministry; that at the close. (3) With different people: this at the house of Simon the Pharisee; that at the house of Simon who had been a leper. Simon was a very common name; at least fifteen persons of that name are mentioned in the New Testament. (4) By different women: this was a woman of bad life; that by the pure Mary, the sister of Lazarus.

36. And one of the Pharisees asked Him to eat with him. "Let the candour with which our Lord accepted this invitation, and His gentleness and prudence at this ensnaring entertainment, teach us to mingle the wisdom of the serpent with the innocence and sweetness of the dove. Let us neither absolutely refuse all favours, nor resent all neglects, from those whose friendship is at best very doubtful, and their intimacy by no means safe"—WESLEY.

37. A woman—"not the same with Mary of Bethany, who anointed Him six days before His last Passover"—WESLEY.

40. And Jesus said, Simon, I have somewhat to say to thee. "So tender and courteous an address does our Lord use even to a proud, censorious Pharisee!"—WESLEY.

43. Which of them will love him most? "Neither of them will love him at all before he has forgiven them. An insolvent debtor, till he is forgiven, does not love, but fly his creditor"—WESLEY.

44. Thou gavest Me no water. "It was customary with the Jews to show respect and kindness to their welcome guests, by saluting them with a kiss, by washing their feet, and anointing their heads with oil, or some fine ointment"—WESLEY.

47. Those many sins of hers are forgiven; therefore she loveth much—"the fruit of her having had much forgiven. It should be carefully observed here, that her love is mentioned as the effect and evidence, not the cause, of her pardon. She knew that much had been forgiven her; and therefore she loved much"—WESLEY.

50. Thy faith hath saved thee—"not thy love. Love is salvation"—WESLEY.

THE PHARISEE.—One of the Pharisees. The name is given in ver. 40. Our Lord did not often pronounce names. He used race-words (man, woman) to indicate the brotherhood of man and the universality of His gospel of hope. Simon was "one of the better class of Pharisees, which had a certain measure of respect for our Lord's teaching, and were half inclined (comp. ver. 39) to acknowledge Him as a prophet. Of such S. John tells us (ch. 12. 42) there were many among the chief rulers. We find another example of the same kind in ch. 11. 37"—PLUMPTRE. "We are still in that epoch of transition, when the rupture between our Lord and the Pharisees, although already far advanced, was not complete. A member of this party could still invite Him without difficulty. It has been supposed that this invitation was given with a hostile intention. But this Pharisee's own reflection (ver. 39) shows his moral state. He was hesitating between the holy impression which Jesus made upon him, and the antipathy which his caste felt against Him. Jesus speaks to him in a tone so friendly and familiar, that it is difficult to suppose him animated by malevolent feelings. Further, ver. 42 proves unanswerably that he had received some spiritual benefit from Jesus, and that he felt a certain amount of gratitude towards Him; and ver. 47 says expressly that he loved Jesus, although feebly"—GODET. Let us learn to distinguish between position and principle; between classes and individuals. There were noble Pharisees and upright publicans. Our Lord went to their houses as the Friend of publicans and sinners. "This exquisite narrative," as FARRAR says, 'is peculiar to S. Luke, and well illustrates that conception of the universality and free gift of grace which predominates in this gospel, as in S. Paul." But Simon the Pharisee was not large-hearted enough to receive this at present. Hence there was a measure of censoriousness in the tone, if not in the language, when he said within himself, This man, if he were a prophet, would have perceived who and what manner of woman this is which toucheth Him, that she is a sinner. And Bishop RYLE gives it modern-day application: "We shall do well to remember the case of this Pharisee. It is quite possible to have a decent form of religion, and yet to know nothing of the gospel of Christ; to treat Christianity with respect, and yet to be utterly blind about its cardinal doctrines; to behave with great correctness and propriety at church, and yet to hate justification by faith, and salvation by grace, with a deadly hatred. Do we really feel affection toward the Lord Jesus? Can we say, 'Lord, Thou knowest all things, Thou knowest that I love Thee'? Have we cordially embraced His whole gospel? Are we willing to enter heaven side by side with the chief of sinners, and to owe all our hopes to free grace? These are questions which we ought to consider. If we cannot answer them satisfactorily, we are in no respect better than Simon the Pharisee; and our Lord might say to us, I have somewhat to say unto thee." We must not imagine that the Pharisaic spirit is dead with the Pharisees. The New Testament narratives still test our loyalty to conscience and Christ.

THE SINNER.—This woman has long been identified with Mary Magdalene. The identification is not certain. So that the question, "Who was she?" must be left unanswered. That she entered the dining-hall is not surprising, as in the East the houses were practically open, and our Lord's invitations partook of the nature of public banquets. We must recollect, in order to understand the scene which is here described, that the guests lay with their heads turned toward the table in the centre, their feet being turned away from the table, and toward the outer part of the room, where servants waited. The sandals would be laid aside, and the feet of each guest would be bare, The woman would, therefore, be able to approach unseen, to stand at the feet of Jesus, and to anoint them while He was engaged in conversation. (Read vers. 37, 38.) "As she bent over His feet her tears began to fall on them, perhaps accidentally at first, and she wiped them off with the long dishevelled hair, which showed her shame and anguish, and then, in her joy and gratitude in finding herself unrepulsed, she poured her unguent over them" —FARRAR. "She might have been drawn by the ineffable pity and tenderness of His words and looks, perhaps by the very taunt which suggested that He was the Friend of Sinners" —PLUMPTRE. One of our own poets has put the scene into rhythmic form—

"She sat and wept beside His feet. The weight
Of sin oppressed her heart; for all the blame
And the poor malice of the worldly shame
To her were past, extinct, and out of date;
Only the sin remained—the leprous state.
She would be melted by the heat of love,
By fires far fiercer than are blown to prove
And purge the silver ore adulterate.
She sat and wept, and with her untressed hair
She wiped the feet she was so blest to touch;
And He wiped off the soiling of despair
From her sweet soul, because she loved so much."

THE SAVIOUR.—Read straight through the sublimely simple parable of forgiveness and pity (vers. 39-50).

Simon and the sinner were both debtors and bankrupt. They had nothing to pay with—even if they had the wish to pay. Forgiveness was full and frank. Gratitude must find expression, and if it be keen will carve its own methods. The alabaster box of Mary's devotion is here present, and in addition love expresses itself in the unknown woman's strange bath of tears. She is forgiven not because she loved: being forgiven, she loved much. "Her love and her forgiveness were mingled with each other in mutual exchange. She loved because she was forgiven: she was forgiven because she loved. Her faith and her love were one: it was faith working by love, and the love proved the faith"—FARRAR. "Her love was the effect of her forgiveness, not the cause,—the consequence of her forgiveness, not the condition,—the result of her forgiveness, not the reason,—the fruit of her forgiveness, not the root"—RYLE. "What is wanting to the best of us, in order to love much, is not sin, but the knowledge of it"—GODET. Comp. with this parable that of the uncompassionate servant, Matt. 28. 23-35, and we may add with Jacobus, "Observe the four steps in Christ's revealing Himself to this penitent believing sinner—(1) Silently He accepted her coming. He knew her heart. (2) The light of His countenance He turned to her, and encouraged her. (3) He spoke to her, especially His assuring word of forgiveness. (4) He sent her away in the peace of faith and Divine love." In the old slavery days, a gentleman from the North, out of compassion, bought a slave on the auction block in the South, and took him to his own home. The man thenceforth spent his life in working for the one who had ransomed him. He was free, but would never forsake his new master. "He redeemed me," was his answer to all inquiries. In every coloured man's house in the United States, whether it be a cabin in the swamp, or a room in the city, there is a portrait of Abraham Lincoln. One of the many descriptive names of Jesus is Christ, our Redeemer.

CHAPTER VIII.

Vers. 1-3. THE MINISTERING WOMEN.—It came to pass soon afterwards. "The expression marks a new phase, a new departure in Christ's mode of action. Hitherto He had made Capernaum His headquarters; regarded it as 'His own city,' and not gone to any great distance from it. At this period—the exact beginning of which is only vaguely marked—He began a wider range of wandering and of missions"—C. B. Certain women. S. Luke dwells on the graciousness and tenderness of Christ to women, as a class despised and neglected in the East. Mary of Magdala. She has been generally identified with "the woman which was a sinner" of the previous chapter. "Probably the person mentioned in the last chapter"—WESLEY.

Joanna. Mentioned only in ch. 24. 10.

Chuza. Some have thought he was the "nobleman" of John 4. 46. Ministered of their substance. This throws light upon our Lord's means of livelihood. He emphasises His poverty and dependence. "For our sakes He became poor."

Vers. 4-15. THE SOWER.—(See on, Matt. 13, 1-23.) S. Luke here only reports the parable of the sower, and its interpretation. S. Mark adds that of the seed growing secretly (Mark 4. 26, 29), and that of the grain of mustard seed (ch. 4. 30-32; Luke 13. 18-21). S. Matthew (ch. 13. 3-53) gives his memorable group of seven parables.

5. Trodden underfoot. This touch is found in S. Luke only.

8. S. Luke passes over the growing and increasing of the fruit, and its various degrees of productiveness.

10. Mysteries. Mystery is now generally used to imply something which we cannot understand; in the New Testament it always means something once hidden and now revealed. (Col. 1. 26; 1 Tim. 3. 16; Matt. 11. 25, 26; Rev. 17. 5.) "The parables," it has been said, "resembled the pillar of fire, which was to the Egyptians a pillar of cloud." They instructed and softened some; they hardened others. "A parable," Lord BACON said, "has a double use: it tends to veil, and it tends to illustrate a truth; in the latter case it seems designed to teach, in the former to conceal."

12. Taketh away ("Snatches"). (Matt. 13. 19.) "It is done in a moment by a smile at the end of the sermon; by a silly criticism at the church door; by a foolish gossip on the way home. These are 'the fowls of the air' whom the evil one uses in this task"—FARRAR.

15. Who keep it—"not like the highway side." And bring forth fruit—"not like the thorny ground." With perseverance—"not like the stony"—WESLEY.

Vers. 16-18. PRACTICAL CONCLUSION.—16. No man having lighted a candle. "As if He had said, And let your good fruit appear openly"—WESLEY.

17. For nothing is hid. "Strive not to conceal it at all; for you can conceal nothing long"—WESLEY.

18. "The word commonly translated seemeth, wherever it occurs, does not weaken, but greatly strengthens, the sense"—WESLEY.

Vers. 19-21. VISIT OF THE MOTHER AND BRETHREN OF JESUS.—Joseph is never mentioned after the scene in the temple. His brethren—"James, Joses, Simon, Judas." Our Lord's answer (ver. 21) signifies, not that family ties are in His eyes of no value, but that they are subordinate. He makes no mention of father; this place belongs in His eyes, to God alone. The question whether the brethren of our Lord were actual brothers, children of Joseph and Mary, or cousins of the Lord, is an open one.

Vers. 22-25. THE STILLING OF THE STORM. (See Matt. 8. 23-27.)—This miracle fixed the attention upon the Lord: it strengthened the faith of the disciples; it held up before them a sensible image of that which would afterwards befall them. The young Church, at whose head they stood, would be often threatened, but as often delivered.

Vers. 26-39. THE DEMONIAC HEALED. (See on, Matt. 8. 28-34; Mark 5. 1-21.)—To the storm on the sea succeeds the contest with the world of spirits. Christ came to destroy the powers of evil.

29. For many times it had caught him—"therefore our compassionate Lord made the more haste to cast him out"—WESLEY.

31. The abyss—"that is, the bottomless pit."—WESLEY.

32. To enter into the swine—"not that they were any easier in the swine than out of them. Had it been so, they would not so soon have dislodged themselves, by destroying the herd"—WESLEY.

Vers. 40-56. THE DAUGHTER OF JAIRUS, AND THE WOMAN WITH THE ISSUE OF BLOOD. (See Matt. 9. 18-26; Mark 5. 22-43.)

52. She is not dead, but sleepeth. "Her soul is not separated finally from the body; and this short separation is rather to be called sleep than death"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER IX.

Vers. 1-6. THE MISSION OF THE TWELVE. (See on Matt. 10.)

4. There abide, and thence depart—"that is, stay in that house till ye leave the city"—WESLEY.

"There is something greater than preaching—that is, to make preachers; there is something greater than performing miracles—this is, to impart the power to perform them. It is this new stage which the work of Jesus here reaches"—GODET. "These verses contain our Lord's instructions to His twelve apostles, when He sent them forth the first time to preach the gospel. The passage is one which throws much light on the work of Christian ministers in every age. No doubt the miraculous powers which the apostles possessed made their position very unlike that of any other body of men in the Church. No doubt, in many respects they stood alone, and had no successors. Yet the words of our Lord in this place must not be confined entirely to the apostles. They contain deep wisdom for Christian teachers and preachers for all time"—RYLE.

7-9. THE FEAR OF HEROD.—Fuller accounts are in the other Gospels, but S. Luke alone has preserved the detail, that Herod sought to have a private interview with Jesus.

7. It was said by some—"and soon after by Herod himself"—WESLEY.

8. That Elijah had appeared. "He could not rise again, because he did not die"—WESLEY.

Vers. 10–17. THE FEEDING OF THE FIVE THOUSAND.—This narrative is the only one in the entire Galilean ministry which is common to the four Evangelists. (See on the parallel passages in Matt. 14. 13–21; Mark 6. 30–44; John 6. 1–14.) "What is that multitude which surrounded our Lord in the wilderness, poor and helpless, and destitute of food? It is a figure of mankind. The whole miracle is a picture. It is a great acted parable of the glorious gospel"—RYLE.

Vers. 18–27. THE CROSS FORESEEN.—This conversation is reported also by S. Matthew and S. Mark—(1) "the Christ, (2) the suffering Christ, (3) the disciples of the suffering Christ"—GODET. The confession of S. Peter is differently expressed in the three narratives: "the Christ the Son of the living God" (Matthew); "the Christ" (Mark); the Christ of God (Luke).

18. Apart—"from the multitude. And He asked them—when He had done praying, during which they probably stayed at a distance"—WESLEY.

22. Saying. Ye must prepare for a scene far different from this.

23. Let him deny himself and take up his cross. "The necessity of this duty has been shown in many places; the extent of it is specified here, daily—therefore that day is lost wherein no cross is taken up"—WESLEY.

Vers. 28–36. THE TRANSFIGURATION.—Our Lord had reached the neighbourhood of Cæsarea Philippi, the northernmost point of His wanderings, when He asked the important question, and spoke of the great renunciation (see verses preceding). The primary reference of ver. 27 was to the three apostles who were to witness the Transfiguration. It was again fulfilled at the Resurrection and Ascension; and in the person of S. John when he lived to witness the close of the old dispensation, on the destruction of Jerusalem. Christ will come again, and then every eye shall see Him. For one thousand years the Mount of Transfiguration was supposed to be Tabor, but modern research decides in favour of Hermon, at whose foot lies Cæsarea Philippi and the sources of the Jordan. Its top is partially covered with snow. Its name Hermon means "a peak," but the Sidonians call it Sirion, "glittering," as a coat of mail in the sun. Jesus took His three favoured disciples and went up into a mountain to pray. While He prayed He was glorified. Suddenly two heavenly visitors appeared and talked with Him, and the theme was His approaching death. All this is easily written, quickly read. But surely it requires a great Behold—an index-finger to arrest our attention, and deepen our awe. We ought to take off the shoes of our earthliness, for the place on which we stand is holy ground. Heaven and earth are here united. Christ is glorified before our eyes. Here, as so often in the life of Christ, it is necessary to read the narrative straight through, and then pause to let it make its own deep impression upon the mind. For Bishop RYLE truly says: "The event described in these verses, commonly called 'the Transfiguration,' is one of the most remarkable in the history of our Lord's earthly ministry. It is one of those passages which we should always read with peculiar thankfulness. It lifts a corner of the veil which hangs over the world to come, and throws light on some of the deepest truths of our religion." One hesitates to analyse or interpret a scene like this. It seems almost sacrilege. It is like pulling a rose to pieces, so much perishes. But we may remind ourselves—

1. Of the connection between the path of duty and the path of glory.—As He was praying, the fashion of His countenance was altered. It was night—His hour of prayer. It would confuse us to ask, Did He go to be transfigured? Or did He go to pray and was then transfigured? The mystery of the two natures reappears here. He prayed, and while He prayed He was transfigured. S. Luke lays especial stress upon the prayers of Jesus. "The fact," says PLUMPTRE, "is profoundly significant. It was in that act of communion with His Father that the Divine glory flowed out into visible brightness. Transcendent as the manifestation was, it has its lower analogies in the radiance which made the face of Stephen as the face of an angel (Acts 6. 15); yet more in the glory which shone in the face of Moses when he came down from the mount (Ex. 34. 29); in some faint measure, in what may be called the metamorphic power of prayer which invests features that have no form of comeliness with the rapture of devout ecstasy." What is true of Him is true of us. Prayer has a transforming, transfiguring force. What has been called "the solar look" which is upon the face of devout worshippers is the outward and visible form of the inward and spiritual change that passes upon every true Christian. We gather glory when we commune with the Source of light and life. There is a depth of utterance in these simple words so often spoken: "Let us pray." The narrative reminds us also—

2. That character fits for service.—Only the three disciples—those who were with Him by the bedside of Jairus' daughter and in the garden of agony—saw His glory in the Mount of Transfiguration. These pillars of the Church were the eyewitnesses of His majesty. The man of enthusiasm—S. Peter; the disciple of love—S. John; the first martyr to conviction—S. James—ascended the mount. All are not fit for high places, even though they be true disciples. The same authority which chose Abraham, Jacob, Moses, David, Hezekiah, Cyrus, and S. Paul, separated to special service, and lifted to high honour, Peter, James, and John. "At the first glance it would seem as if Jesus exercised some favouritism among His disciples. But this is not the fact. He simply advanced to higher studies those who, by faithfulness in the lower, had made it possible for them to understand and use the higher. These three were the most advanced in the knowledge of Jesus and His kingdom, and were thus fitted to receive new revelations of truth, new means of usefulness, new hopes and visions. Only to those who have been faithful in the lesser things comes the call to come up higher and to receive the wider kingdom"—PELOUBET. We may also ponder—

3. The mystery of the change.—Resolve it we cannot till we are changed into the same image in heaven. S. Matthew compares the whiteness of His robes to "the light"; S. Mark to "the snow"; and S. Luke to "the lightning." They are conscious that they are trying to speak unspeakable words; to describe the indescribable. A change passed upon Him. He came from God; He was going to God. Heaven was His home; to Him its glory was natural. "S. Matthew says He 'was transfigured before them.' The original word is elsewhere in the New Testament rendered 'transformed' (as Rom. 12. 2; 2 Cor. 3. 18), and is used of a spiritual change. It is a change not of substance, but of quality and appearance. The fashion of His countenance was altered by being lighted with radiance both from without and from within"—ALFORD. "The infinite fulness of the Spirit was poured out over His whole being; the heavenly glory of His nature, which was still concealed under His earthly appearance, now broke forth"—LANGE. The Baptism, the Temptation, and the Transfiguration were turning-points in the life of Jesus. The Transfiguration was the anticipation of the glory of heaven.

4. How closely heaven and earth are united.—Moses, Elias, and Jesus were on the Mount. The great lawgiver and the great prophet, of whom we are told that God buried the one (Deut. 34. 6), and the other had passed to heaven in a chariot of fire (2 Kings 2. 1). The two were the chief representatives of the old dispensation. They were talking of His "decease" (R.V. margin, "departure"), His exodus: an unusual word for death, occurring again in this connection in 2 Pet. 1. 15. It is, as Bengel says, a very weighty word, involving His Passion, Cross, Death, Resurrection, and Ascension. Here we have a glimpse into the other world. The dead are not lost, only gone before. They are not alone. They are not ignorant of or indifferent to our earthly life. Moses and Elijah knew Christ: they must have known each other. If they knew each other, may not we?

31. In glory—"like Christ with whom they talked"—WESLEY.

32. They saw His glory—"the very same expression in which it is described by S. John (ch. 1. 14); and by S. Peter (2 Pet. 1. 16)"—WESLEY.

34. A cloud came and overshadowed them all. And they—"the apostles, feared, while they—Moses and Elijah—entered into the cloud—which took them away"—WESLEY.

Vers. 37–48. THE DEMONIAC BOY. THE LESSON OF MEEKNESS.—37. On the next day. Proving that the Transfiguration took place at night. (See ver. 32.) A great multitude met Him. S. Mark records their amazement at seeing Him. He may have had some lingering traces of the Transfiguration glory upon Him. (See the case of Moses, Ex. 34. 29–35.)

39. A spirit taketh him. "This was the supernatural aspect of his deafness, epilepsy, and madness. S. Matthew gives the natural aspect when he says, 'he is a lunatic, and sore vexed' etc. (ch. 17. 15.)"—C. B. S. Mark adds three items to the description of the malady—dumbness, grinding of the teeth, and wasting away. (See the details and the memorable cry of the poor father in Mark 9. 21–24.)

43. All were marvelling. The power of the miracle rekindled some of their messianic enthusiasm.

44. Let these sayings sink down into your ears—"that is, consider them deeply. In joy remember the cross. So wisely does our Lord balance praise with sufferings"—WESLEY.

This is the second announcement of our Lord's Passion.

45. They understood not. The blindness of the disciples seems to us remarkable, but we are apt to read into the New Testament the result of nineteen centuries of teaching.

46. And there arose a reasoning among them. "This kind of reasoning always arose at the most improper times that could be imagined"—WESLEY.

Which of them should be greatest? Jealousy had been awakened by the recent distinctions bestowed on Peter, James, and John.

47. Jesus saw the reasoning of their heart. "He asked the subject of their dispute, and when shame kept them silent, He sat down, and, calling a little child, made the Twelve stand round while He taught this solemn lesson"—FARRAR. Legend has thought that this child was the future martyr, S. Ignatius. This is very doubtful.

48. And said to them. "If ye would be truly great, humble yourselves to the meanest offices. He that is least in his own eyes shall be great indeed"—WESLEY.

On the Transfiguration mount, pre-eminence had been given to Peter, James, and John. S. Peter, too, had been spoken of in connection with the rocky foundation on which the Church is built. The human heart is the same in all ages. It easily harbours revenge, or flames out in anger, according to the exact and vivid account of S. Mark. He Himself first asks after the cause of their dispute, which they scarcely venture to name to Him. They had allowed a question which should have been driven from them like a wild animal, to find a home in their little circle. The links that bound them to each other and to their Lord were snapping. He called the Twelve to Him. And then He took a child and set him in the midst of them (S. Mark). Our Lord's point of comparison is the child's humility, by which the mind is saved from vain rivalry and the will from stubborness. Whosoever shall receive this little child in My name, receiveth Me: and whosoever shall receive Me, receiveth Him that sent Me: for he that is least among you all, the same is great. Our Sunday and day schools, our schools for ragged children, our orphanages and refuges, have grown out of our Lord's association of child-life with Himself, and with the spirit of His religion. We are to receive the children in His name. We are to receive the child-spirit, that we may become true followers of Him who was meek and lowly in heart; who, when He was reviled, reviled not again.

Vers. 49–50. EXCLUSIVENESS REBUKED.—The link of connection with the previous incident lies in the words in My name (ver. 48). As to that, said John, a young and impulsive disciple, we saw one casting out demons in Thy name, and we forbade him, because he followeth not with us. Were we wrong? Ye were wrong; for he that is not against you is for you. A partial explanation is given in S. Mark's narrative: "There is no man which shall do a mighty work in My name, and be able quickly to speak evil of Me." If he does good, is it not fair to assume that he is good? And if such a person cannot be supposed to be "against us," you are to hold him "for us." "Sometimes indifference is opposition; sometimes neutrality is aid." On another occasion, Christ had said what seemed to be the reverse of this, viz., "He that is not with Me is against Me; and he that gathereth not with Me scattereth" (Matt. 12. 30). But the two truths are complementary. "He that is not with Me is against Me." By this we judge ourselves. "He that is not against you is for you." By this we judge others. Christ does not say the man should not; He does not say he will not ultimately follow with them. Attempts have been made to bring all Christ's sheep into one fold. They have failed. (See the noble spirit of Moses described in Num. 11. 24–29.)

Vers. 51–56. REVENGE SHAMED.—It came to pass, when the days were well nigh come that He should be received up, He steadfastly set His face to go to Jerusalem. The connection of time is here broken. Some of the parables recorded in S. Matthew were spoken between vers. 50 and 51. "Received up." This majestic expression is in the New Testament only employed with reference to our Lord's Ascension. In the first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, "the day that He was received up" is spoken of as a new era in history. And S. Paul, writing to Timothy, and describing the mystery of godliness, lays emphasis upon our Lord's being "received up into glory." His way lay through Samaria. But the Samaritans would not receive Him. His face was set towards Jerusalem, and between Jew and Samaritan there was the bitterest hatred. The anger of James and John flamed forth. They loved their Master. They had just seen His transfiguration glory. They had had a glimpse of the glorified Elijah. They recalled his fiery zeal, and said, Lord, wilt Thou that we bid fire to come down from heaven and consume them? But He turned and rebuked them. Ye know not what spirit ye are of. The Son of Man came not to destroy men's lives, but to save. The answer reminds us of the Child's Prayer—"Gentle Jesus, meek and mild." It is a golden sentence of Tillotson, "Let us never do anything for religion which is contrary to religion."

51. The days were fulfilled that He should be received up—"that is, the time of His Passion was now at hand. S. Luke looks through this, to the glory which was to follow. He steadfastly set His face—without fear of His enemies, or shame of the cross (Heb. 12. 2)"—WESLEY.

52. He sent messengers to make ready "a lodging and needful entertainment for Him and those with Him"—WESLEY.

53. His face was as though He would go to Jerusalem. "It plainly appeared He was going to worship at the Temple, and thereby, in effect, to condemn the Samaritan worship at Mount Gerizim"—WESLEY.

54. As Elijah did. "At or near this very place, which might put it in the minds of the apostles to make the motion now, rather than at any other time or place where Christ had received the like affront"—WESLEY.

55. Ye know not what manner of spirit—"the spirit of Christianity is. It is not a spirit of wrath and vengeance, but of peace and gentleness and love"—WESLEY.

Vers. 57–62. THE THREE DISCIPLES.—58. But Jesus said to him—"first understand the terms. Consider on what conditions thou art to follow Me"—WESLEY.

61. Suffer me first to bid them farewell that are in my house—"as Elisha did, after Elijah had called him from his plough (1 Kings 19. 19), to which our Lord's answer seems to allude"—WESLEY.

62. Is fit for the kingdom of God—"either to propagate or to receive it"—WESLEY.

FOUR TEMPERAMENTS. — (1) The choleric (vers. 51–56)—James and John desiring fire from heaven. The Sons of Thunder would borrow the aid of lightning. Religion controls temperament. S. John became the beloved disciple, and S. James laid down his life for Christ. (2) The sanguine (vers. 57, 58)—I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest.

He had not counted the cost. (3) The melancholic (vers. 59, 60)—Suffer me to go and bury my father. The former was precipitate; this procrastinating. (4) The phlegmatic (vers. 61, 62)—Suffer me to bid farewell. This man was irresolute.

CHAPTER X.

Vers. 1-24. THE SENDING OF THE SEVENTY DISCIPLES.—"Though Jesus proceeded slowly from city to city, and from village to village, He had but little time to devote to each place. It was therefore of great moment that He should everywhere find His arrival prepared for, minds awakened, hearts expectant of His visit. This precaution was the more important, because this first visit was to be His last. Accordingly, as He had sent the Twelve into the northern parts of Galilee at the period when He was visiting them for the last time, He now summons a more numerous body of His adherents, to execute a similar mission in the southern regions of the province. They thus serve under His eyes, in a manner, the apprenticeship to their future calling. The recital of this mission embraces—(1) the sending (vers. 1-16), (2) the return (vers. 17-24). The essential matter always is the discourse of Jesus, in which His profoundest emotions find expression"—GODET. "The verses before us relate a circumstance which is not recorded by any Gospel writer except by S. Luke. That circumstance is our Lord's appointment of seventy disciples to go before His face, in addition to the twelve apostles. We do not know the names of any of these disciples. Their subsequent history has not been revealed to us. But the instructions with which they are sent forth are deeply interesting, and deserve the close attention of all ministers and teachers of the gospel"—RYLE. It has been assumed that, after the accomplishment of their charge, the Seventy were absorbed in the wider circle of our Lord's followers. For, as VAN DOREN remarks, "The kingdom of Christ is aggressive, progressive, expansive. First twelve apostles; then seventy preachers; then five hundred brethren; then thousands." The twelve apostles had been chosen long before, and sent out once on a similar mission through Galilee. Seventy (or perhaps seventy-two—see R.V. margin) were sent forth. The number had reference to the elders of Moses (Num. 11. 16); the number of the Sanhedrim; and the Jewish belief (derived from Gen. 10.) as to the number of the nations of the world. Between Old Testament and New there are many points of comparison and interest. There is a mystical completeness in the number. Both 70 and 72 are multiples of numbers very frequently used in sacred symbolism—7 times 10 and 6 times 12. Fancy has also recalled the seventy palm trees at Elim. Many of the seventy may have been among the one hundred and twenty of Acts 1. 15. The word translated "appointed" is only found in one other place in the New Testament (Acts 1. 24), where it is rendered "shew." The word signifies to mark out or appoint to an office by some outward sign. At the time of writing, the president of the Conference and others are appointing ministers by the sign of an ordination service.

Vers. 1, 2. TWO BY TWO.—After these things the Lord appointed seventy others, and sent them two and two before His face into every city and place. He had at an earlier period sent forth the Twelve, and said, Into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not. Not so to the seventy evangelists whom He now sends forth. When he talked with the woman of Samaria, He saw the harvest there ready for the sickle. In His parable of the good Samaritan He reproves narrowness. The world was now to be the parish of apostles and evangelists—missionaries and martyrs of the Cross. Note the majesty of the word LORD in this connection, the Lord appointed. The word meant to show by raising aloft, like a torch; to appoint by some outward sign. (Comp. ver. 3, I send.) They were Christ's ambassadors. He saith to one, "Go," and he goeth; and to another, "Come," and he cometh. He sent them two and two before His face. For mutual aid, friendly counsel, and helpful sympathy. God led Israel out of Egypt by the hand of Moses and Aaron. Joshua and Caleb, Paul and Barnabas, were united together. John the Baptist sent two disciples to Jesus. The fancy of the early Church saw, or thought it saw, many other reasons. The testimony of two is true. They were to preach out of two—the Law and the Gospel; the love of two—God and our neighbour; to preach by two—doctrine and good life; to save two—body and soul; to join two—heaven and earth, God and man.

2. Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would thrust forth labourers—"for God alone can do this; He alone can qualify and commission men for this work"—WESLEY.

3. AS LAMBS AMONG WOLVES.—The instructions which our Lord gave the Seventy closely resemble those which He had issued to the Twelve. They are briefer as referring to a more transitory office; they omit the restriction then laid down, and they hardly bestow such miraculous power. He said unto them, The harvest is plenteous, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He send forth labourers into His harvest. Go your ways, behold, I send you forth. Prayer and labour must go together. "We are labourers together with God"—God's fellow-workers the Revised Version has it. "Pray and work" was carved in Latin on a peasant's house in the Vierland. "It must be French," said a neighbour's wife, as Dr. Wichern stood looking at the legend, "but you know it just means—

'With this hand work, and with the other pray,
And God will bless them both from day to day."

The glorious company of the apostles; the goodly fellowship of the prophets; the noble army of martyrs; and the holy Church throughout all the world, have united these two things — prayer and toil. I send you forth as lambs in the midst of wolves. Go. I send you. Here is authority. Here is inspiration. For Christ goes with us when He sends us. One has called this Christ's "safe-conduct," as when a general permits the bearer of a message to pass through his lines. "As sheep in the midst of wolves." Innocent and harmless in the midst of a cold, unfriendly, and cruel world. Naturalists describe wolves as crafty, greedy, ravenous, fierce, and of a quick smell. They dwell in forests, and hunt in packs. When hungry they will fall on man and beast. Under Diocletian, 17,000 Christians are said to have been slain in one month. S. Paul fell into the hands of Nero. All the rest of the apostles are reported to have died by the hands of tyrants, save only S. John. In our own national history blood has often been shed in the name of religion. Martyr fires are not now lighted, but they who well do their duty must count upon opposition and misrepresentation.

4. AN EMPTY PURSE.—Carry no purse, no wallet, no shoes, and salute no man on the way. The confidence of those who would be servants of Christ is put to the test. Shepherds and travellers not only carried money in their purse, but victuals in their wallet. But those who travelled in Christ's name, the shepherds of His flock, were to trust in those whose hearts God had touched. They were to believe that He who feedeth the birds will not fail His children. They must travel, too, in haste. Eastern forms of civility were very tedious. As they lived in the street, and, thanks to a bountiful Providence, had a harvest without excessive toil, they had time to spend upon trifles. But Christ taught the earnestness of life; the value of decision and action. Salute no man by the way. "The salutations usual among the Jews took up much time. But these had so much work to do in so short a space, that they had not a moment to spare"—WESLEY.

Vers. 5-12. RECEIVED OR REJECTED.—Into whatsoever house ye shall enter, first say, Peace be to this house. If a son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon him; but if not, it shall turn to you again. In that same house remain. The labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house. Like would rather gather to like. Where welcomed, there they should remain until they moved forward. If rejected, let them enter elsewhere. The house suggests the city. Into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat; heal the sick; and say, The kingdom of God is come nigh. If they receive you not, wipe off the dust from your feet. They might fail. But He had outwardly failed. (Vers. 12-16.)

5, 6. And into whatsoever house ye shall enter, first say, Peace be to this house. And if a son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon him; but if not, it shall turn to you again. "Peace" is the usual Oriental salutation. "A son of peace" is a Hebraism for a man of peaceful disposition.

7-9. And in that same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give. The labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house. Into whatsoever city ye enter, eat such things as are set before you. Heal the sick. Say, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you. Neither were they to refuse hospitality from false delicacy, nor to be discontented with it and search for luxury. The minister of Christ is a pilgrim of the invisible.

10-12. Into whatsoever city ye shall enter, and they receive you not, shake off the dust from your feet. It shall be more tolerable for Sodom than for that city. The act was symbolical. (See Acts 13. 51; 18. 6.) The words "in that day" are left vague. "The cities that stood out, in the history of the world, as the most conspicuous for their infamy, were yet less guilty (as sinning less against light and knowledge) than those who rejected the messengers of the King"—PLUMPTRE. Christ has work for us to do. We are to go before His face. Our business is to be faithful, and leave the results to God.

11. The kingdom of God is at hand—"though ye will not receive it"—WESLEY.

13. Woe to thee, Chorazin. "The same declaration Christ had made some time before. By repeating it now, he warns the Seventy not to lose time by going to those cities"—WESLEY.

Vers. 17-20. THE PLEDGE OF VICTORY.—They went as bidden, and returned conquerors. Lord, even the demons are subject unto us in Thy name. It was matter of rejoicing. But success is dangerous. To correct their error, He rejoiced with them. I beheld Satan fallen as lightning. He knew their success. He saw the ultimate victory. He gave them increased authority. And then added, Rejoice (most) that your names are written in heaven.

18. I beheld Satan—"that is, when ye went forth, I saw the kingdom of Satan, which was highly exalted, swiftly and suddenly cast down"—WESLEY.

19. I give you power—"that is, I continue it to you—and nothing shall hurt you—neither the power nor the subtlety of Satan"—WESLEY.

20. "Rejoice not so much that the devils are subject to you, as that your names are written in heaven. Reader, so is thine, if thou art a true believer. God grant it may never be blotted out!"—WESLEY.

21. Lord of heaven and earth—"in both of which Thy kingdom stands, and that of Satan is destroyed. That Thou hast hid these things. He rejoiced not in the destruction of the wise and prudent, but in the display of the riches of God's grace to others, in such a manner as reserves to Him the entire glory of our salvation, and hides pride from man"—WESLEY.

22. Who the Son is—"essentially one with the Father. Who the Father is—how great, how wise, how good!"—WESLEY. (See on Matt. 11. 20–30.)

Vers. 25–37. THE PARABLE OF THE GOOD SAMARITAN.—27. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God—"that is, thou shalt unite all the faculties of thy soul to render Him the most intelligent and sincere, the most affectionate and resolute, service. We may safely rest in this general sense of these important words, if we are not able to fix the particular meaning of every single word. If we desire to do this, perhaps the heart, which is a general expression, may be explained by the three following: with all thy soul, with the warmest affection; with all thy strength, the most vigorous efforts of thy will; and with all thy mind, or understanding; in the most wise and reasonable manner thou canst, thy understanding guiding thy will and affections"—WESLEY.

28. Thou hast answered right; this do, and thou shalt live. "Here is no irony, but a deep and weighty truth. He, and he alone, shall live for ever, who thus loves God and his neighbour in the present life"—WESLEY.

29. To justify himself—"that is, to show he had done this"—WESLEY.

30. From Jerusalem to Jericho. "The road from Jerusalem to Jericho (about eighteen miles from it) lay through desert and rocky places; so many robberies and murders were committed therein, that it was called 'the bloody way.' Jericho was situated in a valley; hence the phrase of going down to it. About twelve thousand priests and Levites dwelt there, who all attended the service of the Temple"—WESLEY.

31. "The common translation is, By chance, which is full of gross improprieties. For if we speak strictly, there is no such thing in the universe as either chance or fortune. A certain priest came down that way, and passed by on the other side. And both he and the Levite, no doubt, could find an excuse for passing over on the other side, and might perhaps gravely thank God for their own deliverance, while they left their brother bleeding to death. Is it not an emblem of many living characters, perhaps of some who bear the sacred office? O house of Levi and of Aaron, is not the day coming when the virtues of heathens and Samaritans will rise up in judgment against you?"—WESLEY.

33. But a certain Samaritan came where he was. "It was admirably well judged, to represent the distress on the side of the Jew, and the mercy on that of the Samaritan. For the case being thus proposed, self-interest would make the very scribe sensible how amiable such a conduct was, and would lay him open to our Lord's inference. Had it been put the other way, prejudice might more easily have interposed, before the heart could have been affected"—WESLEY.

34. Pouring in oil and wine—"which, when well beaten together, are one of the best balsams that can be applied to a fresh wound"—WESLEY.

36. Which of these was the neighbour to him that fell among the robbers—"which acted the part of a neighbour?"—WESLEY.

37. And he said, He that showed mercy on him. "He could not for shame say otherwise, though he thereby condemned himself, and overthrew his own false notion of the neighbour to whom our love is due. Go, and do thou in like manner—let us go and do likewise, regarding every man as our neighbour who needs our assistance. Let us renounce that bigotry and party zeal which would contract our hearts into an insensibility for all the human race, but a small number whose sentiments and practices are so much our own, that our love to them is but self-love reflected. With an honest openness of mind, let us always remember the kindred between man and man; and cultivate that happy instinct whereby, in the original constitution of our nature, God has strongly bound us to each other"—WESLEY.

I. THE REQUIREMENT OF LOVE.—The lawyer, perhaps, with the hope of showing his own superiority, and possibly with the expectation of trapping Christ in His reply, stood up and tempted Him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life? But whatever his motives, he put the great personal question of all ages—the highest question of life. This is such a changing world, that we, as by instinct, turn to the eternal.

> "Brief life is here our portion,
> Brief sorrow, short-lived care:
> The life that knows no ending,
> The tearless life, is there."

Life—eternal: these are two great words taken alone, but united they enlarge the conception of ourselves, of others, and of the destiny of all. Here we have no continuance—and yet we desire it. The life that is to be is a part of the life that is. We do not live here, in the truest meaning of life, unless we live to God and for God. No question more important than this lawyer's could possibly be asked. And the answer, What is written in the Law? Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, etc. This was the summary of the Law in Deut. 6. 5; 10. 12; Lev. 19. 18, and recited in the daily prayers of the Jews. In Mark (ch. 12) and Matt. (ch. 22) Jesus unites the tables of commandment in these two statements. So closely did the Levite approach the words of Jesus. How can I live? was the question. Thou shalt love, is the answer. "The perfect tense of the verb live is love," says Dr. John Brown. "Some persons," says Chalmers, "would make religion to consist of little else than a self-denying course of the practice of virtue and obedience. They make it a kind of house-of-correction work. But no! I love the service of my God; like the bird I fly, at liberty on the wings of obedience to His holy will." Heart denotes, in general terms, the affection and will. Soul is the individual existence, the person himself. Strength, the full and entire devotion of all the powers. Mind, the intellectual nature. Every part of us belongs to God. God is the Supreme, and must be supremely loved. But "he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, cannot love God whom he hath not seen." "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." "Not as he does love himself, but as he ought to love himself. After the same manner, i.e., freely and readily, unfeignedly and sincerely, tenderly and compassionately, constantly and perseveringly" — BURKITT. "Cases arise where man ought to love his neighbour more than his life—physical life—and has done so, sacrificing it for his fellows, his country, and the Church, in imitation of the example of Christ and the martyrs"—SCHAFF. This is the golden rule in life. All acknowledge its perfection even when they do not strive to exhibit it. Thou hast answered right. The unadulterated conscience of mankind echoes this approving word of Jesus. But the lawyer, desiring to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbour?

II. THE MANIFESTATION OF LOVE.—Jesus made answer in one of the world's precious parables, a parable so natural, so beautiful, that some have thought it an actual incident. "The parable of the Good Samaritan is certainly one of the most beautiful," says OOSTERZEE. "The antithesis of the Samaritan on the one hand, of the Jew, the priest, and the Levite on the other; the extended description of his work of love in its full and entire compass; the perfect completion of the picture by the trait at the end—all this contributes to exalt the graphic vigour of the portraiture. No wonder that this parable has become one of the most popular, and that it has been seriously inquired whether here also an occurrence from actual life may not have been related, of which the Saviour, in some way or other, had obtained knowledge." The scenery and colouring are purely local. Down to modern times, the road from Jerusalem to Jericho has been dangerous. Jericho, in our Lord's time, was a city of priests. By chance here means "coincidence," that is, at the same time. Chance is not a scriptural conception. "Accident is God's own part" in human life. The Divine permits what He does not inflict. The priest shrank from the fear of incurring defilement by coming into contact with what might be a corpse, before he reached it. The Levite may possibly have thought he need not do what a priest had left undone. "Perhaps," says the Cambridge Bible, "the priest had been aware that a Levite was behind him, and left the trouble to him; perhaps the Levite said to himself, that he need not do what the priest had not thought fit to do." But the Samaritan—the man of a hated nation and an alien creed—was touched with the feeling of humanity, and ministered to the neglected sufferer. "Christ contrasts the Samaritan with the priest and Levite, not to honour Samaria, not to do despite to priests and Levites, but to teach that the most despised outcast who fulfils the law of love is better than the most honoured minister of religion who disregards it"—ABBOTT. The Samaritan gave time and effort and personal service. He did not weary of his task. And in his promise to return and pay the debt he charged himself with the responsibility of the sufferer. Many sympathise who do not help. Some help at the beginning, but grow weary in well-doing. Happy is he who is a Samaritan; happy is he who finds one. From time immemorial men have seen the noblest picture of the Good Samaritan in Jesus Christ. He stooped to save every man; to save the race. The man who feeds the hungry, who teaches the ignorant, who reclaims the fallen, who rescues the perishing, who preaches Christ to the heathen, is treading in the footsteps of the Good Samaritan.

Vers. 38–42. THE SISTERS OF BETHANY.—40. Martha was encumbered. "The Greek word properly signifies, 'to be drawn different ways at the same time,' and admirably expresses the situation of a mind surrounded (as Martha's then was) with so many objects of care, that it hardly knows which to attend to first"—WESLEY.

41. Martha, Martha. "There is a peculiar spirit and tenderness in the repetition of the word. Thou art careful inwardly, and hurried outwardly"—WESLEY.

42. Mary hath chosen the good part—"to save her soul. Reader, hast thou?"—WESLEY.

"Here in one or two lines," says FARRAR, "we have a most clear sketch of the contrasted characters of the two sisters."

CHAPTER XI.

Vers. 1–13. JESUS TEACHES PERSEVERANCE IN PRAYER.—S. Luke, more than the other Evangelists, notes our Lord's devotions. He alone records His prayer for His murderers, and the dismissal of His spirit into His Father's hands. He alone records the two parables which show the success of frequent, importunate prayer. Our Lord was praying when owned at His Baptism and Transfiguration. He opened and closed the day with the key of prayer. "In the morning, rising up a great while before day, He went out and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed." "He went out into the mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God." He began and ended great occasions by prayer. After He had fed the multitude and sent them away, He departed into a mountain to pray. On the eve of the calling of the Apostolic Twelve, He went into a mountain to pray. Jesus being baptized and praying, the Heaven was opened. On the mount of glory, as He prayed, the fashion of His countenance was altered. He passed through the garden of agony on His knees. And so the generations have been able to kneel before Him, and say:—

"O Thou, by whom we come to God,
The Life, the Truth, the Way,
The path of prayer Thyself hast trod;
Lord! teach us how to pray."

It came to pass as He was praying in a certain place, that when He ceased, one of His disciples said unto Him, Lord, teach us to pray, even as John also taught his disciples. The form of prayer taught by S. John has perished. It was common for Jewish teachers to deliver such forms to their disciples. We all need to be divinely taught to pray, for we do not know what things we have need of. Our necessities are one thing, our imaginations another. Lord, teach us to pray.

1. Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples. "The Jewish masters used to give their followers some short form of prayer, as a peculiar badge of their relation to them. This it is probable John the Baptist had done. And in this sense it seems to be, that the disciples now asked Jesus to teach them to pray. Accordingly He here repeats that form which He had before given them in His Sermon on the Mount, and likewise enlarges on the same head, although still speaking the same things in substance. And this prayer, uttered from the heart and in its true and full meaning, is indeed the badge of a real Christian; for is not he such whose first and most ardent desire is the glory of God, and the happiness of man, by the coming of His kingdom? who asks for no more of this world than his daily bread, longing meantime for the bread that came down from heaven? and whose only desires for himself are forgiveness of sins (as he heartily forgives others), and sanctification?"—WESLEY.

2. When ye pray, say. "And what He said to them is undoubtedly said to us also. We are therefore here directed, not only to imitate this in all our prayers, but to use this very form of prayer"—WESLEY.

When ye pray. Remember the nature of prayer. "As a man, it is the language of worship. As a creature, it is the language of dependence. As a subject, it is the language of submission. As a sinner, it is the language of repentance. As a pardoned believer, it is the language of adoration and praise. As a needy man, it is the language of supplication. As a receiver of mercies, it is the language of thankfulness. As a grateful man, it is the language of obedience, desiring to do what the word of God enjoins, to believe what it declares, to rely on its promises"—VAN DOREN.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.—Our Lord gave it. It is lord of all prayers. Nothing that we say, worth saying, is more than an echo, a repetition, an amplification of this prayer of prayers. We may repeat the words, as some Christians and churches do; we may regard the words as pattern expressions, as other Christians and churches do; but the Lord's Prayer towers aloft. Forms of prayer are found in the Old Testament, hence it has been said, "The Lord of the Church did not seek unnecessary novelty." The Model Prayer hath dust of gold. Some fragments men have thought they found in Jewish writings. Be it so. Our Lord came not to destroy, but to fulfil. He gave a new and enlarged meaning to all He found. As, says the Cambridge Bible, "The Lord's Prayer had already been enshrined in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 6. 9–13), but it was now more formally delivered as a model. Various parallels for the different petitions of the Lord's Prayer have been adduced from the Talmud; nor would there be anything strange in our Lord thus stamping with His sanction whatever was holiest in the petitions which His countrymen had learned from the Spirit of God. But note that (1) the parallels are only to some of the clauses, e.g., not to the fourth and fifth; (2) they are most distant and imperfect; (3) there can be no certainty as to their priority, since even the earliest portion of the Talmud was not committed to writing till the second century after Christ; (4) they are nowhere blended into one incomparable petition. The transcendent beauty and value of the lessons in the Lord's Prayer arise from (1) the tone of holy confidence: it teaches us to approach God as our Father (Rom. 8. 15), in love as well as holy fear. (2) Its absolute unselfishness: it is offered in the plural, not for ourselves only, but for all the brotherhood of man. (3) Its entire spirituality: of seven petitions, one only is for any earthly boon, and that only for the simplest. (4) Its brevity and absence of all vain repetitions (Eccles. 5. 2). (5) Its simplicity, which requires not learning, but only holiness and sincerity for its universal comprehension. For these reasons the Fathers call it the "epitome of the Gospel and the pearl of prayers." Loving students of the Bible—and the Bible must be loved to be known—have pointed out that twice God wrote the Ten Commandments; twice Christ said this prayer.

The Decalogue is divided into two tables; this prayer is divided into two parts. Those parts contain seven clauses, three to God, and four for men. Three and seven with the Jews were sacred numbers. S. Augustine traces a connection between seven of the Beatitudes, and seven requests in the Lord's Prayer.

1. The Invocation.—Our Father which art in heaven. In the Old Testament, God is never addressed in prayer as father. At Sinai He said "thy God"; in the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus taught us to say, "Our Father." A Father; a heavenly Father; our Father. The sentence strikes at the roots of selfishness. He made us; He preserves us; He redeemed us; He protects us. But others are in the hand of the same God. "Our Father" is the most endearing name under which God can be addressed.

2. The upward petitions. — Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done. God first. "I am the Lord thy God." Heaven and earth is the Divine order. Hallowed be Thy Name—i.e., "sanctified, treated as holy." "Holy, holy, holy" is the worship of the Seraphim. (Isa. 6. 3.) The name of God is used for all the attributes of His Being. God's name means "Himself as revealed and manifested." The third commandment, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain," requires us to do what we here desire that all may do. Thy kingdom come — in the heart, in the home, in the Church, in the world. The kingdoms of this world are yet to be the kingdom of God. "Kingdom" was Christ's great word. Thy will be done: this was the one rule of the life of Christ (John 5. 30; 6. 38). It is done in the heavens. "Bless the Lord, ye His angels, that excel in strength, that do His commandments, hearkening unto the voice of His word." In heaven they do the will of God constantly, perfectly, cheerfully, immediately. "Enable us, O Lord," S. Chrysostom prayed, "to follow the heavenly life, that whatever Thou willest, we may will also."

3. The outward petitions. — Daily Bread. Forgiveness. Deliverance. Give us our daily bread. "The prayer (1) acknowledges that we are indebted to God for our simplest boons; (2) asks them for all; (3) asks them only day by day; and (4) asks for no more. S. Luke's version brings out the continuity of the gift (be giving day by day). S. Matthew's, its immediate need (give to-day)"—C. B. The blessing of the Lord maketh rich. What we need is daily bread for body and soul. Forgive us. The best have need to pray this prayer daily. Sin is a mystery, but it is a fact. If we expect forgiveness from God, we must extend forgiveness to each other. Revenge is sweet, but it is wicked. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. God permits temptation, but we need not enter into it. A Christian man thus paraphrased this petition: "If the occasion of sinning presents itself, grant that the desire may not be found in me; if the desire is there, grant that the occasion may not present itself." The holy persistence with which we should approach God is illustrated in the little story of the Friend (vers. 6–13); and we are taught that parental love is Divine in origin, and suggests the infinite compassion and helpfulness of our Father in heaven.

Vers. 5–13. HOLY IMPORTUNITY.—The purpose of the parable is to encourage perseverance in prayer. The example is taken from daily life, and gives us a hint into the keen observations of the lives and ways of men and women our Lord was accustomed to make. Let us therefore draw near with boldness to the Throne of Grace.

4. Forgive us; for we forgive—"not once, but continually. This does not denote the meritorious cause of our pardon; but the removal of that hindrance, which otherwise would render it impossible"—WESLEY.

5. At midnight—"the most unseasonable time; but no time is unseasonable with God, either for hearing or answering prayer"—WESLEY.

13. How much more shall your heavenly Father—"how beautiful is the gradation—a friend, a father, God! Give the Holy Spirit—the best of gifts, and that which includes every good gift"—WESLEY.

Vers. 14–26. THE DUMB DEVIL AND THE PHARISEES' BLASPHEMY. (See on Matt. 12. 22, seq.).—14. It was dumb—"that is, it made the man so"—WESLEY.

15. But some said, He casteth out devils by Beelzebub—"These He answers (ver. 17). Others, to try whether it were so or no, sought a sign from heaven. These He reproves in the 29th and following verses. Beelzebub signifies, 'the lord of flies,' a title which the heathens gave to Jupiter, whom they accounted the chief of their gods, and yet supposed him to be employed in driving away flies from their temples and sacrifices. The Philistines worshipped a deity under this name, as the god of Ekron: from hence the Jews took the name, and applied it to the chief of the devils"—WESLEY.

17. A house—"that is, a family"—WESLEY.

20. If I cast out devils by the finger of God—"that is, by a power manifestly Divine. Perhaps the expression intimates further, that it was done without any labour. Then the kingdom of God is come upon you—unawares, unexpectedly; so the Greek word signifies"—WESLEY.

21. The strong one armed—"the devil, strong in himself, and armed with the pride, obstinacy, and security of him in whom he dwells"—WESLEY.

26. The last state of that man becometh worse than the first. "Whoever reads the sad account Josephus gives of the temper and conduct of the Jews after the ascension of Christ, and before their final destruction by the Romans, must acknowledge that no emblem could have been more proper to describe them. Their characters were the vilest that can be conceived; and they pressed on to their own ruin, as if they had been possessed by legions of devils, and wrought up to the last degree of madness. But this also is fulfilled in all who totally and finally apostatise from true faith"—WESLEY.

Vers. 27-36. THE SOURCE OF TRUE BLESSEDNESS AND THE DANGER OF UNBELIEF AND BACKSLIDING.—27. Blessed is the womb that bare Thee, and the paps which Thou hast sucked. "How natural was the thought for a woman! And how gently does our Lord reprove her!"—WESLEY.

28. Yea, rather, blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it—"for if even she that bare Him had not done this, she would have forfeited all her blessedness"—WESLEY.

29. It seeketh. "The original word implies, 'seeking more,' or over and above what one has already"—WESLEY.

32. They repented at the preaching of Jonah—"but it was only for a season. Afterwards, they relapsed into wickedness, till, after about forty years, they were destroyed. It was remarkable that in this also the comparison held. God reprieved the Jews for about forty years; but they still advanced in wickedness, till, having filled up their measure, they were destroyed with an utter destruction"—WESLEY.

33. "The meaning is, God gives you this gospel light, that you may repent. Let your eye be singly fixed on Him, aim only at pleasing God: and while you do this your whole soul will be full of wisdom, holiness, and happiness"—WESLEY.

34. But when thine eye is evil—when thou aimest at anything else, thou wilt be full of folly, sin, and misery. On the contrary,

36. If thy whole body be full of light—"if thou art filled with holy wisdom—having no part dark—giving way to no sin or folly; then that heavenly principle will, like the clear flame of a lamp in a room that was dark before, shed its light into all thy powers and faculties"—WESLEY.

Vers. 37-54. CONTEST WITH THE PHARISEES. —39. Now, ye Pharisees—"probably many of them were present at a Pharisee's house"—WESLEY.

41. Give what is in them—"the vessels which ye clean. In alms, and all things are clean to you. As if He had said, By acts directly contrary to rapine and wickedness, show that your hearts are cleansed, and these outward washings are needless"—WESLEY.

42. Woe to you—"that is, miserable are you. In the same manner is the phrase to be understood throughout the chapter"—WESLEY.

44. For ye are as graves which appear not—"probably in speaking this our Lord fixed His eyes on the scribes. As graves which appear not—being overgrown with grass, so that men are not aware, till they stumble upon them, and either hurt themselves, or at least are defiled by touching them. On another occasion Christ compared them to 'whited sepulchres,' fair without but foul within (Matt. 23. 27)"—WESLEY.

45. One of the lawyers—"that is, scribes; expounders of the Law"—WESLEY.

48. Whom they killed, ye build their sepulchres. "Just like them, pretending great reverence for the ancient prophets, while ye destroy those whom God sends to yourselves. Ye therefore bear witness by this deep hypocrisy that ye are of the very same spirit with them"—WESLEY.

49. The wisdom of God, agreeably to this, hath said—"in many places of Scripture, though not in these very words—I will send them prophets—chiefly under the Old Testament. And apostles—under the New"—WESLEY.

50. The blood of all shall be required of this generation—"that is, shall be visibly and terribly punished upon it"—WESLEY.

51. "And so it was, within forty years, in a most astonishing manner, by the dreadful destruction of the Temple, the city, and the whole nation. Between the Temple and the altar—in the court of the Temple"—WESLEY.

52. Ye have taken away the key of knowledge. "Ye have obscured and destroyed the true knowledge of the Messiah, which is the key of both the present and the future Kingdom of Heaven; the kingdom of grace and of glory. Ye have not entered in—into the present Kingdom of Heaven"—WESLEY.

Ver. 53. The Pharisees in their anger followed Him out of the house, trying to catch Him in His talk.

CHAPTER XII.

Vers. 1-12. TRUE COURAGE IN GODLINESS. —1. He said to His disciples first—"but afterward (ver. 54) to all the people"—WESLEY.

4. But I say to you, Fear not—"let not the fear of man make you act the hypocrite, or conceal anything which I have commissioned you to publish"—WESLEY.

5. Fear Him who hath power to cast into hell. "Even to His peculiar 'friends' Christ gives this direction. Therefore the fearing of God as having power to cast into hell is to be pressed even on true believers"—WESLEY.

6. Are not five sparrows. "But 'trust,' as well as 'fear' Him"—WESLEY.

8. And I say to you. "If you avoid all hypocrisy, and openly avow My gospel—the Son of Man shall confess you—before the angels—at the last day"—WESLEY.

10. And whosoever—"as if He had said, Yet the denying Me in some degree may, upon true repentance, be forgiven; but if it rise so high as that of the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, it shall never be forgiven, neither is there place for repentance"—WESLEY.

11. Take no thought. "Be not solicitous about the matter or manner of your defence; nor how to express yourselves"—WESLEY.

On the unpardonable sin, see on Matt. 12. 31, 32.

Vers. 13-21. THE RICH FOOL.—13, 14. A man in the crowd profits by a moment of silence to submit a matter to Jesus. According to the civil law of the Jews, the eldest brother received a double portion of the inheritance, burdened with the obligation of supporting his mother and unmarried sisters. As to the younger members, it would appear, from the parable of the prodigal son, that they were sometimes paid in money. This man was perhaps one of those younger members. "As on other similar occasions, Jesus absolutely refuses to go out of His purely spiritual domain, or to do anything which might give Him the appearance of wishing to put himself in the place of the powers that be. The answer to the Who? is this: Neither God nor men"—GODET. "This was the most foolish and unwarrantable interpellation ever made to our Lord. The few words at once reveal to us an egotist incapable of caring for anything but his own selfishness"—FARRAR. The judge was a public officer; the divider and private arbitrator. Christ will not usurp their province. Christianity will change the social, selfish framework of the world, but its power is moral. It works from within outwardly. The man asked the division of the inheritance: the Lord gave a prohibition against covetousness.

15. Take heed and beware of covetousness (R.V. "Keep yourselves from all covetousness"). To covet is to desire inordinately, to desire that which it is unlawful to obtain or possess. "Not only beware of avarice, but of selfish possession. Both the Old and New Testaments abound with repetitions of this warning. Balaam, Achan, Gehazi are awful examples of this sin in the Old Testament; Judas Iscariot, the Pharisees, and Ananias in the New. (See 1 Tim. 6. 10-17)"—C. B. But possessions are not life, and do not make life truly enjoyable. A man's true life is decided by what he is. "How poor a rich man, and how rich a poor man may be"—LANGE.

AN EXAMPLE.—"The term 'parable' may signify an example as well as an image; when the image is fictitious, it is invented as an image of the abstract truth"—GODET. "The parable, like that of the Good Samaritan, reads like an actual history. There is dramatic vividness in the rich man's soliloquy. It was the very superfluity of the man's goods that became a new cause of anxiety. In such a case half was more than the whole. So far as life depended on property, it would have been better if the property had been less"—PLUMPTRE. The first lack in this man's life was complete contentment. There is no such thing as enough to some natures. Then followed anxiety to stow away and guard what he has gained. The difficulties of possessions only begin with the gaining of them. They are then the objects of others' covetousness and fraud, and need constant and complete watchfulness. "I have no room," said the man of the parable. To which S. Ambrose answers, "Thou hast barns—the bosoms of the poor, the homes of widows, the mouths of infants; these are the barns which will last for ever." But the foolish rich man lived a self-centred life: my fruits, my barns, my goods, my soul. There might have been no other but he in God's world, so far as his language leads us to understand his mind. In the American Sunday School Times, Dr. C. S. ROBINSON ingeniously places side by side the good and the evil in this man's life:—

"The attractive characteristics of this man. (1) For one thing, he was wealthy. Observe, the Bible never is found joining in with any wild tirade against riches. On the whole, it is a good thing to be rich; great usefulness can be attained by silver and gold. (2) He was successful in business. That shows well as an evidence of his shrewdness and industry. (3) Furthermore, this was a prudent man. He shows himself, in the recorded soliloquy here, as being thoughtful concerning the future (see ver. 17). We naturally feel distrust of all men who are content to spend as they go.

"The extraordinary mistakes of this man. (1) To begin with, he made a mistake in thinking there was no place for produce except in barns. (2) So we see another mistake he made: he supposed his riches would be a comfort to him when they were hoarded. Whereas they became then only a care and a burden. The nearest approach to the old disease of the possession of devils that we have in modern times, is exhibited when a man is possessed of the money he thinks he possesses. (3) The third mistake this man made was worse than any one of the others: he left out of his thoughts all consideration of the infinite God who made and owned him. He says 'my' barns, 'my' goods, 'my' fruits, and even 'my' soul. (4) But this mistake inevitably led to another: he seems to admit that his soul has no higher needs than his body." "His plans of felicity," as TRENCH says, "rise no higher than to this satisfying of the flesh; so that there is an irony as melancholy as it is profound in making him address this speech, not to his body, but to his soul." "What folly!" says S. BASIL. "Had thy soul been a sty, what else wouldest thou have promised to it? Art thou so bestial, so ignorant of the soul's goods, that thou pledgest it the foods of the flesh?"

He made all his calculations and forgot the disturbing element of death. He said, Soul, rest, eat, drink, and be merry—for many years. The decree said, This night, soul, thou art required at the judgment bar of thy Maker. "All things are now changed." What shall these things be? When a rich man died, the question was asked, "How much did he leave?" And the answer was given, "He left all he had." He had gathered much; but the gate of death is narrow, we do not take our possessions or burdens through.

14. Who made Me a judge—"in worldly things. His kingdom is not of this world"—WESLEY.

15. He said to them—"perhaps to the two brothers, and through them to the people—a man's life—that is, the comfort or happiness of it"—WESLEY.

17. What shall I do—"the very language of want. Do? Why, lay up treasure in heaven"—WESLEY.

20. Thou fool. "To think of satisfying thy soul with earthly goods! to depend on living many years! yea, one day! They—the messengers of death, commissioned by God, require thy soul of thee!"—WESLEY.

21. Rich toward God—"namely, in faith and love and good works"—WESLEY.

Vers. 22–34. These verses teach the secret of a happy confidence in God's providence. He who built the body will feed and cover it. He who gave the life will maintain it. He who feeds the birds will not forget you.

25. Which of you can add the least measure. "It seems, 'to add one cubit' to a thing (which is the phrase in the original) was a kind of proverbial expression for making the least addition to it"—WESLEY.

28. The grass. "The Greek word means all sorts of herbs and flowers"—WESLEY.

29. Neither be ye of a doubtful mind. "The word in the original signifies any speculations or musings in which the mind fluctuates, or is suspended, like meteors in the air, in an uneasy hesitation"—WESLEY.

32. It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. "How much more, food and raiment! And since you have such an inheritance, regard not your earthly possessions"—WESLEY.

33. Sell what ye have. "This is a direction not given to all the multitude (much less is it a standing rule for all Christians), neither to the apostles; for they had nothing to sell, having left all before; but to His other disciples, mentioned in ver. 22 and Acts 1. 15, especially to the Seventy, that they might be free from all worldly entanglements"—WESLEY.

A talk about anxiety.—Take no thought. That phrase might even be taken to mean a carelessness which is immoral. But when our Bible was translated, "thought" was used for "care." Hence the R.V. reads, "Be not anxious for your life what ye shall eat; nor yet for your body what ye shall put on. For the life is more than the food, and the body than the raiment." "We note in the form of the precept," as PLUMPTRE points out, "the homeliness of the cases selected as illustrations. We hear the language of one who speaks to peasants with their simple yet pressing wants, not to the wider cares of the covetous or ambitious of a higher grade." "These instructions are built upon the parable just previously spoken. Therefore (ver. 22), since these things are so, let Me counsel you how to live. The first great points are negative, showing what not to do; how not to feel. Take no thought as to your life, what to eat and what to wear, for things should have our care according to their real and relative value; the life is more than meat, the body more than raiment. Therefore, give to the higher and better things the relative care and labour of which they are worthy: care more for soul-life than for bodily-life; more for soul-food than for the food of the body; more for the culture and growth of heart-benevolence, than for the development of any physical power; more for the adornment of the soul with the beauties of holiness, than for adorning the body that fades so soon away"—COWLES. The manner of life is more important than its duration. The soul is superior to the body. "Food and clothing absorb nine-tenths of men's cares. Yet the body is but the husk or shell, the soul is the kernel. The body is but the cask, the soul is the precious liquor. The body is but the cabinet, the soul is the precious jewel. The body is but the vessel or ship, the soul is the pilot. The body is but the tabernacle, the soul the tenant. The body is the machine only, the soul the animating principle. The body is the dark lantern, the soul the candle of the Lord that burns in it"—RAY. The birds are preachers of Providence: Consider the ravens, that they sow not, neither reap; which have no store-chamber nor barn, and God feedeth them: of how much more value are ye than the birds! The foolish rich man of the parable was troubled because he had not barns enough; the birds are untroubled, although they have no barns at all. And, after all, our over-anxiety accomplishes little. Which of you by being anxious can add a cubit unto his stature? (or "age," see margin of R.V.). The word may mean either. But perhaps "stature" is the meaning here. Plants which give themselves no care, yet make enormous increase, while ye by your anxieties do not in the least hasten your growth. Vers. 25, 26, correspond to ver. 23. The flowers are as dependent as the birds, and equally regarded by the Maker of them all. (Read vers. 27–32.) Will God feed birds and forget children? Will He watch flowers and neglect us? Bethink thyself! God made thee; feeds thee; gave His Son to die for thee; opened heaven to thy entrance. God belongs to both worlds, and remembers that we have body and soul. He who claims all our service watches all our life. We may have a treasure in the heavens, and desire favour whilst on earth.

"I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care."

The life of watchfulness (ver. 35-48).

35. Let your loins be girt—"an allusion to the long garments worn by the eastern nations, which they girded or tucked up about their loins, when they journeyed, or were employed in any labour; as also to the lights that servants used to carry at weddings, which were generally in the night"—WESLEY.

37. He will come and serve them. "The meaning is, He will show them His love in the most condescending and tender manner"—WESLEY.

38. "The Jews frequently divided the night into three watches, to which our Lord seems here to allude"—WESLEY.

41. Speakest thou this parable to us—"apostles and disciples? Or to all—the people? Does it concern us alone, or all men?"—WESLEY.

42. Who is that wise and faithful servant. "Our Lord's answer manifestly implies that He had spoken this parable primarily (though not wholly) to the ministers of His word. Whom his lord shall make ruler over his household—for his wisdom and faithfulness"—WESLEY.

43. Happy is that servant. "God Himself pronounces him wise, faithful, happy; yet we see he might fall from all, and perish for ever"—WESLEY.

46. The Lord will appoint him his portion—"his everlasting portion. With the unfaithful—as faithful as he was once, God Himself being the Judge"—WESLEY.

47. And that servant, who knew his lord's will . . . shall be beaten with many stripes—"and his having much knowledge will increase, not lessen, his punishment"—WESLEY.

There is a legend of S. Thomas, who in preaching the gospel came to the eastern kingdom of Gondoforus. There he was entrusted with large sums of money, for the purpose of building a palace for the king. On his return from a journey, Gondoforus found that S. Thomas had given all the money away to the poor, and, being angry at this, he put the apostle in prison. One night, in a dream, King Gondoforus received a message from his brother, lately dead, who reported that in heaven was an immense palace of wondrous beauty, which the angels said was the palace S. Thomas had built for the king with the money given to the poor. If this were a statement of fact, we should charge even S. Thomas with a breach of trust. But it is the pictorial form in which the early Christians shaped their conviction of the superiority of the heavenly. They took the sacrament every day, because they said Christ might come any day. See that ye have and give alms was taken very literally by the early Church. "It must not be forgotten that the Kingdom of God at this period was identified with the person of Jesus, and the society of disciples who accompanied Him. To follow Jesus literally in His peregrinations was the only way of possessing this treasure, and of becoming fit to spread it in consequence. Then it was an army, not merely of believers, but of evangelists, that Jesus was now labouring to form. If they had remained attached to the soil of their earthly property, they would have been incapable of following and serving Him without looking backwards. The essential character of such a precept alone is permanent. The form in which Jesus presented it arose from the present condition of the Kingdom of God. The mode of fulfilling it varies. There are times when to disentangle himself and practise Christian love the believer must give up everything; there are other times when, to secure real freedom and be the better able to give, he must keep and administer"—GODET. Such convictions lead to expectation, and impose the duty of watchfulness. Hence our Lord gives the parable of the Master returning to his house—Let your loins be girded about, and your lamps burning; and be ye yourselves like unto men looking for their lord, when he shall return from the marriage feast; that when he cometh and knocketh they may straightway open unto him. Blessed are those servants, whom the lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them sit down to meat, and shall come and serve them. And if he shall come in the second watch, and if in the third, and find them so, blessed are those servants. Without a girdle active service is impossible in the loose flowing dress of the East (Ex. 12. 11; 1 Kings 18. 46); and spiritually for the Christian amid worldly entanglements (1 Pet. 1. 13; Eph. 6. 14). If it is night, it is further required that one have a lighted lamp in his hand, to walk quickly and securely to his destination. With girded loins and lighted lamp the servant is ready for his master's bidding. Standing sentinel-like, he waits for his master's return. Then comes the element of danger if the servants should be unwatchful—But know this, that if the master of the house had known in what hour the thief was coming, he would have watched, and not have left his house to be broken through. Be ye also ready: for in an hour that ye think not the Son of man cometh. If the hour of the attack were known, men would not fail to hold themselves ready against that hour; and therefore, when it is not known, the only way is to be always ready. Never leave the post of duty. S. Peter, whose intercourse with his Lord was peculiarly frank and fearless, interposed with his question, Lord, speakest Thou this parable unto us, or even unto all? The reply was not direct: the lesson which the questioner needed was given—Who then is the faithful and wise steward, whom his lord shall set over his household, to give them their portion of food in due season? Blessed is that servant.

Vers. 49-53. THE SEARCHING EFFECT OF CHRIST'S WORK.—The solemn doctrine of personal responsibility in ver. 48 casts light upon the penetrating power of Christ and His gospel, in vers. 49-53.

49. I am come to send fire—"to spread the fire of heavenly love over all the earth"—WESLEY.

50. But I have a baptism to be baptized with. "I must suffer first, before I can set up My kingdom. And how I long to fight my way through all!"—WESLEY.

51. Suppose ye that I am come to send peace upon earth—"that universal peace will be the immediate effect of My coming? Not so; but quite the contrary"—WESLEY.

52. There shall be five in one house, three against two, and two against three—"there being an irreconcilable enmity between the Spirit of Christ and the spirit of the world"—WESLEY.

53. The father against the son—"for those who reject Me will be implacable toward their very nearest relations who receive Me. At this day also is this scripture fulfilled. Now, likewise, there is no concord between Christ and Belial"—WESLEY.

Vers. 54-59. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—54. And He said to the people also. "In the preceding verses He speaks only to His disciples. From the west—In Judea, the west wind, blowing from the sea, usually brought rain; the south wind, blowing from the deserts of Arabia, occasioned sultry heat"—WESLEY.

56. How do ye not discern this season—"of the Messiah's coming, distinguishable by so many surer signs"—WESLEY.

57. Why even of yourselves, "without any external sign, judge ye not what is right—why do ye not discern and acknowledge the intrinsic excellence of My doctrine?"—WESLEY.

58. When thou art going. "As if He had said, And ye have not a moment to lose. For the executioners of God's vengeance are at hand; and when he hath once delivered you over to them, ye are undone for ever"—WESLEY.

59. "A mite was about the third part of our farthing"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XIII.

Vers. 1-9. THE MORAL OF ACCIDENT, AND THE PARABLE OF THE BARREN FIG-TREE.—1. The Galileans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices—"some of the followers of Judas Gaulonites. They absolutely refused to own the Roman authority. Pilate surrounded and slew them, while they were worshipping in the Temple at a public feast"—WESLEY.

3. Ye shall all likewise perish—"all ye of Galilee and of Jerusalem shall perish in the very same manner. So the Greek word implies. And so they did. There was a remarkable resemblance between the fate of these Galileans and of the main body of the Jewish nation; the flower of which was slain at Jerusalem by the Roman sword, while they were assembled at one of their great festivals. And many thousands of them perished in the Temple itself, and were literally buried under its ruins"—WESLEY.

6. A man had a fig-tree. "Either we may understand God the Father by him that had the vineyard, and Christ by him that kept it; or Christ Himself is He that hath it, and His ministers they that keep it"—WESLEY.

7. Three years. "Christ was then in the third year of His ministry. But it may mean only several years; a certain number being put for an uncertain. Why doth it also cumber the ground—that is, not only bear no fruit itself, but take up the ground of another tree that would"—WESLEY.

A Discourse of Severity.—Is there a secret pleasure in being the first teller of evil tidings? Both the Greeks and the Germans coined a word to express some such feeling, and the report in this chapter indicates it. There arrived at that very season. They had come on purpose to announce this catastrophe. These Galileans may have been the followers of Judas of Galilee, who, some twenty years before this, taught that Jews should not pay tribute to the Romans, and of whom we learn, from Acts 5. 37, that he drew after him a multitude of followers, who, on his being slain, were all dispersed. Pilate may have put them to death as they were offering their sacrifices at one of the festivals, thus mingling their blood with their sacrifices. Such incidents were frequent enough. The Roman soldiers often hurried down from Fort Antonia to quell a sudden riot. At one Passover, during the sacrifices, three thousand Jews had been massacred like victims, and the Temple courts filled with dead bodies; and at another Passover no less than twenty thousand had perished. On one occasion Pilate sent disguised soldiers with daggers among the crowd. That men should perish in the Temple, and in the act of worship, would fire the Jewish imagination. Such men must have come under the just judgment of God, they would think. It was an article of their creed that sin and suffering were inseparable. They are connected. "Be sure your sin will find you out." But no eye but God's can trace the connection in every individual case. Nothing is so common as an accident. And often the accident is traceable to somebody's wrong-doing. But the innocent often suffer, and the guilty one escapes. Judgment belongs to God. His Providence at times vindicates His justice. But the most guilty are not always punished in this life. There is another judgment. He answered, Think ye that these Galileans were sinners above all? I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all in like manner perish. He who a little later wept over the doomed city, now warns the nation. The first meaning of the words was doubtless prophetic. The Jewish nation did not repent; and myriads of them in the siege of Jerusalem perished by a doom closely analogous to that of these Galileans. But human life is alike everywhere; the human heart the same in all ages. The laws of life, the laws of God, have an eternal signification. The message is to every nation, to every household, to every one. Those eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell. It is an ingenious, but of course uncertain conjecture, that the death of these workmen was connected with the notion of retribution, because they were engaged in building part of the aqueduct to the pool of Siloam, for the construction of which Pilate had seized some of the sacred corban money. Of this incident nothing is certainly known, save the fact as here stated. But the lesson from the Divine lips is worthy and weighty. While none might attribute a pre-eminence in guilt to those who were crushed by the falling tower, yet in all such sudden and strange catastrophes all might recognise a call to repentance and reformation. The uncertainty of life; the suddenness with which one's own day of opportunity might end; the sense of discord in outward nature, and of danger to human life by change and chance; and the needs-be for dependence on a higher power—these lessons, true nineteen hundred years ago, are true to-day.

A Parable of Mercy.—He spake this parable. The discourse of severity ends in a parable of mercy. "Here the Jewish nation is compared to the fig-tree (Hos. 9. 16; Jer. 24. 3), as in the acted parable of the barren fig-tree (Matt. 21. 19); more often Israel is compared to the vine in the vineyard (Ps. 80. 8–11; Isa. 5. 2)"—FARRAR. But the parable is as applicable to Englishmen, Frenchmen, Germans, and Americans. He came seeking fruit thereon. He had a right to it, and required it. Jehovah is the owner of the vineyard, Christ the vine-dresser. The fruit God expects from every one of us is a noble Christian character. The fruit of a tree is from within. It is not fastened on from without. So character is the result of the inner life. We do good by being good. He came seeking fruit, and found none. Long ago the prophets had upbraided the people because they had not brought forth the fruits of good living, to the glory and praise of God. What does God find in us when He comes on a visit of inspection and inquiry? These three years I come seeking fruit. Many suppose an allusion to the length of our Lord's ministry. Others explain it as of the periods of the Judges, Kings, and High Priests. Some see a reference to God's coming to the people by Moses, by the Prophets, and in the person of Jesus Christ. Probably it is only a part of the drapery of the parable. But for our own practical consideration we may think of childhood, manhood, and age. God visits us at all periods. Cut it down. At once. It is useless, is injurious.

"The noisome weeds that without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers."

"I have done no harm." "But have you done any good?" No man liveth to himself. If we live uselessly, we live injuriously. Let it alone this year also. The Lord is longsuffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. Divine judgments are sometimes noiseless in their approach, but God often warns before He strikes. He delights in blessing and saving. If it bear fruit thenceforth. The conclusion is left for the imagination. The word well is printed in italics.

Vers. 10–17. A MIRACLE OF PITY.—The suffering woman amid the synagogue crowd was not overlooked by Jesus. He knew the value of one life; reverenced every personal history; honoured all men. The ruler of the synagogue was more concerned about forms than about men and women. Our Lord uttered the word of healing, Woman, thou art loosed; the ruler of the synagogue, There are six days . . . in them come and be healed. Christ instructed his ignorance and defended the woman's honour. His adversaries were put to shame: the multitude rejoiced.

11. She was bowed together, and could in no wise lift up herself. "The evil spirit which possessed her, afflicted her in this manner. To many, doubtless, it appeared a natural distemper. Would not a modern physician have termed it a nervous case?"—WESLEY.

15. Thou hypocrite—"for the real motive of his speaking was envy, not, as he pretended, pure zeal for the glory of God"—WESLEY.

16. And ought not this woman. "Ought not any human creature, which is so far better than an ox or an ass; much more this daughter of Abraham, probably in a spiritual as well as a natural sense, to be loosed?"—WESLEY.

Vers. 18–21. PARABLE TEACHING. (See on Matt. 13.)

Vers. 22–30. A SERIOUS ANSWER TO A CURIOUS QUESTION. Our Lord's constant reference to life as a time of probation, and to the great judgment and final separation of truth and falsehood, deepen the natural interest of men in these partly soluble questions. Curiosity concerning the future may be inspired by one of three motives: scornful contradiction, good-natured interest, despondent hope. But the only curiosity that is justifiable is connected with an earnest longing to shape one's own life according to God's will and commandment. Life is too real, death is too solemn, duty is too imperious, sorrow is too sharp, to make it rational for any man to spend his life in idle questioning. Perhaps the questioner in this narrative was unconsciously moved by a fancy similar to that expressed in the Book of Esdras: "The Most High made this world for many, but the world to come for few, as He made much common earth, but little gold." Without giving a distinct decision, the Saviour brings the question immediately from the sphere of abstract theory to that of pure practicalness. He does not even address His words to the questioner alone, with whom He does not further converse, but to all who were to-day listening to Him. He said in effect: Few or many are relative terms. Waste not the precious opportunities of life in idle wonderment, but strive. Through that narrow gate none can enter without earnest effort. This is the law of life. The alphabet puzzles the child first, and then awakens effort. A narrow gate stands at the entrance to every path of success. Artist and agriculturist, poet and preacher, counsel and carpenter, all must strive. Well-wishing is not well-doing. If wishes were horses, beggars would ride. Our Lord applies this well-known and constantly recognised law to character and destiny. Strive! seeking is insufficient. Slothful wishes accomplish little. S. Paul afterwards made great use of the idea of the athlete and the contest. Our own times emphasise the need and the value of earnestness, calm, if not impassioned. Opportunity, God's white-handed angel, does not stand waiting and inactive for ever. Our Lord represents the door as open to all who strive, but not open always. When once the Master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, open to us: and He shall answer and say to you, I know you not whence ye are; then shall ye begin to say, We did eat and drink in Thy presence, and Thou didst teach in our streets; and He shall say, I tell you, I know you not whence ye are; depart from Me, all ye workers of iniquity. They knock and call, but too late. Lost time cannot be recalled. Lost youth cannot recover itself in manhood. Lost health will not return at our beckoning finger. Now has an awful significance! To-day soon becomes yesterday, and to-morrow brings its own burden. What thou doest, do quickly. There is no work, nor wisdom, nor device in the grave whither thou goest. Awful words of rejection may fall from the loving lips of the rejected Saviour: "I know not whence ye are: depart from Me, all ye workers of iniquity." With these words the Lord in the most decided way denies that they, let them be otherwise what they would, are members of His family. The declaration is repeated with greater emphasis. Men may outwardly stand very near to Christ, and yet inwardly be very strange to Him. It is one thing to be in the Church; it is another thing to be in Christ. In striking and suggestive language the Bible speaks of the wrath of the Lamb; in plain and repeated passages it speaks of the rejection of those who reject. Let us take heed to ourselves.

24. Strive to enter in—"agonise. Strive as in an agony. So the word signifies. Otherwise, none shall enter in. Barely seeking will not avail"—WESLEY.

25. "And even agonising will not avail, after the door is shut. Agonise therefore now by faith, prayer, holiness, patience. And ye begin to stand without—till then, they had not thought of it. Oh how new will that sense of their misery be! how late, how lasting! I know not whence ye are—I know not; that is, I approve not of your ways"—WESLEY.

29. They shall sit down in the Kingdom of God—"both the kingdom of grace and glory"—WESLEY.

30. But there are last. "Many of the Gentiles who were latest called shall be most highly rewarded, and many of the Jews who were first called shall have no reward at all"—WESLEY.

Vers. 31-33. THE KINGLET AND THE KING.—Jesus knew not the name of fear. The Pharisees in assumed solicitude came to Him, and said, Get Thee out, and go hence: for Herod would fain kill Thee. His answer was calmness embodied: Go and say to that fox, Behold, I cast out devils and perform cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I am perfected. Howbeit I must go on My way to-day and to-morrow and the day following, for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem. A day or two yet remained, and then the cross awaited Him. But there is more than a literal meaning. He was in God's hands. Every man is. A man is immortal until his work is done. The humblest has a kingly dignity while he stands where God placed him, and does what God bids him.

31. Herod is minded to kill thee—"possibly they gave Him the caution out of good-will"—WESLEY.

32. And He said, Go and tell that fox. "With great propriety so called, for his subtlety and cowardice. The meaning of our Lord's answer is, Notwithstanding all that he can do, I shall, for the short time I have left, do the works of Him that sent me. When that time is fulfilled, I shall be offered up; yet not here, but in the bloody city. Behold, I cast out devils. With what majesty does He speak to His enemies! with what tenderness to His friends! The third day I am perfected. On the third day He left Galilee, and set out for Jerusalem, to die there. But let us carefully distinguish between those things wherein Christ is our pattern, and those which were peculiar to His office. His extraordinary office justified Him in using that severity of language, when speaking of wicked princes and corrupt teachers, to which we have no call, and by which we should only bring scandal on religion, and ruin on ourselves, while we irritated rather than convinced or reformed those whom we so indecently rebuked.

33. It cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem—"which claims prescription for murdering the messengers of God. Such cruelty and malice cannot be found elsewhere"—WESLEY.

Vers. 34, 35. THE DOOM OF THE FAIR CITY. —He who wept over Jerusalem in the hour of His triumph, warned it in the hour of seeming defeat. Changes of fortune left unchanged His pity and unselfishness. The woe has been marvellously fulfilled. Every Jewish pilgrim who enters Jerusalem to this day has a rent made in his dress, and says, Zion is turned into a desert, it lies in ruins! Here, says a Jewish poet, pointing to the modern city, all is dust. After the destruction of the city, the whole earth blossoms from its ruins, but here there is no verdure, no blossom, only a bitter fruit—sorrow. Look for no joy here, either from men or from mountains. The pages of Josephus are red with blood, as the historian narrates the destruction of city and Temple.

34. How often would I have gathered thy children together. "Three solemn visits He had made to Jerusalem, since His baptism, for this very purpose"—WESLEY.

35. Your house is left to you desolate —"is now irrevocably consigned to desolation and destruction. And verily I say to you, after a very short space, Ye shall not see Me till the time come when, taught by your calamities, ye shall be ready and disposed to say, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord. It does not imply that they should then see Jesus at all, but only that they would earnestly wish for the Messiah, and in their extremity be ready to entertain any who should assume that character"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XIV.

Vers. 1–14. HUMILITY AND UNSELFISHNESS. —1. Host and Guest.—Jesus as guest in the Pharisee's house is a picture to be gazed upon with interest. We have seen Jesus in the Temple; in the street; in the house of sickness; by the open grave: here is Jesus in another man's house, the recipient of hospitality. Jesus in the house. He sanctified all relations of life. His host was a Pharisee, and a chief among Pharisees. Many of this class were the embittered foes of Jesus. He knew their malice, but he did not spurn them. He came to save the lost, and to save He must seek. May we not learn a lesson of forbearance and kindness to those who are not kind to us? It is our duty to love our enemies. This is a hard lesson. It is easy to think kindly towards those who treat us kindly. But duty takes us along hard and thorny paths. Remember that the Son of Man was also Son of God. The Creator became a guest of the creature. His human nature was real. He ate and drank, and slept, and died.

Malice and Misery (vers. 1–6). — They were watching Him. And behold there was before Him a certain man which had the dropsy. Perhaps the invitation was a crafty one to entrap Jesus. Some have even thought that the poor sufferer was brought there on purpose to destroy Jesus. "The verse represents, with inimitable vividness, the flash of recognition with which the Lord at once grasped the whole meaning of the scene. The dropsical man was not one of the guests; he stood as though by accident in the promiscuous throng which may always enter an oriental house during a meal. But his presence was no accident. The dropsy is an unsightly, and was regarded as an incurable, disease. The Pharisaic plot had, therefore, been concocted with that complex astuteness which marks in other instances (ch. 20. 19–38; John 8. 5) also the deadliness of their purpose. They argued that he would not ignore the presence of a man conspicuously placed in front of Him; that perhaps He might fail in the cure of a disease exceptionally inveterate; that if He did heal the man on the Sabbath day there would be room for another charge before the synagogue or the Sanhedrim. One element which kindled our Lord's indignation against the Pharisees for these crafty schemes, was the way in which they made a mere tool of human misery and human shame"—FARRAR. The Pharisees watched Him as a wild beast watches its prey. If He did not heal the man, it would look as though He feared them, and the people would doubt His power and His sympathy. If He did heal the man, they would raise the cry, "The Sabbath is in danger." If they watched Jesus, ought we to complain if the world watches us? The servant is not greater than his lord. Because we attend the house of God, and find our way to the Sunday-school, many eyes follow us; some in sympathy, others in scorn. In this we are followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Pharisees did not say all they thought, so our Lord broke the silence and answered their unspoken thoughts. Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath, or not? He did not put the question out of ignorance, but out of charity. Not to do good is sometimes to do evil. He was often accused of healing on the Sabbath day. His foes made the means to an end more important than the end of the means. The Sabbath did not exist for itself, but for its worship, its freedom from earthly care, its opportunities of usefulness. Compare this incident with others in which our Lord was involved in the casuistry of narrow minds concerning Sabbath duties and Sabbath privileges:—The healing at Bethesda (John 5. 10); the scene in the cornfield (Mark 2. 23–28); the healing of the withered hand (Matt. 12. 10–14); of the blind man at Siloam (John 9. 14); and of the paralytic woman (Luke 13. 14–17). The Christian Sabbath admits of works of piety, charity, and necessity. It is necessary for the body, the mind, and the soul. When, during the French Revolution, it was temporarily deposed from its throne, the house of God was turned into a stable, and the streets of Paris into a battle-field. The Day of Light, the Day of Silence, the Day of Rest, the Praying Day, the Queen of Days, is indispensable to health and quietude, to morals and religion. They held their peace. And He took him, and healed him, and let him go. The miracle is represented as instantaneous. Took, healed, dismissed. How wondrously God works. There is no sign of effort when winter bursts into spring, and yet what a creation! So in this miracle Jesus works as the Son of God, without effort, without excitement. He spake, and it was done! He touched, and the man was healed. He asked a single question, received no answer, and turned from the silently-angry foes.

2. There was a certain man before Him. "It does not appear that he was come thither with any insidious design. Probably he came hoping for a cure; or perhaps was one of the family"—WESLEY.

3. And Jesus answering, spake—"answering the thoughts which he saw rising in their hearts"—WESLEY.

Vers. 7–11. PRIDE AND HUMILITY.—A struggle for precedence was going on. The guests were picking out for themselves the chief seats. He spake a parable unto them. By Divine right He was the great Guest. But He did not strive. And, as the world's Teacher, He enforced the lesson, "In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves." The ancient house of honour is entered by stooping, bending low. And so is the life divine and the heaven beyond.

> "Humble we must be, if to heaven we go;
> High is the roof there, but the door is low."

Humility is the queen of Christian graces. It is the special adornment of the young. Even the angels "veil their faces with their wings."

7. He spake a parable. The ensuing discourse is so termed, because several parts are not to be understood literally. The general scope of it is, not only at a marriage feast, but on every occasion, he that exalteth himself shall be humbled, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

Vers. 12–14. HOSPITALITY AND GENEROSITY.—Having spoken to the guests, He turns to the host, to teach him the lesson of generosity. Hospitality is good. Scripture recommends it. Our Lord does not forbid it. But there is something better than mere hospitality: unselfish generosity. The not here means "not only also" or "not so much . . . as." It denies not absolutely but conditionally. Hospitality feeds those who are needy; generosity waits upon hunger and nakedness and misery.

12. Call not thy friends—"that is, I do not bid thee 'call thy friends or thy neighbours.' Our Lord leaves these offices of humanity and courtesy as they were, and teaches an higher duty. But it is not implied herein, that we should be sparing in entertaining those that need it not, in order to assist those who do need, with all that is saved from those needless entertainments. Lest a recompence be made. This fear is as much unknown to the world, as even the fear of riches"—WESLEY.

14. One of them that sat at table hearing these things—"and being touched therewith—said, Happy is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God—alluding to what had been just spoken. It means, he that shall have a part in the resurrection of the just"—WESLEY.

Vers. 15–24. THE BANQUET REFUSED.—16. Then said He—"continuing the allusion, A certain man made a great supper. As if He had said, All men are not sensible of this happiness. Many might have a part in it, and will not"—WESLEY.

18. They all began to make excuse. "One of them pleads only his own will, I go; another, a pretended necessity, I must needs go; the third, impossibility, I cannot come. All of them want the holy hatred mentioned in ver. 26. All of them perish by things in themselves lawful. 'I must needs go.' The most urgent worldly affairs frequently fall out just at the time when God makes the freest offers of salvation"—WESLEY.

21. The servant came and showed his Lord these things. "So ministers ought to lay before the Lord, in prayer, the obedience or disobedience of their hearers"—WESLEY.

23. Compel them to come in—"with all the violence of love, and the force of God's word. Such compulsion, and such only, in matters of religion, was used by Christ and His apostles"—WESLEY.

24. "For refers to go out (ver. 23)"—WESLEY.

It was in harmony with Jewish ideas to present the festival of the consummated kingdom of heaven under the figure of a feast. The paschal meal gave them the type of it. Even heathen festivals and sacrificial feasts rested upon the same common foundation (Ex. 24. 11; Ps. 23. 5; Isa. 25. 6). "This feast of the kindgom of heaven is an image of the blessedness and fellowship of the life of faith, and assumes a threefold form: (1) it is a feast in the future world (Luke 16. 22); (2) it is the future feast at the visible advent of the Messiah (Luke 14. 15; Matt. 25. 1); (3) it is the present spiritual feast which begins at once with the life of faith (Ps. 23.); and the parables (Matt. 20. 1-14), and in this section. The Jewish rabbinical mythology exhibited the feast at the end of the world, at the advent of the Messiah, with all the sensuous characteristics, and in colossal figures." The occasion for the representation of the kingdom of heaven under this image was given the Saviour by the remark of his fellow-guest and by the feast of the Pharisee. He Himself was the great Guest, but by His own inherent superiority He became the Teacher of the table, and this is a specimen of His table-talk—His household conversation. It would be an interesting Bible study to trace Christ in other people's houses. We should see how real spiritual life transmutes the common, and transfigures all things. But this is by the way. All spiritual blessings are, broadly speaking, implied in this illustration of a feast. The gospel is a word soiled by use, and robbed of its depth and breadth of meaning through want of thought. But when we measure it, it stretches away like the horizon. It is truly a great supper. For those who care to indulge in fanciful likenesses, Bible writers have called it great, because of the greatness of Him who has prepared it; because intended for the whole world; because of the company of angels and saints; because purchased at a great cost; because of the mercy and love which prepared it for the unworthy. We prefer the general conception, but cannot be a law to others. In scriptural interpretation every teacher in his own order. The first invitation was through the prophets; the Jews the first invited. Historically, the Jews were the called people—the guests of God. All preachers of the gospel—voiceless or otherwise, for nature is a most eloquent preacher to those who have ears to hear—have been, and still are, gathering the guests to the great Supper. From different nations, from sunny and leaden skies, from varying circumstances, and through unlike experience, these guests are gathering. It is a parable of the world's movement and the Church's work. The feast is for all people. The provisions are boundless; the invitation is free. Three excuses given, as specimens of the rest, answer to the care of this world (ver. 18), the deceitfulness of riches (ver. 19), and the pleasures of this life (ver. 20), which choke the word. Each differs from the other, and each has its own plausibility, but all come to the same result. We have other things to attend to more pressing just now.

Vers. 25-35. On Counting the Cost.—26. If any man come to Me, and hate not his father—"comparatively to Christ; yea, so as actually to renounce his field, oxen, wife, —all things, and act as if he hated them, when they stand in competition with Him"—Wesley.

28. And which of you intending to build a tower—"that is, and whosoever of you intends to follow Me, let him first seriously weigh these things"—Wesley.

31. Another king. "Does this mean the prince of this world? Certainly he has greater numbers on his side. How numerous are his children and servants!"—Wesley.

33. So—"like this man, who, being afraid to face his enemy, sends to make peace with him. Every one who forsaketh not all that he hath—(1) by withdrawing his affections from all the creatures; (2) by enjoying them only in and for God, only in such a measure and manner as leads to Him; (3) by hating them all, in the sense above mentioned. Cannot be My disciple—but will surely desist from building that tower; neither can he persevere in fighting the good fight of faith"—Wesley.

34. Salt—"every Christian; but more eminently every minister"—Wesley.

All is made solemn and emphatic by the proverbial expression (ver. 35)—He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

CHAPTER XV.

Vers. 1-10. Lost and Found.—1. Sinners seeking the Saviour.—Then drew near unto Jesus all the publicans and sinners, drawn by the fascination of His personality, the pathos and hopefulness of His teaching. They were drawing near, not only at present, but this was their habit. (See R.V.) Though He came to save sinners, He required then, as now, that they drew near to Him. "Publicans" were for the most part apostate Jews, and were more abhorred than the heathen. "Sinners" were open and notorious offenders against the law of God. Tenderness towards the most abandoned is a sign of a God-like soul. A physician's special work is among the sick and the dying. And it is one of the peculiarities of the life of Jesus, that men and women who were helpless and outcast felt that in Him there dwelt a heart of pity. "Not without reason," as Oosterzee says, "does the eye rest with continually new interest on the picture: Jesus among the publicans and sinners. It is the gospel within the gospel, like John 3. 16; Rom. 1. 17; and some other passages. This of itself is remarkable, that the greatest sinners feel themselves drawn, as it were, with a secret attraction to Jesus; what an entirely unique impression must His personality have produced upon these troubled and smitten hearts. Thus does He reveal Himself at the same time as the Prince of Peace, of whom Ps. 72. 12-14, and so many other passages of the prophetic Scriptures, speak; and what the Pharisees impute to Him as a trespass, becomes for faith an occasion the rather for praise and thanks. The feast which He keeps with publicans is a striking symbol of the feast in the kingdom of God (Luke 14. 21-23), and, at the same time, the happy prophecy of the heavenly feast which He will hereafter share with His redeemed in the fulness of bliss." The chief business of our life is to draw near to Jesus. For nearness begets resemblance—the life Divine in the soul that begins with Jesus, grows through Jesus, grows like Jesus. Christ is man's highest ideal realised, as well as God's revelation manifested. All the publicans—"that is, all who were in that place. It seems our Lord was in some town of Galilee of the Gentiles, from whence he afterwards went to Jerusalem (Luke 17. 11)"—WESLEY.

2. Self-righteousness condemning sympathy. —The Pharisees and the scribes murmured, saying, This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them. They were applying the rule—Tell me the company you keep, and I will tell you what you are. But they were uttering a blessed, though unconscious testimony to Christ. The thing they censured was His especial delight. He came not to call the righteous, but sinners. He came to seek and to save the lost. They that are whole need not a physician. Our Lord not only received sinners, but allowed them to receive Him. The Pharisees repelled the touch of the wicked as pollution; He actually encouraged their approach and confidence. He was not afraid of evil. The New Testament has instances of every kind and class welcomed and saved, as if He would make it impossible for any to doubt His willingness to receive all who came to Him.

"He will receive THE RICH—Joseph of Arimathæa, an example.
He will receive THE POOR—Lazarus, the beggar, an example.
He will receive THE LEARNED—Dionysius, the Areopagite, an example.
He will receive PHYSICIANS—Luke, an example.
He will receive SOLDIERS—the Roman Centurion, an example.
He will receive FISHERMEN—Peter, etc., examples.
He will receive EXTORTIONERS—Zacchæus, an example.
He will receive TAX-GATHERERS—Publicans, examples.
He will receive THIEVES—the dying robber, an example.
He will receive PERSECUTORS AND MURDERERS—Saul, an example.
He will receive PERSONS POSSESSED OF DEMONS—many examples.
He will receive BACKSLIDERS—Peter, an example.
He will receive PERSONS IN TRADE—Lydia, a seller of purple, an example.
He will receive STATESMEN AND COURTIERS—the Eunuch of Ethiopia, an example.
He will receive FAMILIES—that of Bethany, an example.
He will receive WHOLE MULTITUDES—those at the day of Pentecost an example"—VAN DOREN.

The Pharisees forgot the repentance these sinners showed who drew near to Jesus. He received them, not because they were sinners, but because they were sinners seeking to be saints. Different effects were produced by the presence and words of Jesus. The humble heard and learnt; the proud murmured and condemned, although they murmured amongst themselves. They thought their discontent. Fear, reverence, suspicion that He was something more than they willingly recognised, prevented them directing their words against the Holy One of God. To understand His parables spoken at this time, we must understand the Pharisees' feeling, and the self-estimate it implied. This man receiveth sinners; but we are not sinners. Sinners are they who commit outrageous acts. All tax-gatherers are such sinners. Do we not judge the class by its individuals? An irrational and uncharitable but not uncommon method. And He is with them—eating and drinking with them. Can He be a holy Prophet of God? Like gathers to like. This man receiveth sinners—is He not one? They were in the world to tell that God receiveth sinners, that the story of the world is a history of mercy. Had they been faithful, their work would have been like Christ's; their life confirmed the realness of His.

Vers. 3–10. PARABLES OF THE SEEKING SAVIOUR.—Starting from the objection of the Pharisees and scribes, our Lord says—Sinners are justified in seeking Me, for I came to seek them. The three parables are illustrations and confirmations, on which BENGEL says: "The three parables represent the sinner (1) in his stupidity; (2) as all-unconscious of his lost condition; (3) knowingly and willingly estranged from God." "The first two," TRENCH observes, "set forth the seeking love of God; the last, His receiving love." Stier sees God in Christ in the first parable; the Holy Spirit in the Church in the second; the Father Almighty and All Merciful in the third. Luther descries a picture of the Church in the woman sweeping the house. We leave these distinctions merely with a mention. The parables of the lost sheep and the lost coin are the precious possessions of the universal Church. Elsewhere we may hold different opinions, see with different eyes; here disagreement is impossible. We see Jesus the love of God to all who are needy and guilty. The great Shepherd of the sheep is concerned about all who stray. Christ will not willingly allow the image of God that is stamped upon the soul to be defaced. He values the treasure too much to lose it willingly. He did not sit still in heaven bewailing the lost; He came down to earth seeking them. Self-denial, shame, suffering, lay in His path, but He went steadfastly forward. The Cross interprets the parables of seeking and finding. As He came into the world at His incarnation, so He comes now by every ministry of help and blessing. If He would not willingly lose us, let us not be unwilling to be saved. To save—here is boundless charity Divine; to seek that He might save—here is impassioned devotion. Christ hath left us an example!

3. He spake "three parables of the same import; for the sheep, the piece of silver, and the lost son, all declare, in direct contrariety to the Pharisees and scribes, in what manner God receiveth sinners"—WESLEY.

4. Leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness—"where they used to feed. All uncultivated ground, like our commons, was by the Jews termed wilderness, or 'desert.' And go after. In recovering a lost soul, God, as it were, labours. May we not learn hence, that to let them alone who are in sin, is both unchristian and inhuman?"—WESLEY.

7. Joy shall be—"solemn and festal joy. In heaven—first in our blessed Lord Himself, and then among the angels and spirits of just men, perhaps informed thereof by God Himself, or by the angels who ministered to them. Over one sinner—one gross, open, notorious sinner—that repenteth—that is thoroughly changed in heart and life—more than over ninety and nine just persons—comparatively just, outwardly blameless—that need not such a repentance. For they need not, cannot, repent of the sins which they never committed. The sum is, As a father peculiarly rejoices when an extravagant child, supposed to be utterly lost, comes to a thorough sense of his duty; or as any other person, who has recovered what he had given up for gone, has a more sensible satisfaction in it, than in several other things equally valuable, but not in such danger; so do the angels in heaven peculiarly rejoice in the conversion of the most abandoned sinners. Yea, and God Himself so readily forgives and receives them, that He may be represented as having part in the joy"—WESLEY.

Vers. 11-32. THE PARABLE OF THE PRODIGAL SON.—The Pearl of the Parables.—"If it were allowable," says STIER, "to introduce here the distinctions applicable to human things, we might term this parable the crown and the pearl of all our Lord's parables. How many words would it require to express all the feelings of reverent astonishment with which we ever contemplate and study it? How simple, yet how profound; how transparently artless as a chapter of human life, and yet how full of mystery, as a revelation of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; how perfectly natural is the picture as a whole, and yet how full of significance, down to the slightest and minutest features and touches; how eternally riveted on the memory are the words, how inexhaustibly to be explored are their ever new evolutions of meaning; with what dramatic life is all related, so that every fresh clause suggests in itself a whole history, which one is involuntarily constrained to pursue for himself; and again, with what force does every word arrest the conscience, and point to the parabolical application of the whole;—in short, to sum all in one word, how Divine-human is this parable of the God-man. So individually characteristic is it, that no other is its fellow. So universally comprehensive is it, that we all, as Nitzsch remarks, must find ourselves reproduced in this parable in some sense, either as we have become, or as we have ever been, or as we are hoping and endeavouring to be. "There is no parable of the Saviour," OOSTERZEE being our witness, "whose beauty and high value have been so generally and openly acknowledged as that of the prodigal son. Nothing would be easier than to collect a series of enthusiastic eulogies on this parable, even from rationalists and unbelievers. But mindful that the Divine, least of anything, needs our human praise, we will rather direct the eye to that which is here portrayed." "Never," declares FARRAR, "certainly in human language was so much—such a world of love and wisdom and tenderness—compressed into such few immortal words. Every line, every touch of the picture, is full of beautiful eternal significance. Put in the one scale all that Confucius or Sakya Mouni, or Zoroaster, or Socrates, ever wrote or said,—and they wrote and said many beautiful and holy words,—and put in the other the parable of the prodigal son alone, with all that this single parable connects and means, and can any candid spirit doubt which scale would outweigh the other in eternal preciousness, in Divine adaptation to the wants of man?" "The parables of the lost sheep and of the lost piece of silver," remarks GEIKIE, "were enforced by the noblest of all the parables. Henceforth, for all ages, it was proclaimed beyond the possibility of misconception, that, in the teaching of Jesus, God looks with unspeakably greater favour on the penitent humility of the 'sinner,' with its earnest of gratitude and love, than on cold correctness in which the heart has no place."

A Parable of Human Passion.—All commentators agree that by the Father is meant God Himself, but "in regard of the great primary application of this parable," says TRENCH, "there always have been the two different views in the Church. There are those who have seen in its two sons, the Jew and Gentile; and in the younger son's departure from his father's house, the history of the great apostasy of the Gentile world; in his return, its reception into the privileges of the new covenant, as in the elder brother, a lively type of the narrow-hearted, self-extolling Jew, who grudged that the sinners of the Gentiles should be admitted to the same blessing as themselves. Others behold rather in the younger son a pattern of all those who—whether Jews or Gentiles, whether in that old dispensation, which was then drawing to an end, or brought up in the bosom of the Christian Church—have widely departed from God, and, after having tasted the misery which follows upon all departure from Him, have by His grace been brought back to Him, as to the one source of blessedness and life; while in the elder brother they have seen either a narrow form of real righteousness, or seeing (ver. 29) only his own account of himself, pharisaical self-righteousness—one righteous in his own sight, not in the Lord's." The original relation of man to God is that of a son to a father. God the Father and Creator has sons, self-conscious, endowed with will, begotten in His likeness, and even in their apostasy they are children. We may apologise somewhat for the waywardness of youth. But it is the practical wisdom of young people to listen to those who have marked the way of folly with bleeding feet. For inexperience must pay its penalty. Sin and suffering are inextricable. The uncontrolled passion is madness. The prodigal in the parable did not return until he came to himself. "To depart from God is not to throw off the yoke, but to exchange a light yoke for a heavy one, and one gracious Master for a thousand imperious tyrants and lords"—TRENCH. Misery follows on sin. Wilful waste has ever been the forerunner of woeful want. Famine succeeds fierce indulgence. Passion makes its own scourge. "He who begins by using the world as a servant, to minister to his pleasure, ends by reversing the relationship." The prodigal could reach no lower depth. He was "perishing, unpitied, alone in the world, and ready to disappear from it unmissed." At length he began to think. And remembering that he was still a son, that he had yet a father, he turned his feet homeward. There was no want at home; there he will seek a welcome.

A Parable of Divine Patience.—"Said and done." Blessed association. He arose and came to his father. A long journey lay before him; many wild, confused thoughts would torture him, but his goal was HOME; his trust sole and sufficient was in his FATHER. His father was looking out for him; awaiting him. A welcome was offered before he could ask one. The father's feelings had been outraged, but the father's heart remained. He fell on his neck and kissed him. "What! in all his filth?—Yes. In all his rags?—Yes. In all his haggard, shattered wretchedness?—Yes. Our Father, which art in heaven, is this Thy portraiture? It is even so. (Jer. 31. 20.) And because it is so I wonder not that such incomparable teaching hath made the world new"—BROWN. He returned with a slave's prayer; he is acknowledged as a son, and restored to all forfeited privileges of sonship. The whole of the gospel plan is not here; the emphasis is in the enduring patience and abounding love of our heavenly Father, whose commandments we have broken, whose mercy we have slighted, whose justice we have spurned, whose voice we have disregarded. But in defiance of our folly, and notwithstanding the envy and discontent of the elder brothers in the Church and the world, there is mercy with God for all who think AND TURN, forsake sin, and follow after holiness and peace.

12. Give me the part of goods that falleth to me. "See the root of all sin,—a desire of disposing of ourselves; of independency of God!"—WESLEY.

13. He took a journey into a far country—"far from God: God was not in all his thoughts. And squandered away his substance—all the grace he had received"—WESLEY.

14. He began to be in want—"all his worldly pleasures failing, he grew conscious of his want of real good"—WESLEY.

15. And he joined himself to a citizen of that country—"either the devil, or one of his children; the genuine citizens of that country which is far from God. He sent him to feed swine—he employed him in the base drudgery of sin"—WESLEY.

16. He would fain have filled his belly with the husks—"he would fain have satisfied himself with worldly comforts. Vain, fruitless endeavour!"—WESLEY.

17. And coming to himself—"for till then he was beside himself, as all men are, so long as they are without God in the world"—WESLEY.

18. I will arise, and go to my father. "How accurately are the first steps of true repentance here pointed out! Against heaven—against God"—WESLEY.

20. And he arose, and came to his father. "The moment he had resolved, he began to execute his resolution. While he was yet a great way off, his father saw him—returning, starved, naked"—WESLEY.

22. But the father said—"interrupting him, before he had finished what he intended to say. So does God frequently cut an earnest confession short by a display of His pardoning love"—WESLEY.

23. Let us be merry. "Both here and wherever else this word occurs, whether in the Old or New Testament, it implies nothing of levity, but a solid, serious, religious, heartfelt joy; indeed, this was the ordinary meaning of the word two hundred years ago, when our translation was made'—WESLEY.

25. "The elder son seems to represent the Pharisees and scribes mentioned (ver. 2)"—WESLEY.

27. Thy father hath killed the fatted calf. "Perhaps he mentions this, rather than the robe or ring, as having a nearer connection with the music and dancing"—WESLEY.

28. He was angry, and would not go in. "How natural to us is this kind of resentment!"—WESLEY.

29. Lo, so many years do I serve thee. "So he was one of the instances mentioned (ver. 7). How admirably, therefore, does this parable confirm that assertion! Yet thou never gavest me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends—perhaps God does not usually give much joy to those who never felt the sorrows of repentance"—WESLEY.

31. Thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine. "This suggests a strong reason, against murmuring at the indulgence shown to the greatest of sinners. As the father's receiving the younger son did not cause him to disinherit the elder, so God's receiving notorious sinners will be no loss to those who have always served Him; neither will He raise these to a state of glory equal to that of those who have always served Him, if they have, upon the whole, made a greater progress in inward as well as outward holiness"—WESLEY.

32. This thy brother was dead, and is alive. "A thousand of these delicate touches in the inspired writings escape an inattentive reader. In ver. 30 the elder son had unkindly and indecently said, 'This thy son.' The father in his reply mildly reproves him, and tenderly says, 'This thy brother.' Amazing intimation, that the best of men ought to account the worst sinners their brethren still, and should especially remember this relation when they show any inclination to return. Our Lord in this whole parable shows not only that the Jews had no cause to murmur at the reception of the Gentiles (a point which did not at that time so directly fall under consideration), but that if the Pharisees were indeed as good as they fancied themselves to be, still they had no reason to murmur at the kind treatment of any sincere penitent. Thus does He condemn them, even on their own principles, and so leaves them without excuse. We have in this parable a lively emblem of the condition and behaviour of sinners in their natural state. Thus, when enriched by the bounty of the great common Father, do they ungratefully run from Him (ver. 12). Sensual pleasures are eagerly pursued till they have squandered away all the grace of God (ver. 13). And while these continue, not a serious thought of God can find a place in their minds. And even when afflictions come upon them (ver. 14), still they will make hard shifts before they will let the grace of God, concurring with His providence, persuade them to think of a return (vers. 15, 16). When they see themselves naked, indigent, and undone, then they recover the exercise of their reason (ver. 17); then they remember the blessings they have thrown away, and attend to the misery they have incurred; and hereupon they resolve to return to their Father, and put the resolution immediately in practice (vers. 18, 19). Behold with wonder and pleasure the gracious reception they find from Divine, injured goodness! When such a prodigal comes to his Father, He sees him afar off (ver. 20). He pities, meets, embraces him; and interrupts his acknowledgments with the tokens of His returning favour (ver. 21). He arrays him with the robe of a Redeemer's righteousness, with inward and outward holiness, adorns him with all His sanctifying graces, and honours him with the tokens of adopting love (ver. 22). And all this He does with unutterable delight, in that he who was lost is now found (vers. 23, 24). Let no elder brother murmur at this indulgence, but rather welcome the prodigal back into the family. And let those who have been thus received wander no more, but emulate the strictest piety of those who for many years have served their heavenly Father, and not transgressed His commandments"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XVI.

Vers. 1–13. THE UNJUST STEWARD.—In reading the parable of the unjust steward we must note that the word lord is not spelt with a capital letter. Forgetfulness of this simple fact has caused many to misread the story. They have supposed that our Lord commended cunning, and almost connived at injustice. It is the lord or master of the servant who is speaking. The Lord Jesus does not utter His own words until ver. 9, I say unto you. No parable has caused more perplexity than this. And, in trying to apply every phrase, the steward has been regarded as representing the Pharisees, the publicans, Christ, Judas Iscariot, and even Satan. We shall be safe if we seize as the main lesson of the parable, the one which Christ Himself attached to it, the use of earthly gifts of wealth and opportunity for heavenly and not for earthly aims.

The Unjust Steward (ver. 1).—There was a certain rich man which had a steward. How dependent we are in life. The man was rich, but he could not do without a steward. Because he had so much he could not attend to it all. Our opportunities are responsibilities; our advantages create their own difficulties. Out of this dependence grows honour between man and man. The master must rely upon his servant's honesty. Hence our teachers are never tired of insisting upon the importance of truth, integrity, and devotion to duty. The rich man was in the hands of his steward. In ancient times stewards were often slaves; this was a freeman—capable of and liable to dismissal. Eliezer was ruler over all the house of Abraham. Ministers, teachers, wealthy men, clever people—all are stewards of God. Everything we have we hold in trust. Honesty is necessary, dishonesty is possible. The steward was dishonest. He was accused unto his master that he was wasting his goods. Probably as many have done since by luxurious living. He began by spending more than he earned. This is a species of dishonesty, and is the fruitful parent of crime. Many a youth who has been taught in our schools has allowed himself to overspend, and then borrowed from his master's till, intending to pay back again, until he coiled a net about him from which there was no escape, and ruin has stared him in the face. Never palter with the distinction between "mine and thine." Honesty, simple homely honesty, is a supreme virtue.

And He said also to His disciples—"not only to the scribes and Pharisees, to whom He had been hitherto speaking, but to all the younger as well as the elder brethren; to the returning prodigals who were now His disciples. A certain rich man had a steward. Christ here teaches all that are now in favour with God, particularly pardoned penitents, to behave wisely in what is committed to them"—WESLEY.

Called to account (ver. 2).—A wrong course may be a long course, but it has an end. Convinced of the steward's guilt, the master called him and said, What is this that I hear of thee? render the account of thy stewardship, for thou canst be no longer steward. The truth of the accusation is presupposed. The rich man is convinced that the steward has robbed him, and he says, "Render the account." There may be some emphasis in "thee." Do I hear this of thee—my steward; so highly placed, so trusted, hast thou been a steward of injustice? Alas, the world is growing bad! Ingratitude would thus be added to injustice. What a falling off was here! The depth of degradation is in proportion to the height of honour and position.

Unspoken thoughts (vers. 3, 4).—Driven from his master's presence, discovered and disgraced, the man had time to think. He said within himself. What a realm this is—within himself. Every one of us is a king; self is our kingdom. Degradation issues when we resign our authority. Thought is unspoken speech; speech is spoken thought. Danger sharpened the steward's thinking faculties. There is no spur like necessity. What shall I do? He had done already—done wrong. He had lived easily, smoothly, prosperously. But there was a canker at the heart of his tree of life. The end was approaching. What shall I do—dig or beg? There was an alternative. But digging was hard, begging shameful. I have not strength to dig; to beg I am ashamed. Cannot, will not—what powerful forces these are in life! Suddenly the steward sees a way of escape. It comes to him in the midst of his thinking, and he probably spoke under the influence of his excitement. I am resolved what to do. What strength there is in resolve! Our will is next only to omnipotence. And just as in the parable the man's cleverness and not dishonesty is commended, so we may admire the resolution of many people in regard to things of which we cannot approve. Irresolution is a sign of weakness, and sometimes leads to serious consequences. I am resolved what to do, that when I am put out of the stewardship they may receive me into their houses. He had not enriched himself. He had spent as he gathered. Ill-gotten gains never last. Others had been associated with him in business and pleasure. He will now make them his debtors, and then eat the bread of dependence.

3. To beg I am ashamed—"but not ashamed to cheat! This was likewise a sense of honour!—'by men called honour, but by angels frowned'"—WESLEY.

4. I know—"that is, I am resolved—what to do"—WESLEY.

Partners in crime (vers. 5–7).—In the East rents are paid in kind, and a responsible steward would have amplest opportunity to defraud. Calling to him each one of his lord's debtors, he said to the first, How much owest thou unto my lord? Out of his own mouth he will judge him. He shall acknowledge his own indebtedness. How much? A hundred. Take thy bond and sit down quickly, and write fifty. How much? Take thy bond and write fourscore. There was haste; but there was astuteness. Some can be bought cheap; others only by a large bribe. Some, too, have not conscience enough to resist a small offer, but a large offer would shock them. The method was successful. His lord commended the unrighteous steward because he had done wisely; not nobly, but prudently. He had been clever in devising expedients. Hence some have called this, not the parable of the unjust or unrighteous steward, but the parable of the prudent steward.

A Lesson of Life (vers. 8–13).—The sons of this world are for their own generation wiser than the sons of the light. Worldly people are often more energetic, more fertile in resource, than Christian people. We may learn from our enemies. How indifferent we often are in promoting a good cause, in seeking to be good that we may be able to do good! So our Lord says, Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness. Mammon means wealth, and is called unrighteousness because the abuse of it is so common, and it often leads to unrighteousness. We turn mammon into a friend, and make ourselves friends by its means, when we use riches, not as our own to squander, but as God's to employ in deeds of usefulness and mercy. And what is true of wealth is true of all other gifts of God—ours they are not, except as God's stewards.

8. And the lord commended the unjust steward—"namely, in this respect, because he had used timely precaution; so that though the dishonesty of such a servant be detestable, yet his foresight, care, and contrivance about the interests of this life deserve our imitation with regard to the more important affairs of another. The children of this world—those who seek no other portion than this world—are wiser—not absolutely, for they are, one and all, egregious fools; but they are more consistent with themselves; they are truer to their principles; they more steadily pursue their end; they are wiser in their generation—that is, in their own way—than the children of light—the children of God, whose light shines on their hearts"—WESLEY.

9. And I say to you. "Be good stewards even of the lowest talents wherewith God hath intrusted you. Mammon means riches or money. It is termed the mammon of unrighteousness, because of the manner wherein it is commonly either procured or employed. Make yourselves friends of this by doing all possible good, particularly to the children of God. That when ye fail—when your flesh and your heart faileth, when this earthly tabernacle is dissolved, those of them who are gone before may receive—may welcome—you into the everlasting habitations"—WESLEY.

10. "And whether ye have more or less, see that ye be faithful, as well as wise, stewards. He that is faithful in what is meanest of all, worldly substance, is also faithful in things of an higher nature; and he that uses these lowest gifts unfaithfully is likewise unfaithful in spiritual things"—WESLEY.

11. Who will intrust you with the true riches? "How should God intrust you with spiritual and eternal, which alone are true, riches?"—WESLEY.

12. If ye have not been faithful in that which was another's. "None of these temporal things are yours; you are only stewards of them, not proprietors. God is the Proprietor of all; He lodges them in your hands for a season; but still they are His property. Rich men, understand and consider this. If your steward uses any part of your estate (so called in the language of men) any further or any otherwise than you direct, he is a knave; he has neither conscience nor honour. Neither have you either one or the other if you use any part of that estate, which is in truth God's, not yours, any otherwise than He directs. That which is your own—heaven, which, when you have it, will be your own for ever"—WESLEY.

13. "And you cannot be faithful to God if you trim between God and the world—if you do not serve Him alone"—WESLEY.

Vers. 14–31. PHARISEES REBUKED; DIVES AND LAZARUS. — Covetous lovers of money (ver. 14; R.V., 2 Tim. 3. 2).—They derided Him—"an expression of open insolence"—WESLEY.

15. And He said to them, Ye are they who justify yourselves before men. "The sense of the whole passage is, That pride wherewith you justify yourselves feeds covetousness, derides the gospel (ver. 14), and destroys the Law (ver. 18); all which is illustrated by a terrible example. Ye justify yourselves before men—ye think yourselves righteous, and persuade others to think you so"—WESLEY.

16. "The Law and the Prophets were in force until John: from that time the gospel takes place; and humble, upright men receive it with inexpressible earnestness"—WESLEY.

17. "Not that the gospel at all destroys the Law"—WESLEY.

18. "But ye do; particularly in this notorious instance"—WESLEY.

19. There was a certain rich man—"very probably a Pharisee, and one that justified himself before men: a very honest, as well as honourable gentleman; though it was not proper to mention his name on this occasion. Who was clothed in purple and fine linen—and, doubtless, esteemed on this account (perhaps not only by those who sold it, but by most that knew him) as encouraging trade, and acting according to his quality. And feasted splendidly every day—and consequently was esteemed yet more for his generosity and hospitality in keeping so good a table"—WESLEY.

20. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus—"according to the Greek pronunciation, or Eleazar. By his name it may be conjectured he was of no mean family, though it was thus reduced. There was no reason for our Lord to conceal his name, which probably was then well known. Theophylact observes, from the tradition of the Hebrews, that he lived at Jerusalem. Yea, the dogs also came and licked his sores. It seems this circumstance is recorded to show that all his ulcers lay bare, and were not closed or bound up"—WESLEY.

22. And the beggar—"worn out with hunger and pain, and want of all things, died, and was carried by angels (amazing change of the scene!) into Abraham's bosom—so the Jews styled paradise, the place where the souls of good men remain from death to the resurrection. The rich man also died, and was buried—doubtless with pomp enough, though we do not read of his lying in state; that stupid, senseless pageantry, that shocking insult to ■ poor, putrefying carcase, was reserved for our enlightened age!"—WESLEY.

23. He seeth Abraham afar off—"and yet knew him at that distance. And shall not Abraham's children, when they are together in paradise, know each other?"—WESLEY.

24. Father Abraham, have mercy on me. "It cannot be denied, but here is one precedent in Scripture of praying to departed saints: but who is it that prays, and with what success? Will any who considers this be fond of copying after him?"—WESLEY.

25. But Abraham said, Son—"according to the flesh. Is it not worthy of observation, that Abraham will not revile even a damned soul? Shall living men revile one another? Thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things—thou didst choose and accept of worldly things as THY GOOD, thy happiness. And can any be at a loss to know why he was in torments? This damnable idolatry, had there been nothing more, was enough to sink him to the nethermost hell"—WESLEY.

26. Besides this, there is a great gulf fixed. "Reader, to which side of it wilt thou go?"—WESLEY.

28. Lest they also come into this place. "He might justly fear lest their reproaches should add to his own torment"—WESLEY.

31. Neither will they be persuaded—"truly to repent: for this implies an entire change of heart. But a thousand apparitions cannot effect this: God only can, applying His word" —WESLEY.

II. The Rich Man and Lazarus (vers. 19-31).—A page of contrasts. Let us mark them.

1. In Life.—A certain rich man—unnamed, perhaps unknown. That our Saviour drew a full-length portrait from real life is not quite proven. We think it would hardly be like Jesus, who had such perfect power of repression, to mark out some celebrity. We may regard the narrative as partly history and partly parable. At the gate of many a rich man beggars might be seen sitting anywhere at any time. A life of self-enjoyment is a picture the world has been familiar with through all the ages. Such a man as is here portrayed may have been a Pharisee in creed, but he was a Sadducee in life. He may have said, I believe in immortality and eternal life; but he lived as if there were no other world. A man of this world, forgetful that he is God's steward, such was the rich man of the parable. In strongest contrast, "serving as a foil to the worldly rich man," we have another, "stripped of all temporal good," in the most abject misery. He has a name, and that is almost all he has. He is laid at the rich man's gate, for he was too weak or too invalided to walk there. He cannot dig, and he begs rather with the eloquent, dumb tongue of need than with man's speech. His misery calls to the rich man's mercy, his poverty to the rich man's plenty. The dogs of the household came and licked his sores. They knew him whom their master left unnoticed. But the lesson is more than the picture. Evil is wrought by want of thought as well as by want of heart. Dives shut himself within himself. The world of poverty and sorrow and crime was to him an outside world. If it did not intrude on him he would not regard it. Jesus Christ came into the world to seek as well as to save: to seek that He might save. And all gifts are for distribution: all opportunities are index fingers we neglect at the peril of our souls. We are responsible for what we leave undone, as well as for what we do. The gospel of Jesus places an infinite value on a single soul. The conversations of Jesus were often for the benefit of a few; now and then His words were addressed to one. Organisations are valuable: the individual is important. What is my responsibility? Where does duty bid me follow her? A rich man is not necessarily a godless man. A poor man is not, because of his poverty, a pious man. Piety has to do with character, although it may control circumstances. Dives might have been admitted into Abraham's bosom, and Lazarus might have missed the reward. The material things around the rich man were sufficient for him, and the thought seldom or never came to him, What am I doing? whither am I hastening? How many thousands are like Dives to-day! They commit no great crimes, but they are neglecters, triflers. They live a butterfly's life, passing from flower to flower. They live for nothing, and end by thinking there is nothing to live for. If they thought how many Lazaruses they could feed and clothe, they would be happier, the world brighter, and heaven nearer. Nothing glitters like generosity; nothing is so satisfying as a stainless conscience and the smile of God. To be rich, and rich toward God, is a noble goal.

2. In Death.—And it came to pass. . . . With this insignificant phrase what events of significance are ushered in: nothing less than death and judgment. The beggar died; the rich man died. That is to say, the world quietly faded from them. Realities that had become familiar to them through custom and use disappeared. All those things they touched and loved went like the fabric of a dream, leaving not a rack behind. On the great half-revealed world these two men went, each to meet his God, each to tell his tale, each to read or re-read his life in the light that knows no darkness. "The rich man died; the beggar died." The rich man died, and had a funeral, costly and gorgeous, worthy of the station and occasion. He was buried. The poor beggar's funeral is not mentioned. It was not worthy of record. He was buried anyhow, anywhere, by anybody. Death ended his pain, closed the page of the story of his poverty. The body was no doubt buried by friend or stranger. The essential Lazarus, who was in that body, is carried by other hands to other regions. In life he had the ministry of not unfriendly dogs; in death he has the ministry of angels. In life he craved help, and sometimes craved it in vain; in death he has help from unexpected quarters, given without his asking, and all-sufficient for his needs. "One angel," as CHRYSOSTOM preaches, "would have been strong enough for this service, but it is the joy and emulation of the angels in common to bring one sinner out of his last prison-house into the wealthy place." "They carry him into Abraham's bosom, which was most probably already in Christ's time the Jewish designation of the place of the blessed fathers in Hades. As S. John lay at the table in the bosom of Jesus, and the Eternal Son Himself, before the time began, was in the bosom of the Father, so shall they that are of the faith be blessed with faithful Abraham, when they are received into everlasting habitations. Lazarus before the rich man's gate was probably the final probation of his life, to try whether such a sight would move him to reflection; or was he the last and only intercessor who lengthened his days of grace?"—STIER. He died—how is not recorded; and was buried—in what manner is left to inference and imagination.

3. In Eternity.—Although the intention of the parable, as Oosterzee wisely says, is not to give special instruction about future retribution, we thankfully accept the rays of light that fall upon this also. Yet it is immediately obvious that the whole parable is veiled in the costume of the Jewish conceptions of the last things. Without declaring that all is equally clear, we may at least contend that this parable gives us suggestions—enough to enliven hope, though not enough to satisfy curiosity concerning the future life. After death life continues. The soul does not sleep. Consciousness continues beyond the grave. The rich man knows who and where he is; he recognises Lazarus; can speak of the past, and interest himself in moral questions. The redeemed of the Lord is comforted. The soul is freed from suffering, translated to a place of happiness. Refreshment and fellowship are united. The entrance into the next world is into a congregation of like spirits. The word of God is the mightiest force in moral renewal. If a spirit appeared, scepticism would deny it, and would minimise its appearance. It could only speak of God, of duty, of immortality. The word speaks clearly and distinctly, and it is the word of God. Lazarus rose from the dead—did the Jews believe? Christ rose from the dead—has the world received Him? You have no right to prescribe to God. Accept the revelation He has given you.

CHAPTER XVII.

Vers. 1-10. VARIOUS SAYINGS.—"This piece contains four brief lessons, placed here without introduction: offences (vers. 1 and 2); the pardon of trespasses (vers. 3 and 4); faith (vers. 5 and 6); the non-meritoriousness of works (vers. 7-10)"—GODET. The peril of setting stumblingblocks in the path of others is described and denounced.

1. It is impossible but offences will come—"and they ever did, and do, come chiefly by Pharisees; that is, men who trust in themselves that they are righteous, and despise others"—WESLEY.

2. Little ones—"weak believers"—WESLEY.

3. Take heed to yourselves—"that ye neither offend others, nor be offended by others"—WESLEY.

4. If he sin against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day return, saying, I repent—"that is, if he gives sufficient proof that he does really repent, after having sinned ever so often, receive him just as if he had never sinned against thee. But this forgiveness is due only to real penitents. In a lower sense we are to forgive all, penitent or impenitent (so as to bear them the sincerest goodwill, and to do them all the good we can), and that not seven times only, but seventy times seven.

5. Lord, increase our faith—"that we may thus forgive, and may neither offend, nor be offended"—WESLEY.

6. And He said, If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed—"if ye had the least measure of true faith, no instance of duty would be too hard for you. Ye would say to this sycamine tree—this seems to have been a kind of proverbial expression"—WESLEY.

7. But which of you?—"But is it not meet that you should first obey, and then triumph; though still with a deep sense of your utter unprofitableness?"—WESLEY.

9. Doth he thank that servant—"does he account himself obliged to him?"—WESLEY.

10. When we have done all, say, We are unprofitable servants—"for a man cannot profit God. Happy is he who judges himself an unprofitable servant; miserable is he whom God pronounces such. But though we are unprofitable to Him, our serving Him is not unprofitable to us: for He is pleased to give by His grace a value to our good works, which, in consequence of His promise, entitles us to an eternal reward"—WESLEY.

Vers. 11-19. THE CLEANSED TEN: THE THANKLESS NINE. — 11. And it came to pass as He went to Jerusalem. "This is the first distinct note of time in S. Luke's narrative since ch. 9. 51. It appears to coincide with the journey of which we read in Matt. 19. 1; Mark 10. 1, and is the commencement of the last progress through the regions in which our Lord had already carried on His ministry. The fact peculiar to S. Luke, that it led him through Samaria, apparently through that part which lay on the borders of Galilee, is obviously reported in connection with the miracle that follows; the other Gospels dwelling on the departure from Galilee, and the continuance of the journey to Jerusalem, by the route on the east of the Jordan valley"—ELLICOTT.

12. Ten men that were lepers. "The rules of Lev. 13. 45 help us to bring the scene before the mind's eye—the group of the ten sufferers, full of leprous sores, their clothes rent, their heads bare, their upper lips covered, and crying, 'Unclean! unclean!' As only one of the ten was a Samaritan, it seems probable that the unnamed village was on the borderland of the two provinces. It is perhaps significant that our Lord takes neither of the usual caravan roads to Jerusalem,—one of which passed through Samaria, the other through Peræa,—but chooses one for Himself that led through the one district into the other. The herding together of those who were shut out from all other fellowship has its parallel in the four lepers of 2 Kings 7. 3"—PLUMPTRE.

13. Jesus, Master. "Although they do not yet know the Saviour's messianic dignity, yet they account Him a prophet, mighty in deed and word; their faith is sincere without being perfect, on which account also the Saviour does not repel them"—VAN OOSTERZEE.

17. Were not the ten cleansed? But where are the nine? "Were not the ten cleansed? but the nine—where? What worse leprosy or superstition, ignorance, eager selfishness, or more glaring ingratitude had kept back the others? We do not know"—FARRAR.

18. Save this stranger. "The word for 'stranger' means, literally, a man of another race—an alien. It implied, as indeed did the whole treatment of the Samaritans by the Jews, that the former were not recognised as being in any sense the children of Abraham"—ELLICOTT. "The best of us are far too like the nine lepers. We are more ready to pray than to praise, and more disposed to ask God for what we have not than to thank Him for what we have. Murmurings and complainings and discontent abound on every side of us. Few indeed are to be found who are not continually hiding their mercies under a bushel, and setting their wants and trials on a hill. These things ought not so to be"—RYLE.

19. Thy faith hath made thee whole. "The verb elsewhere rendered, as in ch. 7. 50, 'hath saved thee,' is obviously used here so as to include both its higher and lower meanings. The nine had had sufficient faith for the restoration of the health of their body; his had gone further, and had given a new and purer life to his soul"—PLUMPTRE.

Ver. 20 to ch. 18. 8. THE MESSIAH'S COMING.—"This piece embraces—(1) a question put by the Pharisees respecting the time of the appearance of the kingdom of God, and the answer of Jesus (vers. 20, 21); (2) a discourse addressed by Jesus to His disciples on the same subject (vers. 22–37); (3) the parable of the unjust judge, which applies the subject treated practically to believers (ch. 18. 1–8)"—GODET

20. The kingdom of God cometh not with observation—"with such outward pomp as draws the observation of every one"—WESLEY.

21. Neither shall they say, Lo here, or lo there. "This shall not be the language of those who are, or shall be, sent by Me to declare the coming of My kingdom. For, behold, the kingdom of God is within, or among you—look not for it in distant times or remote places. It is now in the midst of you; it is come: it is present in the soul of every true believer: it is a spiritual kingdom, an internal principle. Wherever it exists, it exists in the heart"—WESLEY.

22. Ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of Man—"one day of mercy, or one day wherein you might converse with Me, as you do now"—WESLEY.

23. "They shall say, See, Christ is here, or there—limiting His presence to this or that place"—WESLEY.

24. So shall also the Son of Man be—"so swift, so wide, shall His appearing be. In His day—the last day"—WESLEY.

26. The days of the Son of Man—"those which immediately follow that which is eminently styled 'His day'"—WESLEY.

31. In that day—"which will be the grand type of the Last Day, when ye shall see Jerusalem encompassed with armies"—WESLEY.

32. Remember Lot's wife—"and escape with all speed, without ever looking behind you"—WESLEY.

33. "The sense of this and the following verses is, Yet as great as the danger will be, do not seek to save your life by violating your conscience: if you do, you will surely lose it. Whereas if you should lose it for My sake, you shall be paid with life everlasting. But the most probable way of preserving it now, is to be always ready to give it up. A peculiar Providence shall then watch over you, and put a difference between you and other men"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Vers. 1–8. THE UNJUST JUDGE.—1. He spake a parable to them. "This and the following parable warn us against two fatal extremes with regard to prayer: the former against faintness and weariness, the latter against self confidence"—WESLEY.

7. And shall not God—"the most just Judge—vindicate His own elect—preserve the Christians from all their adversaries, and in particular save them out of the general destruction, and avenge them of the Jews? Though He bear long with them—though He does not immediately put an end, either to the wrongs of the wicked, or the sufferings of good men"—WESLEY.

8. Yet, when the Son of Man cometh, will He find faith upon earth?—"yet notwithstanding all the instances both of His long suffering and of His justice, whenever He shall remarkably appear against their enemies in this age, or in after-ages, how few true believers will be found upon earth"—WESLEY.

The two parables of the judge and the widow, and the Pharisee and the publican, although they, perhaps, were not delivered immediately after one another, constitute, however, together, a complete whole. Both have reference to prayer; yet so that in the first, believing perseverance before, in the second humble approach to, the Throne of Grace is commended. In order to end like the widow, one must have begun like the publican, and in order to act as recklessly of conscience as the judge, one must have the heart of a Pharisee in his bosom"—OOSTERZEE.

The Judge and the Widow.—"In almost all our Lord's other parables, the truth which they intended to teach is stated at the close. We travel though the story before we arrive at the moral. Here that meets us at the entrance, standing like an inscription over the door of a public building to tell us its use and purpose, in these words, He spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint. As Matthew Henry says, 'This parable has its key hanging at the door'"—GUTHRIE. Men ought always to pray, and not to faint. This was the lesson the parable of the importunate widow was designed to teach. Our Saviour had been speaking of His second coming. He said the fact was certain, the time uncertain. He emphasises these two things concerning it, namely, that it should be long delayed, and that it should occur when it was least expected. As in the history of individuals, so in the history of the Church, long patience would be needed, and prayerful confidence in the goodness and guidance of God. Deliverance would surely come; therefore let them pray without fainting, watch without distrust. Praying always here has not the same shade of meaning as the "Pray without ceasing" of S. Paul. It is not that we should never be doing anything else but pray for the coming of the Lord, but that we should not allow any circumstances, however dispiriting, or any delay, however long, to shake our faith in the appearing and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. This parable is sometimes called "The unjust judge," at other times "The importunate widow." With two strokes the character of the judge is drawn. He feared not God, he regarded not man. Hence he became what he is called, "The judge of injustice." Justice is the ornament of a judge. His robes are supposed to cover an uncorrupt heart. It is sometimes necessary to rise above the opinion of men; this man fell below it. He knew it. He had reached that depth that he could avow it to himself. A widow in that city came, saying, Avenge me of mine adversary. Do me justice. The widow's presence ought to have been an appeal. She was a widow—her adversary was formidable, relentless, cruel. But he sent her away from the judgment-seat. She came again and again, and yet again. Afterward he said within himself, Though I fear not God, nor regard man, yet because this widow troubleth me I will avenge her, lest she wear me out by her continual coming. The word rendered "weary" in A.V., or "wear" in R.V., means "to strike under the eyes." It was as if the judge had said facetiously, "She'll come to blows by and by." This importunity is the point our Lord illustrates. The "judge of unrighteousness" does not represent God, nor is the widow in all respects the type of a true suppliant. The God of righteousness, says our Lord, will do justice to His elect who cry to Him night and day. In a simple and literal sense they cry night and day. For there is no hour of the night when some sleepless soul is not talking to God. He is not only always approachable, but He is also always being approached. He is long-suffering over them. He bears long with them. The answer to prayer does not always come immediately. It may be delayed on account of the petitioner. Trust and patience are tested, and strengthened by delay. It may be delayed on account of the petition. If every prayer against tyranny were answered at once, the tyrant would have no space for repentance. He will avenge them speedily. Time is long or short relatively. Long to us is short to God. "One day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." "He will avenge." True of the individual; true, too, of the Church universal.

Vers. 9–14. THE PHARISEE AND THE PUBLICAN.—12. I fast twice in the week—"so did all the strict Pharisees, every Monday and Thursday. I give tithes of all that I possess—many of them gave one full tenth of their income in tithes, and another tenth in alms. The sum of this plea is, I do no harm; I use all the means of grace; I do all the good I can"—WESLEY.

13. The publican standing afar off—"from the Holy of Holies. Would not so much as lift up his eyes to heaven—touched with shame, which is more ingenuous than fear"—WESLEY.

14. This man went down—"from the hill on which the Temple stood. Justified rather than the other—that is, and not the other"—WESLEY.

The Pharisee and the Publican.—All is not prayer that calls itself by that name. Hence our Lord spake another parable to show what TRUE PRAYER is. He lets us see two men at their devotions. Two men went up into the Temple to pray, the one a Pharisee and the other a publican. They went to the same place, for the same purpose; and there the comparison ends. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself. In two senses he stood alone; his prayer was not really addressed to God. It was a soliloquy of self-praise. He expressed no wants. He offered no petition. It was a prayerless prayer. God, I thank Thee. Thanksgiving is good when it is real. It is proper and seasonable, and blessed in all places and at all times. The angels praise God. We have to thank God for creation, for preservation, and for redemption: for being and well-being. This man thanks God that he is other than others. His "I thank Thee" is a lifeless form. The publican, abashed in the presence of the God of the Temple, stood trembling, with downcast eyes and hand upon his breast, and put all his need into one short, sharp petition: God be merciful to me, the sinner. New Testament prayers are not long. "Lord, save me, I perish." "Lord, help me." "Lord, I believe; help, Thou, mine unbelief." "God be merciful to me." Both prayers were offered: only one answered. This man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himself shall be humbled: but he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

Vers. 15–17. JESUS AND THE CHILDREN. (See on Matt. 19. 13–15; Mark 10. 13–16.)—16. Calling them—"those that brought the children. Of such is the kingdom of God—such are subjects of the Messiah's kingdom and such as these it properly belongs to"—WESLEY.

Vers. 18–30. THE YOUNG RULER. (See on Matt. 19. 16–30; Mark 10. 17–31.)—22. Yet lackest thou one thing—"namely, to love God more than Mammon. Our Saviour knew his heart, and presently put him upon a trial which laid it open to the ruler himself. And to cure his love of the world, which could not in him be cured otherwise, Christ commanded him to sell all he had. But he does not command us to do this; but to use all to the glory of God"—WESLEY.

Vers. 31–34. JESUS FORETELLS HIS DEATH AND RESURRECTION. (See on Matt. 20. 17–19; Mark 10. 32–34.) — 34. They understood none of these things. "The literal meaning they could not but understand. But as they could not reconcile this to their preconceived opinion of the Messiah, they were utterly at a loss in what parabolical or figurative sense to take what He said concerning His suffering; having their thoughts still taken up with the temporal kingdom"—WESLEY.

Vers. 36–43. BARTIMÆUS. (See on Matt. 20. 29–34; Mark 10. 46–52.)

CHAPTER XIX.

Vers. 1–10. ZACCHÆUS. — This is a Bible picture. How much the Bible would lose if we took out its portraits. It is not simply a book of precepts, but also a collection of biographies. The names of men and women mentioned would make a long list. Hence it is a book for men, because it is about men. Bartimæus and Zacchæus are both associated with Jericho. Places and people are intimately connected. Mary and Martha with Bethany; the disciples with the Sea of Galilee; the woman of Samaria with the wells; the home-life of Jesus with Capernaum; the Transfiguration with Mount Hermon; and the triumphal entry with the Temple. And by the law of association the mention of the place suggests the person; the name of the person recalls the place. God is good, not only in giving us a revelation, but in the form in which it is given. The form is human, the contents Divine.

Obstacles overcome. — He entered and was passing through Jericho. Jericho, the city of palm-trees, is about six miles from the Jordan, and fifteen from Jerusalem. From a point opposite to it Moses viewed Canaan. When taken by Joshua the site was cursed. In the reign of Ahab, Hiel of Bethel defied and underwent the curse. In later times it became a wealthy town, being fertilised by its abundant spring, and enriched by its palms and balsams. Jericho was the home of Zacchæus. Behold, a man called by name Zacchæus; and he was a chief publican; and he was rich. Name, profession, position — the man's life is here. His name shows him a Jew; his profession a tax-collector under the Roman conquerors; his position proves him successful, whether honestly gained or not. It was not easy for such a man to be noble. Public opinion was against him. And few people can live above their surroundings. Men are apt to become what they are supposed to be; and boys and girls too. Dr. Arnold, of Rugby School, always said to his boys, "Gentlemen, you are trusted," and then they sought to be trustworthy. They used to say to one another, "We can't tell the doctor a lie, he always believes us." A chief publican men generally regarded as a chief sinner. His wealth, too, was in evidence against him. These were moral hindrances. He had physical difficulties. Success must come to him through struggle. He sought to see Jesus, who He was; and could not for the crowd, because he was little of stature. He sought to see Jesus. He was accustomed to contempt and hatred, but he had heard of One who was called a Friend of publicans. His motive was not simply curiosity, but genuine interest. The opportunity has now come. But Christ is in a crowd, and Zacchæus is little of stature. The multitude hid Christ from him. But he kept seeking. Need is fertile in expedients. He ran on before—and thus got over one obstacle to his seeing Jesus—the press. He climbed up into a sycamore tree—thus he overcame the other obstacle—his being little of stature. Ceremony does not usually allow a man of wealth or rank to climb a tree, but need and faith overcome everything. Contempt of difficulties is one of the marks of a strong nature. And we usually find what we seek. "God always anticipates us if He sees us eager for good." And when Jesus came to the place, He looked up and said, Zacchæus. With Christ the look and the word, the pity and the help were never far apart. He looked on Peter. He looked round about the Temple. He looked at the soldiers when they came to arrest Him, and they fell backward. God is said to have looked down upon the Egyptians, and then their chariots dragged heavily. The look of God is the look of Omniscience. He looketh not at the outward appearance, but at the heart. He looks through. Disguises are swept away. Christ of the loving look will one day come to be our Judge. Then "every eye shall see Him." He looked up, and said. He that calleth the stars by name knows every one whom He has made, maintained, and redeemed. "He calleth His own sheep by name, and leadeth them." Wonder and joy filled the heart of Zacchæus as he heard the Great Prophet and Healer say, Zacchæus, make haste, and come down; for to-day I must abide at thy house. Zacchæus had made haste to go up, now he must make haste to come down. Our Lord was accustomed to refer to the meaning of names. Zacchæus means "pure." And now he is to have as his guest the Holy One of God. And he made haste—(contrast Felix, Acts 24. 25) and the Athenians (Acts 17. 32). Procrastination is the thief of time and the murderer of opportunity. Now, is one of the shortest, but one of the most important words in language. Notice the echoes here. "Make haste"—"and he made haste." "Come down"—"and he came down." "To-day I must abide at thy house"—and he received Him joyfully. Climbing up and coming down, everything has its time. Zacchæus had gone before in haste, but the Lord is more in haste than he. This was the last passing through Jericho. One meeting between Jesus and Zacchæus; between the Saviour and the sinner; between the Lord of the Jew and Gentile and a son of Abraham was possible. The offer was given; the response was made. Each found what he sought. A miracle of grace was wrought. But they who saw murmured, saying, He is gone in to lodge with a man that is a sinner. A sinner—the proof of that? Was he not a publican? They judged the man from the class. It was probably a misjudgment. But if it were true, what then? The Son of God became Son of Man that He might save sinners.

Faith evinced.—Zacchæus stood and said unto the Lord, Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have wrongfully exacted aught of any man, I restore fourfold. Whatever the past had been he now bids it a long and last farewell. He had found THE LORD. Henceforth he would be in subjection, and show his faith by his works. The Lord loved the nobler self which he saw in him, and helped him to obey its impulses.

Blessing vouchsafed.—Jesus said, To-day is salvation come to this house, forasmuch as he also is a son of Abraham. This was for the help and direction of the man. For the Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost. This was the Divine answer to the murmurers.

1. He passed through Jericho—"so that Zacchæus must have lived near the end of the town; the tree was in the town itself. And he was rich. These words seem to refer to the discourse in the last chapter (vers. 24-27), particularly to ver. 27. Zacchæus is a proof that it is possible, by the power of God, for even a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven"—WESLEY.

2. The chief of the publicans—"what we would term the commissioner of the customs. A very honourable as well as a very profitable place"—WESLEY.

4. And running before—"with great earnestness. He climbed up—notwithstanding his quality; desire conquering honour and shame"—WESLEY.

5. Jesus said, Zacchæus, make haste and come down. "What a strange mixture of passions must Zacchæus have now felt; hearing one speak, as knowing both his name and his heart"—WESLEY.

7. They all murmured—"all who were near; though most of them, rather out of surprise than indignation"—WESLEY.

8. And Zacchæus stood—"showing by his posture his deliberate purpose and ready mind—and said, Behold, Lord, I give—I determine to do it immediately"—WESLEY.

9. He also is a son of Abraham—"a Jew born, and as such has a right to the first offer of salvation"—WESLEY.

Vers. 11-27. THE PARABLE OF THE TEN POUNDS.—11. They thought the kingdom of God—"a glorious temporal kingdom, would immediately appear"—WESLEY.

12. He went into a far country to receive a kingdom. "Christ went to heaven, to receive His sovereign power as man, even all authority in heaven and earth"—WESLEY.

13. Trade till I come—"to visit the nation, to destroy Jerusalem, to judge the world; or, in a more particular sense, to require thy soul of thee"—WESLEY.

14. But his citizens—"such were those of Jerusalem—hated him, and sent an embassy after him. The word seems to imply their sending ambassadors to a superior court, to enter their protest against his being admitted to the regal power. In such a solemn manner did the Jews protest, as it were, before God, that Christ should not reign over them. This man—so they called him in contempt"—WESLEY.

15. When he was returned—"in his glory"—WESLEY.

23. With interest—"which does not appear to be contrary to any law of God or man. But this is no plea for usury; that is, the taking such interest as implies any degree of oppression or extortion"—WESLEY.

25. They said—"with admiration, not envy"—WESLEY.

An Eastern allegory runs thus: A merchant, going abroad for a time, gave to two of his friends two sacks of wheat each to take care of against his return. Years passed; he came back, and applied for them again. The first took him into his storehouse and showed them him; but they were mildewed and worthless. The other led him out into the open country, and pointed out field after field of waving corn, the produce of the two sacks given to him. Said the merchant, "You have been a faithful friend. Give me two sacks of that wheat, the rest shall be thine." "The value of use and the penalty of disuse" are seen in the parable of the pounds; the pounds in trust; or, the servants and the pounds, as the parable may be variously called. A close relation subsists between this parable and that of the talents. (See on Matt. 25. 14-30.) The parable of the pounds was spoken when Jesus was drawing near to Jerusalem, but had not yet made His triumphal entry; the parable of the talents while He was seated on the Mount of Olives, the third day after His entrance into the city.

Both show that the Lord bestows privileges on His servants, and demands faithfulness in return, and both show that the diligent are rewarded, and the unprofitable condemned. In the parable of the talents unequal privileges are bestowed, but being employed with equal diligence, the approval is equal. In the parable of the pounds equal privileges are bestowed, which, with equally faithful use, win unequal success.

The Lord of the servants.—A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. This parable is a picture framed into the history of the period. Native princes were obliged to repair to Rome, in order to be elevated to their legitimate rank. This had been the case with Herod, and with Archelaus. Apart from the Gospels we can trace the exact circumstances which suggested this narrative. Here is an indirect proof—if one were needed—of the truth of the gospel history. Indeed, a palace of Archelaus stood in Jericho, and was probably gazed upon at that moment by those who listened to the parable. Archelaus actually left money in the charge of his servants; and an embassy followed him to Rome to recount his cruelties. The nobleman represents Christ; the far country is heaven, into which he was about to enter; the return is the second coming of the Lord, when He shall at the final judgment take account of all. The fact is stated; the time is left in obscurity. The parable is a picture of human life. Every one of us is intrusted by God with gifts and opportunities. The blessings and surprises of life; the faculties, natural and acquired; the spheres in which we move; the things we may do, and yet leave undone—these be pounds for which we must render an account.

Successful servants.—He commanded the servants, unto whom he had given the money, to be called to him, that he might know what they had gained by trading. And the first came before him, saying, Lord, thy pound hath made ten pounds more. And the second came, saying, Thy pound, lord, hath made five pounds. To each the same amount was intrusted, but one returned double the amount of the other. In the race of life we do not long keep close together. There may be equal fidelity with different degrees of advantage. All have not the same strength, nor have all the same speed. Our natural ability is as a vessel, which may be large or may be small, and which receives according to its capacity, but which in each case is filled. "Thy pound." He does not say I have gained, but thy pound has gained. It is the lord's gift, not the servant's industry, that holds first place. When the great apostle speaks of his life-work he says, "I laboured more abundantly than they all; yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me." Humility attends and adorns true success. Well done, thou good servant. The first reward of doing is doing—the knowledge that one has done what God would have him do. The joy of imparting good, the joy of helping, is the joy of living. But God knows that the deed is accomplished. He says, Well done. The praise of God is the highest praise, the only praise worth the name. Well done, good servant, thou wast found faithful. Heaven watches the doer and notes the deed. We may be faithful in God's sight and yet not successful in the eyes of men. Faithful and successful are not always equivalent terms. Another reward of faithfulness is fitness for higher work: Have thou authority over ten cities. Be thou also over five cities. Archelaus had actually assigned the government of cities to his adherents who had proved faithful, and this was not an uncommon plan among the Herodian princes. "We shall also reign with Him," says S. Paul in writing to Timothy. The reward corresponds, not to the one pound given, but to the ten or five gained. There will be degrees of rewards in the heavenly kingdom. "One star differeth from another star, in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead."—WESLEY.

The slothful servant.—Another came, saying, Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I kept laid up. There are only two methods, the diligent and the indolent; only two classes, the faithful and the unfaithful. It costs as much trouble to bury as to employ a talent. This man laid it up in a napkin, and then had to watch lest it should be stolen. Some think they have done no harm, if they have done no good. The unfaithful misjudge God. The man feared and then tried to defend his neglect. I feared thee, because thou art an austere man. Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee. Thou oughtest. Duty remains to me, whoever else may be unjust, or neglectful. But God never commands us to do without giving us the strength.

The law of increase.—Take away from him the pound, and give it unto him that hath the ten pounds, for unto every one that hath shall be given: but from him that hath not, even that which he hath shall be taken away from him. A limb never called into exercise loses its strength by degrees—its muscle and sinews disappear, so the gifts of God, unexercised, fade and fall from us. The fish in Mammoth Cave, Kentucky, are entirely blind, from their long existence as a race in perfect darkness; although the fish of the same species in the streams outside in the light have good eyes. The tools are for him who can use them.

Open foes.—These mine enemies. Thus majestically, in his own person, the lord pronounces sentence. Enemies who should have been subjects. Bring hither, and slay them before me. Archelaus had put some to death. Our Lord foresaw the destruction of Jerusalem and the consequences of wrong-doing throughout the ages. After uttering this judgment He proceeds to Jerusalem to be crucified.

"Perhaps during the delivery of the parable He had paused to let the crowd gather round Him. The road from Jericho to Jerusalem is a continual ascent"—C. B.

Vers. 29–40. THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRY. (See on Matt. 21. 1–9; Mark 11. 1–10.)—28. He went before—"the foremost of the company, showing His readiness to suffer"—WESLEY.

29. He drew nigh to "the place where the borders of Bethphage and Bethany met, which was at the foot of the Mount of Olives"—WESLEY.

37. The whole multitude began to praise God—"speaking at once, as it seems, from a Divine impulse, words which most of them did not understand"—WESLEY.

38. Peace in heaven—"God being reconciled to man"—WESLEY.

39. Rebuke Thy disciples—"paying Thee this immoderate honour"—WESLEY.

40. If these should hold their peace, the stones which lie before you would cry out—"that is, God would raise up some still more unlikely instruments to declare His praise. For the power of God will not return empty"—WESLEY.

Vers. 41–44. JESUS WEEPS OVER JERUSALEM. —41. He saw the city. "The Temple was at that time magnificent with gilding and white marble, which flashed resplendently in the spring sunlight, and the city was very unlike the crumbling and squalid city of to-day. But that mass of gold and snow woke no pride in the Saviour's heart. Few scenes are more striking than this burst of anguish in the very midst of the exulting procession. And wept over it. Not merely shed silent tears as at the grave of Lazarus, but wept aloud; and that, although not all the agonies and insults of four days later could wring from Him one tear or sigh"—C. B.

42. O that thou hadst known, at least in this thy day. "After thou hast neglected so many. Thy day—the day wherein God still offers thee His blessings"—WESLEY.

43. Thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round. "All this was exactly performed by Titus, the Roman general"—WESLEY.

44. And thy children within thee. "All the Jews were at that time gathered together, it being the time of the Passover. They shall not leave one stone upon another. Only three towers were left standing for a time to show the former strength and magnificence of the place. But these, likewise, were afterwards levelled with the ground"—WESLEY.

Vers. 45–48. FINAL CLEANSING OF THE TEMPLE. (See on Matt. 21. 12, 13; Mark 11. 15, 18.)—48. The people were very attentive to hear Him (R.V. "The people all hung upon Him, listening"). "Hanged on Him, as the bee doth on the flower, the babe on the breast, the little bird on the bill of her dam. Christ drew the people after Him by the golden chain of His heavenly eloquence"—TRAPP.

CHAPTER XX.

Vers. 1–8. SUDDEN QUESTION OF THE PRIESTS AND SCRIBES. (See on Matt. 21. 23–27; Mark 11. 27–33.) 9–19. LABOURERS IN THE VINEYARD. (See on Matt. 21. 33–46; Mark 12. 1–12.)—9. A long time. "It was a long time from the entrance of the Israelites into Canaan to the birth of Christ"—WESLEY.

16. He will destroy these husbandmen. "Probably He pointed to the scribes, chief priests, and elders, who allowed, 'He will miserably destroy those wicked men' (Matt. 21. 41), but could not bear that this should be applied to themselves. They might also mean, God forbid that we should be guilty of such a crime as your parable seems to charge us with; namely, rejecting and killing the heir. Our Saviour answers, But yet ye will do it, as is prophesied of you"—WESLEY.

17. He looked on them—"to sharpen their attention"—WESLEY.

Vers. 20–26. QUESTIONS ABOUT THE TRIBUTE MONEY. (See on Matt. 22. 15–22; Mark 12. 13–17.)—20. Just men — "men of a tender conscience. To take hold of His discourse—if He answered as they hoped He would"—WESLEY.

21. Thou speakest — "in private. And teachest—in public"—WESLEY.

24. Show Me a penny—"a Roman penny, which was the money that was usually paid on that occasion"—WESLEY.

26. They could not take hold of His words before the people—"as they did afterwards before the Sanhedrim, in the absence of the people (ch. 22. 67), etc."—WESLEY.

Vers. 27–40. CONFLICT WITH SADDUCEES. (See on Matt. 22. 23–33; Mark 12. 18–27.)—34. The children of this world—"the inhabitants of earth—marry and are given in marriage—as being all subject to the law of mortality; so that the species is in need of being continually repaired"—WESLEY.

35. But they who obtain that world—"which they enter into before the resurrection of the dead"—WESLEY.

36. They are the children of God—"in a more eminent sense when they rise again"—WESLEY.

37. That the dead are raised, even Moses, "as well as the other prophets, showed when he calleth—that is, when he recites the words which God spoke of Himself, I am the God of Abraham, etc. It cannot properly be said that God is the God of any who are totally perished"—WESLEY.

38. He is not a God of the dead, or, "There is no God of the dead"—"that is, the term 'God' implies such a relation as cannot possibly subsist between Him and the dead; who, in the Sadducees' sense, are extinguished spirits; who could neither worship Him nor receive good from Him. So that all live to Him—all who have Him for their God, live to and enjoy Him. This sentence is not an argument for what went before, but the very proposition which was to be proved. And the consequence is apparently just. For as all the faithful are the children of Abraham, and the Divine promise of being 'a God to him and to his seed' is entailed upon them, it implies their continued existence and happiness in a future state as much as Abraham's. And as the body is an essential part of man, it implies both his resurrection and theirs; and so overthrows the entire scheme of the Sadducean doctrine"—WESLEY.

40. They durst not ask Him any question—"the Sadducees durst not. One of the scribes did, presently after"—WESLEY.

Vers. 41–47. THE CHRIST IS DAVID'S SON AND DAVID'S LORD. (See on Matt. 22. 41–46; 23. 1–14; Mark 12. 35–40.)

CHAPTER XXI.

Vers. 1–4. THE WIDOW'S MITE. (See on Mark 12. 41–44.)—1. He looked up—"from those on whom His eyes were fixed before"—WESLEY.

Vers. 5–7. THE DOOMED TEMPLE. (See on Matt. 24. 1, 2; Mark 13. 1, 2.)—5. Goodly stones—"such as no engines now in use could have brought, or even set upon each other. Some of them (as an eyewitness who lately measured them writes) were forty-five cubits long, five high, and six broad; yet brought thither from another country. And gifts—which persons delivered from imminent dangers had, in accomplishment of their vows, hung on the walls and pillars. The marble of the Temple was so white, that it appeared like a mountain of snow at a distance. And the gilding many parts made it, especially when the sun shone, a most splendid and beautiful spectacle"—WESLEY.

Vers. 8–27. SIGNS OF THE END. (See on Matt. 24. 3–27; Mark 13. 3–31.)—8. And the time is near—"when I will deliver you from all your enemies. They are the words of the seducers"—WESLEY.

9. Commotions — "intestine broils, civil wars"—WESLEY.

11. Fearful sights, and signs from heaven—"of which Josephus gives a circumstantial account"—WESLEY.

13. It shall turn to you for a testimony—"of your having delivered your own souls, and of their being without excuse"—WESLEY.

18. Not an hair of your head—"a proverbial expression — shall perish — without the special providence of God. And then not before the time, nor without a full reward"—WESLEY.

19. In your patience possess ye your souls. "Be calm and serene, masters of yourselves, and superior to all irrational and disquieting passions. By keeping the government of your spirits, you will both avoid much misery, and guard the better against all dangers"—WESLEY.

21. Let them that are in the midst of it—"where Jerusalem stands, that is, they that are in Jerusalem—depart out of it—before their retreat is cut off, by the uniting of the forces near the city. And let not them that are in the adjacent countries by any means enter into it"—WESLEY.

22. All things which are written—"particularly in Daniel"—WESLEY.

24. They shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive. "Eleven hundred thousand perished in the siege of Jerusalem, and above ninety thousand were sold for slaves. So terribly was this prophecy fulfilled. And Jerusalem shall be trodden by the Gentiles—that is, inhabited. So it was indeed. The land was sold, and no Jew suffered even to come within sight of Jerusalem. The very foundations of the city were ploughed up, and an heathen temple built where the Temple of God had stood. The times of the Gentiles—that is, the times limited for their treading the city, which shall terminate in the full conversion of the Gentiles"—WESLEY.

25. And there shall be—"before the great day; which was typified by the destruction of Jerusalem. Signs—different from those mentioned (ver. 11, etc.)"—WESLEY.

Vers. 28–36. THE SAVED REMNANT. (See on Matt. 24. 32–42; Mark 13. 28–37.)—28. Now when these things—"mentioned in vers. 8 and 10, etc.—begin to come to pass, look up—with firm faith. And lift up your heads—with joy. For your redemption—out of many troubles—draweth nigh—by God's destroying your implacable enemies"—WESLEY.

29. Behold the fig tree and all the trees. "Christ spake this in the spring, just before the Passover, when all the trees were budding on the Mount of Olives, where they then were"—WESLEY.

30. Ye know of yourselves—"though none teach you"—WESLEY.

31. The kingdom of God is nigh—"the destruction of the Jewish city, Temple, and religion, to make way for the advancement of My kingdom"—WESLEY.

32. Till all things be fulfilled—"all that has been spoken of the destruction of Jerusalem, to which the question (ver. 7) relates; and which is treated of from vers. 8–24"—WESLEY.

34. Take heed lest at any time your hearts be overloaded with gluttony and drunkenness. "And was there need to warn the apostles themselves against such sins as these? Then surely there is need to warn even strong Christians against the very grossest sins. Neither are we wise, if we think ourselves out of the reach of any sin. And so that day—of judgment or of death—come upon you— even you that are not of this world—unawares"—WESLEY.

35. That sit—"careless and at ease"—WESLEY.

36. Watch ye therefore. "This is the general conclusion of all that precedes. That ye may be counted worthy. This word sometimes signifies an honour conferred on a person, as when the apostles are said to be 'counted worthy to suffer shame for Christ' (Acts 5. 41). Sometimes, meet or becoming; as when John the Baptist exhorts to 'bring fruits worthy of repentance' (Luke 3. 8). And so to 'be counted worthy to escape,' is to have the honour of it, and to be fitted or prepared for it. To stand—with joy and triumph. Not to fall before Him, as His enemies"—WESLEY.

Vers. 37, 38. OUR LORD'S BUSY LIFE.—Every day He was teaching in the Temple. "During the days. The notice is retrospective, applying to Palm Sunday, and the Monday and Tuesday in Passion week. After Tuesday evening He never entered the Temple again. Wednesday and Thursday were spent in absolute and unrecorded retirement, perhaps with His disciples in the house at Bethany, until Thursday evening, when He went into Jerusalem again for the Last Supper"—C. B. At night He went out and abode in the Mount—lit. "'used to bivouac'; it is very probable that He slept in the open air with His disciples, as is very common with Orientals. He would be safe on the slopes of Olivet, among the booths of the Galilean pilgrims"—C. B. (See ch. 22. 39; John 18. 1, 2.)

37. And every day—"in the day-time. He was teaching in the Temple. This shows how our Lord employed His time after coming to Jerusalem. But it is not said, He was this day in the Temple, and next morning the people came. It does not therefore by any means imply that He came any more after this into the Temple"—WESLEY.

38. And all the people came early in the morning to hear Him. "How much happier were His disciples in these early lectures, than the slumbers of the morning could have made them on their beds! Let us not scruple to deny ourselves the indulgence of unnecessary sleep, that we may morning after morning place ourselves at His feet, receiving the instructions of His word, and seeking those of His Spirit"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XXII.

Vers. 1-6. THE CHIEF PRIESTS CONSPIRE WITH JUDAS ISCARIOT. (See on Matt. 26. 1-5, 14-16; Mark 14. 1, 2, 10, 11.)

3. Then entered Satan—"who is never wanting to assist those whose heart is bent upon mischief"—WESLEY.

4. Captains—"called 'captains of the Temple' (ver. 52). They were Jewish officers, who presided over the guards which kept watch every night in the Temple"—WESLEY.

Vers. 7-13. THE DISCIPLES PREPARE THE PASSOVER. (See on Matt. 26. 17-19; Mark 14. 12-16.)

Vers. 14-16. JESUS AND HIS DISCIPLES BEGIN THE LAST SUPPER. (See on Matt. 26. 20; Mark 14. 17.)—15. With desire I have desired. It is a Hebraism, signifying earnest desire. (See Matt. 13. 14; John 3. 29; Acts 4. 17; 5. 28.)

15. With desire have I desired—"that is, I have earnestly desired it. He desired it, both for the sake of His disciples, to whom He desired to manifest Himself further at this solemn parting; and for the sake of His whole Church, that He might institute the grand memorial of His death"—WESLEY.

16. For I will not eat thereof any more—"that is, it will be the last I shall eat with you before I die. The kingdom of God did not properly commence till His resurrection. Then was fulfilled what was typified by the Passover"—WESLEY.

Vers. 17-38. THE LAST SUPPER. (See on Matt. 26. 21-29; Mark 14. 18-25.)—17. And He took the cup. "That cup which used to be brought at the beginning of the paschal solemnity. And said, Take this and divide it among yourselves: for I will not drink. As if He had said, Do not expect Me to drink of it: I will drink no more before I die"—WESLEY.

19. And He took bread—"namely, some time after, when supper was ended, wherein they had eaten the paschal lamb. This is My body. As He had just now celebrated the Paschal Supper, which was called the Passover, so, in the like figurative language, He calls this bread His body. And this circumstance in itself was sufficient to prevent any mistake, as if this bread was His real body, any more than the paschal lamb was really the Passover"—WESLEY.

20. This cup is the New Testament. "Here is an undeniable figure, whereby the cup is put for the wine in the cup. And this is called, the New Testament in Christ's blood, which could not possibly mean, that it was the New Testament itself, but only the seal of it, and the sign of that blood which was shed to confirm it"—WESLEY.

21. The hand of him that betrayeth Me is with Me on the table. "It is evident, Christ spake these words before He instituted the Lord's Supper; for all the other Evangelists mention the sop, 'immediately after receiving which he went out' (John 13. 30). (Nor did he return any more till he came into the garden to betray his Master.) Now this could not be dipped or given but while the meat was on the table. But this was all removed before that bread and cup were brought"—WESLEY.

24. There was also a contention among them. "It is highly probable this was the same dispute which is mentioned by S. Matthew and S. Mark; and, consequently, though it is related here, it happened some time before"—WESLEY.

25. They that exercise "the most arbitrary authority over them have from their flatterers the vain title of benefactors"—WESLEY.

26. But ye are to be benefactors to mankind, not by governing, but by serving"—WESLEY.

27. For—"this He proves by His own example—I am in the midst of you—just now: see with your eyes, I take no state upon Me, 'but sit in the midst,' on a level with the lowest of you"—WESLEY.

28. Ye have continued with Me in My temptations. "And all His life was nothing else; particularly from His entering on His public ministry"—WESLEY.

29. And I—"will preserve you in all your temptations, till ye enter into the kingdom of glory. Appoint to you—by these very words. Not a primacy to one, but a kingdom to every one, on the same terms. As My Father hath appointed to Me—who have fought and conquered"—WESLEY.

30. That ye may eat and drink at My table—"that is, that ye may enjoy the highest happiness, as guests, not as servants. These expressions seem to be primarily applicable to the twelve apostles, and secondarily to all Christ's servants and disciples; whose spiritual powers, honours, and delights are here represented in figurative terms, with respect to their advancement both in the kingdom of grace and of glory"—WESLEY.

31. Satan hath desired to have you—"My apostles—that he might sift you as wheat—try you to the uttermost"—WESLEY.

32. But I have prayed for thee—"who wilt be in the greatest danger of all—that thy faith fail not—altogether. And when thou art returned—from thy flight—strengthen thy brethren—all that are weak in faith; perhaps scandalised at thy fall"—WESLEY.

34. It shall not be the time of cock-crowing this day. "The common time of cock-crowing (which is usually about three in the morning) probably did not come till after the cock which Peter heard had crowed twice, if not oftener"—WESLEY.

35. When I sent you—lacked ye anything? "Were ye not borne above all want and danger?"—WESLEY.

36. But now—"you will be in quite another situation. You will want everything. He that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one. It is plain, this is not to be taken literally. It only means, This will be a time of extreme danger"—WESLEY.

37. The things which are written concerning Me have an end—"are now drawing to a period; are upon the point of being accomplished"—WESLEY.

38. Here are two swords. "Many of Galilee carried them when they travelled, to defend themselves against robbers and assassins, who much infested their roads. But did the apostles need to seek such defence? And He said, It is enough—I did not mean literally that every one of you must have a sword"—WESLEY.

The Farewell Feast.—The hour was come. The day's work was done. "It was probably while the sun was beginning to decline in the horizon, that Jesus and the disciples descended once more over the Mount of Olives into the holy city. Before them lay Jerusalem in her festive attire. Whilst tents dotted the sward gay with the bright flowers of early spring, or peered out from the gardens, or the darker foliage of the olive plantations, from the gorgeous Temple buildings, dazzling in their snow-white marble and gold, on which the slanting rays of the sun were reflected, rose the smoke of the altar of burnt-offering. The streets must have been thronged with strangers, and the flat roofs covered with eager gazers, who either feasted their eyes with a first sight of the sacred city, for which they had so often longed, or else once more rejoiced in view of the well-remembered localities. It was the last day view which the Lord had of the holy city till His resurrection"—EDERSHEIM. This scene is connected with the closing hours of our Lord's life. He was saying the sad word—farewell. In the Memorial Supper He connected Himself with the past and the future. The Passover was glorified in the Holy Supper. The humanity of Jesus is breathed in His table-talk. With desire I have desired. His humanness was real. During the last days of His life He went and slept at Bethany. Martha, Mary, and Lazarus were chosen companions. He sought the solace of their society in the last hours of His ministry. "Having loved His own, He loved them unto the end." He who slept from fatigue and took favourite disciples with Him to the bedside of death, the hill of glory, and the garden of sorrow, felt the pangs of separation. How much more would He feel ingratitude. Behold, the hand of him that betrayeth Me is with Me on the table. Judas went silently from the sacred circle to consort with the priests and arrange the details of the conspiracy. But he must have stolen back to Bethany before daylight, and spent all day under the penetrating glance of Him who could read the hearts of men. Now he was present at the table. S. John sat, as we know from the narrative, on the right hand of Jesus. It has been conjectured that Judas sat on the left. If so, it explains how, when Christ whispered to S. John by what sign to recognise the traitor, none of the others heard it. It also explains how Christ would first hand to Judas the sop, without thereby exciting special notice. It also accounts for the circumstance, that, when Judas, desirous of ascertaining whether his treachery was known, dared to ask whether it was he, and received the affirmative answer, no one at the table knew what had passed. Try to picture S. John on the one side, Judas on the other, and Jesus in the midst—the betrayer close to his Master. In the long line of portraits of the Doges in the palace of Venice, one space is empty, and the semblance of a black curtain remains as a melancholy record of glory forfeited. Found guilty of treason against the State, Marino Falieri was beheaded, and his image as far as possible blotted from remembrance. And as, to-day, we think of the circle of the apostles, one portrait is absent — that of Judas who betrayed his Lord. Christ's love bore with Judas, His pity hid his fault from his brother disciples, and at the Supper He made one last appeal of love ; gave him a chance to draw back from his fell purpose. For fuller details of the last awful warning to Judas, see Matt. 26. 21–25 ; Mark 14. 18–21 ; John 13. 21–26. Whether Judas actually partook of the Holy Communion has always been uncertain. The disciples do not appear to have suspected their brother Judas: They began to question among themselves which of them it was that should do this thing. An ambitious contention arose, probably while they were taking their places on the couches, and may possibly have been occasioned by some claim made by Judas for official precedence. It was not the first time the spirit of strife had appeared amongst them. It will be noticed that we are not taking the words exactly in the order of S. Luke's narrative. There are four accounts which, combined, show some such order as this: Christ gives directions to prepare the Passover Supper ; when the even is come He goes to the place ; an unseemly strife occurs which He rebukes by the feet washing ; all of them take their places at the table ; Christ prophesies His betrayal ; Judas, learning that his treachery is known, goes out to complete it. The Supper, which has been interrupted, now goes on, and ends with the institution of the Lord's Supper at the close of the Passover Feast.

The Communion of the Ages. — He took bread, gave thanks, brake, and gave to them, saying: This is My body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of Me. And the cup in like manner. The account in S. Luke closely agrees with that given by S. Paul (1 Cor. 11. 23–26), which he received from the Lord. Comp. "I am the door" (John 10. 7) ; "That rock was Christ" (1 Cor. 10. 4) ; "The bread, which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?" (1 Cor. 10. 16). "In remembrance of Me." The Lord's Supper is a commemoration of the death of Christ, a perpetual witness of Himself. It is, therefore, not only the duty, but the privilege, of every Christian to commemorate the death of Christ. He took the simplest things to remind us of Himself—bread, water, the vine, the door. In baptism we have only water: in the communion bread and wine.

The Eternal Festival. — I will not drink from henceforth of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come — "until the true Passover had been offered by His death, and the new kingdom established." Till He come. These simple words point us forward to the future, and pledge a reunion that will have no farewell. A new memorial in a new world.

Vers. 39–46. THE AGONY IN THE GARDEN. (See on Matt. 26. 30, 36–46 ; Mark 14. 26, 32–42.)

40. The place — "the garden of Gethsemane"—WESLEY.

43. Strengthening Him — "lest His body should sink and die before the time"—WESLEY.

44. And being in an agony—"probably just now grappling with the powers of darkness ; feeling the weight of the wrath of God, and at the same time surrounded with a mighty host of devils, who exercised all their force and malice to persecute and distract His wounded spirit. He prayed more earnestly —even with stronger cries and tears. And His sweat—as cold as the weather was—was as it were great drops of blood—which, by the vehement distress of His soul, were forced out of the pores in so great a quantity as afterwards united in large, thick, grumous drops, and even fell to the ground"—WESLEY.

Vers. 47–53. THE ARREST. (See on Matt. 26. 48–56 ; Mark 14. 44–52.)

48. Betrayest thou the Son of Man—"Him whom thou knowest to be the Son of Man, the Christ?"—WESLEY.

49. Seeing what would follow — "that they were just going to seize Him"—WESLEY.

51. "Suffer Me at least to have My hands at liberty thus far, while I do one more act of mercy"—WESLEY.

52. Jesus said to the chief priests, and captains, and the elders, who were come. "And all these came of their own accord: the soldiers and servants were sent"—WESLEY.

53. This is your hour—"before which ye could not take Me—and the power of darkness — the time when Satan has power"—WESLEY.

Vers. 54–62. PETER'S DENIAL. (See on Matt. 26. 57–75 ; Mark 14. 53–72.) — 58. Another man saw him, and said. "Observe here, in order to reconcile the four Evangelists, that divers persons concurred in charging Peter with belonging to Christ—(1) The maid that let him in, afterwards seeing him at the fire, first put the question to him, and then positively affirmed that he was with Christ ; (2) Another maid accused him to the standers-by, and gave occasion to the man here mentioned to renew the charge against him, which caused the second denial ; (3) Others of the company took notice of his being a Galilean, and were seconded by the kinsman of Malchus, who affirmed he had seen him in the garden. And this drew on the third denial"—WESLEY.

59. And about one hour after—"so he did not recollect himself in all that time"—WESLEY.

Vers. 63-65. THE FIRST DERISION. (See Matt. 26. 67, 68; Mark 14. 65.)—64. And having blindfolded Him, they struck Him on the face. "This is placed by S. Matthew and S. Mark after the Council's condemning Him. Probably He was abused in the same manner both before and after His condemnation"—WESLEY.

65. Many other things blasphemously spake they against Him. The expression is remarkable. They charge Him with blasphemy, because He said He was the Son of God; but the Evangelist fixes that charge on them, because He really was so"—WESLEY.

Vers. 66-71. THE THIRD JEWISH TRIAL. (See on Matt. 27. 1, 2; Mark 15. 1.)—70. They all said, Art Thou then the Son of God? "Both these, the Son of God, and the Son of Man, were known titles of the Messiah; the one taken from His Divine, and the other from His human, nature"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Vers. 1-7. BEFORE PILATE. (See on Matt. 27. 11-14; Mark 15. 2-5; John 18. 28-38.)—4. Then said Pilate—"after having heard His defence—I find no fault in this man—I do not find that He either asserts or attempts anything seditious, or injurious to Cæsar"—WESLEY.

5. He stirreth up the people, beginning from Galilee — "probably they mentioned Galilee to alarm Pilate, because the Galileans were notorious for sedition and rebellion"—WESLEY.

7. He sent Him to Herod—"as His proper judge"—WESLEY.

Vers. 8-12. BEFORE HEROD.—8. He had been long desirous to see Him—"out of mere curiosity"—WESLEY.

9. He questioned Him — "probably concerning the miracles which were reported to have been wrought by Him"—WESLEY.

11. Herod set Him at nought—"probably judging Him to be a fool, because He answered nothing. In a splendid robe — in royal apparel; intimating that he feared nothing from this King"—WESLEY.

Vers. 13-25. CONDEMNED. (See Matt. 27. 15-26; Mark 15. 6-15; John 18. 39-19. 16.)—15. He hath done nothing worthy of death. —"according to the judgment of Herod also"—WESLEY.

16. I will therefore chastise Him. "Here Pilate began to give ground, which only encouraged them to press on"—WESLEY.

22. He said to them the third time, Why, what evil hath He done?—"as Peter, a disciple of Christ, dishonoured Him by denying Him thrice, so Pilate, a heathen, honoured Christ by thrice owning Him to be innocent"—WESLEY.

Vers. 26-32. THE WAY OF SORROW. (See on Matt. 27. 32-34; Mark 15. 21-23; John 19. 17.)—31. If they do these things in the green tree, what shall be done in the dry? "Our Lord makes use of a proverbial expression, frequent among the Jews, who compare a good man to a green tree, and a bad man to a dead one: as if He had said, If an innocent person suffer thus, what will become of the wicked? of those who are as ready for destruction, as dry wood for the fire?"—WESLEY.

Vers. 33-38. THE CRUCIFIXION. (See on Matt. 27. 35-44; Mark 15. 24-32; John 19. 18-27.)—34. Then said Jesus. "Our Lord passed most of the time on the cross in silence; yet seven sentences which He spoke thereon are recorded by the four Evangelists, though no one Evangelist has recorded them all. Hence it appears, that the four Gospels are as it were four parts, which, joined together, make one symphony; sometimes one of these only, sometimes two or three, sometimes all, sound together. Father—so He speaks both in the beginning and at the end of His sufferings on the cross. Forgive them. How striking is this passage! While they are actually nailing Him to the cross, He seems to feel the injury they did to their own souls, more than the wounds they gave Him; and, as it were, to forget His own anguish out of a concern for their salvation. And how eminently was His prayer heard! It procured forgiveness for all that were penitent, and a suspension of vengeance even for the impenitent"—WESLEY.

35-37. If Thou be the Christ. If Thou be the King. "The priests deride the name of Messiah; the soldiers, the name of King"—WESLEY.

Vers. 39-43. THE PENITENT ROBBER.—"In S. Matthew and S. Mark we are told that both the robbers reviled Him. Both the robbers, during an early part of the hours of crucifixion, reproached Jesus, but we learn from S. Luke's Gospel that only one of them used injurious and insulting language to Jesus"—C. B.

39. And one of the malefactors reviled Him. "S. Matthew says, 'The robbers,' S. Mark, 'They that were crucified with Him reviled Him.' Either, therefore, S. Matthew and S. Mark put the plural for the singular, as the best authors sometimes do, or both reviled Him at the first, till one of them felt 'the overwhelming power of saving grace'"—WESLEY.

40. The other rebuked him. "What a surprising degree was here of repentance, faith, and other graces! and what abundance of good works, in his public confession of his sin, reproof of his fellow-criminal, his honourable testimony to Christ, and profession of faith in Him, while he was in so disgraceful circumstances, as were stumbling even to His disciples! This shows the power of Divine grace. But it encourages none to put off their repentance to the last hour; since, as far as appears, this was the first time this criminal had an opportunity of knowing anything of Christ. And his conversion was designed to put a peculiar glory on our Saviour in His lowest state, while His enemies derided Him, and His own disciples either denied or forsook Him"—WESLEY.

42. Remember me when Thou comest—"from heaven—in Thy kingdom. He acknowledges Him a King, and such a King as, after He is dead, can profit the dead. The apostles themselves had not then so clear conceptions of the kingdom of Christ"—WESLEY.

43. In paradise—"the place where the souls of the righteous remain from death till the resurrection. As if He had said, I will not only remember thee then, but this very day"—WESLEY.

THE PENITENT THIEF.—The history of the penitent thief has been called a gospel within the gospel. "The inner truth and beauty of the narrative," remarks a New Testament commentator, "strikes the eye with special clearness when we compare it with that which the Apocryphal Gospels have to relate about this man." According to one of these, the man had already protected the Child Jesus on the flight to Egypt against the wickedness of the second robber, and our Lord then, for a reward, therefore foretells to His mother, with childish lips, what thirty years afterwards should take place on Calvary with these two. Trench's conjecture appears to be a reasonable one, that this robber may have been a companion of Barabbas. The fact that Barabbas had, just about this time, made a sedition, which implies accomplices, who were not like himself released, but doubtless punished, lends weight both to the conjecture that some vague messianic longings may have been mixed up with his crime, and that this man may have been a participant of it. A nature, led through the very strength of noble impulses into crime, might well be more receptive of Divine grace in the hour of utter disenchantment and of mortal agony, than that of a common ruffian. Let us turn from legend and fancy to the Gospel story. Our Lord was crucified between two thieves. It will conduce to clearness of conception if we place the narratives side by side. The language is that of the R.V.

S. MATTHEW.	S. MARK.	S. LUKE.
Then are there crucified with Him two robbers, one on the right hand, and one on the left. The robbers also that were crucified with Him cast upon Him the same reproach.	And with Him they crucify two robbers; one on His right hand, and one on His left. They that were crucified with Him reproached Him.	And there were also two others, malefactors, led with Him to be put to death. And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on Him, saying, Art not Thou the Christ? But the other answered, and rebuking him said, Dost thou not even fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation?

S. John writes, "They crucified Him, and with Him two others, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst." This Evangelist makes no mention of the mockery. According to S. Matthew and S. Mark, our Lord is mocked by both robbers; according to S. Luke, only by one. Some conjecture that at first both mocked, afterwards only one. Others assume that S. Matthew and S. Mark use a general expression, fixing attention more upon the mockery than the mockers, while S. Luke is more definite. The special mercy would find special record in the Gospel of humanity. A prayer for forgiveness was the first word from the cross; a promise of paradise the second. "Brief," says OOSTERZEE, "as the utterance of the penitent thief was, yet there is nothing lacking to it that belongs to the unalterable requirements of a genuine conversion. The address of our Lord, on the other hand, comprehends, as it were, in a short summary, the whole riches and the glory of redemption. The first word on the cross gives us a view into His high-priestly heart; His kingly character reveals itself in the second. Grace and majesty suddenly diffuse their bright beams through the night of the deepest humiliation. We wonder not that history gives us no account of an answer of the forgiven robber to the promise of the Saviour. On a cross there is not long or much speaking, and how, moreover, could he have found words for his thanks! But, without doubt, the consolation of this promise illumined his last hours; and he stands forth before our eyes as the first-fruits of the millions of subjects whom the King of the kingdom of God has won even on His cross, and through the same." The two robbers on the cross represent the whole human race in its diverse behaviour towards Jesus. Christ is set for the fall and rising of many. The cross has ever been to some foolishness, to others the power of God. No one dare limit the mercy of the Holy One of Israel, but it is perilous to presume upon it. An eleventh hour repentance is contingent upon many things. Speaking of death-bed repentance, an English poet writes—

"There was one, that none might despair,
And but one, that none might presume."

BENGEL says, "Rare is conversion on a soft bed." "Ours," writes THEREMIN, "is only the present moment; and while I maintain that no time is too late for repentance, I can only assert that at the moment when grace calls us it is never too late or too soon. If the penitent thief is an encouragement, his impenitent comrade is a warning." "Unbelief mocks; faith prays." And the answer is larger and deeper than the prayer.

LIFE'S FAREWELL.—When Jesus had cried with a loud voice, He said, Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit: and having said this, He gave up the ghost. This was the seventh and last word from the cross. The first was a word of intercession for others; the last a word of submission for Himself. His love stooped to the most wretched, even to His murderers. His life was tranquil, because it was in the Father's hands. It is a solemn thing to die — to quit earth's well-known scenes; the love of friends, the tasks that duty sets; and to go forth to solve the problem none can solve for his brother. But he who is assured that he came from God and is going back to God may die tranquilly. "We know but little of our state after death, but what Jesus said when dying is enough for us."

A GREAT MOURNING.—The heavens were darkened; the watchers were sorrowful. "A darkness came over the whole land, the sun's light failing." All the multitudes that came together to this sight, when they beheld the things that were done, returned, smiting their breasts. The sun was darkened; the earth shook; the graves were opened. Nature was in movement and convulsion. Reason ascended her throne, and conscience awoke when the onlookers looked back. After Nature's voices the voice of raillery was silent. Onlookers returned, but all His acquaintance, and the women that followed with Him from Galilee, stood afar off, seeing these things. The women were last at the cross. "Love kept her place, when faith suffered shipwreck."

Vers. 44–49. THE END. (See Matt. 27. 45–56; Mark 15. 33–41; John 19. 28–30.)—44. There was darkness over all the earth. "The noontide darkness, covering the sun, obscured all the upper hemisphere. And the lower was equally darkened; the moon being in opposition to the sun, and so receiving no light from it"—WESLEY.

46. Father, into Thy hands. "The Father receives the spirit of Jesus; Jesus Himself, the spirits of the faithful"—WESLEY.

47. Certainly this was a righteous man—"which implies an approbation of all He had done and taught"—WESLEY.

48. All the people — "who had not been actors therein — returned, smiting their breasts—in testimony of sorrow"—WESLEY.

Vers. 50–56. THE ENTOMBMENT. (See on Matt. 27. 57–66; Mark 15. 42–47; John 19. 38–42.)

CHAPTER XXIV.

Vers. 1–12. THE RESURRECTION ANNOUNCED BY ANGELS. (See on Matt. 28. 1–8; Mark 16. 1–8; John 20. 1–10.)—1. Certain others with them — "who had not come from Galilee"—WESLEY.

4. Behold, two—"angels in the form of men. Mary had seen them a little before. They had disappeared on these women's coming to the sepulchre, but now appeared again. S. Matthew and S. Mark mention only one of them, appearing like a young man"—WESLEY.

6. Remember how He spake to you, saying, The Son of Man must be delivered. "This is only a repetition of the words which our Lord had spoken to them before His passion. But, it is observable, He never styled Himself 'the Son of Man' after His resurrection"—WESLEY.

Vers. 13–35. THE DISCIPLES AT EMMAUS. (Comp. Mark 16. 12, 13; 1 Cor. 15. 4, 5.) The conversation on the way turned upon the Divine necessity for the sufferings of Christ. (See Matt. 26. 54; John 12. 24, 32; 11. 49–52; Acts 17. 3; 1 Pet. 1. 10, 11.) "But the resurrection and ascension were equally foreknown (see ver. 26). S. Luke mainly dwells on the resurrection as a spiritual necessity, S. Mark as a great fact, S. Matthew as a glorious and majestic manifestation, and S. John in its effects on the minds of the members of the Church"—WESTCOTT.

27. From Moses He interpreted in the Scriptures the things concerning Himself — the promise to Eve (Gen. 3. 15), the promise to Abraham (Gen. 22. 18), the Paschal Lamb (Ex. 12. 27), the Scapegoat (Lev. 16. 1–34), the Brazen Serpent (Num. 21. 9), the Greater Prophet (Deut. 18. 15), the Star and Sceptre (Num. 24. 17), and the Smitten Rock (Num. 20. 11; 1 Cor. 10. 4). And from the Prophets—Immanuel (Isa. 7. 14), Unto us a Child is born (Isa. 9. 6, 7), The Good Shepherd (Isa. 40. 10, 11), The Meek Sufferer (Isa. 50. 6), He who bore our griefs (Isa. 53. 4, 5), The Branch (Jer. 23. 5; 33. 14, 15), The Heir of David (Ezek. 34. 23), The Ruler from Bethlehem (Micah 5. 2), The Branch (Zech. 6. 12), The Lowly King (Zech. 9. 9), The Pierced Victim (Zech. 12. 10), The Smitten Shepherd (Zech. 13. 7), The Messenger of the Covenant (Mal. 3. 1), The Sun of Righteousness (Mal. 4. 2), and many other passages. There is not one of the Prophets without some distinct reference to Christ, except Nahum, Jonah (who was himself a type and prophetic sign), and Habakkuk, who, however, uses the memorable words quoted in Rom. 1. 17. We cannot suppose that our Lord went through each Prophet separately, but only that He pointed out the tenor of the Old Testament in its ethical and symbolical character"—C. B.

29. It is this beautiful verse which has furnished the idea of Lyte's dying hymn, "Abide with me, fast falls the eventide."

32. "Never man spake like this MAN."

34. Hath appeared to Simon. The same appearance to Simon alone is mentioned in 1 Cor. 15. 5; the passage in 1 Cor. 15. 4–8 is the earliest written allusion to the facts of the resurrection.

21. To-day is the third day—"the day He should have risen again, if at all"—WESLEY.

25. O foolish—"not understanding the designs and works of God—and slow of heart—unready to believe what the Prophets have so largely spoken"—WESLEY.

26. Ought not Christ—"if He would redeem man, and fulfil the prophecies concerning Him—to have suffered these things. These very sufferings, which occasion your doubts, are the proofs of His being the Messiah. And to enter into His glory—which could be done no other way"—WESLEY.

28. He made as though He would go farther—"walking forward, as if He was going on; and He would have done it, had they not pressed Him to stay"—WESLEY.

29. They constrained Him—"by their importunate entreaties"—WESLEY.

30. He took the bread, and blessed, and brake—"just in the same manner as when He instituted His Last Supper"—WESLEY.

31. Their eyes were opened—"that is, the supernatural cloud was removed. And He vanished—went away insensibly"—WESLEY.

32. Did not our hearts burn within us—"did not we feel an unusual warmth of love?"—WESLEY.

33. The same hour—"late as it was"—WESLEY.

34. The Lord hath appeared to Simon—"before He was seen of the twelve apostles (1 Cor. 15. 5). He had, in His wonderful condescension and grace, taken an opportunity on the former part of that day, though where and in what manner is not recorded, to show Himself to Peter, that He might early relieve his distresses and fears on account of having so shamefully denied his Master"—WESLEY.

35. In the breaking of bread—"the Lord's Supper"—WESLEY.

Vers. 36–49. APPEARANCE OF JESUS TO THE APOSTLES. (See on Mark 16. 14; John 20. 21.)—36. He Himself stood in the midst of them. "The words imply a sudden appearance. The eleven, with the exception of Thomas the Twin, were sitting at supper with the doors closed, through their fear of the Jews. (John 20. 19.) This is one of the most remarkable appearances of the Risen Christ. His intercourse with them on this occasion consisted of a greeting (ver. 36), a reproach and consolation (ver. 38; Mark 16. 14), a demonstration of the reality of His person (vers. 39–43; John 20. 20), an opening of their understandings (vers. 44–46), an appointment of the apostles to the ministries of remission and witness (vers. 47, 48; John 21. 19–23), a promise of the Spirit, for the fulfilment of which they were to wait in Jerusalem (ver. 49). At the close of this great scene He once more pronounced the benediction of peace, and breathed on them with the words, 'Receive the Holy Spirit' (John 20. 22). The fulness with which S. Luke has narrated this appearance led him to omit some of the other appearances"—C. B.

43. He did eat. This is one of the infallible proofs appealed to in Acts 1. 3. (Comp. John 21. 12, 13; Acts 10. 40, 41.)

36. Jesus stood in the midst of them. "It was just as easy to His Divine power to open a door undiscernibly, as it was to come in at a door opened by some other hand"—WESLEY.

40. He showed them His hands and His feet—"that they might either see or feel the prints of the nails"—WESLEY.

41. While they believed not for joy. "They did in some sense believe, otherwise they would not have rejoiced. But their excess of joy prevented a clear, rational belief"—WESLEY.

43. He took it, and ate before them—"not that He had any need of food; but to give them still further evidence"—WESLEY.

44. And He said—"on the day of His ascension. In the Law, and the Prophets, and the Psalms. The prophecies, as well as types, relating to the Messiah, are contained either in the books of Moses (usually called the Law), in the Psalms, or in the writings of the Prophets, little being said directly concerning Him in the historical books"—WESLEY.

45. Then opened He their understandings, to understand their Scriptures. "He had explained them before to the two as they went to Emmaus. But still they understood them not, till He took off the veil from their hearts by the illumination of His Spirit"—WESLEY.

47. Beginning at Jerusalem. "This was appointed both graciously and wisely: graciously, as it encouraged the greatest sinners to repent, when they saw that even the murderers of Christ were not excepted from mercy; and wisely, as hereby Christianity was more abundantly attested: the facts being published first on the very spot where they happened"—WESLEY.

49. Behold, I send the promise—emphatically so called; the Holy Ghost"—WESLEY.

Vers. 50–53. THE ASCENSION. (Comp. Mark 16. 19; Acts 1. 6, 12.) The traditional scene of the ascension is the central summit of the Mount of Olives, but it is far more probable that it took place in one of the secluded uplands which lie about the village.

50. He led them out as far as Bethany—"not the town, but the district; to the Mount of Olives (Acts 1. 12), which stood within the boundaries of Bethany"—WESLEY.

51. He was parted from them (R.V. "He parted"). We read in the Book of the Acts that a cloud received Him out of their sight. The withdrawal of His bodily presence preceded His spiritual omnipresence. And while He was blessing them, He was parted from them. "It was much more proper that our Lord should ascend into heaven than that He should rise from the dead, in the sight of the apostles. For His resurrection was proved, when they 'saw Him alive after His passion'; but they could not see Him in heaven while they continued on earth"—WESLEY.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO

S. JOHN.

THE EVANGELIST AND HIS GOSPEL.

THE AUTHOR.

THE Apostle John. His sign is the Eagle. As the Eagle soars against the sun, so does this apostle face the bright light of the sun of revelation. He was the son of Zebedee, a fisherman of Galilee. His mother's name was Salome. The family must have possessed some wealth, for Zebedee had hired servants, and Salome was one of the women who supported the Lord from their means (Luke 8. 3), and embalmed His body. As John is always named after James, he was probably the younger. Both were named "Sons of Thunder," whether to indicate temperament or method of speech it is difficult to say. Their anger against a Samaritan city, and certain traditional statements concerning John, lead us to suppose that they were not wanting in strength of character. James was more outward and practical, John more inward and ideal. James was the first martyr among the apostles; John almost the last of the apostles. John is honoured above all the men of the New Testament as the friend of Jesus. He is at first one of the disciples in the general sense (John 1; Matt. 4. 21); then one of the Twelve (Matt. 10. 2); then one of the Three (Matt. 17. 1); then one of the Two (Luke 22. 8); at last, the one who lies on the bosom of Jesus (John 13. 23), to whom Jesus commits His mother at the cross (ch. 19), to whom alone He promises a tarrying till He comes again (ch. 21), and to whom, on the island of his exile, the Lord once more appears in personal majesty, long after His personal appearances among His people have ceased (Rev. 1). Tradition has preserved some significant incidents of his later life—(1) of his heroism in rescuing from robbers a youth who had been converted by him, and had afterwards apostatised; (2) of his flight from a bath in which the heretic Cerinthus was; (3) of the raising of a dead man by his hand at Ephesus; (4) of his play with a partridge, which he made the emblem of the blessing of recreation; (5) of his last sermon, "Little children, love one another." In the Middle Ages, and even in modern times, the saying has been widely spread that he still lives. Certainly he does—in his writings and in his spiritual kin, those who catch his spirit and imitate his actions.

THE BOOK.

The Gospel of John was written at Ephesus, towards the close of the first century. It differs very much from the three other Gospels, though it takes these for granted. Much that appears in them is omitted by S. John, whilst he relates incidents and addresses which they omit. The three former Gospels deal more with our Lord's Galilean ministry, S. John omit, this, and confines himself almost exclusively to that which happened in Judea. The three Evangelists (the Synoptics, as their Gospels are often called) deal more with incidents than with addresses; S. John deals more with the addresses of Jesus than with His works, though he relates several of the more important miracles. He relates none of the parables, though he does give us allegories, e.g. "I am the True Vine," "I am the Door," "I am the Light of the World." His main object was to show forth the glory of Jesus as the Only Begotten Son of the Father. The object of the Gospel, John himself being witness, was, "that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, and that, believing, ye might have life through His name." Hence he does not give us a connected life of Jesus, but selects such facts and sayings as will best illustrate and prove the great mystery and glorious revelation of the Incarnation of the Son of God. It has been pointed out by students of this apostle, that he repeats certain words over and over again: they are the great words of revelation and life. For example, "light," twenty-three times; "glory," "to be glorified," forty-two times; "life," "to live," fifty-two times; "to testify," "testimony," forty-seven times; "to know," fifty-five times; "world," seventy-eight times; "to believe," ninety-eight times; "work," twenty-three times; "name" and "truth," each twenty-five times; "sign," seventeen times. S. John alone gives us that great assertive word of Jesus, "Verily, verily." S. Matthew and S. Luke give us a genealogy of His human descent, S. John starts in eternity, and draws a golden chain from heaven to earth.

"IN THIS BOOK IS SET DOWN THE HISTORY OF THE SON OF GOD DWELLING AMONG MEN; THAT:

I. Of the first days, where the Apostle, premising the sum of the whole, ... Chap. i. 1–14.
Mentions the testimony given by John, after the Baptism of Christ, and the first calling of some of the Apostles. Here is noted what fell out:

—WESLEY.

CHAPTER I.

THE Evangelists, S. Matthew and S. Luke, give us the history of the childhood of Jesus: merely indicating that He was something more than the Child Jesus. S. John, like the eagle with which the painters symbolise him, sweeps into the heavens and declares Jesus to be the WORD of God. "The other Evangelists," says CHRYSOSTOM, "begin with Christ's incarnation in time; S. John with His eternal generation." He calls Him the Word; and he uses a word that has played so important a part in the history of human thought, that it is sometimes transferred to Jesus without being translated—THE LOGOS. In the language in which S. John wrote, Logos has the double signification — word and reason. Both are closely related: word is thought expressed; thought is inward speech. The Hebrews called thinking, speaking in the heart. The poetic beauty and far-reaching significance of the opening verses of this Gospel have been shown by casting the sentences into the following form:—

THE LOGOS AND GOD.	THE LOGOS AND THE WORLD.
1. In the beginning was the Word. And the Word was with God. And the Word was God.	3. All things were made by Him. And without Him was not anything made that hath been made.
2. The same was in the beginning with God.
THE LOGOS AND MANKIND.	THE LOGOS AND SIN.
4. In Him was life. And the life was the light of men.	5. And the light shineth in the darkness. And the darkness apprehended it not.

To those who ask where God was before the creation of the world, we open the Gospel according to S. John, and read its first sentences. The first verse one has called the peal of thunder from the Son of Thunder—a voice from heaven. The Gospel of S. John has been styled the Genesis of the New Testament. Indeed, the Bible speaks of three creations. The Old Testament opens with the natural creation; the New Testament with the moral creation and incarnation; and the Revelation closes with a description of the new heavens and the new earth, where nature and grace, the first and second creation, shall be completely harmonised, and the perfect beauty of the Spirit shall be reflected in a glorious and immortal body. All things were made by the Word, and without Him was not anything made that has been made. This conception of creation is associated with revealed religion. The whole thinking world outside of Judaism and Christianity tried to conceive the eternity of matter. All things are the thoughts of God become existent. The testimony that everything existed through the medium of the Word is designed to assure us, not of the dependence of everything on God, but of its existence by means of the Word. Then the Word is exalted above all orders of spirits. Col. 1. 16 teaches this distinctly. Christ was made manifest in the creation.

Vers. 1–5. THE ESSENTIAL NATURE OF THE WORD.

Vers. 6–18. THE HISTORICAL MANIFESTATIONS OF THE WORD.—1. In the beginning—"referring to Gen. 1. 1, and Prov. 8. 23, when all things began to be made by the Word. In the beginning of heaven and earth, and this whole frame of created beings, the Word existed without any beginning. He was when all things began to be, whatsoever had a beginning. The Word — so termed, Ps. 33. 6; and frequently by the Seventy, and in the Chaldee Paraphrase. So that S. John did not borrow this expression from Philo, or any heathen writer. He was not yet named Jesus, or Christ. He is 'the Word,' whom the Father begot or spoke from eternity; by whom the Father speaking maketh all things; who speaketh the Father to us. We have, in the 18th verse, both a real description of the Word, and the reason why He is so called. 'He is the only begotten Son of the Father, who is in the bosom of the Father, and hath declared Him.' And the Word was with God—therefore distinct from God the Father. The word rendered 'with' denotes a perpetual tendency, as it were, of the Son to the Father, in unity of essence. He was with God alone; because nothing beside God had then any being. And the Word was God—supreme, eternal, independent. There was no creature, in respect of which He could be styled God in a relative sense. Therefore He is styled so in the absolute sense. The Godhead of the Messiah being clearly revealed in the Old Testament (Jer. 23. 6; Hos. 1. 7; Ps. 23. 1), the other Evangelists aim at this,—to prove that Jesus, a true Man, was the Messiah. But when at length some from hence began to doubt of His Godhead, then S. John expressly asserted it, and wrote in this book as it were a supplement to the Gospels, as in the Revelation to the Prophets"—WESLEY.

The beginning, prior to all history (Gen. 1. 1), is recalled. The Word—as the human mind manifests itself in the spoken word, so the manifestation of the Eternal Mind is described by John as the Eternal Word. In vers. 14 and 18 this Word is identified by John as the Messiah. The term Word is used in a somewhat similar sense in the Old Testament, and in the philosophies with which S. John's first readers were acquainted. The Word was God. Not merely God-like or Divine.

"Fix any assignable point as the beginning, and the Word was, and still was. The Word is absolutely eternal. S. Paul calls Christ (Col. 1. 15) the Firstborn of every creature, or (more accurately translated) begotten before all creation. (Comp. Heb. 1. 8; 7. 3; Rev. 1. 8)"—PLUMMER.

2. The same was in the beginning with God. "This verse repeats and contracts into one the three points mentioned before. As if he had said, This Word, who was God, was in the beginning, and was with God"—WESLEY.

"The Father could not be present if the Son were not"—ORIGEN. Christ was adored as God in the Early Church. PLINY, in his letter to Trajan, says, "On a stated day the Christians meet before daybreak, and sing hymns to Christ as God." In the beginning with God. An unfathomable mystery. We cannot explain how this can be, but we can prove that it is possible and reasonable by a similar mystery in ourselves, for each of us is a union of body and soul in one person. The immaterial spirit unites with matter; the two are distinct and yet one.

3. All things—"beside God, were made; and all things which were made, were made by the Word. In the first and second verses is described the state of things before the creation; in the creation (ver. 3); in the time of man's innocency (ver. 4); in the time of man's corruption (ver. 5)"—WESLEY.

How vast is the multiplicity of things material and spiritual! But no one came into being without the Word. The Bible opens with the Psalm of Creation. (See Gen. 1.) All things are created in Christ, by Christ, and for Christ. And what He made, He maintains. These all wait upon Thee: Thou givest them their meat in due season. The Divine care, like the Divine creation, is special not less than general. The New Testament represents Christ as the executor of His Father's will.

4. In Him was life. "He was the foundation of life to every living thing, as well as of being to all that is. And the life was the light of men—He who is essential life, and the Giver of life to all that liveth, was also the light of men, the fountain of wisdom, holiness, and happiness to man, in his original state"—WESLEY.

Justin Martyr derived all the elements of truth, which are scattered like seeds among the ancient heathen, from the influence of Christ before His incarnation. He recognised in the rational soul itself something closely related to the Divine Logos, a germ or spark of the Reason of reasons. He regarded the heathen sages as unconscious disciples of the Logos, as Christians before Christ; and compared Socrates to Abraham. And how much of Christ is discoverable in the Old Testament we need not now stay to inquire. It is one of the commonplaces of religious teaching. John the Baptist is mentioned below to confirm the reality of the historical appearance of Jesus. He was a brilliant star shining in the dark age—but he was not the True Light. The all-enlightening Light was Christ. Light is one of the world's metaphors for pure truth, intellectual and moral. All nations and languages use light as a fit image of the Deity. All the rays, whether of natural or revealed teaching with which the world has been favoured, come from the Sun of Righteousness. Teachers and all Christians are indeed lights also, in virtue of their Divine calling and fellowship; but they shine by borrowed light—it is their duty and privilege to reflect Christ. If the light of God's truth is everywhere, and has been through all the ages, it should teach us to seek for truth in quarters we have often neglected. God has never left Himself without witness. (Read Pss. 8 and 19; Rom. 2. 6–16; Acts 17. 22–31.) "God is best known in Christ; the sun is not seen but by the light of the sun"—BRIDGE. "In nature we see God, as it were, like the sun in a picture; in the Law, as the sun in a cloud; in Christ, we see Him in His beams; He being the brightness of His glory, and the exact image of His person"—CHARNOCK. Men were not left alone to interpret the manifestation of the Light in the life around them and in them. The Light from whom that life flows made Himself known more directly. From the first He was, so to speak, on His way to the world, advancing towards the Incarnation by preparatory revelations. He came in type and prophecy and judgment. No man is wholly destitute of the illumination of "the Light."

5. And the light shineth in darkness—"shines even on fallen man. But the darkness—dark, sinful man—perceiveth it not"—WESLEY.

"I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." He is Life and the Life-giver. Christ is Life and Light. "Since Christ is Life and Light, any religion which dwarfs men, represses their life, belittles them, and any which shuts them up in darkness, and denies them intellectual freedom and progress in any direction, is so far Antichrist. The cause of Christ has nothing to fear from intellectual life or any light of scientific discovery"—ABBOTT. Light is not always welcomed. His own age rejected Jesus. Darkness is the Bible symbol of misery, adversity, alienation from God, and death. There shall be no night in heaven. "By the darkness is meant all that the Divine revelation does not reach, whether by God's decree or their own stubbornness, ignorant Gentile or unbelieving Jew. Darkness in a metaphorical sense for spiritual and moral darkness is peculiar to S. John." (Ch. 8. 12; 12. 35, 46; 1 John 1. 5; 2. 8, 9, 11)"—PLUMMER.

6. There was a man. "The Evangelist now proceeds to him who testified of the Light, which he had spoken of in the five preceding verses"—WESLEY.

7. The same came for—"that is, in order to give—a testimony. The Evangelist, with the most strong and tender affection, interweaves his own testimony with that of John, by noble digressions, wherein he explains the office of the Baptist, partly premises and partly subjoins a further explication to his short sentences. What S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke term 'the Gospel,' in respect of the promise going before, S. John usually terms 'the Testimony,' intimating the certain knowledge of the relater. To testify of the Light—of Christ"—WESLEY.

8. He was not the light. John the Baptist was a man sent from God, one of God's prophets. He was a light, but not the Light. Christ was the True Light.

9. Who lighteth every man—"by what is vulgarly termed natural conscience, pointing out at least the general lines of good and evil. And this light, if man did not hinder, would shine more and more to the perfect day"—WESLEY. (Comp. note on ver. 4.)

"The world is one of the expressions characteristic of S. John; it occurs nearly eighty times in the Gospel and twenty-two in the First Epistle. It has not the same meaning in vers. 9 and 10 of the present chapter. Throughout the New Testament it is most important to distinguish the various meanings of 'the world.' It means—(1) the universe (Rom. 1. 20); (2) the earth (ver. 9; Matt. 4. 8); (3) the inhabitants of the earth (ver. 29; ch. 4. 42); (4) those outside the Church, alienated from God (ch. 12. 31; 14. 17), and frequently. In this verse the meaning slips from (2) to (4)"—C. B.

10. He was in the world—"even from the creation"—WESLEY.

11. He came—"in the fulness of time—to His own—country, city, Temple—and His own—people—received Him not"—WESLEY.

12. But as many as received Him—"Jews or Gentiles. That believe on His name—that is, on Him. The moment they believe they are sons, and because they are sons God sendeth forth the Spirit of His Son into their hearts, saying, Abba, Father"—WESLEY.

He was (ver. 9). He was in the world (ver. 10). He came unto His own inheritance (ver. 11). Such are the steps in the revelation of the Christ, the Son of God and Son of Man.

13. Who were born—"who became the sons of God. Not of blood—not by descent from Abraham. Nor by the will of the flesh—by natural generation. Nor by the will of man—adopting them. But of God—by His Spirit'—WESLEY.

14. "Flesh sometimes signifies corrupt nature; sometimes the body; sometimes, as here, the whole man. We beheld His glory—we His apostles, particularly Peter, James, and John (Luke 9. 32). Grace and truth. We are all by nature liars and children of wrath, to whom born grace and truth are unknown. But we are made partakers of them when we are 'accepted through the Beloved.' The whole verse might be paraphrased thus: And in order to raise us to this dignity and happiness the Eternal Word, by a most amazing condescension, was made flesh—united Himself to our miserable nature, with all its innocent infirmities. And He did not make us a transient visit, but tabernacled among us on earth, displaying His glory in a more eminent manner than ever of old in the tabernacle of Moses. And we, who are now recording these things, beheld His glory, with so strict an attention that we can testify it was in every respect such a glory as became the only begotten of the Father. For it shone forth not only in His Transfiguration, and in His continual miracles, but in all His tempers, ministrations, and conduct through the whole series of His life. In all He appeared full of grace and truth. He was in Himself most benevolent and upright; made those ample discoveries of pardon to sinners, which the Mosaic dispensation could not do; and really exhibited the most substantial blessings; whereas that was but 'a shadow of good things to come'"—WESLEY.

The new birth is not a new honour, but a change of nature. Human generation has nothing to do with Divine regeneration. A new heart precedes a new life, and opens up a new world. The aristocracy of Judaism could hardly receive this teaching. The pride of the human heart rejects it still.

15. John cried—"with joy and confidence—This is He of whom I said. John had said this before our Lord's baptism, although he then knew Him not in person. He knew Him first at His baptism, and afterwards cried, This is He of whom I said, etc. He is preferred before me—in His office. For He was before me—in His nature"—WESLEY.

16. And. "Here the apostle confirms the Baptist's words; as if he had said, He is indeed preferred before thee; so we have experienced—we all—that believe—have received—all that we enjoy—out of His fulness; and in particular grace upon grace—one blessing upon another, immeasurable grace and love"—WESLEY.

17. The Law—"working wrath and containing shadows—was given. No philosopher, poet, or orator ever chose his words so accurately as S. John. The Law, saith he, was given by Moses: grace was by Jesus Christ. Observe the reason for placing each word thus: 'the Law' of Moses was not his own; 'the grace' of Christ was. His 'grace' was opposite to the wrath, His truth to the shadowy ceremonies of the Law. Jesus—S. John having once mentioned the Incarnation (ver. 14), no more uses that name, 'the Word,' in all his book"—WESLEY.

18. No man hath seen God—"with bodily eyes; yet believers see Him with the eye of faith. Who is in the bosom of the Father. The expression denotes the highest unity, and the most intimate knowledge"—WESLEY.

Vers. 14–18. ARE THE RECORD OF A GLORIOUS REVELATION.—The Word was made flesh—or, became flesh. This brief sentence, which affirms the union of the Infinite and the finite, is absolutely unique. Dwelt among us—tabernacled among; "dwelt" as in a tent. God with us. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him." Not merely no man; no one—man, angel, archangel. To see God is to know Him perfectly. On earth we have glimpses; in heaven we shall have full vision. Christ is the only Revealer of God. Hear Him. The Word became flesh, and dwelt among us. He was not a visitor like the angel Gabriel; He came to stay. Though He is not now present to the senses, He has carried our nature into heaven, whither He has gone. Bengel discovers a threefold antithetic correspondence between vers. 1 and 4.

THE WORD
Was in the beginning God With GOD.	Became FLESH And dwelt among us.

S. Paul makes the Incarnation the central part of our religion. (1 Tim. 3. 16.) The Life and Light of men became Man. This grand sentence, The Word became flesh, stands alone in the Bible, but the same idea, in somewhat different forms of expression, occurs repeatedly (Rom. 1. 3; 8. 3; Phil. 2. 7; Heb. 2. 14; 1 Tim. 3. 16; 1 John 4. 2). By His Incarnation our Lord became an inhabitant of this world. He dwelt among us; by taking upon Him our nature, He made Himself the Brother of Humanity. In ver. 11 the Advent was considered in reference to particular promises and to a chosen people; in ver. 14 it is revealed in its connection with humanity. He was God, He became flesh. He entered into the entire life of man, sin excepted, to raise it to the second higher life of glorified humanity. The Word became a Child; the Life, a mortal Man; the Eternal Light appeared in the darkness. The Incarnation is the central truth of Christianity and of all religion.

19. The Jews—"probably the great Council—sent"—WESLEY.

20. I am not the Christ—"for many supposed he was"—WESLEY.

21. Art thou Elijah? "He was not that Elijah, the Tishbite, of whom they spoke. Art thou the prophet?—of whom Moses speaks." (Deut. 18. 15)"—WESLEY.

23. He said—"I am that forerunner of Christ of whom Isaiah speaks. I am the voice. As if he had said, Far from being Christ, or even Elijah, I am nothing but a voice,—a sound that, so soon as it has expressed the thought of which it is the sign, dies into air, and is known no more"—WESLEY.

24. They who were sent were of the Pharisees—"who were peculiarly tenacious of old customs, and jealous of any innovation, except those brought in by their own scribes, unless the innovator had unquestionable proofs of Divine authority"—WESLEY.

25. They asked him, Why baptizest thou then—"without any commission from the Sanhedrim? and not only heathens (who were always baptized before they were admitted to circumcision) but Jews also?"—WESLEY.

26. John answered, I baptize—"to prepare for the Messiah; and, indeed, to show that Jews as well as Gentiles must be proselytes to Christ; and that these, as well as those, stand in need of being washed from their sins"—WESLEY.

28. Where John was baptizing—"that is, used to baptize"—WESLEY.

This section describes a crisis in the Baptist's ministry. He was himself of priestly family, hence priests were suitable emissaries. The combination priests and Levites occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It was a time of religious excitement. The world seemed on the eve of great changes. The Jewish scribes had taught that Elijah would come again before the coming of the Messiah and the Prophet, the well-known Prophet of Deut. 18. 15. Some thought he would be a second Moses, others a second Elijah, others the Messiah. The world has always had its periods of expectancy, e.g. the Reformation and the Evangelical Revival of the eighteenth century. Between the 28th and 29th verses falls the close of the history of the Temptation. It was fitting that our Lord's active ministry should begin with the solemn recognition of His herald.

29. He seeth Jesus coming, and saith, Behold the Lamb—"innocent; to be offered up; prophesied of by Isaiah (53. 7); typified by the paschal lamb, and by the daily sacrifice. The Lamb of God—whom God gave, approves, accepts of. Who taketh away—atoneth for—the sin—that is, all the sins—of the world—of all mankind. Sin and the world are of equal extent"—WESLEY.

31. I knew Him not—"till He came to be baptized. How surprising is this, considering how nearly they were related, and how remarkable the conception and birth of both had been! But there was a peculiar providence visible in our Saviour's living from His infancy to His baptism at Nazareth; John all the time living the life of a hermit in the deserts of Judea (Luke 1. 80), ninety or more miles from Nazareth. Hereby that acquaintance was prevented which might have made John's testimony of Christ suspected"—WESLEY.

I knew Him not. "There is no contradiction between this and Matt. 3. 14. (1) 'I knew Him not' need not mean 'I had no knowledge of Him whatever.' (2) John's professing that he needed to be baptized by Jesus does not prove that he had already recognised Jesus as the Messiah, but only as superior to himself"—PLUMMER.

34. I saw it—"that is, the Spirit, so descending and abiding on Him. And testified—from that time"—WESLEY.

35. John was standing. "Many hearts were full with thoughts of some great change. Great even to cast their shadows before. Two of His disciples—one was Andrew, we know from ver. 40, the other was no doubt John the Evangelist. We judge thus from (1) John's manner of mentioning himself, either not at all or indirectly (ch. 13. 23; 18. 15; 19. 26; 20. 3; 21. 20); (2) the giving of one name suggesting a personal reserve in regard to the other; (3) the very life-like character of the subsequent account; (4) the more distinct calling of the sons of Zebedee immediately after with the sons of Jonas on the Sea of Galilee (Matt. 4). As the calling of the sons of Zebedee is introduced here, so is doubtless the calling of the former"—LANGE. Looking upon—denoting a penetrating glance, as again in ver. 42, the only other place where it is found in John.

37. They followed Jesus—"they walked after Him, but had not the courage to speak to Him"—WESLEY.

38. What seek ye?—"not whom. Master. The English 'Master' is to be taken in the sense of teacher"—WESLEY.

41. He first findeth his own brother Simon—"probably both of them sought Him. Which is, being interpreted, the Christ. This the Evangelist adds, as likewise those words in ver. 38,—'that is, being interpreted, Master'"—WESLEY.

We have found the Messias—"a great and joyful discovery, and expected by the world for about forty centuries"—BENGEL. The Hebrew name is found only here and in ch. 4. 25.

42. Jesus said, Thou art Simon, the son of Jonah. "As none had told our Lord these names, this could not but strike Peter. Cephas, which is, Peter—meaning the same in Syriac which Peter does in Greek, namely, a rock"—WESLEY.

43. Findeth Philip. How and where Jesus found Philip must remain unknown, but the word implies that the meeting was not accidental. What men call accident is God's own part in human life. Follow Me. This is the first occurrence of these notable words, words destined to express to generations following the inmost meaning of Christ's gospel.

45. Jesus of Nazareth. "So Philip thought, not knowing He was born in Bethlehem. Nathanael was probably the same with Bartholomew, that is, the son of Tholomew. Matt. 10. 3 joins Bartholomew with Philip, and John 21. 2 places Nathanael in the midst of the apostles, immediately after Thomas, just as Bartholomew is placed (Acts 1. 13)"—WESLEY.

46. Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? "How cautiously should we guard against popular prejudices! When these had once possessed so honest a heart as even that of Nathanael, they led him to suspect the blessed Jesus Himself for an impostor, because He had been brought up at Nazareth. But his integrity prevailed over that foolish bias, and laid him open to the force of evidence, which a candid inquirer will always be glad to admit, even when it brings the most unexpected discoveries. Can any good thing—that is, Have we ground from Scripture to expect the Messiah, or any eminent prophet, from Nazareth? Philip saith, Come and see—the same answer which he had received himself from our Lord the day before"—WESLEY.

Philip and Nathanael were earnest readers of Old Testament Scripture. It was proverbial that out of Galilee ariseth no prophet, hence the prejudice against the prophet of Nazareth.

47. An Israelite indeed—"one whose character answers to the true ideal of the elect Israel"—WESLEY.

48. Under the fig tree I saw thee—"perhaps at prayer"—WESLEY.

49. Nathanael answered. "Happy are they that are ready to believe, swift to receive the truth and grace of God. Thou art the Son of God—so he acknowledges now more than he had heard from Philip. The Son of God, the King of Israel—a confession both of the person and office of Christ"—WESLEY.

King of Israel. As here at the beginning so again this title is given to Christ at the close of His ministry. (Ch. 12. 13.)

51. Hereafter ye shall see—"all of these, as well as thou, who believe on Me now in My state of humiliation, shall hereafter see Me come in My glory, and all the angels of God with Me. This seems the most natural sense of the words, though they may also refer to His ascension"—WESLEY.

In reading the latter half of this chapter—the record of the calling of Christ's first disciples—we are standing by the cradle of the Christian Church. In the gathering of the first disciples of Jesus we see the humble beginning of mighty results. On the last page of a book the word "finis" is sometimes printed. But the end is the beginning. The printed words enter into human minds and become reproductive for generations. When a labourer comes from the field at nightfall, and says that he has done sowing, his finished toil is the beginning of the harvest. The seed shows what life-generating power it has when the sower ends his toil. Similarly Christ's call to these disciples was the beginning of a moral influence felt to-day throughout Christendom. "With the festive freshness of these days," says BENGEL, "beautifully corresponds the word findeth, which is used here more frequently than elsewhere." This has been appropriately called the Chapter of the Findings. Christ did not compel; He attracted. The force of spiritual attraction draws "the brave to the braver, the noble to the noblest of all." The Church of Christ went forth out of the Old Testament. The disciples had been trained in the old dispensation. John the Baptist prepared disciples for Jesus. He stood on the border line of two ages. The Son of God is King of Israel, as well as Brother and Saviour of men. Let us not despise beginnings. It is necessary to remind ourselves that S. John is giving us selections from the life of Christ. He presupposes the events narrated by the other Evangelists.

Vers. 29–34. FIRST DECISIVE DAY.—On the morrow—some Friday in February A.D. 27. Edersheim computes the days of the week thus: the marriage at Cana, in the next chapter, took place on a Wednesday, because it was the uniform custom for Jews to be married on a Wednesday. Three days before this, or on a Sunday, the day after their Sabbath, Jesus began His journey from Bethany (Bethabarah, see R.V.) (ver. 28; ch. 2); and on the day before (Saturday), the two disciples of John were pointed out to Jesus and followed Him (ver. 43); and the day before this, Friday (ver. 35), was the first testimony of John. Behold the Lamb of God—not behold the world's Great Teacher, not behold the Supreme Example, not behold your King—each of these is important; but sin is the greatest fact, a Saviour the great necessity—"Behold the Lamb of God." They would recall the lamb led to the slaughter in the wonderful picture painted by Isaiah (ch. 53). They would recall the passover lamb, the scapegoat, and the daily sacrifice. Their old religion was a pictured alphabet, out of which they slowly spelled the name and work of Jesus Christ, their Messiah and the World's Hope. To take away sin is to remove the guilt and punishment. How God can be just and yet forgive, the New Testament Epistles explain. This is the centre of the gospel. The late C. H. SPURGEON thus described the circumstances of a great spiritual change: "It snowed so much I could not go to the place I determined. I went to a Methodist chapel in an obscure street. During the sermon the preacher, a thin-looking layman, fixed his eyes on me, and said, 'Young man, you are in trouble; you will never get out of it till you obey this message.' Then, raising his hands, he shouted, as only a Methodist could, 'Look, look! it's only look!' I did look, and in that instant lost my crushing load." MACLAREN finely says: "The man that travels with his face northward has it grey and cold; let him turn to the south, where the sun dwells, and his face will glow. Looking unto Jesus is the sovereign cure for sinners." John knew something of Jesus, but he speaks of not knowing, meaning not completely. On the day of the baptism the herald had the evidence of the Divine voice and the descending Spirit.

Vers. 35–42. SECOND DECISIVE DAY.—On the morrow John was standing, and two of his disciples. One was Andrew: the other the writer, S. John. Andrew brought his brother Simon Peter to Jesus. Andrew had a magnetic fascination. He brought the Greeks to Christ, the lad with the barley loaves, and his own brother. Scarcely anything else is recorded of him. These three incidents give us the key to his character. "In Church history Peter is everything and Andrew nothing; but there would have been no apostle Peter but for Andrew"—PLUMMER. When our Lord gripped Peter to His heart as with hooks of steel He changed his name (ver. 42). "Cephas occurs only in this place in the Gospels, elsewhere in the New Testament only in S. Paul, 1 Cor., and Gal. Remembering the general significance of Hebrew names, the changes in the Old Testament, as of Abram, Sarai, and Jacob, and among these first disciples as of James and John (Mark 3. 16 and 17), all these names of Peter seem meant to characterise the man. Thou art not Hearer, the son of Jehovah's grace; thou shalt be called and be a Rock-man (comp. Matt. 16. 17)"—ELLICOTT. "There is no discrepancy between this and Matt. 16. 18. Here Christ gives the name Peter; there He reminds Peter of it"—PLUMMER. S. John, S. Andrew, S. Peter. What a trio! How related they are, how dependent. What a changed world it would have been if they had never been born, or being born had not been called to the apostolic work.

Vers. 43–50. THIRD DECISIVE DAY.—On the morrow (ver. 43, seq.). This paragraph reveals the law of mutual dependence.

John points to the Lamb of God.
Andrew and John follow Jesus.
Andrew finds Peter.
Jesus findeth Philip.
Philip findeth Nathanael.

The S. Andrew's Guild is an organisation in S. George's Episcopal Church, New York City. It is of the Brotherhood of S. Andrew, an organisation of wide extent in the Episcopal Church for the reaching and influencing of young men. This brotherhood is named from the Apostle Andrew, who, when he had become acquainted with Jesus, immediately went and found his greater brother Simon, and brought him to the Saviour. The Guild in S. George's Parish now numbers sixty-four young men, each one of whom is pledged to do his best every week to bring some young man to church and Sunday school. The Guild is one of the means to a very rare fact, that there are more men than women in the congregation, and more boys than girls in the Sunday school. Said General Havelock, in reply to the remark of a friend as to his influence over the men of his regiment, "I keep close to them—have personal contact with each man, and know each man's name." Time was when the Church consisted of these four or five disciples. The oak slept in the acorn. Harlan Page, John Pounds, Thomas Chalmers, Earl Shaftesbury, represent beginnings. The seed in spring is the prophecy of the harvest in autumn. Christ finds disciples, they find their friends and report how they have been found by Christ and have found Him; thus the work grew. So classes are formed and enlarged. Jesus met all willingly. All are invited, none rejected. Whosoever will may come. Will not is fatal. And honour as well as salvation follows. As one has said, "Who would ever have heard of these men—John, Andrew, James, Peter—if they had not met Christ?" They drew near to Him, were transformed by Him, breathed His spirit, and became great. So is every character transformed which comes under the influence of Jesus. The last section of the chapter also reveals the Lord of the Kingdom. We are arrested at once by the instances of the marvellous insight of Christ: if, indeed, they be not miracles of pure knowledge. He shows His knowledge of men's thoughts (vers. 42–48). Innocence has its own power of divination. Impurity detects its own likeness elsewhere; purity reveals its opposite by antagonism. We are not forgetting that Jesus was more than man; but we must not forget that He was Man. He not only revealed the disciples, He tested them. What seek ye? "Christ is not said to have called anyone to Himself." And when they came He weighed them in the balances of sincerity. He will have no unwilling service. The first disciples stand the decisive test-question, as have countless numbers through all the succeeding generations. The Lord of Truth must have truth in those who are identified with Him. Many fingers point to Christ—prophecy, office, word, as in John the Baptist, and these readers of the sacred scrolls. Manifold instrumentalities lead to Christ. Brother brings brother, friend brings friend, townsman brings townsman. They come together; they follow each other. Two pairs of brothers form the first group of disciples. Full of unlikenesses they are one in adherence to Him; and this is a picture of the wider Church of our times, of all times. The Church is sundered; its members are diverse; but all gather around Christ. The truth converges; the truth-seekers meet in Him. He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. But with growing need there shall be enlarging light. Christianity is a revelation of ever new and ever greater glories of the Lord in His life, and then in His Church. A child can say "Hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done," but the involved truth deepens and broadens with the circle of the suns. "Thou shalt see greater things than these." Heaven gets nearer to earth. "The heavenly ladder was broken in Adam, and repaired in Christ." The kingdom of heaven is opened to all believers, and who shall dare to close it again? May we not rather declare that it is our privilege to live days of heaven upon earth? Living an angel's life of obedience and devotion then shall "Earth be changed to heaven, and heaven to earth;

One kingdom, joy and union without end."

CHAPTER II.

NOTE the progress of the revelation—First, the Incarnate Word; the thought of God expressed in the presence, teaching, and mission of Jesus Christ. Next, the selection of disciples; the beginning of the Christian Church; and the Divine method of transmitting truth from generation to generation by human agency. Then, the deeds of Jesus; the evidence of a new power in the world—

"The mighty works, or mightier Name
Of our Eternal King."

The first chapter of the Gospel closes with the declaration, "Ye shall see the heavens opened." The second chapter fulfils the promise—God is here amongst men. Nature is obedient to His authority. The miracles of S. John's Gospel may be thus divided:—

1. Miracles of healing—Action on the body.—(1) A man sick of a fever; (2) A cripple; (3) A blind man.

2. Miracles of the mastery and glorification of nature.—(1) The supply of wine; (2) The feeding; (3) Walking on the sea; (4) Miraculous draught of fishes.

3. Miracles of the judicial majesty of Christ—Action on the mind.—(1) The purification of the Temple; (2) Enchaining the officers who came to arrest Him; (3) Striking down the soldiers in Gethsemane with a word.

4. Victory over death: the greatest miracle —Lazarus.

What we commonly call miracles are in the sacred Scriptures named—(1) Wonders; (2) Signs; (3) Powers, or mighty works.

"In the name 'wonder,' the astonishment which the work produces upon the beholders, an astonishment often graphically portrayed by the Evangelist when relating our Lord's miracles (Mark 2. 12; 4. 41; 6. 51; 7. 37; comp. Acts 3. 10, 11), is transferred to the work itself"—TRENCH. This word does not so much reveal the work or the worker as the effect. Hence this word, as an early student of the Bible pointed out, never stands alone. We read of "signs and wonders," or "signs" alone, or "powers" alone, but never "wonders" alone. In the word "sign" we have a token and indication of the near presence of God. The miracle of turning water into wine was "the beginning of His signs" (see R.V.). The miracles are signs and pledges of something more. Turning water into wine was wonderful; but was not Christ's presence at the simple wedding wonderful? God had dwelt apart in the religions of Jews, Greeks, and Romans; in the miracles of Jesus God came near. The miracle as a sign is "a kind of finger-post of God." All miracles are signs and wonders but not all signs and wonders are miracles.

Frequently miracles are styled "powers or mighty works." "The power dwells in the Divine messenger (Acts 6. 8; 10. 38; Rom. 15. 19); is one with which He is Himself equipped of God. Then, by an easy transition, the word comes to signify the exertions and separate putting forth of this power. These three terms — wonders, signs, and powers—occur three times in connection with one another (Acts 2. 22; 2 Cor. 12. 12; 2 Thess. 2. 9), although on each occasion in a different order"—TRENCH. The miracles of earth, as Jean Paul has said, are the laws of heaven. All is wonder; to make a man is as great a marvel as to raise him from the dead. The harvest is as wonderful as the feeding of the five thousand. The same almighty power that turned water into wine does each year prepare the wine in the grape. The difference is that the unresting activity of God, which at other times hides and conceals itself behind the veil of what we term natural laws, does in the miracle unveil itself. Christ did wonders because He is wonderful. He is the miracle of miracles. A German poet says: "One might have thought that the miracle of miracles was to have created the world such as it is; yet it is a far greater miracle to have lived a perfectly pure life therein." A miracle transcends, though it by no means necessarily supersedes, the ordinary laws by which nature works. Law implies a lawgiver; nature has an Author. God is the Living God, and therefore He acts. The ultimate cause of a miracle lies in God.

THE BEGINNING OF MIRACLES.—Not only in S. John, but in the gospel history in general, the changing of the water into wine is the first miracle of Jesus. This miracle is the typical, symbolical token of the glorification of the world. Christ significantly began His public ministry with a miracle of transformation: His whole mission was to convert sinners into saints, to turn darkness into light, to turn grief into joy, to make death the gate of life, to elevate earth to heaven. The first miracle of Moses was a turning of water into blood (Ex. 7. 20); and this had its fitness; for the Law, which came by Moses, was a ministration of death. But the first miracle of Christ was a turning of water into wine—this, too, a meet inauguration of all which should follow, for His was a ministration of life; He came as the dispenser of that true life of the soul. It was, moreover, a miracle of festive joy and gladness, and of more than royal munificence, showing how the gospel is a religion of true happiness. Christ relieves not only the present need, but provides for the future. "None need wonder," as TRENCH very beautifully says, "to find the Lord of Life at this festival; for He came to sanctify all life—to consecrate its times of joy, as its times of sorrow; the former, as all experience teaches, needing above all such a consecration, as only His presence, bodily or spiritual, can give. He was there, and by His presence there struck the keynote to the whole tenor of His future ministry. He should not be as another Baptist, a wilderness preacher, withdrawing Himself from the common paths of men. His should be at once a harder and a higher task, to mingle with and purify the daily life of men, to bring out the glory which was everywhere hidden there. Nor was it without its significance that this should have been a marriage which He adorned and beautified with His presence and the first miracle that He wrought." It is equally significant that this first miracle was performed in the bosom of a family: for the family is the first institution of God on earth, and the nursery of Church and State, where all moral improvements must begin. Christianity restored marriage and the family to their original purity. When heaven descends to earth it is to make earth more like heaven. And as the scaffolding is necessary to the building, and yet inferior to it, so the sign of the miracle is at least as important as its strangeness. Christ in the circle of the wedding guests is more wonderful than the miracle of supply. He laid His hands upon the common haunts of human life, and made them sacred. He abolished our poor distinctions, and redeemed "the little" and "the common" from degradation and neglect. We are perhaps most apt to secularise occasions of joy. Sorrow utters a voice that all must hear. Duty is imperious. But relaxation and enjoyment may easily shut out God, and lose the sense of the earnestness of life. Christ stood at the wedding as if to say

> "All things are sacred,
> The eye of God is on them all."

Analogies do not help us to understand what the Lord at this time did, but they bring before us the truth that in it He was working in the line of (above, indeed, but not across, or counter to) His more ordinary operations, the unnoticed miracles of everyday nature. That which this had peculiarly its own, which took it out from the order of nature, was the power and will by which all the intervening steps of the tardier processes were overleaped, their methods superseded, and the result attained in an instant. Faith should be deepened by experience. The miracle is only special: Christ abideth ever. The details of time, place, and persons are given in this beginning of miracles. It was shown in close connection with the faith of the first disciples (the third day) at a village, where one at least of them dwelt (ch. 21. 2), at a festival of the highest natural joy.

1. And the third day—"after He had said this. In Cana of Galilee. There were two other towns of the same name ; one in the tribe of Ephraim, the other in Cœlosyria"—WESLEY.

The third day, i.e. from the last day mentioned (ch. 1. 43). Cana. The site is disputed.

2. Jesus and His disciples were invited to the marriage. "Christ does not take away human society, but sanctify it. Water might have quenched thirst; yet our Lord allows wine ; especially at a festival solemnity. Such was His facility in drawing His disciples at first, who were afterwards to go through rougher ways"—WESLEY.

A marriage feast lasted several days. The name of the mother of Jesus is not mentioned in S. John, even when Joseph is named. This is the first distinct mention of the relation in which the little group, gathered from the disciples of John, now stood to the greater Teacher.

3. And wine falling short. "How many days the solemnity had lasted, and on which day our Lord came, or how many disciples might follow Him, does not appear. His mother saith to Him, They have not wine. Either she might mean, Supply them by miracle, or, Go away, that others may go also, before the want appears"—WESLEY.

They have no wine. A want stated is a prayer expressed. The mother of the Lord had discovered that He was the Lord of Life.

4. Jesus saith to her, Woman. "So our Lord speaks also (ch. 19. 26). It is probable this was the constant appellation which He used to her. He regarded His Father above all, not knowing even His mother 'after the flesh.' What is it to Me and thee?—a mild reproof of her inordinate concern and untimely interposal. Mine hour is not yet come—the time of My working this miracle, or of My going away. May we not learn hence, if His mother was rebuked for attempting to direct Him in the days of His flesh, how absurd it is to address her as if she had a right to command Him on the throne of His glory? Likewise how indecent it is for us to direct His supreme wisdom, as to the time or manner in which He shall appear for us, in any of the exigencies of life?"—WESLEY.

Woman. Not necessarily implying any want of respect. In the interests of controversy volumes have been written on this reply of Jesus. Outwardly it was a repulse ; but His mother seems to have looked beneath appearances.

5. His mother saith to the servants—"gathering from His answer, that He was about to do something extraordinary"—WESLEY.

6. The purifying of the Jews—"who purified themselves by frequent washings ; particularly before eating"—WESLEY.

8. Draw out now. The miracle comes between vers. 7 and 8. The method of the miracle transcends our powers of conception, but the Divine calm of the miracle worker and His simple unobtrusiveness are naked and open to every reader. It has been well said that to the belief of Christendom the Son of God would still be the Son of God, even if, like S. John, He had done no miracle. WESTCOTT says: "At the beginning of Christ's signs this miracle cannot but have a representative value."

1. Its essential character.—A sign of sovereign power wrought on inorganic matter, not on a living body.

2. Its circumstantial character.—The change of the simpler to the richer element. In this respect it may be contrasted with the first public miracle of Moses, with whose history the record of miracles in the Old Testament commences.

3. Its moral character.—The answer of love to faith, ministering to the fulness of human joy in one of its simplest and most natural forms. Some, as we have noted, have tried to bring it nearer to knowledge and observation by comparing it to the annual miracle of the vineyard. They speak of it as an accelerated process of nature. It is enough to say a miracle is a miracle, and can be wrought by none but God, who doeth whatsoever He will, amid the armies of heaven, and the saints on earth.

9. The governor of the feast. "The bridegroom generally procured some friend to order all things at the entertainment"—WESLEY.

10. And saith. "S. John barely relates the words He spoke, which does not imply His approving them. When they have well drank—does not mean any more than, toward the close of the entertainment"—WESLEY.

11. And His disciples believed—"more steadfastly"—WESLEY.

This beginning of miracles manifested forth

His glory. John the Baptist withdrew himself from the common paths of men. A greater than he planted His feet on the beaten road. It was His glory to reveal the glory everywhere hidden. He made every bush burn with the presence of God. Ordinarily He veiled the Godhead that was in Himself; in this wonderful work it made itself visible. The veil of flesh concealed it; the work of power revealed it. His power of repression is remarkable. Only now and then did He show what He could do. An Indian story tells us that a Brahmin, one of whose disciples had been perplexed respecting miracles, ordered a flower-pot filled with earth to be brought him, and having put a seed into it before the doubter, caused it to spring up, blossom, and bear fruit while he still stood by. "A miracle," cried the young man. "Son," replied the Brahmin, "what else do you see done here in an hour than nature does more slowly round the year?" And our Lord pointed from the isolated works of wonder to the ever-present miracle of life. "Infinitely varied forces," as one has said, "are at work around us every moment. From the sun to the atom, from the stone to the thinking brain and beating heart, they circulate sleeplessly through all things for ever. As they act and react on each other, the amazing result is produced which we know as nature." Jesus Christ stood in the midst of her, and said, "Nature is My handiwork. All things are Mine. All souls are Mine. Common life is stamped with My signet." As Martin Luther long since said, "Our Lord granted a double honour to the family at Cana. The first was His presence, the second His miracle. Which was greater? The miracles of Moses and the prophets revealed not their glory, but the glory of Jehovah; the miracles of Christ are manifestations of Himself. This beginning of miracles was the first sign, but not the last. He who made wine out of water at His own bidding refused to make bread out of stones at the suggestion of Satan. And He who sat at the marriage feast on earth spoke of a reunion at a marriage feast in heaven. He connected, as is ever His wont, the NOW and the THEN."

12. Capernaum. The modern Tell-Hûm, on the shores of the Lake. His mother and His brethren. "It is impossible to determine with certainty whether they are (1) the children of Joseph and Mary, born after the birth of Jesus; (2) the children of Joseph by a former marriage, whether levirate or not; or (3) adopted children"—C. B.

13. The Passover was nigh. While the Jews were purifying themselves for the Passover, the Lord was purifying the Temple.

14. Oxen and sheep and doves—"used for sacrifice. And the changers of money—those who changed foreign money for that which was current at Jerusalem, for the convenience of them that came from distant countries"—WESLEY.

15. Having made a scourge of rushes, "which were strewed on the ground, He drove all out of the Temple (that is, the court of it), both the sheep and the oxen—though it does not appear that He struck even them, and much less any of the men. But a terror from God, it is evident, fell upon them"—WESLEY.

"The order is natural—first the driving out of the cattle, then the pouring out of the money, and overturning the tables. The word for 'money' literally means 'something cut up small,' hence 'change.' The common exchange would be foreign money for Jewish, payments to the Temple being necessarily made in Jewish coin"—PLUMMER.

16. My Father's house—"a distinct claim to Messiahship"—WESLEY.

18. Then answered the Jews. "Either some of those whom He had just driven out, or their friends. What sign showest Thou?—so they require a miracle, to confirm a miracle!"—WESLEY.

19. This Temple—"doubtless, pointing while He spoke, to His body, the temple and habitation of the Godhead"—WESLEY.

20. Forty and six years—"just so many years before the time of this conversation, Herod the Great had begun his most magnificent reparation of the Temple (one part after another), which he continued all his life, and which was now going on, and was continued thirty-six years longer, till within six or seven years of the destruction of the state, city, and Temple, by the Romans"—WESLEY.

22. They believed the Scripture, and the word which Jesus had said—"concerning His resurrection"—WESLEY.

23. Many believed—"that He was a Teacher sent from God"—WESLEY.

24. He did not trust Himself to them. "Let us learn hence, not rashly to put ourselves into the power of others. Let us study a wise and happy medium between universal suspiciousness, and that which would make us the property of every pretender to kindness and respect"—WESLEY.

25. He, to whom all things are naked, knew what was in man—"namely, a desperately deceitful heart"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER III.

"THIS," says Dr. SCHAFF, "is one of the richest and most important sections of the Bible. Ver. 21 alone contains the gospel in a nutshell, or the Bible in miniature, and is worth more than all the wisdom of the world. The infinite love of the Father, the mission of His Son, the work of the Holy Ghost, the lost condition of man, the necessity of a new birth from above, faith in Christ as a condition of salvation, the kingdom of God, eternal life,—all these fundamental doctrines are set forth by the unerring mouth of our Lord in this interview with a timid, yet earnest and anxious inquirer.

The central idea of the passage is the New Birth, which implies the total depravity of man, and the work of Divine grace. This great doctrine stands in the proper place at the beginning of Christ's ministry. The first miracle of Christ was a miracle of transfiguration; His first public act in Jerusalem, an act of reformation; His first discourse, a discourse on regeneration. He is not satisfied with mere improvements of the old, but demands a new life, lays a new foundation. True religion in the soul begins with a personal conviction of sin and guilt, and of a radical change. Without such a conviction all efforts to convert a man are in vain. The night discourse with Nicodemus is the classical passage on the New Birth, as the indispensable condition of admission into the kingdom of God. It occupies a position in the Gospel of John similar to that which the Sermon on the Mount does in the Gospel of Matthew." All this is familiar to us, because we have the advantage of nineteen centuries of Christian tradition. But to the old, respectable, trusted rabbi it would convey no such symmetrical lessons. We cannot help reading a great deal into the simple narratives of the Gospels. It is difficult to realise, perhaps impossible to realise fully, the startling strangeness and the bewildering brilliance of the teachings of Jesus upon the minds of the first listeners. Let us strive to divest our minds of these afterthoughts, and place ourselves in the condition of Nicodemus. Who was Jesus? A young Teacher who had suddenly appeared, been followed, and worshipped whithersoever He went. What had He to teach? What new accent and emphasis made His words more penetrating, more influential than those of well-known teachers? How came it that all the world was going after Him? Who is this Jesus? Some such train of thought was awakened in the mind of the well-known Pharisee named Nicodemus. "This is the first of the eleven discourses of our Lord which form the main portion, and are among the great characteristics of this Gospel"—C. B.

1. There was a man of the Pharisees named Nicodemus—"a current name, first with the Greeks, then with the Jews. If the name be Hebrew, it is equivalent to 'innocent blood,' but if Greek, 'conqueror of the people.' Both meanings end in this Nicodemus, for he was not a foe of Jesus. He was one of the Sanhedrim, which consisted of priests, Levites, elderly men, and rabbis. Tradition reports him to be a man of great wealth, and a rigid observer of Pharisaic forms. Twice later on we obtain a glimpse of Nicodemus. After this interview he seems to have been a secret disciple, or at least strongly inclined to accept of Jesus as the Messiah, for he in a manner defended Jesus before the Sanhedrim, a year or so after this interview. (Ch. 7. 50.) But it was not till the crucifixion that he came out boldly and decidedly. A ruler—one of the great Council"—WESLEY.

2. The same came—"through desire; but by night—through shame. We know—even we rulers and Pharisees"—WESLEY.

Came to Jesus by night. This detail is noticed again in ch. 19. 39. It is usually ascribed to fear. There are traces of natural timidity in Nicodemus. He defended Jesus without expressing any personal interest in Him; he brought his offering only after Joseph of Arimathæa had obtained the body from Pilate. But this seems hardly a sufficient explanation. The impression which Nicodemus had received must have been a strong one, for there was not little for him to overcome before he could go, even by night, to Jesus. He was a distinguished member of the Sanhedrim, a man of property, and advanced in life, a Pharisee too, who was specially exposed to temptation, to self-righteousness. Another reason has been suggested by Dr. ABBOTT, "Why by night? The reason generally assumed is fear of the Jews; but at this time there had not been developed any pronounced hostility on the part of the Judeans to Jesus. Nicodemus may have had a natural reluctance to commit himself to an unknown rabbi till he had learned more of his doctrine; he may have simply sought a quiet, personal conversation, such as he could not obtain in the daytime." Rabbi—a term of respectful courtesy. "If from ch. 19. 27 we might infer that S. John had a home in Jerusalem, the scene here described would have taken place under his roof. There was no need for Nicodemus to pass through the house, for an outside stair led to the upper room—the guest-chamber on the roof, where the lamp was still burning, and the heavenly Guest was busy with His thoughts and words"—EDERSHEIM. We. Others are disposed to believe as well as Nicodemus. A teacher come from God. The words "from God" stand first emphatically: "it is from God, not from man, Thy title to teach is derived." They knew He was from God, but whether He was the Messiah or some inferior prophet they did not know. Miracles—signs.

3. Jesus answered—"that knowledge will not avail thee, unless thou be born again—otherwise thou canst not see, that is, experience and enjoy, either the inward or the glorious kingdom of God. In this solemn discourse our Lord shows that no external profession, no ceremonial ordinances or privileges of birth, could entitle any to the blessings of the Messiah's kingdom; that an entire change of heart as well as of life was necessary for that purpose; that this could only be wrought in man by the almighty power of God; for every man born into the world was by nature in a state of sin, condemnation, and misery; that the free mercy of God had given His Son to deliver them from it, and to raise them to a blessed immortality; that all mankind, Gentiles as well as Jews, might share in these benefits, procured by His being lifted up on the cross, and to be received by faith in Him; but that, if they rejected Him, their eternal, aggravated condemnation would be the certain consequence. Except a man be born again. If our Lord, by being born again, means only reformation of life, instead of making any new discovery, He has only thrown a great deal of obscurity on what was before plain and obvious"—WESLEY.

Answered. "Not the words, but the thoughts. The Lord's answers to questions will be found to reveal the truth which the questioner is seeking. Nicodemus implied that he and those like him were prepared to understand and welcome the Lord's teaching. This appeared to him to be of the same order as that with which he was already familiar. He does not address the Lord as if he were ready to welcome Him as 'the Christ' or 'the Prophet.' On the other hand, the Lord's reply sets forth distinctly that His work was not simply to carry on what was already begun, but to re-create. The new kingdom of which He was the Founder, could not be comprehended till after a new birth"—WESTCOTT. "He answers his thoughts before they are expressed. We have instances of this supernatural knowledge in the cases of S. Peter (ch. 1. 42), Nathanael (ch. 1. 47, 48), Nicodemus (ch. 3. 3), the woman at the well (ch. 4. 29), the disciples (ch. 6. 61–64), Lazarus (ch. 11. 4–15), Judas (ch. 13. 11), S. Peter (ch. 21. 17)"—PLUMMER. Except a man be born again. Our translators have followed the ancient expositors in giving the alternative renderings, "born again" and "born from above" (margin). "Chrysostom notes the two currents of interpretation in his day; in our own day the opinions of scholars, whether we count them or weigh them, may be equally claimed for either view. In any case it meant 'born afresh' or 'anew'"—WATKINS. "According to the first definition, Christ simply implies that the life must begin anew, that the character must be rebuilt from the foundation, without, however, implying how; according to the other idea, He indicates in the use of this word not only a new but a spiritual and Divine birth. Nicodemus impliedly asks to know what new doctrine Christ has to teach; Christ replies in substance that the world needs not new doctrine, but new life"—ABBOTT. He cannot see the kingdom of God. "Without this new birth—this introduction into a vital connection with a new order of being, with a corresponding endowment of faculties—no man can see, can outwardly apprehend, the kingdom of God. Our natural powers cannot realise that which is essentially spiritual. A new vision is required for the objects of a new order. Elsewhere there are references to the change required (Matt. 18. 3; 1 Cor. 2. 14) in order that we may observe that which, though about us, is unregarded (Luke 17. 20, 21)"—WESTCOTT. Christ's answer is equivalent to, "It is not learning, but life, that is wanted for Messiah's kingdom, and life must begin by birth"—ALFORD. The kingdom of God. The phrase occurs only in this chapter in S. John's Gospel, while it is frequent in the other three. It is found in the Acts and the Epistles of S. Paul. "There is no such thing as seeing the kingdom of God at a distance"—BRAUNE. "The kingdom of God is nothing into which a man can think, or investigate, or study, or read, or hear, or talk, or discuss himself: man can only experience his way into the kingdom of God"—DRASEKE.

4. When he is old—"as Nicodemus himself was"—WESLEY.

Jesus answered. Christ met the difficulty of Nicodemus by a further explanation.

5. Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit—"except he experience that great inward change by the Spirit, and be baptized (wherever baptism can be had), as the outward sign and means of it"—WESLEY.

Born of water and of the Spirit. The image is that of being baptized, plunged into, and then rising re-born, as one washed is, so to speak, made anew. Water symbolises purification and spirit-quickening: the one is outward, the other inward.

6. That which is born of the flesh is flesh—"mere flesh, void of the Spirit; yea, at enmity with it. And that which is born of the Spirit is spirit—is spiritual, heavenly, Divine, like its Author"—WESLEY.

Flesh: Spirit. By the Spirit we are united to heaven: by the flesh to earth. Though flesh is not in itself sinful, it lies on that side which tends to sin, and on which actually we have sinned.

7. Ye must be born again. "To be born again, is to be inwardly changed from all sinfulness to all holiness. It is fitly so called, because as great a change then passes on the soul as passes on the body when it is born into the world"—WESLEY.

8. The wind bloweth—"according to its own nature, not thy will. And thou hearest the sound thereof. Thou art sure it doth blow, but canst not explain the particular manner of its acting. So is every one that is born of the Spirit. The fact is plain; the manner of His operations, inexplicable"—WESLEY.

The wind: the Spirit. In many languages the words are identical. "It was late at night when our Lord had this interview with the Jewish teacher. At the pauses in the conversation, we may conjecture, they heard the wind without, as it moaned along the narrow streets of Jerusalem; and our Lord, as was His wont, took His creature into His service—the service of spiritual truth"—LIDDON. "No one can see the wind, but its effects are apparent, and when it comes we feel it. In the same way the soul of man, if in some respects human, has something in it of the Divine. For it is clear that it reigns with kingly authority in us, yet we do not see it. We should reflect on this, and not set light by what may not be seen, but since our soul shows its majesty by its effects, we should honour the Divine that is thus within us"—XENOPHON. "God's influence on the heart is like the flowing wind—free, felt, and yet mysterious. It comes as it lists; its presence is felt by its results, but all besides is beyond our knowledge"—SCHLEIERMACHER.

9. How can these things be? The emphasis lies on can. The answer to the previous question has spoken of a spiritual birth, and a spiritual life, and a spiritual kingdom; but all this is in a region of which the rabbinic schools knew nothing. They knew the precise number of words in the Pentateuch, the shape of each of the letters, the form of a phylactery, the width of a fringe, the tithing of garden herbs, and the manner of washing the hands; but spirit, life, a man's soul born again!

11. We speak what we know—"I and all that believe in Me"—WESLEY.

We—we—we. Jesus in the next verse speaks of Himself in the singular. Who, then, is this We? Himself and the prophets. Himself and John the Baptist. All teachers like Himself. All born of the Spirit. A proverbial saying. The three Persons of the Trinity. The plural may be merely rhetorical. All these answers are given by distinguished Bible students. Where inspiration fails us, conjecture is busy.

12. Earthly things—"things done on earth: such as the new birth, and the present privileges of the children of God. Heavenly things—such as the eternity of the Son, and the unity of the Father, Son, and Spirit"—WESLEY.

Earthly things—those facts of the higher life which have their manifestation on earth. The new birth, for example, is "from above," though it takes place in this world. Heavenly things. The counsels of redemption: the things to come.

13. For no one—"for here you must rely on My single testimony; whereas there you have a cloud of witnesses. Hath gone up to heaven, but He that came down from heaven, who is in heaven—therefore He is omnipresent; else He could not be in heaven and on earth at once. This is a plain instance of what is usually termed the communication of properties between the Divine and human nature, whereby what is proper to the Divine nature is spoken concerning the human, and what is proper to the human is, as here, spoken of the Divine"—WESLEY.

14. And as Moses—"and even this single witness will soon be taken from you; yea, and in a most ignominious manner"—WESLEY.

As Moses. The mystery shadowed forth under the image of an Old Testament symbol (Num. 21. 7, seq.).

15. That whosoever. "He must be lifted up, that hereby He may purchase salvation for all believers: all those who look to Him by faith recovering spiritual health, even as all that looked at that serpent recovered bodily health"—WESLEY.

16. "Yea, and this was the very design of God's love in sending Him into the world. Whosoever believeth on Him—with that faith which 'worketh by love,' and 'holds fast the beginning of his confidence steadfast to the end.' God so loved the world—that is, all men under heaven; even those that despise His love, and will for that cause finally perish. Otherwise not to believe would be no sin to them. For what should they believe? Ought they to believe that Christ was given for them? Then He was given for them. He gave His only Son—truly and seriously. And the Son of God gave Himself (Gal. 1. 4) truly and seriously"—WESLEY.

Eternal life. A phrase characteristic of S. John. It occurs seventeen times in the Gospel, and six times in the First Epistle. In neither Gospel nor Epistle is "eternal" applied to anything but "life." God so loved the world. This great text has been called a Bible within the Bible.

17. The world. Note the emphatic repetition: the whole human race is meant, as in ver. 16, not the Gentiles in particular.

God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world—"although many accuse Him of it"—WESLEY.

18. He that believeth on Him is not condemned—"is acquitted, is justified before God. The name of the only begotten Son of God—the name of a person is often put for the person himself. But perhaps it is further intimated, in that expression, that the person spoken of is great and magnificent. And therefore it is generally used to express either God the Father, or the Son"—WESLEY.

19. This is the condemnation—"that is, the cause of it. So God is clear"—WESLEY.

21. He that practiseth the truth—"that is, true religion. Cometh to the light—so even Nicodemus afterwards did. Are wrought in God—that is, in the light, power, and love of God"—WESLEY.

"The astonishing originality of such language is altogether unique. In the presence of a famous rabbi He claims to be the Light to which all men, without exception, must come who love the truth. His first utterance anticipates the highest claims of His last. A humble Galilean, easy of access, sympathetic, obscure, He calmly announces Himself as the Son of Man, whose home is heaven; as knowing the counsels of God from eternity; as the only-begotten Son of the Eternal, and the arbiter of eternal life or death to the world. It is idle to speak of any merely human utterances, even of the greatest and best of our race, in the presence of such thoughts and words as these. They are the voice of a higher sphere, though falling from the lips of One who walked as a man amongst men"—GEIKIE. "Although Nicodemus is alluded to in only a few touches, because of that high teaching which Jesus vouchsafed to him, yet the impression left upon us by his individuality is inimitably distinct, and wholly beyond the range of invention"—FARRAR. "In the history of Nicodemus we have a pretty spiritual play presented to us—how the best reason and most beautiful piety upon earth stumbles at genuine truth and spirituality. He is assisted, so should we paint it, by power, the highest piety and prudence, all combined, and yet more, even by love to Christ; yet see how he stumbles"—LUTHER. "He came in the dark from fear of public opinion. Yet he came, which is far better than not coming at all"—SCHAFF.

3. Ye must be born again. Professor Drummond has shown that no change of substance, no modification, no chemistry, can endow any single atom of the mineral world with life. As the door from the inorganic to the organic is shut, so the door from the natural to the spiritual is shut. The plant stretches down to the dead world beneath it, touches its minerals and gases with life, and brings them up into the living sphere. The breath of God touches the dead souls of men, bears them across the bridgeless gulf, and develops within them faculties by which they see the kingdom of God. Faith is the golden key that unlocks the door of salvation. The soul that accepts Christ has life, and that life is life eternal.

Nicodemus an inquirer after truth.—He was partially enlightened by the Light that lighteth every man. Such are not left in darkness; they have the Light of Life. Christ cared for single souls. He preached this great sermon to one. The Rev. John Holmes had an appointment to preach at Castlebar, Ireland. Arriving, he found a congregation of three. One of the three was converted. His name was William Arthur, who afterwards wrote The Tongue of Fire. Sincerity and timidity struggled together in Nicodemus. That he came by night is noticed again (ch. 19. 39). On each occasion where Nicodemus is mentioned we may see other traces of the timidity to which it was due. He defended Jesus without committing himself; he brought his offering after Joseph of Arimathæa had obtained the body from Pilate. But if timidity be the cause of his coming by night, it may not be the only cause. A worthy prudence would be put in the balances. It was hardly wise for a rabbi, and such a rabbi, to cast aside all reserve until he knew the new Teacher better than by report. Whether, however, we admit the prudential consideration or not, the sincerity is manifest. Nicodemus is the first of the long line of timid, half-doubting seekers; such are not excluded from the kingdom of God. Pages of church history are aflame with the stories of secret worship in the lives of the Huguenots, Covenanters, Puritans, Quakers, and Early Methodists. And few congregations are without the sincere but timid seekers after truth. Biography, on its religious side, is the incarnation of these seekers after God. In defending sincerity, we must not absolve cowardice. We must learn to rise above the judgment of the world, and not to be ashamed of principle and conscience. Uprightness, even if it take as its companion diffidence, shall go from light to fuller light. Moses, Jeremiah, and Calvin were constitutionally timid, but faithfully sincere. Examples of notable converts are worth recording for the glory of God, and the encouragement of others. Perhaps the records of weakness are more helpful than those of strength, seeing that weakness is more common. The Spirit of God works in all the same change, but He does not work in the same way. He reaches some in youth, and others in age. He arouses one through fear, and another by fascination. He reaches this man by a powerful appeal; that by an awakening providence. But in all the intention is the same—to make them partakers of the Divine nature. What a mighty change our Lord declares to be necessary to salvation! Christianity is not a mere doctrine, although doctrine is necessary to life. When our Lord says, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God, Luther understands Him to mean, "My teaching is not of doing and leaving undone, but of a radical change in the man, so that it is not new works done, but a new man to do them; not another life only, but another birth." Regeneration is a birth from above. The beginning of the new life is a mystery; but is not life itself a mystery? Our Lord uses earthly symbolism—wind and water. All things are double. The beginning of the Divine working cannot always be determined; the method of it cannot always be described; the manifestations of it are plain as the sun at noonday. We must be like God, or we can never live with Him.

22. Jesus went—"from the capital city, Jerusalem. Into the land of Judea—that is, into the country. There He baptized—not Himself, but His disciples, by His order. (Ch. 4. 2)"—WESLEY.

23. John also was baptizing. "He did not repel them that offered; but he more willingly referred them to Jesus"—WESLEY.

25. The Jews—"those men of Judea who now went to be baptized by Jesus, and John's disciples who were mostly of Galilee. About purifying—that is, baptism. They disputed which they should be baptized by"—WESLEY.

27. A man can receive nothing—"neither he nor I; neither could He do this, unless God had sent Him; nor can I receive the title of Christ, or any honour comparable to that which He hath received from heaven. They seem to have spoken with jealousy and resentment. John answers with sweet composure of spirit" —WESLEY.

29. He that hath the bride is the bridegroom—"he whom the bride follows. But all men now come to Jesus. Hence it is plain, He is the Bridegroom. The friend who heareth him—talk with the bride—rejoiceth greatly—so far from envying or resenting it" —WESLEY.

30. He must increase, but I must decrease. "So they who are now, like John, 'burning and shining lights,' must, if not suddenly eclipsed, like him gradually decrease, while others are increasing about them; as they, in their turns, grew up amidst the decays of the former generation. Let us know how to set, as well as how to rise; and let it comfort our declining days to trace, in these who are likely to succeed us in our work, the openings of yet greater usefulness"—WESLEY.

31. "It is not improbable that what is added to the end of the chapter are the words of the Evangelist, not the Baptist. He that is of the earth—a mere man, of earthly original, has a spirit and speech answerable to it"—WESLEY.

32. No man—"none comparatively, exceeding few. Receiveth his testimony—with true faith"—WESLEY.

33. Hath set to his seal. "It was customary among the Jews for the witness to set his seal to the testimony he had given. That God is true—whose word the Messiah speaks"—WESLEY.

34. God giveth not Him the Spirit by measure—"as He did to the prophets, but immeasurably. He speaketh the words of God in the most perfect manner"—WESLEY.

36. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life. "He hath it already, for he loves God; and love is the essence of heaven. He that obeyeth not—a consequence of not believing"—WESLEY.

"Here only in this Gospel does the well-known symbol of the bride occur (ver 29). It is frequent both in Old Testament and New Testament. (Isa. 54. 5; Hos. 2. 19, 20; Eph. 5. 32; Rev. 19. 7-21; 21. 9; comp. Song of Solomon; Matt. 9. 15; 25. 1.) In the Old Testament it symbolises the relationship between Jehovah and His chosen people, in the New Testament that between Christ and His Church"—PLUMMER. "Christ, the Alpha and Omega, should be all; we instruments have nothing" — HEDINGER. "Eternal life is given to the believer from the hour he believes. He need not wait for it; he has it already here"—GOSSNER.

CHAPTER IV.

NICODEMUS came to Christ by night; the woman of Samaria found Him "at noonday." He receives at any time.

"The discourse here told has all the artless simplicity, freshness, vivacity, and truthfulness of historical reality. No one could have invented it. The portrait of the woman is remarkably lifelike — every word and act is characteristic. The whole scenery remains to this day almost unchanged: Jacob's well, though partly in ruins; round about the waving harvests of a fertile and beautiful valley, with abundance of water; the mountains of Ebal and Gerizim; a heap of stones on the spot where the Samaritan temple stood; the flat roofs of the neighbouring town visible through olive trees; veiled women in Oriental costume coming for water, bearing a stone pitcher on the head or the shoulder; the weary traveller thirsting for a refreshing drink; the old bigotry and hatred of race and religion still burning beneath the ashes"—SCHAFF. "The well, like all frequented wells in the East, was doubtless sheltered by a little alcove, in which were seats of stone. It was the hour of noon, and weary as He was with the long journey, possibly also with the extreme heat, our Lord sat 'thus' on the well. The expression in the original is most pathetically picturesque. It implies that the wayfarer was quite tired out, and in His exhaustion flung His limbs wearily on the seat, anxious, if possible, for complete repose. His disciples had left Him, to buy in the neighbouring city what was necessary for their wants; and, hungry and thirsty, He who bore all our infirmities sat wearily awaiting them, when His solitude was broken by the approach of a woman"—FARRAR. "The women," says GUIZOT, "seem irresistibly attracted toward Jesus, with hearts moved, imaginations struck by His manner of life, His precepts, His miracles, His language. The Canaanitish woman comes and addresses to Him a timid prayer for the healing of her daughter. The woman of Samaria listens to Him with eagerness, though she does not know Him. Mary seats herself at His feet, absorbed in reflections suggested by His words; and Martha proffers to Him the frank complaint that her sister assists her not. The sinner draws near to Him in tears, pouring upon His feet a rare perfume, and wiping them with her hair." He who made sacred everything He touched, raised to a loftier level all things He spoke of, and ennobled every soul that came within the reach of His influence, refused to acknowledge the current opinions of society concerning women. Even His disciples were not emancipated. They marvelled that He was speaking with a woman. The oriental contempt for women appears with special strength in the rabbins. One says, "No man salutes a woman," another, "He who instructs his daughter in the Law is as one who plays the fool." Christ honoured women and reverenced children. A casual meeting with this nameless woman led to a conversation on deeply spiritual questions. But here, as elsewhere, His presence was a Gospel. He talked with a woman in spite of popular prejudice.

1. The Lord knew—"though none informed Him of it"—WESLEY.

3. He left Judea—"to shun the effects of their resentment"—WESLEY.

4. And He must needs go through Samaria—"the road lying directly through it"—WESLEY.

5. Sychar — "formerly called Sichem or Shechem. Jacob gave — on his death-bed. (Gen. 48. 22)"—WESLEY.

Sychar. This name has been commonly regarded as an intentional corruption of Sichem (Shechem, Neapolis, Nablous), as signifying "drunken town," or "lying town." Others have thought two small towns lying near together are intended. A little village now called Askar is probably the representative of Sychar. Those who like to trace the footsteps of Jesus Christ through the holy fields of Palestine will be interested in the spot where the feud of ages received the stroke of death. He who came to bring peace on earth spoke that day words that the conscience of the world echoes. In The Holy Land and the Bible —the record of Dr. Geikie's recent travels—its position in biblical history is thus defined: "What a long history crowded on my mind as I looked around! Before Shechem was built, Abraham and Lot had pitched their black tents on the plain through which I had walked, their long-eared, grey-tailed sheep and black goats, their tall, solemn camels and their small-sized oxen, had here nibbled the grass or twigs, the cactus or flowers; Sarah and her women slaves, of course duly veiled, had glided about over these very risings and sinkings of the valley, and the stalwart herdsmen had watered their charge out of the rippling brook, still flowing over its head of shining white stones, as it did on the bright mornings nearly four thousand years ago. Here lived Jacob and his wives—poor Leah and favoured Rachel—and the slave-mothers of so many of his sons; and all his children except Benjamin, who was not yet born, ran over the slopes and waded in this stream. Here the tribes had often gathered, from Dan on the north and Beersheba on the south, after that first great assembly in Joshua's day; their great attraction to this spot being, not only its beauty, but the altar of their forefathers under the sacred oak, the first simple approach to a national sanctuary. Here the great assembly of the nation, after the death of Solomon, had been held, with results disastrous to Israel, through the wrong-headedness and folly of the Wise Man's son. Jeroboam, the fugitive, returned from Egypt,—the man who had the fortunes of his country in his hand,—raised his tents somewhere near. Temperate and shrewd, but firm, he here made his proposal of reform on behalf of the ten tribes; and the insulting reception that was given to it was followed by the wild cry from ten thousand voices, 'What portion have we in David? Neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse! To your tents, O Israel; now, see to thine own house, David!' 'Then Jeroboam built Shechem'; that is, I suppose, changed it from a poor hamlet or village to a fine town. Here, too, centuries later, came a descendant of Rehoboam, in simple dress; claimant of a throne, like His ancestor, but a throne in the souls of men; and here He sat, weary by Jacob's well, leaving us immortal words spoken to a humble woman, perhaps a distant offspring of some one of those who, in the long past, had turned their backs on the line of David."

6. Jesus sat thus—"weary as He was. It was the sixth hour—noon; the heat of the day"—WESLEY.

From time immemorial, attention has been called to this weariness as an evidence of the reality of His humanity. To this, Dr. ABBOTT, a recent writer, adds a new suggestion: "It seems to me, when coupled with the prophecy of Isa. 53. 2, His apparent sinking under the weight of the cross, and His early death while the two thieves survived (Matt. 27. 32, 33; Mark 15. 44; ch. 19. 32, 33), to be an indication that His physical frame was not robust, was not equal to the demands of the soul which it contained, and that, as a part of His human experience, He knew the peculiar sorrows which an intense and active mind feels when hindered by a weak bodily organisation."

7. Give Me to drink. "In this one conversation He brought her to that knowledge which the apostles were so long in attaining"—WESLEY.

8. For His disciples were gone—"else He needed not have asked her"—WESLEY.

9. How dost Thou — "her open simplicity appears from her very first words. The Jews have no dealings—none by way of friendship. They would receive no kind of favour from them"—WESLEY.

10. If thou hadst known the gift—"the living water. And who it is—He who alone is able to give it—thou wouldest have asked of Him—on those words the stress lies—water. In like manner He draws the allegory from bread (ch. 6. 27); and from light (ch. 8. 12); the first, the most simple, necessary, common, and salutary things in nature. Living water —the Spirit and its fruits. But she might the more easily mistake His meaning, because 'living water' was a common name among the Jews for spring water"—WESLEY.

9, 10. The woman recognised the man of the Jewish land probably by His accent. The question implies surprise and slight contempt. So violent was the hatred between the two nations that it was said, "He who receives a Samaritan into his house, and entertains him, deserves to have his children driven to exile." How startled those must have been who listened to the parable of the Good Samaritan!

"Had she known the gift of God, the gift of His Son (ch. 3. 16), in which was included all that man could want, she would have felt that the need of which she was partly conscious (ver. 25) could at length be satisfied. Had she known who it was that said to her, Give Me to drink, she would have laid open her prayer to Him without reserve or doubt, assured of His sympathy and help"—WESTCOTT. "Thou wouldest have asked of Him; instead of His asking of thee. Spiritually our positions are reversed. It is thou who art weary and footsore and parched; close to the well, yet unable to drink; it is I who can give thee water from the well, and quench thy thirst for ever"—C. B.

12. Our father Jacob—"so they fancied he was; whereas they were, in truth, a mixture of many nations, placed there by the king of Assyria, in the room of the Israelites whom he had carried away captive. (2 Kings 17. 24.) Who gave us the well—"in Joseph, their supposed forefather. And drank thereof—so even he had no better water than this"—WESLEY.

14. Will never thirst—"will never (provided he continue to drink thereof) be miserable, dissatisfied, without refreshment. If ever that thirst returns, it will be the fault of the man, not the water. But the water that I shall give him—the spirit of faith working by love—shall become in him—an inward, living principle. A fountain—not barely a well, which is soon exhausted. Springing up into everlasting life—which is a confluence, or rather an ocean, of streams arising from this fountain"—WESLEY.

15. That I thirst not. "She takes Him still in a gross sense"—WESLEY.

As in ver. 11 the woman misses the spiritual sense.

16. Jesus saith to her. "He now clears the way, that He might give her a better kind of water than she asked for. Go call thy husband—He strikes directly at her bosom sin"—WESLEY.

Conviction of sin must precede conversion from it. "If we confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins."

17. Thou hast well said. "We may observe in all our Lord's discourse, the utmost weightiness, and yet the utmost courtesy"—WESLEY.

18. Thou hast had five husbands—"whether they were all dead or not, her own conscience, now awakened, would tell her"—WESLEY.

19. Sir, I perceive—"so soon was her heart touched"—WESLEY.

20. "The instant she perceived this, she proposes what she thought the most important of all questions. This mountain—pointing to Mount Gerizim. Sanballat, by the permission of Alexander the Great, had built a temple upon Mount Gerizim, for Manasseh, who, for marrying Sanballat's daughter, had been expelled from the priesthood and from Jerusalem. (Neh. 13. 28.) This was the place where the Samaritans used to worship, in opposition to Jerusalem. And it was so near Sychar, that a man's voice might be heard from the one to the other. Our fathers worshipped—this plainly refers to Abraham and Jacob (from whom the Samaritans pretended to deduce their genealogy), who erected altars in this place (Gen. 12. 6, 7, and 33. 18, 20); and possibly to the whole congregation, who were directed, when they came into the land of Canaan, 'to put the blessing upon Mount Gerizim' (Deut. 11. 29). Ye Jews say, In Jerusalem is the place—namely, the Temple"—WESLEY.

19, 20. The woman becomes uneasy, and passes to a controversial question. He makes it an occasion for revealing the true object of worship, and the true method of approach to God.

21. Believe Me. "Our Lord uses this expression in this manner but once, and that to a Samaritan. To His own people, the Jews, His usual language is, 'I say unto you.' The hour cometh when ye—both Samaritans and Jews—shall worship neither in this mountain nor at Jerusalem—as preferable to any other place. True worship shall be no longer confined to any one place or nation"—WESLEY.

22. Ye worship ye know not what. "Ye Samaritans are ignorant, not only of the place, but of the very object of worship. Indeed, 'they feared the Lord' after a fashion; but at the same time 'served their own gods' (2 Kings 17. 33.) Salvation is from the Jews. So spake all the prophets, that the Saviour should arise out of the Jewish nation; and that from thence the knowledge of Him should spread to all nations under heaven"—WESLEY.

23. The true worshippers shall worship the Father—"not here or there only; but at all times, and in all places"—WESLEY.

24. God is a Spirit—"not only remote from body, and all the properties of it, but likewise full of all spiritual perfections, power, wisdom, love, holiness. And our worship should be suitable to His nature. We should worship Him with the truly spiritual worship of faith, love, and holiness, animating all our tempers, thoughts, words, and actions"—WESLEY.

God is a Spirit, free from all limitations of space and time. God is a Spirit; and they that worship Him must worship in spirit and truth. He who would come to the knowledge of this mystery must live in the Spirit, and the Spirit shall teach him all things.

25. The woman saith—"with joy for what she had already learned, and desire of fuller instruction"—WESLEY.

26. Jesus saith—"hasting to satisfy her desire before His disciples came—I am He. Our Lord did not speak this so plainly to the Jews, who were so full of the Messiah's temporal kingdom. If He had, many would doubtless have taken up arms in His favour, and others have accused Him to the Roman governor. Yet He did in effect declare the thing, though He denied the particular title. For in a multitude of places He represented Himself both as the Son of Man and as the Son of God; both which expressions were generally understood by the Jews as peculiarly applicable to the Messiah"—WESLEY.

The woman was prepared to welcome Messiah in His prophetic dignity, and in this He makes Himself known to her.

Vers. 27, seq. SURPRISE OF THE DISCIPLES, AND FURTHER SPIRITUAL TEACHING, WITH A STATEMENT OF THE LAWS OF SPIRITUAL SERVICE.—Some sow but do not reap; others reap but do not sow. All shall rejoice together.

27. His disciples marvelled that He talked with a woman—"which the Jewish rabbis reckoned scandalous for a man of distinction to do. They marvelled likewise at His talking with a woman of that nation, which was so peculiarly hateful to the Jews. Yet none said—to the woman, What seekest thou? or to Christ, Why talkest Thou with her?"—WESLEY.

28. The woman left her waterpot—"forgetting smaller things"—WESLEY.

29. A man who told me all things that ever I did. "Our Lord had told her but a few things. But His words awakened her conscience, which soon told her all the rest. Is not this the Christ? She does not doubt of it herself, but incites them to make the inquiry"—WESLEY.

Let us learn the value of one soul. Christ preached to ones. The worst may be led to God. But tact and patience are indispensable. Jesus is His own gospel; He satisfies every thirst of the soul. Religion is life—abundant life, eternal life. What effect the Divine teaching had on this woman's life we may not say. The record is silent. Great things might have come out of this casual meeting. Eternity will disclose. At the least the woman became a missionary to her own people. For the sake of symmetry let us read the record as a whole:—

First word of Jesus.—Give Me to drink. He was the MAN Christ Jesus. The hot noontide sun affected Him. He was weary, who once slept in a storm from fatigue. He was thirsty, who afterwards cried out on His cross. Do not overlook His humanity. These slight touches bring Him near to us. In the byways of the Gospels we meet accidentally, and hold pleasant intercourse with the Saviour and Friend who knoweth our frame. But do not end with the humanity with which you may begin. As Christ makes light the symbol of His nature and life, so He employs water to shadow forth higher conceptions. The truth of His thirst is in the simple question; so are the freedom of His intercourse, the higher purpose of His words, and His wisdom in meeting individuals on their own ground. He did not so much condescend as intuitively perceive, and with infinite tact place Himself at their level. The Jew hated the Samaritan—Jesus asked of one a drink of water; the Rabbi scorned intercourse with a woman—Jesus talked with her; the Pharisee shrank from near contact with a sinner—Jesus instructed and redeemed her. (Comp. Luke 7. 37–50.) To examine any word of Jesus is like looking into the clear depths of some pure, strong-flowing river.

First reply of the woman.—How is it that Thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a Samaritan woman? Race hatred and religious differences had dug an impassable chasm between the two nations. Blood had been shed in the unhallowed feud. The ancient hatred is still kept up, and the remnant of Samaritans neither eat nor drink, nor marry, nor associate with the Jews, but only trade with them. Would to God that this spirit was found no nearer home! The pages of modern history in Europe have been stained with the blood that flowed at the bidding of race and religious hatred.

Second word of Jesus.—If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give Me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water. Jesus shows that He, the maker of a request, can bestow a larger gift than He asks. He calls Himself, and all He brings to man, the gift of God; He speaks of His gifts as living water. The life emanates from Him; makes like unto Him; and leads to eternal fellowship with Him.

Second reply of the woman.—Art Thou greater than our father Jacob? She could not forget the noble story of her nation—the past lives in the present. Our fathers wrought for us, bled for us, suffered for us, and in some cases died for us. Let us remember them; let us emulate them; let us most of all carry on their work.

Third word of Jesus.—Every one that drinketh of this water shall thirst again; but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst. This water shall be immanent in man, and will attend him through every stage of his being, even to eternity. The need of an increase is not excluded. The Holy Spirit is a gushing spring, ever flowing. The Divine life consummates itself in eternal life, as the rivers lose themselves in the ocean.

Third reply of the woman.—Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come all the way hither to draw. She was slow to discern His spiritual meanings.

Fourth word of Jesus.—Go, call thy husband, and come hither. She was self-degraded. He, the patient Jesus, awakens her conscience, that He may cleanse and train it.

Fourth reply of the woman.—I have no husband. Answer of Jesus.—Thou saidst truly.

Fifth reply of the woman.—Sir, I perceive that Thou art a prophet. Where should we worship? This sudden transition may have been made to avoid an unpleasant subject, but it was a transition to an important question—Where can God be found?

Sixth word of Jesus.—God is a Spirit. He is not here or there, but here and there. Wherever the spirit and truth of worship are, there is God.

Last reply of the woman.—I know that Messiah cometh; when He is come He will declare unto us all things. Last word of Jesus.—I that speak unto thee am He. The Prophet of God had been speaking, but she lacked the hearing ear, and the understanding heart.

31. In the meantime—"before the people came"—WESLEY.

34. My meat—"that which satisfies the strongest appetite of My soul"—WESLEY.

35. The fields are white already—"as if He had said, The spiritual harvest is ripe already. The Samaritans, ripe for the gospel, covered the ground round about them"—WESLEY.

36. He that reapeth—"whosoever saves souls—receiveth wages—a peculiar blessing to himself. And gathereth fruit—many souls. That He that soweth—Christ, the great Sower of the seed—and he that reapeth may rejoice together—in heaven"—WESLEY.

37. That saying—"a common proverb. One soweth—the prophets and Christ. Another reapeth—the apostles and succeeding ministers"—WESLEY.

38. I—"the Lord of the whole harvest—have sent you. He has employed them already in baptizing (ver. 2)"—WESLEY.

42. We know that this is the Saviour of the world—"and not of the Jews only"—WESLEY.

How important is NOW. If Christ had neglected the opportunity, the woman would have gone unblessed, and Samaria unsaved.

THE SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD.—The title "The Saviour of the World" is found once again in 1 John 4. 14. It is remarkable that this magnificent conception of the work of Christ was first expressed by a Samaritan—one of a despised and hated nation; one outside the chosen nation. The disciples marvelled that Jesus Christ talked with a woman. Still more would they marvel when they found that that woman was a Samaritan. Perhaps they marvelled when they knew that Samaritans had accepted Him whom Jews rejected.

My meat, He said, is to do the will of Him that sent Me, and to accomplish His work. And then, pointing to the inhabitants of Shechem, as they streamed to Him over the plain, He continued, You talk of there being yet four months to harvest. Look at these fields, white already for the spiritual harvest. Ye shall be the joyful reapers of the harvest which I thus have sown in toil and pain; but I, the Sower, rejoice in the thought of that joy to come. The personal intercourse with Christ convinced many of these Samaritans far more deeply than the narrative of the woman to whom He had first revealed Himself; and graciously, according to their request, that He would stay with them, He and His disciples abode there two days. Doubtless it was the teaching of these two days that had a vast share in the rich conversions of a few subsequent years. When He beheld the Samaritans streaming forth from the city, the spiritual glance in the spirit of the Redeemer opened upon the future spiritual harvest—first among the people, and then in the great world beyond. With this thought He strengthened His soul. It now throws into the background His need of food, as it had previously His need of water. Fatigue and thirst and hunger—our Lord was subject to these common infirmities; but His spirituality of mind regulated the lower nature. He was always illustrating His own word—Man doth not live by bread alone.

"The words, Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh the harvest? have been understood in two ways, either as a proverbial saying, marking roughly the interval between some familiar date—seed-time and harvest, or as a description of the actual state of things at the time, so that when the words were spoken there were four months to the harvest. This, however, is but the outward and visible sign of the inward and spiritual truth. Our Lord sowed without reaping, but the ages would reap the harvest—the apostles would reap somewhat. But spiritual work is done for eternity. Impatience must not be manifested if results slowly appear. Seed-time and harvest are separated in time, but inseparable in fact. In current speech, Jesus said to the disciples, Ye say, yet four months, and then harvest; but lift up your eyes and look upon the fields in the light of another husbandry; for lo, in that sense, they are even now white to harvest—ready for the sickle. The simple beauty of this language is only surpassed by the glow of holy emotion in the Redeemer's own soul which it expresses. It refers to the ripeness of these Sycharites for accession to Him, and the joy of this great Lord of the reapers over the anticipated ingathering. Oh, could we but so lift up our eyes and look upon many fields abroad and at home, which to dull sense appear unpromising, as He beheld those of Samaria, what movements, as yet scarce in embryo, and accessions to Christ, as yet seemingly far distant, might we not discern as quite near at hand, and thus, amidst difficulties and discouragements too much for nature to sustain, be cheered as our Lord Himself was"—BROWN. The conversation with the woman—here was the sowing; the coming of the Samaritans—here was the reaping. But in life the connection is seldom so obvious, hardly ever so immediate. Men, generations, institutions appear, pass away, seemingly perish, without success, without a trace, with hardly a memory. But so does the seed seem to be buried in the dark, cold earth. But its grave shall open and the seed come forth. So it is with truth, with Christian work, with Christian character, with men's true fame. The grace of patient waiting is spoken of in the Book, is needed in the life. Prophet and apostle and martyr and modern Christian are separated by a wide interval. Some sow and reap not. Some reap who have not sowed. A few sow and reap. But the field is one, and there is a Lord of the harvest. We are responsible for faithful work. He will charge Himself with ultimate results. Life's day is too short for everyone to see the end of his work. Hence one soweth and another reapeth. Be it so. All is well. He that soweth and he that reapeth have yet to rejoice together at the great Harvest Home. Learn to be contented with thy work. Art thou a sower? God appointed thy place. Be strong in the assurance that the sower is needed; that without thee the harvest were impossible. Maybe thou wilt not reap, but another will, and the joy shall be mutual when the sower and reaper meet in the presence of the Lord of the harvest.

46. He went into Galilee—"that is, unto the country of Galilee; but not to Nazareth. It was at that town only that He had no honour. Therefore He went to other towns"—WESLEY.

47. To come down—"for Cana stood much higher than Capernaum"—WESLEY.

48. Unless ye see signs and wonders—"although the Samaritans believed without them"—WESLEY.

52. He asked the hour when he amended—"the more exactly the works of God are considered, the more faith is increased"—WESLEY.

The first miracle at Cana turned water into wine, the second miracle at Cana healed a sick child; for though the child was at Capernaum, Christ was at Cana. Joy and sorrow are the two sides of life, and the Son of Man sanctified both. Probably the bridal pair of the first miracle were poor, or the wedding supplies would not have failed. The nobleman or king's officer of the present miracle was doubtless rich, and the Brother of all men came to both. Herein lies the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the world. The Countess of Huntingdon often thanked God that in 1 Cor. 1. 26 it is not "any," but "many." He who first called fishermen next summoned Nicodemus a Pharisee; then the woman of a hated nation; and then a nobleman. He was the highest in station of all those recorded to have applied to the Lord for aid. He was driven by a blast of sorrow. He came to the miracle worker: let us hope he found the Saviour.

There was a certain nobleman whose son was sick at Capernaum — possibly, as by some has been supposed, Chuza, Herod's steward, whose wife appears among the holy women that ministered to the Lord of their substance (Luke 8. 3); others have suggested Manaen, the foster-brother of Herod. But whether one of these, or neither, he appears to have been driven to Christ "by the constraint of an outward need," rather than one "drawn by the inner necessities and desires of the soul." Signs and wonders might compel him to a belief, but nothing else. Signs and wonders are combined. (Matt. 24. 24; Mark 13. 22, and elsewhere.) They mark the two chief aspects of miracles: the spiritual aspect, whereby they suggest some deeper truth than meets the eye, of which they are in some sense symbols and pledges; and the external aspect, whereby their strangeness arrests attention. Many things produce wonder, and yet are not miracles. Miracles are wonders and something more. A miracle is also a sign, a token, an indication of the near presence of God. Miracles are signs of something beyond themselves. There was rebuke in our Lord's word of instruction, but not rebuke only. When He rebukes it is to prepare the way for encouragement and help. The man refuses to be repulsed. He discerns love beneath the outward severity of the words, and cries yet more earnestly, Sir, come down ere my child die. Still it is true he links help to the bodily presence of the Lord. He has faith, but it needs strengthening, and strengthened it shall be. Jesus Christ will not break the bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax. It was the way of Jesus to lead through faith in miracles to faith in the word. (Ch. 10. 38; 14. 11; 15. 24.) He will reprove this petitioner, but His reproof is not for rejection, but for discipline. It is an example of growing faith that we have in this nobleman, and of Divine patience that we see in Jesus, the Friend of the sorrowful, and the Saviour of the body. "This miracle," says ALFORD, "is a notable instance of our Lord not quenching the smoking flax, just as His reproof of the Samaritan woman was of His not breaking the bruised reed. The little spark of faith in the breast of this nobleman is by Him lit up into a clear and enduring flame, for the light and comfort of himself and his house." "The miracle," TRENCH beautifully says, "was a double one—on the body of the absent child; on the heart of the present father; one cured of his sickness, the other of his unbelief."

Go thy way; thy son liveth. And the man believed the word; and as he was going down, his servants met him and told him, saying, Thy son liveth. This was the answer to the utterance of his troubled love. My child is dying. Recall Jairus, the Canaanitish mother, and the father of the demoniac under the Mount of Transfiguration. The son suddenly recovered, and at the hour when Jesus spoke the word. He did not go down. No explanation is sufficient except by reference to the mighty power of God. "As the first miracle of distant operation, this incident bears a close relation to the healing of the servant of the centurion at Capernaum, and of the daughter of the Canaanitish woman. In the mysterious manifestation of the Divine power of Christ, we must not forget the human media which here lay in the inward connection of an anxious father's heart with the dying child, as, in fact, the help of God owns the human intercession. The spiritual roads, streets, and paths which human love, distress, and prayer have to make for the Divine help in the invisible world can only glorify the freedom, truth, and miraculous power of this help, as a power which is, at the same time, the power of a personal spirit and love, i.e. not abstractly working in a void, but as Divine life applied to the human"—LANGE. The miraculous healing of the nobleman's son resembles the healing of the centurion's servant, but must not be confounded with it. It was the second miracle which Christ wrought in Galilee (ver. 54); the first being the change of water into wine. S. John relates a third miracle in Galilee—the feeding of the multitude, which is followed by a long discourse (ch. 6), and three miracles in Judea, viz., the healing of the cripple at the pool of Bethesda (ch. 5), the healing of the blind (ch. 9), and the raising of Lazarus (ch. 11). He also relates three appearances of the risen Saviour (ch. 21. 14). What Jesus does serves to declare who He is. Fact and idea are related to each other. He who healed the sick is the Saviour of the body; He who pardoned the penitent is the Saviour of the soul. Revelation is a miracle. Answers to prayer are miraculous. Conversion is a sacred mystery. A Christian is a moral miracle. Jesus Christ is the greatest miracle of all.

CHAPTER V.

"THE healing of a helpless and hopeless cripple at the House of Mercy," Dr. SCHAFF observes, "is the first miracle of Jesus in Judea related by S. John, although He had performed signs there before, which are only alluded to (ch. 2. 23; 3. 2). It forms the basis of a lengthy and most important Christological discourse, which opens the conflict of Jesus with the unbelieving Jewish hierarchy, and reveals the contrast between His positive fulfilment of the spirit of the Law and their negative observance of its letter, as also between His living Theism and their abstract Monotheism. His doing good on the Sabbath was made the ground of a charge of Sabbath-breaking, and His claim to be in a peculiar sense the Son of God was construed as blasphemy deserving of death. Christ here proclaims all these grand truths which John had announced in the prologue. He reveals Himself as one with the Father, who never ceases doing good, as the Lord of the Sabbath, as the Giver of life, as the Raiser of the dead, and the Judge of the world, and claims Divine honour. He supports these astounding claims, which no mere man could make without being guilty of blasphemy or madness, by the united testimony of John the Baptist, of God the Father through His works, and of the Old Testament Scriptures, and drives this threefold testimony with terrible earnestness into the conscience of the Jews. He then traces their unbelief to the secret chambers of their self-seeking hearts, and completely turns the tables by presenting their own Moses, in whom they boastfully put their hope, as their accuser, for not following his lead to Christ, to whom he pointed in all his writings. Thus the mouths of these hypocritical worshippers of the letter, and enemies of the spirit and aim of the Law, were stopped; but their hearts continued in opposition, and longed for an opportunity to carry out their bloodthirsty design." The significance of this discourse is great. Its place in the ministry of Jesus is well indicated by Dr. GEIKIE, who writes: "Jesus had now been some months in Galilee, and the season of the great feasts had returned. It was meet that Judea, which had rejected Him when He first preached in it, should be once more visited, and the news of the kingdom once more sent abroad among the throngs of pilgrims from every part of the world, attracted at such times to Jerusalem. Leaving the north, therefore, for a time, He again journeyed south; perhaps by short stages, preaching as He went; perhaps with one of the bands of pilgrims which gathered from each neighbourhood to go up to the house of the Lord. No voice would join with so rapt a devotion in the joyful solemnities of such a journey, in the psalms that enlivened the way, or the formal devotions of morning and evening. But what feast it was He thus honoured is not told, nor are there means for deciding. That of Purim, a month before the Passover, the Passover itself, Pentecost, and the Feast of Tabernacles, have each found favour on plausible grounds; but where there is such contrariety of opinion, the safest course is to leave the matter unsettled. Of the visit we know only one incident (ch. 5. 1-47), but it was the turning-point in the life of our Lord."

1. A feast—"Pentecost"—WESLEY.

2. There is in Jerusalem. Hence it appears that S. John wrote his Gospel before Jerusalem was destroyed: it is supposed, about thirty years after the Ascension. Having five porticoes—built for the use of the sick. Probably the basin had five sides. Bethesda signifies, "the House of Mercy."

4. An angel — "yet many undoubtedly thought the whole thing to be purely natural.

At certain times—perhaps at a certain hour of the day, during this paschal week—went down. The Greek word implies that he had ceased going down before the time of S. John's writing this. God might design this, to raise expectation of the acceptable time approaching, to add a greater lustre to His Son's miracles, and to show that His ancient people were not entirely forgotten of Him. The first—whereas the Son of God healed every day, not one only, but whole multitudes that resorted to Him"—WESLEY.

6. Wilt thou be made whole? Free will may be a mystery, but it is a fact of observation. God does not compel obedience, albeit He commands it. "Come unto Me" is Christ's word of invitation. "Ye will not come" is His word of lament.

7. The sick man answered—"giving the reason why he was not made whole, notwithstanding his desire"—WESLEY.

14. Sin no more. "It seems his former illness was the effect or punishment of sin"—WESLEY.

15. The man went and told the Jews that it was Jesus, who had made him whole. "One might have expected that, when he had published the name of his benefactor, crowds would have thronged about Jesus, to have heard the blessed words of His mouth, and to have received the blessings of the gospel. Instead of this, they surrounded Him with an hostile intent; they even conspire against His life, and, for an imagined transgression, in point of ceremony, would have put out this light of Israel. Let us not wonder, then, if our 'good be evil spoken of'; if even candour, benevolence, and usefulness do not disarm the enmity of those who have been taught to prefer sacrifice to mercy; and who, disrelishing the genuine gospel, naturally seek to slander and persecute the professors, but especially the defenders of it"—WESLEY.

17. My Father worketh until now, and I work. "From the creation till now He hath been working without intermission. I do likewise. This is the proposition which is explained from ver. 19 to ver. 30; confirmed and vindicated in ver. 31 and following verses"—WESLEY.

Jesus answered. The answers of Jesus are very important. A most interesting sermon might be based upon the replies of Jesus to the cavils of foes and the misrepresentations of friends. In the present instance the members of the Sanhedrim had called Jesus to account for healing on the Sabbath. Read account of the miracle in previous verses. The miraculous character of the cure is made more apparent by the ability of the cripple at once to carry his couch with him. It was this carrying of the couch, too, which furnished the occasion for the charge of a breach of the Sabbath. The observance of the Sabbath was grounded upon God's resting on the seventh day, by which, however, was only meant that God had ceased to create anything new. With profound truth the Saviour now points to the fact that therein is involved no cessation of activity. My Father worketh hitherto. Life is movement. Growth is perpetual. The seasons do not stand still. Birth and death are reciprocal. As one phrases it: "The rest of God after the creation, which the Sabbath represents outwardly and which I am come to realise, is not a state of inaction, but of activity, and man's true rest is not a rest from human, earthly labour, but a rest for Divine, heavenly labour." The continuous working of the Almighty is marked in such passages as—

"Our God, who covereth the heaven with clouds,
Who prepareth rain for the earth,
Who maketh grass to grow upon the mountains."

My Father worketh even unto now, and I work. The "I" is emphatic.

18. They sought to kill Him. "This seeking to kill is the blood-red thread which runs through the whole of this section of the Gospel. (Comp. ch. 7. 1, 19, 25; 8. 37, 40, 59; 10. 31; 11. 53; 12. 10)"—PLUMMER.

Had broken the Sabbath. Was loosing the Sabbath. The Pharisaic Sabbath had to be relaxed. But we are most of us to-day in danger of tending towards the opposite extreme. Let us, in Norman M'Leod's language, "be as broad as the charity of Almighty God, and as narrow as God's righteousness."

God was His Father—His own Father; as in Rom. 8. 32, "His own Son." He made Himself equal with God. He placed Himself on the same level with God. He claimed the power of abrogating the law of the Sabbath in virtue of His special relation to God.

His own Father. "The Greek word means His own Father, in such a sense as no creature can speak. Making Himself equal with God—it is evident all the hearers so understood Him; and that our Lord never contradicted, but confirmed it"—WESLEY.

Bethesda, generally considered to mean House of Mercy, was a water reservoir, or swimming pool, with five porches or colonnades, close to the sheep gate (Neh. 3. 1) in Jerusalem. The porches accommodated those waiting for the troubling of the water. Ver. 4, as to the angel troubling the water, is omitted in some MSS. of the New Testament. Hence the Revised Version reads:—Now there is in Jerusalem by the sheep gate a pool, which is called in Hebrew Bethesda, having five porches. In these lay a multitude of them that were sick, blind, halt, withered. And a certain man was there, which had been thirty and eight years in his infirmity. When Jesus saw him lying, and knew that he had been now a long time in that case, He saith unto him, Wouldest thou be made whole? The sick man answered Him, Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool; but while I am coming, another steppeth down before me.

"The angels," says FAUSSET, "in a way unknown to us, doubtless act as God's ministers in the world of nature. Many curative agencies are directed by them. (Ps. 104. 4.) God maketh His angelic messengers the directing powers, acting by the winds and flaming lightning. The angelic actings, limited and fitful, attested at that time that God was visiting His people, throwing into the brighter prominence at the same time the actings of the Divine Son, who healed, not merely one exceptionally, but all who came to Him, whatever might be their disease, and instantaneously." On the other hand, so sober an expositor and reverent a believer as WESTCOTT writes: "The healing properties of the pool may have been due to its mineral elements." Eusebius describes the water of the pool identified with it in his time as marvellously red, i.e. probably from deposits of iron on the stones. A chalybeate spring would be efficacious generally in cases of weakness. A similar scene is still presented by the hot sulphureous springs near Tiberias. There may be still seen a multitude of impotent folk—as, indeed, may there not at English and Continental watering-places? Among the Jews, as among other races, everything was attributed to the direct action of supernatural beings. The healing powers of the Bethesda waters were ascribed to periodical visits of an angel. It was even said that a good angel dwelt beside healing springs, and each morning gave them their virtue afresh. That angels should be the ministers of God's will, is according to the analogy of Scripture and the religious conception of nature. But it is as sacred to find God in established facts as in occasional changes and appearances; and whether an angel came or not, the healing remains, and so does the power of the Son of God over the powers and energies of nature, themselves miraculous. Our Lord singles out one of the sufferers, and awakens his dormant energies by the question, Wouldest thou be made whole? He was a sluggish and dull-minded man, abject in his comparative helplessness; too fertile in excuses. Had he been more energetic, hope might have found some way of relief. Bestir thyself, said Jesus. Fixedly the man's attention rested on the Wondrous Person. With the faith came the power; and the man took up his bed and walked. The Lord commandeth, and it is done. In earlier times, many found in these healing influences the largeness and freedom of the Christian as compared with the former dispensation. If ch. 4 presents Christianity in contrast with sacred antiquities (Jacob's well), and with the places and services of the Temple in the ancient time, ch. 5 unfolds it in contrast with ancient miraculous localities and curative resorts. Perhaps we moderns would be none the worse if we saw angels oftener than we do; if we recognised God's hand in the medical skill or the healing waters that restored health. The fountain of Bethesda may well be an example of earthly sources of healing, a symbol of the Divine source; the pool and hall of Bethesda an example of hospitals and watering-places. The invisible spiritual forces of nature throw us back upon God. His enemies craftily combine two charges—the healing of the invalid on the Sabbath, and the commanding him to carry his bed. The Pharisees adhered to the letter of the fourth commandment as far as it forbade any common work, and hedged it around with all sorts of rabbinical and hair-splitting restrictions; but they violated its spirit, which demands the positive sanctification of the Sabbath by doing good. The controversy between Christ and His adversaries lay ultimately here—whether it is most lawful to do good on the Sabbath day, or to leave it undone. God never ceases to work. He is always doing good and removing evil. Is it not lawful to imitate God? The most important works of God are works of love for man's restoration. Herein is the true Sabbath spirit; here Jesus Christ found His sufficient defence. The Sabbath of the Christian should be the Sabbath of Christ.

WESTCOTT'S analysis of some of the remaining verses will be of value:—

> Our Lord's answer to the Jews deals with His nature and prerogatives—(1) in relation to the Father (vers. 19–23); and (2) in relation to men (vers. 24–29). The exposition of the thoughts is made in a series of statements bound together by 'for' four times repeated. The Son doeth nothing self-determined of Himself, which would be impossible (ver. 19); > for His action is absolutely coincident in range with that of the Father (ver. 19); and this can be;
> for His Father shows Him His widening counsels, which extend to the exhibition of greater works than healing (ver. 20); > for it is the prerogative of the Son to give life (ver. 21), as is shown to be the case; > for all judgment is given to Him, and men can see that He exerts this power (ver. 22).
> Hence it follows that men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father (ver 23).

24–29. "In these verses we pass from the consideration of the relation of the Son to the Father to that of the relation of Christ to men. The conception of the 'greater works' of the Son, the quickening and the judgment of men, is defined more exactly in connection with the Son as revealed by the Incarnation. At the same time, though the oblique form is generally preserved, the work and the universal Christ are referred to directly (My Lord, Him that sent Me, ver. 24). In ver. 24 the general ideas of all life and all judgment in connection with the Son (vers. 21, 22) are re-stated; in vers. 25, 26 they are applied to the present order; in vers. 28, 29 they are applied to the future order."

31–47. "This second main division of the discourse consists, like the first, of two parts. The witness to the Son is first laid open (vers. 31–40), and then the rejection of the witness in its cause and end (ver. 41–47)."

19. Then answered Jesus. He met their thoughts and their actions by a justification of His own works, and His Divine claims as Messiah. Verily, verily—the same word as our Amen. The phrase is found in the New Testament only in the Gospel of John (who never gives the simple "Amen"); and (like the simple "Amen" in the other Gospels) it is used only by Christ. The word "Amen" is represented by "in truth," or "truly," in Luke 4. 25; 9. 27. The teaching is "with authority" (Matt. 7. 28, seq.). The Son—the absolute relation of the Divine Persons is indicated—can do nothing of Himself—because the Persons are inseparable. The Son can do nothing of Himself. "This is not His imperfection, but His glory, resulting from His eternal, intimate, indissoluble unity with the Father. Hence it is absolutely impossible that the Son should judge, will, testify, or teach anything without the Father (ver. 30, etc.; John 6. 38; 7. 16); or that He should be known or believed on separately from the Father. And He here defends His doing good every day without intermission by the example of His Father, from which He cannot depart. These doeth the Son likewise—all these, and only these; seeing He and the Father are one"—WESLEY.

20. The Father showeth Him all things that Himself doeth—"a proof of the most intimate unity. And He will show Him—by doing them. At the same time (not at different times) the Father showeth and doeth, and the Son seeth and doeth. Greater works. Jesus oftener terms them works than signs or wonders, because they were not wonders in His eyes. Ye will marvel—so they did, when He raised Lazarus"—WESLEY.

21. For—"He declares which are those greater works—raising the dead, and judging the world. The power of quickening whom He will follows from the power of judging. These two, quickening and judging, are proposed (vers. 21, 22). The acquittal of believers, which presupposes judgment, is treated of in ver. 24; the quickening some of the dead (ver. 25); and the general resurrection (ver. 28)"—WESLEY.

As the Father raiseth and quickeneth, even so the Son also. There are two resurrections, of the soul and the body. We are raised from the death of sin to the life of righteousness. The restoration of an impotent man is but the beginning of that giving of life of which it is a sign. All communications of life—natural and spiritual—are miraculous also. They declare the presence of God. A Jewish thanksgiving, probably used in substance in apostolic times, runs thus: "Thou, O Lord, art mighty for ever: Thou quickenest the dead; Thou art strong to save. Thou sustainest the living by Thy mercy; Thou quickenest the dead by Thy great compassion. Thou makest good Thy faithfulness to them that sleep in the dust. Thou art faithful to quicken the dead. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who quickenest the dead."

22. For neither doth the Father judge—"not without the Son; but He doth 'judge, by that Man whom He hath ordained' (Acts 17. 31)"—WESLEY.

All judgment is committed unto the Son. As the Creed says, "I believe in Jesus Christ. . . . From the right hand of God He cometh to judge both the quick (the living) and the dead."

23. That all men may honour the Son, even as they honour the Father—"either willingly, and so escaping condemnation, by faith; or unwillingly, when feeling the wrath of the Judge. This demonstrates the equality of the Son with the Father. If our Lord were God only by office or investiture, and not in the unity of the Divine essence, and in all respects equal in Godhead with the Father, He could not be honoured 'even as,' that is, with the same honour, that they honoured the Father. He that honoureth not the Son—with the same equal honour, greatly dishonoureth the Father that sent Him"—WESLEY.

24. Hath eternal life. "It is already in him. Its fulness he will realise in another world. Eternal life is not future, but present, or rather it is, and so is above all time"—WESTCOTT.

And cometh not into condemnation—"unless he make shipwreck of the faith"—WESLEY.

25. Verily, verily—"again marking the importance of what is said. The hour is coming. It is drawing near; it is sure to come. And now is. It has already begun. These words exclude the meaning of a bodily resurrection; the hour for which had not yet arrived"—C. B. "The hour was 'coming,' as far as the Christian dispensation truly began with the gift of Pentecost; but it 'was' already, while Christ openly taught among men"—WESTCOTT.

The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God—"so did Jairus' daughter, the widow's son, and Lazarus"—WESLEY.

26. He hath given to the Son—"by eternal generation. To have in Himself—absolute, independent"—WESLEY.

27. And hath given Him judgment because He is the Son of Man. The Judge must share the nature of those who are brought before Him. The phrase "Son of Man" is found here only in the Gospel, but it occurs also in Rev. 1. 13; 14. 14; "the Son of Man" occurs in ch. 1. 51; ch. 3. 13, 14; ch. 6. 27, 53, 62, as often in the other Gospels.

Because He is the Son of Man—"He is appointed to judge mankind, because He was made Man"—WESLEY.

28. Marvel not at this, for the partial, spiritual quickening and judgment is consummated in a universal quickening and judgment. Wonder succeeds wonder.

The time is coming—"when not two or three, but all, shall arise"—WESLEY.

29. Shall hear His voice—"a voice like the sound of a trumpet (Rev. 1. 10) and like the sound of many waters (Rev. 1. 15); that is, like the roar of the ocean for fulness and power. (Comp. 1 Thess. 4. 16)"—ABBOTT.

The resurrection of life—"that resurrection which leads to life everlasting"—WESLEY.

Unto the resurrection of life—"a resurrection which brings perfect life, or eternal and blessed fellowship with God"—HOVEY. The resurrection of damnation (R.V. "The resurrection of judgment," i.e. a judgment that issues in condemnation.) (Comp. ch. 3. 17, seq.)

30. I can do nothing of Myself. "It is impossible I should do anything separately from My Father. As I hear—of the Father, and see, so I judge and do; because I am essentially united to Him. (See ver. 19)"—WESLEY.

This section of God's holy word teaches many of the deep things of God. It will need to be pondered with care and reverence. And there is a border-line of mystery, which we must not presume to cross. The Incarnation of Jesus Christ, the relations of the Persons in the Godhead, the awful issues of righteousness and unrighteousness, do not contradict reason, but they do transcend it. There is an equality with God; there is a subordination to God. Both are stated, and they are declared by Him who is the truth. But both God the Father and God the Son are interested in our salvation —in the widest possible meaning of that great word. Life is in Christ. Safety is through Christ. It is said that a poor woman made complaint to the sultan that, after sleeping, she awoke to find everything lost. "Wherefore did you sleep?" inquired the sultan. "Sir," was the response, "I slept because I thought you were awake." He restored what she had lost. God is our keeper. The Lord is our shade on our right hand. Jesus Christ said, "My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me: and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, and no man shall snatch them out of My hand." They are safe in life, they shall be safe in death, and at the judgment. "The Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first."

> "Wondrous sound the trumpet flingeth,
> Through earth's sepulchre it ringeth,
> All before the throne it bringeth."

But Christ is on that throne. Therefore "the dead in Christ" are safe. The trumpet indicates a grand catastrophe; but the righteous shall not be moved. And the unrighteous are in this world devoid of true life. How and when the judgment will come to pass it concerns us not to inquire, because it concerns us not to know. Live always in view of the judgment to come, and then, let it come when God wills, you will have no fear. All that are in their graves, whether under costly marbles or green grass, in the lonely desert or in the depths of the cold, grey sea, must appear at the judgment day, to give an account of their deeds.

31. If I testify of Myself—"that is, if I alone (which indeed is impossible), My testimony is not valid"—WESLEY.

32. There is another—"the Father (ver. 37). And I know that, even in your judgment, His testimony is beyond exception"—WESLEY.

33. He bare testimony—"that I am the Christ"—WESLEY.

34. But I have no need to receive, etc. But these things—concerning John, whom ye yourselves reverence. I say that ye may be saved—so really and seriously did He will their salvation. Yet they were not saved. Most, if not all of them, died in their sins"—WESLEY.

35. He was a burning and a shining light—"inwardly burning with love and zeal; outwardly shining in all holiness. And even ye were willing for a season—a short time only"—WESLEY.

37. He hath testified of Me—"namely, at My baptism. I speak not of My supposed father, Joseph. Ye are utter strangers to Him of whom I speak"—WESLEY.

38. Ye have not His word. "All who believe have the word of the Father (the same with the word of the Son) abiding in them —that is, deeply engrafted in their hearts"—WESLEY.

39. Search the Scriptures—"a plain command to all men. In them ye are assured ye have eternal life—ye know they show you the way to eternal life. And these very Scriptures testify of Me"—WESLEY.

40. Yet ye will not come unto Me—"as they direct you"—WESLEY.

41. I receive not honour from men—"I need it not. I seek it not from you for My own sake"—WESLEY.

42. But I know you. "With this ray He pierces the hearts of the hearers. And this, doubtless, He spake with the tenderest compassion"—WESLEY.

43. If another shall come—"any false Christ"—WESLEY.

44. While ye receive honour—"that is, while ye seek the praise of men rather than the praise of God. At the feast of Pentecost, kept in commemoration of the giving the Law from Mount Sinai, their sermons used to be full of the praises of the Law, and of the people to whom it was given. How mortifying then must the following words of our Lord be to them, while they were thus exulting in Moses and his Law"!—WESLEY.

45. There is one that accuseth you—"by his writings"—WESLEY.

46. He wrote of Me—everywhere; in all his writings; particularly Deut. 18. 15, 18"—WESLEY.

John was the lamp which is kindled and so shineth. "Christ is the Light; John is only the lamp kindled at the Light, and shining only after being so kindled, having no light but what is derived"—C. B. Search the Scriptures may be either indicative, "Ye search the Scriptures," or imperative "Search." The word suggests minute, searching investigation. And they testify of Me. And ye will not come to Me. "The words mark a double failure. The Scriptures witnessed of One whom the Jews rejected; they pointed to a life which the Jews would not seek. There is a deep pathos"—WESTCOTT. Ye will not come to Me—"not the future of 'to come,' but the present of 'to will': 'ye are not willing' to come to ME. This is at the root of their failure to read Scripture aright; their hearts are estranged. They have no will to find the truth, and without that no intellectual searching will avail. Note that here again man's will is shown to be free; the truth is not forced upon him; he can reject it if he likes (comp. 3. 19)"—PLUMMER. "We have no stronger argument for the Divine nature of the Saviour of the world than is contained in this chapter. The worship of Christ, if He were not Divine, would be idolatry. But instead of rebuking He encourages and sanctions this worship. The Eastern Magi worshipped Him in His cradle. Those on whom He had exerted miraculous power fell at His feet and worshipped Him. The mother of John, the woman of Canaan, the father of the lunatic who met Him at the foot of the Mount of Transfiguration, worshipped Him, and His disciples as He was carried up from them into heaven; and after His ascension the dying Stephen called 'upon God,' saying, 'Lord Jesus, receive my spirit.' S. Paul cannot write an Epistle without repeated acts of worship to Christ, as 'God blessed for ever.' In the writings of the Christian Fathers we find this worship not only inculcated but defended when it was charged upon them. The hymns of the Early Church are full of Christ. The younger Pliny, in his report to Trajan, concerning the Christians, gave special emphasis to the fact that they sang 'hymns to Christ as to God.' The universal faith of the Church has not been accorded to a falsehood"—MACDONALD.

CHAPTER VI.

WE see more and more as we go on, that this Gospel makes no attempt to be a complete or connected whole. There are large gaps in the chronology. The Evangelist gives us not a biography, but a series of typical scenes, very carefully selected, and painted with great accuracy and minuteness, but not closely connected. As to what guided him in his selection, we know no more than the general purpose stated (ch. 20. 31), and it is sufficient for us. Those words and works of Jesus, which seemed most calculated to convince men that He is "the Christ, the Son of God," were recorded by the beloved apostle. And the fact that they had already been recorded by one or more of the first Evangelists did not deter him from insisting on them again, although he naturally more often chose what they had omitted. In this chapter we have a notable instance of readiness to go over old ground in order to work out his own purpose. The miracle of feeding the five thousand is recorded by all four Evangelists: the only miracle that is so. Moreover, it is outside the Judean ministry; so that for this reason also we might have expected S. John to omit it. But he needs it as a text for the great discourse on the Bread of Life; and this though spoken in Galilee was in a great measure addressed to Jews from Jerusalem, so that both text and discourse fall naturally within the range of S. John's plan.

"As in ch. 5. Christ is set forth as the Source of Life, so in this chapter He is set forth as the Support of Life"—C. B.

"After these things clearly means a considerable interval, for nearly a year had expired since the healing of the impotent man and the discourse to which it gave rise in the preceding chapter. He was now at the Sea of Galilee, and had spent the greater part of this interval in Galilee. He had made His second and third circuits through that portion of Palestine; had made choice of the twelve apostles; had delivered His Sermon on the Mount; had begun to speak by parables; and had performed many miracles, all of which are passed in silence by the Evangelist John"—MACDONALD.

Let us weave the narratives into a connected whole:—

"And the apostles, when they were returned, gathered themselves unto Jesus, and they told Him all things, whatsoever they had done, and whatsoever they had taught; and He saith unto them, 'Come ye yourselves, apart into a desert place, and rest a while.' For there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat. After these things Jesus went away to the other side of the Sea of Galilee, which is the Sea of Tiberias, into a desert place belonging to the city called Bethsaida, by ship privately; and the people saw them going, and many knew them, and they ran there together on foot from all the cities, and outwent them, because they beheld the signs which He did in them that were sick. And He came forth and saw a great multitude, and He had compassion on them because they were as sheep not having a shepherd; and He began to teach them many things, and spake to them of the kingdom of God, and them that had need of healing He healed. And Jesus went up into the mountain, and there He sat with His disciples. Now the Passover, the feast of the Jews, was at hand. Jesus, therefore, lifting up His eyes, and seeing that a great multitude cometh unto Him, saith unto Philip, 'Whence are we to buy bread that these may eat?' and this He said to prove him; for He Himself knew what He would do. Philip answered Him, 'Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that everyone may take a little.' And when even was come, the disciples came to Him, saying, 'The place is a desert, and the time is already past; send the multitudes away that they may go into the villages and country round about and lodge, and buy themselves somewhat to eat; for we are here in a desert place.' But Jesus said unto them, 'They have no need to go away; give ye them to eat.' And they say unto Him, 'Shall we go and buy two hundred pennyworth of bread, and give them to eat?' And He saith unto them, 'How many loaves have ye? go and see.' And when they knew, one of His disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto Him, 'There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves and two fishes; but what are they among so many? We have no more than five loaves and two fishes; except we should go and buy food for all this people.' For they were about five thousand men. And He said, 'Bring them hither to Me.' And He said unto His disciples, 'Make them sit down in companies,' about fifty each. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down in ranks, by hundreds and by fifties, in number about five thousand. And He took the five loaves and the two fishes, and having given thanks, and looking up to heaven, He blessed them, and brake the loaves, and gave the loaves to the disciples, and the disciples to the multitudes. And they did all eat, and were filled; and when they were filled, He saith unto His disciples, 'Gather up the broken pieces which remain over, that nothing be lost.' So they gathered them up, and filled twelve baskets with broken pieces from the five barley loaves, and also of the fishes, which remained over unto them that had eaten. And they that did eat were about five thousand men, besides women and children. When, therefore, the people saw the sign which He did, they said, 'This is of a truth the Prophet that cometh into the world.'"

Thus read, all the links in the chain of events are welded together.

1. After these things. "The history of between ten and eleven months is to be supplied here from the other Evangelists"—WESLEY.

3. Jesus went up—"before the people overtook Him"—WESLEY.

5. Jesus saith to Philip—"perhaps he had the care of providing victuals for the family of the apostles"—WESLEY.

"Christ represents Himself here as the Bread of Life, as in the fourth chapter He exhibits Himself as the Water of Life. Thousands upon thousands in all ages and countries of the world have satisfied their spiritual hunger by feeding on Him, and yet He remains to this day, and will remain to the end of time, the same inexhaustible source of supply. The miraculous feeding bears also a striking resemblance to the miracle of the change of water into wine in ch. 2. The nearness of the typical Paschal Feast (ch. 6. 4) gives the discourse a bearing on the great Paschal Sacrifice of the Lamb of God for the life of the world"—SCHAFF. "In ch. 5. Christ is the Son of God, testified to by the Father; received by faith; rejected by unbelief; here He is the Son of Man, the Incarnate Life of the world; and the unbelief of the Jews and His own disciples is set in strong contrast with the feeding on Him as the Bread of Life"—ALFORD. "The record of a critical scene in Christ's work in Galilee follows the record of the critical scene at Jerusalem. At Jerusalem Christ revealed Himself as the Giver of life; here He reveals Himself as the Support and Guide of life. In the former case the central teaching was upon the relation of the Son to the Father; in this case it is the relation of Christ to the believer"—WESTCOTT. As to the miracle itself, what can reverence say except that it is a creative act of God? But little more can be said. English and American Bible students generally reject all attempts to make this and all similar miracles intelligible, and resort to an act of Divine omnipotence on the part of Him who was the Eternal Son of God, similar to the original act of creation. Here, however, there was a material substratum to work on in the five loaves and two fishes. It was not a creation out of nothing, but an act of creative accretion; the bread growing and multiplying in the hands of Christ; or of the distributing apostles; or of the eaters; or of all. "Here, too," says TRENCH, "even more remarkably than in the case of the water changed into wine, when we seek to realise to ourselves the manner of the miracle, it ever more eludes our grasp. We seek in vain to follow it with our imagination. But this is the wisdom of the sacred narrator, to leave the description of the indescribable unattempted. His appeal is to the same faith which believes that the worlds were formed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear. The miracle has its analogies: the manna in the wilderness; the multiplying of the widow's cruse of oil and the barrel of meal by Elijah; Elisha satisfying a hundred men with twenty loaves of barley. (Ex. 16. 15; 1 Kings 17. 16; 2 Kings 4. 42–44.) Said S. HILARY: "There is no catching by eye or touch the miraculous operation; it only remains for us to believe that God can do all things consistent with His nature and character." S. Augustine, with a far-seeing glance, told the people of his age that Christ multiplied in His hands the five loaves, just as He produces harvest out of a few grains; there was a power in His hands; and those five loaves were seeds, not, indeed, committed to earth, but multiplied by Him who made the earth. Christ is indeed the Bread of the World, the unexhausted and inexhaustible source of all life for the spiritual needs of hungering souls in all ages. The miracles of Jesus drew attention to His wondrous personality and all-sufficing gospel. For, of all miracles, He is the greatest.

THE HUNGRY CROWD.—Great multitudes followed Him, because they saw His miracles. Whilst He crossed the Lake they ran round the head of it, taking one of the narrow fords of the river. His repeated miracles of healing attracted their attention. They obtruded on Him, as we should say; but they never came too often: they never came in too great numbers. He came into the world to seek and to save men and women and children. From S. Mark and S. Luke we learn that He taught them many things about the kingdom of God. Teaching and miracle, word and act, were always closely connected in the ministry of our Lord. The word for miracles here is "signs"—signs of God's presence and power; of the part He plays in the common life of men. The multitude and Jesus—ponder it, picture it, get the children to think of it, until by the eye of fancy they can see the hungry, shepherdless, curious, appealing crowds. All classes of people were there—priests, scribes, Pharisees, soldiers, peasants, princes; the young, the middle-aged, the old; the beautiful, the plain; the healthy, the sick—some because they felt their need of help, others because they wished to see and hear the new Teacher; but Jesus ministers to them all. Something in Him responds to something in them. He was not partial; He belonged to no class. Son of Man, all men were interested in Him; all men belonged to Him.

THE HELPLESS DISCIPLES.—Early in the morning Jesus said to Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat? And this He said to prove him. All day long He left the thought in the minds of the disciples. Night fell. Then the disciples' concern deepens. They come with their perplexity to Jesus Christ. But it was a word of helpless despair. Send them away. The place is desert. It is a long way to the towns and villages. Dismiss them. They need not depart, said Jesus; give them to eat. Shall we go and buy two hundred pennyworth of bread, and give them to eat? How many loaves have ye? go and see. And when they knew, they say, Five and two fishes. Their calculations ended in alarm. They saw the crowd, the darkness, the distance, the danger; but they forgot Who was in their midst. They had one lad with a basket of bread—him they saw; they had the Lord of all the harvests—Him they saw not. What an honour was placed upon that nameless lad!

> "What time the Saviour spread His feast
> For thousands on the mountain side;
> One of the last, the least.
> The abundant store supplied."

The youngest may serve high interests; the youngest can do the will of God.

THE LORD OF THE FEAST.—1. Make the men sit down.—Order is heaven's first law. "Viewed from front to back, there were fifty hundreds; viewed from side to side, there were a hundred fifties. Each hundred constituted a distinct party, and would be separated by a convenient interval from all the other hundreds"—MORISON. Graphic S. Mark compares them to flower-beds in a garden. The arrangement was for convenience of distribution.

2. Jesus took the loaves.—The supply came from a Divine hand. Whether the multiplication took place in the hands of Christ, or in the hands of the disciples, or in the hands of the receivers, it was equally of God. The wheat harvest is partially in the seed beneath the soil, partially in the stalk, partially in the ear; but the harvest is one. He first blessed, and then brake, and gave. It was a universal custom among the Jews to ask a blessing upon food. They declared that he who ate without blessing stole the bread.

3. He distributed to the disciples.—God once rained down manna, but that is not the customary method. Men are blessed through their fellows. Christ distributes through the disciples. It is our privilege, as well as our duty, to feed the hungry, and clothe the naked. All were filled, not partially, but completely satisfied.

4. Gather up the fragments.—Marking the abundance. The supply was more than the demand. Whether they were fragments broken by the multitude, or pieces broken by our Lord, there was to be no waste. All God's gifts are valuable, and must be preserved. After the miracle came the wonder, and the confession, This is of a truth the Prophet that cometh into the world.

15. He retired to the mountain alone—"having ordered His disciples to cross over the Lake"—WESLEY.

A SUGGESTION.—The excitement consequent upon the death of the Baptist, which in part led to the Lord's retirement, may have moved many to believe that He would place Himself at the head of a popular rising to avenge the murder. The miracle of feeding increased the excitement and deepened the enthusiasm. With a half-belief that He must be the expected Prophet, and perhaps with a half-conscious thought that He would be a Bread-King, and supply their needs without labour, they proposed to take Him by force. He retired into a mountain Himself alone—to pray, as the parallel narratives distinctly tell us. A miracle—a sermon in act—and then a discourse on the True Bread of God, follow this hour with nature and God.

A MIRACLE.—The parables are miracles of speech: the miracles are parables of mercy. After feeding the multitudes Jesus walks on the sea. The devout of olden times had represented God as One "who treadeth on the waves of the sea as on dry land" (Job 9. 8). Now God had appeared. After a miracle of distribution He performs a miracle of control. But every act has a reason. The acts of God cannot be irrational. In the present instance the reason, according to Mark 6. 48, was that Christ from the mountain looked down upon the peril to which His disciples were exposed by the storm, and hastened consequently to help them. The danger was not ordinary. For six hours the helpless disciples had contended with the storm. And what nineteen hundred years has taught the Universal Church concerning this event is this, Christ is Master of the water, the Helper in all the perils of life. "He would appear to them at first like a dark, moving speck upon the waters; then as a human figure, but in the dark, tempestuous sky, and not dreaming that it could be their Lord, they take it for a spirit. How often thus we miscall our chiefest mercies, not only thinking them distant when they are near, but thinking the best the worst"—Dr. BROWN. While Jesus was praying among the hills the disciples were rowing in a north-east direction towards Bethsaida, where, apparently, they were to meet Jesus, take Him on board, and then proceed to Capernaum, their home. On the way they were overtaken by one of the sudden, violent storms from the north so common on the Sea of Galilee. The danger was great, and the tempest drove them away from their harbour. But there are always lessons in the school of suffering. "He will not have them to be clinging only to the sense of His bodily presence, as ivy needing always an outward support, but as hardy forest trees which can brave a blast; and this time He puts them forth into the danger alone, even as some loving mother-bird thrusts her fledglings from the nest that they may find their own wings, and learn to use them; and by the issue He will awaken in them a confidence in His ever-ready help"—TRENCH. There is an Eastern fable of a boy having challenged his teacher to prove to him the existence of God by working a miracle. The teacher got a large vessel filled with earth, wherein he deposited a kernel in the boy's presence, and bade him pay attention. In the place where the kernel was put a green shoot suddenly appeared, the shoot became a stem, the stem put forth leaves and branches, which soon spread over the whole apartment. It then budded with blossoms, which, dropping off, left golden fruit in their place; and in the short space of one hour there stood a noble tree in the place of the little seed. The youth, overcome with amazement, exclaimed, "Now I know that there is a God, for I have seen His power." The teacher smiled at him, and said, "Simple child, do you only now believe? Does not what you have just beheld take place year after year, only by a slower process? But is it the less marvellous on that account?" Sow seed broadcast, and harvest follows; is not that the act of God? Day by day the table is spread; is not that a miracle of feeding? During the last severe winter a London police magistrate quietly said, "The poor-box is nearly empty, the weather is exceptional, and the poor are numerous." Within a few hours the box received £230. There was no compulsion. God, who has the hearts of all men at His disposal, moved those who had, to help those who needed. He walked upon the waters of their poverty to their relief. WORDSWORTH thus expands the word of Jesus, It is I, be not afraid: "I am the ever-living One, Jehovah, the Author of life. I am always at hand, and never pass by you; therefore be not afraid, but trust in Me." Our Lord allows us to be in trial and danger, to struggle in the storm, to endure for a long time, in order that our patience and perseverance and faith may be proved, and that we may resort to Him alone who can save us. We are often in darkness and in storms, and the devil and evil men assail and affright us; but let us listen to Christ's voice, 'It is I; be not afraid,' and when human help fails, then Divine aid will come." TERRORS pass by, but Christ never passes by. He ever says, "It is I." "This miracle," as Mr. VALLINGS well says, "was not primarily a lesson, still less a dramatic display of power. It followed in the natural order of events; it was evoked by circumstances; it fell in with the ordinary currents of the Galileans' trials of life; and it was singularly adapted to impress the hardy fishermen of the Lake in the line of their own business and experience. It was one of the casts of the Fisher of Men. They had seen a hundred times the majesty, the violence, the sudden impetuosity of the Galilean storms; they had long known the fickle temper of the winds which swept down the gorges of the hills, and left the Lake half calm, half riot and confusion. They may have lost dear lives in such storms, on such days or nights when

> 'One could not hear
> A word the other said, for wind and sea
> That raged, and beat, and thundered.'"

God meets us when we are sailing where He bids us. The path of duty is often the path of surprise. The discourses at Capernaum fall into three groups:—

1. Vers. 26–40 introduced by a simple question. The search for life.
2. Vers. 41–51 prefaced by a murmuring. The relation of the Son to God and man.
3. Vers. 52–58 following a contention. The appropriation of Christ by the individual.

The first of these consists of answers to successive questions. When camest Thou? (ver. 25). What must we do that we may work the works of God? (ver. 28). What doest Thou for a sign? (ver. 30). Lord, evermore give us this bread (ver. 34).

1. When camest Thou? They missed Him and wondered how He crossed the storm-swept Lake. Jesus knew their thoughts. Their interest, after all, was not unselfish. Ye seek Me not because ye saw signs, but because ye ate of the loaves: work not for the meat which perisheth, but for the meat which abideth unto eternal life. The earthly and the heavenly are both of God. Men must work for the lower life, but too often they work for that exclusively. We should live for important things. Weigh the word "eternal," contrast "now" and "hereafter," then act.

2. What must we do? How to set about this? Believe. This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent. Faith is not inactive. Let there be a true faith, and all works of righteousness will come into it and be one with it. The moment when Jesus uttered this word to the people has been called "the crisis of their destiny." For one moment they seem willing to seek the higher object. But curiosity overbore conscience. Their goodness passed like the dew.

3. What sign showest Thou? Moses gave us manna from heaven; Thou hast only multiplied the loaves, increased an existing supply. But they forgot, intentionally or otherwise, that God was the real Giver. Jesus said, It was not Moses: My Father giveth you the true Bread, for the Bread of God cometh down out of heaven and giveth life unto the world.

4. Lord, evermore give us this bread. Jesus said, I am the Bread of Life. He was His own Gospel; He is so still. The world's myriads, hungry in intellect, imagination, and heart, find no satisfaction out of Jesus Christ. No other spreads a table in the wilderness and invites all to satisfy their need. Alas! how many neglect this Bread of Life. They turn away from Christ who can help them; they turn to those who cannot bless and strengthen them. Be our motto: None but Christ.

22. Who had stood on the other side. "They were forced to stay a while, because there were then no other vessels; and they stayed the less unwillingly, because they saw Jesus was not embarked"—WESLEY.

26. "Our Lord does not satisfy their curiosity, but corrects the wrong motive they had in seeking Him. Because ye did eat—merely for temporal advantage. Hitherto Christ had been gathering hearers; He now begins to try their sincerity by a figurative discourse concerning His passion, and the fruit of it, to be received by faith"—WESLEY.

27. Labour not for the meat which perisheth—"for bodily food; not for that only, not chiefly; not at all, but in subordination to grace, faith, love, the meat which endureth to everlasting life. 'Labour'—work for this. 'For everlasting life'—so our Lord expressly commands, Work for life, as well as from life, from a principle of faith and love. Him hath the Father sealed—by this very miracle, as well as by His whole testimony concerning Him. (See ch. 3. 33.) 'Sealing' is a mark of the authenticity of a writing"—WESLEY.

The strife of life and the strife for eternal life are mutually interpreting. The rabbis were accustomed to teach by metaphors. The people were in danger of regarding Christ simply as a Bread-King. They saw the bread and nothing more. They were to regard Him as the feeder of their souls.

28. The works of God—"works pleasing to God"—WESLEY.

29. This is the work of God—"the work most pleasing to God, and the foundation of all others. That ye believe. He expresses it first properly, afterwards figuratively"—WESLEY.

30. What sign doest Thou?—"amazing, after what they had just seen"—WESLEY.

31. Our fathers ate manna—"this sign Moses gave them. He gave them bread from heaven—from the lower, sublunary heaven, to which Jesus opposes the highest heaven; in which sense He says seven times (vers. 32, 33, 38, 50, 58, 62) that He Himself came down from heaven"—WESLEY.

32. Moses gave you not bread from heaven. "It was not Moses who gave the manna to your fathers, but My Father, who now giveth the true Bread from heaven"—WESLEY.

Manna referred to in Ex. 16. 15, 33, 36; Num. 11. 6, 7, 9; Deut. 8. 3, 16; Josh. 5. 12; Neh. 9. 20; Ps. 78. 24; John 6. 31, 49, 58; Heb. 9. 4; Rev. 2. 17. How highly the Jews thought of the manna we see from a saying of Aben Ezra, who calls it the greatest of the miracles of Jesus.

33. He that giveth life to the world—"not, like the manna, to one people only, and that from generation to generation. Our Lord does not yet say, I am that Bread; else the Jews would not have given Him so respectful an answer (ver. 34)"—WESLEY.

34. Give us this bread—"meaning it still in a literal sense; yet they seem now to be not far from believing"—WESLEY.

The prayer, Lord, evermore give us this bread, may be only the echo of the woman of Samaria's petition, "Give me this water that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw." It may be the language of indolence desiring to be fed. It may be—God grant it be!—the cry of a devout soul that desires to be satisfied with God; that cries, O God, Thou hast made us for Thyself.

35. I am the Bread of Life—"having and giving life. He that cometh, he that believeth—equivalent expressions—shall never hunger, thirst—shall be satisfied, happy, for ever"—WESLEY.

"The Bread of Life." The Jews spoke of the "bread" of doctrine. They saw that man doth not live by bread alone. If bread be the type of all earthly sustenance, then the bread of heaven may well express all spiritual sustenance, all that involves and supports eternal life. "I am the Bread of Life. The pronoun is very emphatic. (Comp. 4. 26.) As in ver. 30, He passes from the third to the first person. Bread of life means bread that giveth life. (Comp. 'the tree of life,' Gen. 2. 9; 3. 22, 24; 'the water of life,' Rev. 21. 6; 22. 1.) In the remainder of the verse, He that cometh to Me = he that believeth on Me, shall never hunger=shall never thirst; i.e. the believer shall experience the continual satisfaction of his highest spiritual needs"—C. B. A great controversy has raged around this chapter betwixt those who hold and those who reject sacramentarian theories. It is sufficient for us to hold to the general thought—all-being and well-being reside in Christ the Lord of Life.

36. I have told you—"namely (ver. 26)"—WESLEY.

37. All that the Father giveth Me—"all that feel themselves lost, and follow the drawings of the Father, He in a peculiar manner giveth to the Son. Will come to Me—by faith. And him that thus cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out—I will give him pardon, holiness, and heaven, if he endure to the end, to rejoice in his light"—WESLEY.

39. Of all which He hath already given Me. (See ch. 17. 6, 12.) "If they endure to the end; but Judas did not"—WESLEY.

40. "Here is the sum of the three foregoing verses. This is the will of Him that sent Me —this is the whole of what I have said. This is the eternal, unchangeable will of God. Every one who truly believeth shall have everlasting life. Every one that seeth and believeth. The Jews saw, and yet believed not. And I will raise him up—as this is the will of Him that sent Me, I will perform it effectually"—WESLEY.

44. "Christ, having checked their murmuring, continues what He was saying (ver. 40). No man comes to Me unless My Father draw him — no man can believe in Christ unless God give him power. He draws us first by good desires; not by compulsion, not by laying the will under any necessity, but by the strong and sweet, yet still resistible, motions of His heavenly grace"—WESLEY.

"Our Lord's Divinity comes out here in its uncreated radiance." "The Gospels are as full of such sayings as the skies are full of stars." "A magnet finds nothing in wood or leaves, but only in metal"—THEOPHYLACT.

45. Every man that hath heard — "the secret voice of God, he, and he only, believeth" —WESLEY.

46. Not that any one—"must expect Him to appear in a visible shape. He who is from or with God—in a more eminent manner than any creature"—WESLEY.

To be taught one must listen and learn. The promise is universal; all are without excuse. Those who are not saved are those who will not.

50. Not die—"not spiritually; not eternally"—WESLEY.

51. If any eat of this bread—"that is, believe in Me—he shall live for ever—in other words, He that believeth to the end shall be saved. My flesh which I will give you. This whole discourse concerning His flesh and blood refers directly to His passion, and but remotely, if at all, to the Lord's Supper"—WESLEY.

52. "Observe the degrees — the Jews are tried here; the disciples (vers. 60, 66); the apostles (ver. 67)"—WESLEY.

53. Unless ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man—"spiritually; unless ye draw continual virtue from Him by faith. Eating His flesh —is only another expression for believing"—WESLEY.

55. Meat, drink indeed—"with which the soul of a believer is as truly fed as his body with meat and drink"—WESLEY.

The life of a Christian has its source in God, and is immortal, like the God from whom it comes.

57. I live by the Father—"being one with Him. He shall live by Me—being one with Me. Amazing union!"—WESLEY.

58. This is—"that is, I am the Bread—which is not like the manna your fathers ate, who died notwithstanding"—WESLEY.

60. This is an hard saying—"hard to the children of the world, but sweet to the children of God. Scarce ever did our Lord speak more sublimely, even to the apostles in private. Who can hear—endure—it?"—WESLEY.

62. What if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend where He was before? "How much more incredible will it then appear to you that He should give you His flesh to eat?"—WESLEY.

63. It is the Spirit—"the spiritual meaning of these words, by which God giveth life. The flesh—the bare, carnal, literal meaning— profiteth nothing. The words which I have spoken, they are spirit — are to be taken in a spiritual sense. And—when they are so understood—they are life—that is, a means of spiritual life to the hearers"—WESLEY.

64. But there are some of you who believe not—"and so receive no life by them, because you take them in a gross, literal sense. For Jesus knew from the beginning — of His ministry—who would betray Him. Therefore it is plain God does foresee future contingencies:

'But His foreknowledge causes not the fault,
Which had no less proved certain unforeknown.'"
WESLEY.

65. Unless it be given—"and it is given to those only who will receive it on God's own terms"—WESLEY.

The living Father—the Fountain of all life. The expression occurs nowhere else. The revelation was too spiritual. Many murmured. Jesus read the unspoken speech, and hinted at the greater mystery of His ascension. He foresaw, too, the betrayal and agony. The murmuring became a forsaking, and with the sob of a breaking heart He said to the Twelve, Will ye also go away? Then Simon Peter spoke—the Simon of earlier times in readiness, the Peter of later times in sublimity and sincerity, Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life.

66. From this time many of His disciples went back. "So our Lord now began to purge His floor. The proud and careless were driven away, and those remained who were meet for the Master's use"—WESLEY.

68. Thou hast the words of eternal life—"Thou, and Thou alone, speakest the words which show the way to life everlasting"—WESLEY.

69. And we—"who have been with Thee from the beginning, whatever others do, have known—are absolutely assured, that Thou art the Christ"—WESLEY.

70. Jesus answered them. "And yet even ye have not all acted suitably to this knowledge. Have I not chosen or elected you twelve?—but they might fall from even that election. Yet one of you. Oh this gracious warning, Judas ought to have repented. Is a devil—is now influenced by one"—WESLEY.

R.V. reads S. Peter's answer, Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. And we have believed, and know that Thou art the Holy One of God. "The confessions of S. Peter are worth comparing: 1. Thou art the Son of God (Matt. 14. 33); in this the other apostles joined. 2. Thou art the Holy One of God (ch. 6. 69). 3. Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God (Matt. 16. 16). They increase in fulness, as we might expect"—PLUMMER. With regard to the difficulty of understanding Christ's words in this sixth chapter, MEYER'S concluding remark is to be borne in mind: "The difficulty is partly exaggerated, and partly the fact is overlooked, that in all references to His death and the purpose of it, Jesus could rely upon the light which the future would throw on these utterances; and sowing, as He generally did, for the future in the bosom of the present, He was compelled to utter much that was mysterious, but which would supply material and support for the further development and purification of faith and knowledge. The wisdom thus displayed in His teaching has been justified by history." He that eateth of this bread shall live for ever. And in that eternal life we shall know what now is hidden from us.

CHAPTER VII.

"CHAPTER 7, like chapter 6, is very important for the estimate of the Fourth Gospel. In it the scene of the messianic crisis shifts from Galilee to Jerusalem; and, as we should naturally expect, the crisis itself becomes hotter. The divisions, the doubts, the hopes, the jealousies, and the casuistry of the Jews are vividly portrayed. We see the mass of the populace, especially those who had come up from Galilee, swaying to and fro, hardly knowing which way to turn, inclined to believe, but held back by the more sophisticated citizens of the metropolis. These meanwhile apply the fragments of rabbinical learning at their command in order to test the claims of the new Prophet. In the background looms the dark shadow of the hierarchy itself, entrenched behind its prejudices, and refusing to hear the cause that it has already prejudged. A single timid voice is raised against this injustice, but is at once fiercely silenced"—SANDAY. As in chaps. 5 and 6, Christ is set forth as the Source and Support of Life, so in chaps. 7, 8, and 9, He is set forth as the Source of Truth and Light. After these things. About six months elapsed. "The Feast of Tabernacles this year began on 11th Oct."—LEWIN. Christ's labours for a period of six months, from the Passover (April 16) to the Feast of Tabernacles (Oct. 11–17), A.D. 29, are unrecorded by S. John, except the notice in a single verse (ch. 7. 1), that this time was spent in Galilee. During this period are the events recorded in Matt. 15–18; Mark 7–9; and Luke 9. 18–50. These include the healing of the daughter of the Syrophenician woman in the land of Tyre and Sidon; of the deaf and dumb man in Decapolis; the feeding of the five thousand; the Transfiguration; Peter's profession of faith; and several conversations with His disciples.

1. After these things Jesus walked in Galilee—"that is, continued there for some months after the second Passover. For He would not walk—continue in Judea. Because the Jews—those of them who did not believe; and in particular the chief priests, scribes, and Pharisees, sought an opportunity to kill Him"—WESLEY.

2. The feast of tabernacles—"the time, manner, and reason of this feast may be seen (Lev. 23. 34, etc.)"—WESLEY.

A JEWISH FEAST—THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES.—1. Time—This feast was held from the 15th to the 21st of Tisri (Sept.–Oct.) of each year, the first and last days being kept sacred, like Sabbaths, the other days being semi-holidays.

2. Object—It is called in Exodus (ch. 23. 16) the Feast of Ingathering, and was in one aspect a thanksgiving for the produce of the year, the corn, wine, oil, and other things having all been gathered in. It was also a commemoration of the life in the wilderness, and a thanksgiving for the settlement in permanent habitation; hence the command to dwell in booths (or "tabernacles") during the week the feast lasted. (See Lev. 23. 33–44.)

3. How celebrated—In Jerusalem booths were erected everywhere, in court and on house-top, in street and square. These arbours, or booths, were made of branches of trees—palms, sycamores, olives, pines, and willow. Nobody was living at home ; everybody in these booths—all the people of the city and crowds from the country. At night the vast Temple buildings stood out, illuminated by the eight great lights that burned in the court of the women, and by the glare of torches.

4. The symbolism — The whole symbolism of the feast, beginning with the completed harvest, for which it was a thanksgiving, pointed to the future. The ceremony of the outpouring of water, which was considered of such vital importance as to give to the whole festival the name of House of Outpouring, was symbolical of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit ; the Temple illumination, of the light which was to shine from out the Temple into the dark night of heathendom ; then, at the first dawn of morn, the blasts of the priests' silver trumpets, of the army of God, as it advanced with festive trumpet sound and call, to awaken the sleepers and to utter solemn protest against heathenism. Let us suppose ourselves in the number of worshippers who, on the last, the great day, of the feast, are leaving their "booths" at daybreak to take part in the service. The pilgrims are all in festive array. In his right hand each carries a branch, consisting of a myrtle or willow branch tied together with a palm branch (Lev. 23. 40). In his left hand he carries a bough of the so-called Paradise apple, a species of citron. Thus armed, the festive multitude would divide into three bands. One of these, to the sound of music, started in a procession from the Temple. It followed a priest, who bore a golden pitcher, capable of holding three log (rather more than two pints). They proceeded to the fountain of Siloam, in the valley south of the Temple. Here the priest filled from this fountain the golden pitcher, and brought it back into the court of the Temple, amid the shouts of the multitudes, and the sound of cymbals and trumpets. The rejoicing was so great that the rabbis used to say that he who had never been present at this ceremony, and at the other similar ceremonies, by which this feast was distinguished, did not know what rejoicing meant. The return was so timed that they should arrive just as they were laying the pieces of the sacrifice on the great altar of burnt-offerings, towards the close of the ordinary morning sacrifice service. The water from the golden pitcher was poured upon the altar. Immediately the great "Hallel," consisting of Pss. 113–118, was chanted, with responses, to the accompaniment of the flute. At the close of this festive morning service there was a pause in the services while the priest prepared to offer the special sacrifices for the day. At this moment there arose, so loud as to be heard throughout the Temple, the voice of Jesus. He interrupted not the services, for they had for the moment ceased ; He interpreted and He fulfilled them.—Condensed, chiefly from EDERSHEIM.

3. His brethren—"so called according to the Jewish way of speaking. They were His cousins, the sons of His mother's sister. Depart hence — from this obscure place"—WESLEY.

4. For no man doeth anything—"of this kind—in secret ; but rather desireth to be of public use. If Thou really dost these things —these miracles which are reported—show Thyself to the world—to all men"—WESLEY.

"His brethren seem to have been converted by the resurrection. Immediately after the Ascension we find them with the apostles and the holy women. (Acts 1. 14 ; comp. 1 Cor. 9. 5 ; Gal. 1. 19)"—PLUMMER.

6. Jesus saith, Your time is always ready. "This or any time will suit you"—WESLEY.

7. The world cannot hate you—"because ye are of the world. But Me it hateth—and all that bear the same testimony"—WESLEY.

10. He also went up to the feast. "This was His last journey but one to Jerusalem. The next time He went up, He suffered"—WESLEY.

Every Jew was expected to go up each year to some one of the three great feasts. Jesus had been up to the Passover in A.D. 28 (ch. 5. 1), but did not go up to the Passover of A.D. 29 (ch. 6. 4 ; comp. 7. 1) ; and, therefore, He went to the Feast of the Tabernacles in the face of the danger from the Pharisees, but He went up secretly. Suddenly, in the midst of the feast, He appeared in the Temple and taught the people.

11. The Jews—"the men of Judea, particularly of Jerusalem"—WESLEY.

12. There was much murmuring among the multitude — "much whispering ; many private debates with each other, among those who were come from distant parts"—WESLEY.

13. However, no man spake openly of Him—"not in favour of Him. For fear of the Jews—those that were in authority"—WESLEY.

14. Now at the middle of the feast—"which lasted eight days. It is probable this was on the Sabbath day. Jesus went up into the Temple—directly, without stopping anywhere else"—WESLEY.

"The heavenly precaution with which Jesus guarded His life from a premature end, that He might sacrifice it with full effect at the right hour, forms a contrast with the heedless boldness with which His brothers would push Him upon the stage of the most glaring publicity (vers. 1–9) ; and a contrast with the many premature sacrifices which occur in the lives of worldly heroes, and even of Christian missionaries and martyrs. The life of the believer must be, in spirit, offered up to God at all times ; but the actual sacrifice of it must be put with all decision under the law of Christian wisdom. No one should prematurely squander his life; everyone should, in the holiest sense, 'sell it at the highest possible price.' But for His wise reserve, the life of the Lord would perhaps have fallen before the hatred of Judaism in the very first year of His ministry; certainly at the Feast of Purim, in the spring of the second year. A ministry of about three years in the midst of pharisaic Judea would be secured to Jesus only by His heavenly wisdom. The subsequent appearance of Christ at the Feast of Tabernacles does not contradict this caution. By this oft-repeated sudden appearance, He places Himself as an astounding wonder before His enemies; they themselves are restrained by fear, and they do not venture to seize Him. They are disarmed, not only by the personal impression of Jesus, but also by fear of the powerful popular following which He had. Not till the continuous stay of Christ among them at the last Passover could they carry out a definite plan against Him"—LANGE. He was immortal until His work was done. This sense of being in the hands of God sustained Him, speaking of Him on the manward side of His nature. His quiet walking amidst unquiet opposition is a sign of His glorious majesty and tranquil superiority. It is, as GOSSNER phrases it, as if He had said, "I guide Myself by the hour-glass of My Father; ye can go according to your pleasure; ye may say what ye will, ye will never be arraigned for it; but I must walk cautiously, that I may not wantonly encounter any suffering. He who follows his own will, who does everything out of his own head, and never consults the Divine moment, his time is always ready. But he who loves God, lets all his moments depend on the will and indication of God." The sense of loneliness that comes now and then to the noblest souls is awful. But it is better to be alone with God than in a crowd without Him. A man can dare the world's opinion when he hears duty's footsteps behind him. Herein Jesus hath left us an example that we should follow His steps. He was unknown in another sense. At times He hid Himself. But when He appeared they did not understand Him. The Jews sought Him at the feast, and when they had found Him they disputed about Him, How knoweth this man letters? They marvelled that He knew all things; and yet they knew that He had not passed through their schools. Here we get an interesting glimpse of the private life of Jesus. This is an echo from the voice of His contemporaries. Dr. SCHAFF well expresses it: "Christ spent His youth in poverty and manual labour, in the obscurity of a carpenter's shop; far away from universities, academies, libraries, and literary or polished society; without any help, as far as we know, except the parental care, the daily wonders of nature, the Old Testament Scriptures, the weekly Sabbath services of the synagogue at Nazareth (Luke 4. 16), the annual festivals in the Temple of Jerusalem (Luke 2. 42, et seq.), and the secret intercourse of His soul with God, His heavenly Father. Christ can be ranked neither with the school-trained, nor with the self-trained or self-made men; if by the latter we understand, as we must, those who, without the regular aid of living teachers, yet with the same educational means, such as books, the observation of men and things, and the intense application of their mental faculties, attained to vigour of intellect, and wealth of scholarship—like Shakespeare, Jacob Bœhme, Benjamin Franklin, and others. All the attempts to bring Jesus into contact with Egyptian wisdom, or the Essenic theosophy, or other sources of learning, are without a shadow of proof, and explain nothing after all. He never quotes from books, except from the Old Testament. He never refers to secular history, poetry, rhetoric, mathematics, astronomy, foreign languages, natural sciences, or any of those branches of knowledge which make up human learning and literature. He confined Himself strictly to religion. But from that centre He shed light over the whole world of man and nature. In this department, unlike all other great men, even the prophets and the apostles, He was absolutely original and independent. He taught the world as one who had learnt nothing from it, and was under no obligation to it. He speaks from Divine intuition, as One who not only knows the truth, but is the Truth; and with an authority that commands absolute submission, or provokes rebellion, but can never be passed by with contempt or indifference." In this sense He needed not that any man should teach Him, for He knew well what was in man. Weigh well the unapproachableness of Jesus, and it will become more and more clear that He who came amongst us in great humility was allied to heaven and God.

15. How does this Man know letters, having never learned? "How comes He to be so well acquainted with sacred literature, as to be able thus to expound the Scripture, with such propriety and gracefulness, seeing He has never learned this at any place of education?" —WESLEY.

16. My doctrine is not Mine—"acquired by any labour of learning. But His that sent Me—immediately infused by Him"—WESLEY.

17. If any man be willing to do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God. "This is a universal rule, with regard to all persons and doctrines. He that is thoroughly willing to do it shall certainly know what the will of God is"—WESLEY.

If any man will do His will. "As in ch. 6. 67 and ch. 8. 44, 'will' is too weak; it is not the simple future, but the verb 'to will': If any man willeth to do His will. The mere mechanical performance of God's will is not enough; there must be an inclination towards Him, a wish to make our conduct agree with His will; and without this agreement Divine doctrine cannot be recognised as such. There must be a moral harmony between the teaching and the taught, and this harmony is in the first instance God's gift (ch. 6. 44, 45), which each can accept or refuse at will (comp. ch. 14. 21)"—C. B.

18. There is no unrighteousness in him—"no deceit or falsehood"—WESLEY.

19. "But ye are unrighteous; for ye violate the very Law which ye profess so much zeal for"—WESLEY.

20. The people answered, Thou hast a devil—"a lying spirit. Who seeketh to kill Thee? These, coming from distant parts, probably did not know the design of the priests and rulers"—WESLEY.

21. I did—"at the pool of Bethesda—one work—out of many. And ye all marvel at it—are amazed, because I did it on the Sabbath day"—WESLEY.

22. Moses gave you circumcision. "The sense is, Because Moses enjoined you circumcision (though indeed it was far more ancient than him) you think it no harm to circumcise a man on the Sabbath: and are ye angry at Me (which anger had now continued sixteen months) for doing so much greater a good, for healing a man, body and soul, on the Sabbath?"—WESLEY.

27. When Christ cometh, none knoweth whence He is. "This Jewish tradition was true with regard to His Divine nature: in that respect none could 'declare His generation.' But it was not true with regard to His human nature; for both His family and the place of His birth were plainly foretold"—WESLEY.

28. Then cried Jesus—"with a loud and earnest voice—Do ye both know Me, and know whence I am?—ye do indeed know whence I am as a man; but ye know not My Divine nature, nor that I am sent from God"—WESLEY.

29. I am from Him—"by eternal generation. And He hath sent Me—His mission follows from His generation. These two points answer those, 'Do you know Me?' Do ye 'know whence I am?'"—WESLEY.

30. His hour—"the time of His suffering"—WESLEY.

33. Then said Jesus—"continuing His discourse from ver. 29, which they had interrupted"—WESLEY.

34. Ye shall seek Me—"whom ye now despise. These words are, as it were, the text which is commented upon in this and the following chapter. Where I am. Christ's so frequently saying, while on earth, 'Where I am,' when He spake of His being in heaven, intimates His perpetual presence there in His Divine nature; though His going thither was a future thing with regard to His human nature"—WESLEY.

35. Will He go to the dispersed among the Greeks?—"the Jews scattered abroad in heathen nations, Greece particularly. Or, will He teach the Greeks — the heathens themselves?"—WESLEY.

37. On the last day, the great day of the feast. "On this day there was the greatest concourse of people, and they were then wont to fetch water from the fountain of Siloam, which the priests poured out on the great altar, singing one to another, 'With joy shall ye draw water from the wells of salvation.' On this day, likewise, they commemorated God's miraculously giving water out of the rock, and offered up solemn prayers for seasonable rains"—WESLEY.

38. He that believeth. "This answers to, 'Let him come' to Me. And whosoever doth come to Him by faith, his inmost soul shall be filled with living water, with abundance of peace, joy, and love, which shall likewise flow from him to others. As the Scripture hath said—not expressly, in any one particular place. But here is a general reference to all those Scriptures which speak of the effusion of the Spirit by the Messiah, under the similitude of pouring out water"—WESLEY.

39. The Holy Ghost was not yet given—"that is, those fruits of the Spirit were not yet given, even to true believers, in that full measure"—WESLEY.

He went not up to the feast until the clock had struck the hour of the Divine purpose. On the last day, the great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried. On the mornings of the Feast of Tabernacles, when the sacrifice had been laid on the altar, one of the priests went down with a golden ewer to the pool of Siloam, not far from the foot of Mount Zion. There, with great solemnity, he drew water, which was carried in triumphant procession through the water gate into the Temple. The sacred trumpets breathed out a joyous blast. When the priest reached the top of the altar slope, he poured the water into a silver bason on the western side, while wine was poured into another silver basin on the eastern side. Then the great Hallel was sung, and when they came to the verse, "O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good: for His mercy endureth for ever," each of the gaily-clad worshippers, as he stood beside the altars, shook his palm branch in triumph. In the evening they abandoned themselves to such rejoicing, that the rabbis say that the man who has not seen this "joy of the drawing water" does not know what joy means. In allusion to this glad custom, Jesus pointed the yearnings of the festal crowd in the Temple, as He had done those of the Samaritan woman by the lonely well, to a new truth, and to one which more than fulfilled alike the spiritual (Isa. 12. 3) and the historical meaning (1 Cor. 10. 4) of the scenes which they had witnessed. Some began openly to speak of Him as the Christ. But the rulers were not prepared for such a revolution. They knew Him, they thought; but the Christ would come as an unexpected, although long-expected, wonder. "Does not the Scripture say that the Christ comes of the seed of David, and from Bethlehem, the village where David was?" Meanwhile, divisions amongst themselves made organised opposition impossible. Once more God made the wrath of man to praise Him, and the remainder of wrath He restrained. Jews of recent times declare that the Messiah is to come from Galilee, and they settle at Tiberias, because they believe that He will rise from the waters of the lake; and at Safed, the city set on a hill, because they believe that He will there fix His throne.

Through all the murmurings, discussions, and contentions of this and associated chapters there comes out, clearly and distinctly, like the rising of the first star at eventide, the supremacy of Jesus Christ. One whose record you can find in the Old Testament tried the world, drank its reservoirs empty, and then wrote, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." A conqueror vanquished the then known world, and wept because there was not another world to conquer. Byron pursued the phantom of pleasure, and then in the noon of life and of fortune took up his parable and said:

"My days are in the yellow leaf,
The flowers and fruits of love are gone—
The worm, the canker, and the grief
Are mine alone.

The fire that on my bosom preys
Is lone, as some volcanic isle,
No torch is kindled at its blaze—
A funeral pile."

There is a Russian story of one who entered a diamond mine in search of great riches. He filled his pockets with great gems, and then threw them away to make room for larger ones. At length he became very thirsty, but there was no water there. He heard the flow of rivers, but they were rivers of gems; he hastened forward at the sound of a waterfall, but it was a cascade of jewels. He was very rich in precious stones, but he was dying of thirst, and his riches were worse than useless. Jesus says, If any man thirst, let him come unto ME and drink.

40. The prophet—"whom we expect to be the forerunner of the Messiah"—WESLEY.

42. From Bethlehem—"and how could they forget that Jesus was born there? Had not Herod given them terrible reasons to remember it?"—WESLEY.

43. A division. "Schisma, whence our word 'schism.' It means a serious and possibly violent division. (Ch. 9. 16; 10. 19; 1 Cor. 1. 10; 12. 25; comp. Acts 14. 4; 23. 7.) In New Testament it is never used in the modern sense of a separation from the Church, but of parties in the Church. By the Synoptists it is used only in its original sense of physical severing; 'a worse rent is made.' (Matt. 9. 16; Mark 2. 21)"—PLUMMER.

45. Then came the officers. "Better, Therefore came the officers, i.e. because neither they nor any of the multitude had ventured to arrest Him. Under the control of God's providence (ver. 30), they had been unable to find any good opportunity for taking Him, and had been overawed by the majesty of His words (ver. 46)"—PLUMMER.

48. Have any of the rulers—"men of rank or eminence—or of the Pharisees—men of learning and religion—believed on Him?"—WESLEY.

49. But this populace, who know not the Law—"this ignorant rabble—are accursed—are by that ignorance exposed to the curse of being thus seduced"—WESLEY.

50. Nicodemus, he that came to Him by night—"having now a little more courage, being one of them—being present as a member of the great Council. Saith to them—Do not we ourselves act as if we knew not the Law, if we pass sentence on a man before we hear him?"—WESLEY.

52. They answered—"by personal reflection; the argument they could not answer, and therefore did not attempt it. Art thou also a Galilean—one of His party? Out of Galilee ariseth no prophet. They could not but know the contrary. They knew Jonah arose out of Gath-hepher, and Nahum from another village in Galilee. Yea, and Thisbe, the town of Elijah the Tishbite, was in Galilee also. They might likewise have known that Jesus was not born in Galilee, but at Bethlehem, even from the public register there, and from the genealogies of the family of David. They were conscious this poor answer would not bear examination; and so took care to prevent a reply"—WESLEY.

53. And every man went to his own house. "So that short, plain question of Nicodemus spoiled all their measures, and broke up the Council! 'A word spoken in season, how good is it,' especially when God gives it His blessing!"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER VIII.

Ver. 53 of the seventh chapter and ver. 1 of the eighth chapter are closely connected:—And they went every man unto his own house: but Jesus went unto the Mount of Olives. "The return of the people to the inert quiet and security of their dwellings (ch. 7. 53), at the close of the feast, is designedly contrasted with our Lord's homeless way, so to speak, of spending the short night, who is early in the morning on the scene again. One cannot well see why what is recorded in Luke 21. 37, 38, may not even thus early have taken place: it might have been the Lord's ordinary custom from the beginning to leave the brilliant misery of the city every night, that so He might compose His sorrowful and interceding heart, and collect His energies for new labours of love, preferring for His resting-place Bethany and the Mount of Olives, the scene thus consecrated by many preparatory prayers for His final humiliation and exaltation"—STIER. He had said (Matt. 8. 20), "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the heaven have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head.' And the Apostle of the Gentiles was one day to write, "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through His poverty might be rich." Mount of Olives. About a mile directly east of Jerusalem. The Garden of Gethsemane was on the western side of the mountain, and Bethany on the east of it. This is the only instance in which S. John names the Mount of Olives. It is mentioned several times in each of the other Gospels in connection with the last scenes of the life of the Lord. The name only occurs once in the Old Testament. (Zech. 14. 4.) The ascension was from Olivet. From the central summit there rises the Church of the Ascension. Here the rabbis say the Last Judgment will be held. We read in the margin of the Revised Version, "Most of the ancient authorities omit John 7. 53–8. 11. Those which contain it vary much from each other." The doubt, however, is as to whether it is a part of the Gospel of S. John. There is no doubt as to its being a genuine part of the gospel history. "The special importance of the narrative lies in the fact that it records the single case in which the Lord deals with a specific sinful act. And this He does (1) by referring the act to the inward spring of action, and (2) by declining to treat the legal penalty as that which corresponds to the real guilt. So there is opened to us a glimpse of a tribunal more searching and yet more tender than the tribunals of men"—WESTCOTT. VAN DOREN bids us note in reading this section: (1) its evident Divine originality; (2) its every allusion to the morals of that age is true; (3) its lofty position of the Redeemer, seemingly shielding the guilty, but actually crushing the hypocrites; (4) its tendency to purity—that book is pure that makes men pure; (5) its grandeur in dealing with cunning foes; (6) its utter annihilation of the snare laid so artfully; (7) its matchless wisdom proves the footprints of a Divine Being." "It is eminently Christlike," says Dr. SCHAFF, "and full of comfort to penitent outcasts. It breathes the Saviour's spirit of holy mercy which condemns the sin and saves the sinner. It is a parallel to the parable of the prodigal, the story of Mary Magdalene, and that of the Samaritan woman, and agrees with many express declarations of Christ, that He came not to condemn, but to save the lost. (Ch. 3. 17; 12. 47; Luke 9. 56; 19. 10; comp. ch. 5. 14; Luke 7. 37 ff.)."

5. Moses commanded us to stone such—"in Deut. 22. 22. In later times other forms of punishment were adopted, but stoning was most common. Moses hath commanded us to stone such. "If they spoke accurately, this must have been a woman who, having been betrothed to a husband, had been guilty of this crime before the marriage was completed; for such only Moses commanded to be stoned. He commanded, indeed, that other adulteresses should be put to death; but the manner of death was not specified"—WESLEY.

6. That they might have to accuse Him—"either of usurping the office of a judge, if He condemned her, or of being an enemy to the Law, if He acquitted her. Jesus stooping down, wrote with His finger on the ground. God wrote once in the Old Testament; Christ once in the New; perhaps the words which He afterwards spoke, when they continued asking Him. By this silent action He (1) fixed their wandering, hurrying thoughts, in order to awaken their conscience, and (2) signified that He was not then come to condemn, but to save, the world"—WESLEY.

What then sayest Thou?—"hoping, whatever He might answer, to put Him in the wrong: if He said, Stone her, that would seem a stepping out of His province; if He forbade it, that would hold Him up as a relaxer of the public morals"—Dr. BROWN. Wrote. "Both here and in ver. 8 the tense in the original presents the action as going on before the witnesses. It is quite vain to conjecture what was written, if indeed we are to understand anything more than the mere mechanical action of writing. The attitude represents one who follows out his own thoughts, and is unwilling to give heed to those who question him"—WESTCOTT. And yet as this is the only recorded instance of our Lord's writing, the incident arrests the imagination, and almost compels conjecture. And so saintly students and subtle thinkers have found such suggestions as these, "I also can write even as Moses could. Ye bring this sinful woman before My bar—ye know not, and will not believe it, but it is nevertheless true, that before My judgment-seat all persons will finally come, and every question be finally adjudicated. If this floor of the Temple, if this whole land could speak—what would it record concerning all of you, and what would still have to be recorded of you? Stoop down with Me and read the sin of your whole people. Oh, how much could I say concerning you, how much could I reveal and condemn, which I would rather now bury in silence—constrain Me not to speak!" The Lord writes our sins on the sand here, as a warning in time: after death they will be written in immortal characters, if not forgiven. Jesus, the great Teacher of men, wrote but one line, and that in the dust, and yet He is the cause of more writing, more study, more books, more learning, than all other teachers of our world. The italicised clause, "as though He heard them not," must be excluded. It is scarcely probable that our Lord wished that to be thought.

9. He that is without sin—"he that is not guilty (his own conscience being the judge) either of the same sin, or of some nearly resembling it. Let him first—as a witness, cast the stone at her"—WESLEY.

"The colour of the word 'sinless,'" says WESTCOTT, "is caught from the context. Though it would be unnatural to assume that all in the group of accusers were actually guilty of adultery, there is nothing unnatural in supposing that each could feel in himself the sinful inclination which has here issued in the sinful act. In this way the words of the Lord revealed to the men the depths of their own natures, and they shrank in that Presence from claiming the prerogative of innocence. At the same time the question as to the woman's offence was raised at once from a legal to a spiritual level. The judges were made to feel that freedom from an outward guilt is no claim to sinlessness. And the offender in her turn was led to see that flagrant guilt does not bar hope. The Law as in a figure dealt with that which is visible; the gospel penetrates to the inmost soul."

9. Convicted by their own conscience—"that judge of right and wrong who holds his court in every man's breast. Beginning at the eldest—or the elders. Jesus was left alone—by all those scribes and Pharisees who proposed the question. But many others remained, to whom our Lord directed His discourse presently after"—WESLEY.

Jesus was left alone, and the woman. "She still remained, bound as it were by her sin, in the presence of Christ"—WESTCOTT. "Two persons were left," AUGUSTINE says, "the unhappy woman and COMPASSION INCARNATE." "She stood as if bound to His judgment-seat"—LANGE. "That the woman continued to stand there, instead of stealing away also, as in decorum bound, is of itself intimation enough of that penitent feeling which expositors have generally lost sight of, and which the Lord's word to her not only presupposes but proves. The anguish of death is past, but the bitterness of conscience is almost stronger than that. Alas! the poor woman had been driven by a very different thirst from that of which Jesus spoke in the feast, into the slough where His mercy now finds her. What will He say unto her? Is He also not without sin? Will He, who in His first word mentioned the first stone of Moses' obligation, now in His final adjudication contradict Moses—or confirm his decree? She stands and awaits her doom"—STIER. "They, convicted by their conscience, get away from Jesus; she, convicted by her conscience, stays by Jesus"—LUTHER.

10. Hath no man condemned thee—"has no judicial sentence been passed upon thee?" WESLEY.

11. Neither do I condemn thee—"neither do I take upon Me to pass any such sentence. Let this deliverance lead thee to repentance"—WESLEY.

Neither do I condemn thee. "Though I am truly sinless. The words are not words of forgiveness (Luke 7. 48), but simply of one who gives no sentence. (Comp. Luke 12. 14.) The condemnation has reference to the outward punishment and not to the moral guilt; that is dealt with in the words which follow"—WESTCOTT. Go thy way; from henceforth sin no more. He did not condemn, as S. Augustine remarks, the woman, but the sin. The exhortation to penitence, Macdonald finds in the sin no more. It is brief, but, as Tholuck suggests, how mightily had the circumstances spoken; would not many words have weakened rather than strengthened the impression? He who restores the sinner to penitence does more than he who punishes him. The service of the Midnight Mission is to approach fallen women in the spirit of the Saviour. "In ch. 8. 12–46 the word 'true' occurs six times, the word 'truth' seven times"—C. B.

"The after-teaching (ch. 8. 12–20).—The Lord had applied to Himself one of the typical miracles of the Exodus (ch. 7. 37, seq.), in this section He seems to apply to Himself that of the fiery pillar,—as the Light of the World He is self-attested (ver 12 f.). But for the apprehension of His nature, sympathy is needed (vers. 14, 15). At the same time, even as the Lord's judgment was an expression of the Divine will, so His witness included that of the Father (vers. 16–18), who could be recognised by those who truly knew Christ"—WESTCOTT.

12. I am the Light of the World. At the Feast of Tabernacles golden candelabra were lighted. This may have suggested the metaphor. But as this illumination commemorated the pillar of fire, which led the Israelites through the wilderness, the listeners would regard His claim as strange and wondrous. Light is a scriptural emblem of knowledge, holiness, and happiness. The sun is its own revealer, so is Christ. Darkness images ignorance, error, guilt, misery, and the grave. "The Light of the World"—not of the Jewish nation only.

He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness—"in ignorance, wickedness, misery. But shall have the light of life. He that closely, humbly, steadily follows Me, shall have the Divine light continually shining upon him; diffusing over his soul, knowledge, holiness, joy, till he is guided by it to life everlasting"—WESLEY

The light of life. The light which both springs from life and issues in it.

13. Thou testifiest of Thyself; Thy testimony is not valid. "They retort upon our Lord His own words (ch. 5. 31), 'If I testify of Myself, My testimony is not valid.' He had then added, 'There is another who testifieth of Me.' To the same effect He replies here (ver. 14), Though I testify of Myself, yet My testimony is valid—for I am inseparably united to the Father. I know—and from the firm and certain knowledge proceeds the most unexceptionable testimony—whence I came, and whither I go. To these two heads may be referred all the doctrine concerning Christ. The former is treated of (ver. 16, etc.), the latter (ver. 21, etc.). For I know whence I came—that is, for I came from God, both as God and as Man; and I know it, though ye do not"—WESLEY.

15. Ye judge after the flesh—"as the flesh, that is, corrupt nature, dictates. I judge no man—not thus; not now; not at My first coming"—WESLEY.

16. I am not alone—"no more in judging than in testifying. But I and the Father that sent Me. His Father is in Him, and He is in the Father. (Ch. 14. 10, 11.) And so the Father is no more alone without the Son, than the Son is without the Father. (Prov. 8. 22, 23, 30.) His Father and He are not one and another God, but one God (though distinct Persons), and so inseparable from each other. And though the Son came from the Father, to assume human nature, and perform His office as the Messiah upon earth, as God is sometimes said to come from heaven, for particular manifestations of Himself, yet Christ did not leave the Father, nor the Father leave Him, any more than God leaves heaven when He is said to come down to the earth"—WESLEY.

19. Then said they to Him, Where is Thy Father? Jesus answered—"showing the perverseness of their question, and teaching that they ought first to know the Son, if they would know the Father. Where the Father is He shows (ver. 23). Meantime, He plainly intimates that the Father and He were distinct Persons, as they were two witnesses; and yet one in essence, as the knowledge of Him includes the knowledge of the Father"—WESLEY.

"The thought of knowledge passes into that of judgment. The Pharisees had not the knowledge, nor could they in their present state gain the knowledge. They judged after the flesh. (Comp. 2 Cor. 5. 16.) They were content to form their conclusions on an imperfect, external, superficial examination. Without feeling any necessity for deeper or wider insight, they decided according to the appearance of things, and so by that part of our nature which deals with appearances. Christ, on the other hand, though He embraced in this knowledge all the circumstances and aspects and issues of life, judged no man. The time for this was not yet; nor was this His work (ch. 12. 47)"—WESTCOTT. Christ was always ready with the right reply. The "answers" of Jesus are wonderful.

20. These words spake He in the treasury. The treasury was in the court of the women, the most public part of the Temple. (Comp. Mark 12. 41 ff.; Luke 21. 1.) His hour. (Comp. ch. 2. 4; 7. 30; 13. 1.) Nothing happens till the clock of the Divine purpose strikes.

Vers. 21–59. THE TRIAL OF TRUE AND FALSE FAITH.—"This section describes the spiritual crisis in the preaching to Israel. It consists of two parts. The first part (vers. 21–30) contains the distinct presentation of the one object of faith, with the declaration of the consequences of unbelief (ver. 24). This is closed by the notice of a large accession of disciples (ver. 30). The second part (vers. 31–58) gives an analysis of the essential character and issues of selfish belief and false Judaism. This is closed by the first open assault upon the Lord with violence"—WESTCOTT.

23. Ye are. "Again He passes over their interruption, and proves what He advanced (ver. 21). Of them that are beneath—from the earth. I am of them that are above. Here He directly shows whence He came, even from heaven, and whither He goes"—WESLEY.

24. If ye believe not that I AM. "Here, as in ver. 58, our Lord claims the Divine name, I AM (Ex. 3. 14). But the Jews, as if He had stopped short, and not finished the sentence, answered, Who art Thou?"—WESLEY.

25. Even what I say to you from the beginning—"the same which I say to you, as it were in one discourse, with one even tenor, from the time I first spake to you"—WESLEY.

26. I have many things to say and to judge of you—"I have much to say concerning your inexcusable unbelief. But He that sent Me is true—whether ye believe or no. And I speak the things which I have heard from Him—I delivered truly what He hath given Me in charge"—WESLEY.

27. They understood not—"that by Him that sent Him He meant God the Father. Therefore, in vers. 28 and 29, He speaks plainly of the Father, and again claims the Divine name, I AM"—WESLEY.

28. When ye shall have lifted up—"on the cross—ye shall know—and so many of them did—that I AM—God over all—and that I do nothing of Myself—being one with the Father"—WESLEY.

29. The Father hath not left Me alone—"never, from the moment I came into the world"—WESLEY.

After this many believed on Him.

Vers. 31–59.—"This conversation," says WESTCOTT, "lays open the essential differences between the men who would have given permanence to the old dispensation, and Christ who fulfilled it. The historical and the spiritual, the external and the moral, the temporal and the eternal, are placed side by side. The contrast is made more complete, because Abraham, and not Moses, is taken as the representative of Judaism. The successive pleas of the Jews give in a natural order the objections which they took to Christ's claims.

We are Abraham's seed. . . . How sayest Thou, Ye shall be made free? (ver. 33). Abraham is our father (ver. 39). We have one Father, even God (ver. 41). Thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil (ver. 48). Art Thou greater than our father Abraham, who died? (ver. 53). Hast Thou seen Abraham? (ver. 57). The first three press the claims of inheritance, of kinsmanship, of religious privilege; the last three contain decisive judgments on Christ's character, on His authority, on His implied Divine nature. With the help of the clue thus given, it is more easy to follow the course of the argument. At the outset Christ promises freedom to those who honestly follow out an imperfect faith (ver. 31, seq.). But we are free, is the answer (ver. 33). Not spiritually (vers. 33–36); nor does descent carry with it religious likeness (vers. 37–42). Inability to hear Christ betrays and springs from a close affinity with the powers of evil (vers. 43–47). Such a judgment is sober and true (vers. 48–50). The word which Christ brings is life-giving (vers. 51–53); and He Himself was before Abraham (vers. 54–58)."

31. Abide in My word. The word is the element in which the Christian lives. He abides in the word, and the word abides in Him. In S. Paul's language the believer lives in Christ, and Christ in the believer.

The Word and the Disciples.—If ye continue in My word, then are ye My disciples. So Christ spoke to certain Jews who believed Him and did not believe in Him. They were convinced by what He said, but they retained their own prejudices and convictions. The Jews of ver. 31 are distinguished from the general company of ver. 30. Hence the emphasis is on "ye," and not as we generally place it—on the verb "abide." Our Lord recognises the first rude beginning of faith. He accepts the child's homage not less than the devotion of the aged saint who can say, "I have surrendered my will to God." The word of Christ is not simply an echo, a voice, as if it came from Him, and was outside Himself; His word is His own revelation.

32. The truth—"written in your hearts by the Spirit of God. Shall make you free—from guilt, sin, misery, Satan"—WESLEY.

The truth is no mere abstract speculation. It is living and personal, Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free, is one of these great sayings of Jesus which the world has treasured. Know here is more than mere knowledge, it is the knowledge which begets sympathy and leads to obedience. Some things must be known to be loved; Divine things must be loved to be known. Knowledge grows from less to more, through acquaintance and fascination. The truth here is not so much the truth of the doctrine as the doctrine of the truth. "Jesus said, I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." "Pilate said unto Him, Art Thou a king?" Jesus answered, "Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end have I been born, and to this end am I come into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth My voice. Pilate saith unto Him, What is truth?" Christ is the Lord of the truth.

33. They—"the other Jews that were by, not those who believed, as appears by the whole tenor of the conversation. We were never enslaved to any man—a bold, notorious untruth; at that very time they were enslaved to the Romans"—WESLEY.

34. Jesus answered—"each branch of their objection, first concerning freedom, then concerning their being Abraham's offspring (ver. 37, etc.). He that committeth sin is, in fact, the slave of sin"—WESLEY.

Everyone that committeth sin is the bond-servant of sin. "To commit sin is not simply to commit single isolated acts of sin, but to live a life of sin (1 John 3. 4, 8). The exact contrast is doing the truth (ch. 3. 21; 1 John 1. 6) on one side, and doing righteousness on the other (1 John 2. 29; 3. 7). Sin as a whole—complete failure, missing of the mark, in thought and deed—is set over against truth and righteousness"—WESTCOTT. Licence is not liberty. If a three-year-old child crept out of doors at night into the dark and endangered streets of the city, would that be liberty? If a young man or maiden walks along the dark paths of evil, and gives up the reins of self-government to wild passions, is that liberty? When the beautiful Madame Roland was led to the guillotine, she said, "O Liberty, what crimes have been committed in thy name!" And when we see the wrecks of society, we say, "O Liberty, what miseries have been endured by misnaming thee!" Acts of sin become habits. Done once, twice, thrice voluntarily, they are done a fourth time, a fifth time, a sixth time, as if by a power outside ourselves. Instance—the drunkard, the libertine, the covetous, the tyrannical. To sign the pledge is well, but without a Divine hand be laid on the enfeebled will, the pledge will be broken. To moan and mourn over an impure imagination will not bring salvation. The sinner is gripped by his sin as by handcuffs of steel. Is there any freedom? If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed. "The last discourse," says Dr. SCHAFF, "had made an impression on many, and brought them to the door of a superficial discipleship (ver. 30), while yet their heart was full of prejudice. These half-converts the Lord now addresses, and warns them not to be satisfied with a passing excitement of feeling, but to become true and steady disciples; then they would know the truth, and the truth would give them true freedom from the degrading bondage of sin and error. Knowledge appears here as the fruit of faith, and freedom as the fruit of knowledge." HENGSTENBERG well says: "A difference of degree of knowledge is put in the form of knowledge itself as opposed to ignorance, because in comparison with future attainments of knowledge in the path of fidelity, the present knowledge would be quite insignificant. The truth is not merely something thought; it has taken flesh and blood in Christ, who says, I am the Truth. By a deeper and deeper knowing of Christ they would know also the truth, after which, as after freedom, every man who is not utterly lost has a deep constitutional longing, and this living truth would make them free from the bondage of sin and error; while the truth, considered merely as a thought of mind, would be utterly powerless. The same liberating effect, which in ver. 32 is ascribed to the truth, is in ver. 36 ascribed to Christ." Such a truth had, however, to force its way through the thick wall of obduracy born of pride of ancestry, pride of nationality, and pride of religion. We are Abraham's seed—we were never in bondage to any man. The Bible and the Talmud abound in proofs of the intense national arrogance with which the Jews regarded their religion and their descent.

I am the Truth—which of you convinceth Me of sin? If, therefore, the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed. Truth is not merely a conception, bread for the intellect. The heart has its own hunger. Christ is the personal truth. The heart craves a person—Christ, and Christ only; Christ fully. Christ always responds to that felt need. The Jews had a saying, "Thou wilt find no free man but him who is occupied in learning of the Law." Socrates spoke of vice as ignorance; the service of the truth is perfect freedom. The moral perfection of Christ has seldom been assailed, never successfully. He is the incarnation of holiness and truth, of freedom and life. His sinlessness is implied in His mission, in His affirmations, in His assumptions. It is declared by John the Baptist (Matt. 3. 14; ch. 1. 15; 3. 31) and the apostles (Acts 3. 14; 1 Pet. 1. 19; ch. 2. 22; 3. 18; 2 Cor. 5. 21; 1 John 2. 29; ch. 3. 5, 7; Heb. 4. 15; ch. 7. 26.) He never asked God's forgiveness for any thought or word or deed of His. He needed neither conversion nor reform. The Lord and Giver of Life had Divine life in Himself. "Truth is personal in Christ; Christ is universal in truth. Truth is the light, freedom the might of life. Truth is the enlightenment of the reason, liberty the redemption of the will. Truth is the harmony of the contrasts of life, having its central point in the life and work of Christ, its source in God, its ways in all fragments of knowledge; liberty, the harmony of man, in his true self-destination, in accordance with his abilities and the reality of God. Truth corresponds to revelation, liberty to redemption." Change and decay we see in all around. One changes not. Jesus has a dateless life.

THE LIBERTY OF SERVICE.—Ponder that noble paradox: "God's service is perfect freedom." It is a contradiction in words, yet it is a blessed harmony, as thousands can testify. How easy it is to serve those we love! What marvellous things have been done for us by another! Martyrs have died for those they loved, for the causes they adored. True liberty consists in giving up the will to God; doing what He commands; going where He bids; bearing what He appoints. The superiority of Christianity over other religions was thus illustrated by a converted Chinaman. A man had fallen into a deep pit, and was unable to move. Confucius passed by, and said, "Poor fellow, I am sorry for you. Why were you so foolish as to get in there? If you ever get out, don't get in again." Next came a Buddhist priest; he looked down and said, "Poor fellow, if you scramble up two-thirds of the way, I might reach down and help you out." Last of all, the Saviour came, reached entirely down to the bottom, lifted him up, set him on his feet, and said, Go, and sin no more. None who wish to be free from the tyranny of their passions will be left to their own devices. God will help them.

35. And the slave abideth not in the house. "All sinners shall be cast out of God's house, as the slave was out of Abraham's. But I the Son abide therein for ever"—WESLEY.

36. If I therefore make you free, ye "shall partake of the same privilege; being made free from all guilt and sin, ye shall abide in the house of God for ever"—WESLEY.

37. I know that ye are Abraham's offspring. "As to the other branch of your objection, I know that ye are Abraham's offspring after the flesh, but not in a spiritual sense. Ye are not followers of the faith of Abraham: My word hath no place in your hearts"—WESLEY.

41. Ye do the deeds of your father. "He is not named yet. But when they presumed to call God their Father, then he is expressly called the devil (ver. 44)"—WESLEY.

42. I proceeded forth—"as God—and come—as Christ"—WESLEY.

43. Ye cannot—"such is your stubbornness and pride—hear—receive, obey, My word—not being 'desirous to do My will,' ye cannot understand My doctrine (ch. 7. 17)"—WESLEY.

44. He was a murderer—"in inclination—from the beginning—of his becoming a devil. And abode not in the truth—commencing murderer and a liar at the same time. And certainly 'he' was 'a killer of men' (as the Greek word properly signifies) from the beginning of the world. For from the very creation he designed and contrived the ruin of men. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own—for he is the proper parent, and, as it were, creator of it. See the origin, not only of lies, but of evil in general!"—WESLEY.

Ye are of your father. "A strong emphasis is on the pronoun in answer to the 'we' (ver. 41). Ye so-called children of Abraham, children of your father, were children of your true father the devil, and the lusts of your father it is your will to do. The devil. (Ch. 13. 2; 1 John 3. 8, 10; Rev. 12. 9.) A murderer from the beginning. He brought death upon the race of man by his falsehood. (Rom. 5. 12.) He stood not in the truth—the Divine sum of all truth—because there is no truth in him. Nothing in him responded to the truth. The reference appears to be to the fall, and not to the death of Abel. (1 John 3. 12.) The death of Abel was only one manifestation of the ruin wrought by selfishness. Alford declares this passage to be one of the most decisive testimonies to the personality of Satan"—WESTCOTT.

45. Because I speak the truth—"which liars hate"—WESLEY.

46. Which of you convicteth Me of sin? "And is not My life as unreprovable as My doctrine? Does not My whole behaviour confirm the truth of what I teach?"—WESLEY.

Falsehood in action is sin. Falsehood within must show itself. The words suggest, rather than prove perhaps, the sinlessness of Jesus, and certainly they strongly confirm other testimonies.

47. He that is of God—"that either loves or fears Him—heareth—with joy and reverence—God's words—which I preach"—WESLEY.

He that is of God—the true child of God. (Comp. ch. 3. 31; 8. 23; 15. 19; 17. 14.)

48. Say we not well—"have we not just cause to say, Thou art a Samaritan—an enemy to our Church and nation—and hast a devil—art possessed by a proud and lying spirit?"—WESLEY.

Thou art a Samaritan. "There is bitter irony," says WESTCOTT, "in the original words, from the position of the pronoun at the end of the clause, which it is difficult to reproduce. Thou that boasteth great things of a kingdom and a fulfilment of the Law, after all art but a Samaritan."

49. I honour My Father—"I seek His honour only"—WESLEY.

50. I seek not My own glory—"that is, as I am the Messiah I consult not My own glory. I need not. For My Father consulteth it, and will pass sentence on you accordingly"—WESLEY.

51. If a man keep My word. "So will My Father consult My glory. We keep His doctrine by believing; His promises, by hoping; His commands, by obeying. He shall never see death—that is, death eternal. He shall live for ever. Hereby He proves that He was no Samaritan. For the Samaritans in general were Sadducees"—WESLEY.

If a man keep My word. "Keep is characteristic of S. John, and implies rather intent watching than safeguarding. It is the opposite of disregard. Shall never see death. Exact phrase in the original is not found elsewhere in New Testament, although the thought recurs. The sight here is that of long, steady, exhaustive vision. Life in S. John is present, or rather eternal; so death is not an evil, but a state, that selfish isolation which is the negation of life"—WESTCOTT.

52. Taste of death. From the image of the cup of suffering (ch. 18. 11; Rev. 18. 6; 14. 10; 16. 19). The "cup of death" is an Arabian image.

54. If I honour Myself—"referring to their words, 'Whom makest Thou Thyself?'"—WESLEY.

56. My day. The New Testament speaks of the day of the Son of Man. According to a Jewish tradition, Abraham saw the whole history of his descendants in the mysterious vision recorded in Gen. 15. 8, et seq.

56. He saw it—"by faith, in types, figures, and promises. As particularly in Melchisedec; in the appearance of Jehovah to him in the plains of Mamre (Gen. 18. 1); and in the promise, that in his 'seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed.' Possibly he had likewise a peculiar revelation, either of Christ's first or second coming"—WESLEY.

57. Thou art not yet fifty years old—"at the most. Perhaps the gravity of our Lord's countenance, together with His afflictions and labours, might make Him appear older than He really was. Hast Thou seen Abraham?—which they justly supposed must have been, if Abraham had seen Him"—WESLEY.

58. Before Abraham was, I AM—"even from everlasting to everlasting. This is a direct answer to the objection of the Jews, and shows how much greater He was than Abraham"—WESLEY.

I am. A phrase marking timeless existence.

59. Then took they up stones—"to stone Him as a blasphemer. But Jesus concealed Himself—probably by becoming invisible. And so passed on—with the same ease as if none had been there"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER IX.

THE Authorised Version reads: Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, before Abraham was, I am. Then took they up stones to cast at Him: but Jesus hid Himself, and went out of the Temple, going through the midst of them, and so passed by. And as Jesus passed by, He saw a man which was blind from his birth. A connection is thus maintained between the stoning and the miracle. This view was upheld by most of the early interpreters, and has been espoused by many in more recent times. Our Revisers, however, read: Jesus hid Himself, and went out of the Temple. And as He passed by, He saw a man blind from his birth. Here the connection, though possible, is not necessary. It may have been on another day than the day of the stoning. The best biblical students are not agreed. Farrar says, "It is impossible to decide." Westcott affirms that ch. 9 begins abruptly like ch. 6. Trench considers that it is, on the whole, most probable that this work of grace and power crowned the day of that long debate with Jewish adversaries, which, beginning at ch. 7. 14, reaches to the end of ch. 10. Our Lord, then, as He passed from the Temple, to escape those stones which were the last arguments of His foes (ch. 8. 59), will have paused probably in the immediate neighbourhood of the Temple, where beggars, cripples, and other afflicted persons took their station (Acts 3. 2–10), to accomplish this miracle. What we may, perhaps, call the traditional interpretation, laid great stress upon the calmness of Jesus, and upon His intense devotion to His duty, seeing that having barely emerged from personal danger, He paused in self-forgetfulness to heal the man born blind. In this calmness and quiet devotion we recognise the Lord and Master. For practical purposes we may assume then that this miracle of mercy grew out of the occasion. Jesus had just quitted the Temple, at the entrance to which the blind beggar is seated. (Comp. Acts 3. 1–3.) We recognise the Lordship of Christ in His tranquillity amid outward excitement, and in His halt after the moment of most imminent peril of death, and while He was still in the vicinity of danger. The blind beggar meets His eye at the door. (Contrast the scene in Luke 18. 35–44.) One was a city scene, the other a country incident. In the quiet country the noise of the multitude awakens the attention of the blind man; in the crowded city there is nothing to announce a new arrival. In one case the blind man appeals to Christ; in the other, Christ heals without any appeal at all. Note the humanity and sweet reasonableness of the Son of Man—in a pre-eminent sense the Man amongst men. The sight of the needy, sightless, helpless man awakened compassion in the Infinite pity; awakened questioning in the curious and critical disciples, Who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he should be born blind? According to Jewish ideas, afflictions were a Divine punishment for sin. Experience teaches that special diseases are hereditary. The Bible affirms that disease is the fruit of sin. The error of the disciples consisted in supposing that the connection between special sin and personal punishment could be traced. And the error was corrected by our Lord's reply, Neither did this man sin, nor his parents; but that the works of God should be made manifest in him. This does not deny their sinfulness. All have sinned. But it does deny that the connection is so immediate as to be perceived by a critical questioner. Whatever the causes of the misfortune, the removal of it would show forth the glory of God. The Lord concerned Himself with the sufferer, the disciples occupied themselves with the sinner. The Jews were trained to regard special suffering as connected with special sin. We all instinctively associate sin with suffering, as seed-time with harvest. "Perhaps," says FARRAR, "the disciples supposed that the words of our Lord to the paralytic, whom He had healed at the pool of Bethesda, as well as to the paralytic at Capernaum, might seem to sanction such an impression. They asked, therefore, how this man came to be born blind. Could it be in consequence of the sins of his parents? If not, was there any way of supposing that it could have been for his own? The supposition in the former case seemed hard; in the latter, impossible. They were therefore perplexed. Into the unprofitable regions of such barren speculation our Lord refused to follow them, and He declined, as always, the tendency to infer, and to sit in judgment upon the sins of others. Neither the man's sins, He told them, nor those of his parents, had caused that lifelong affliction; but now, by means of it, the works of God should be made manifest."

2. Who sinned, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind—"that is, Was it for his own sins, or for the sins of his parents? They suppose (as many of the Jews did, though without any ground from Scripture) that he might have sinned in a pre-existent state, before he came into the world"—WESLEY.

3. Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents. "It was not the manner of our Lord to answer any questions that were of no use but to gratify an idle curiosity. Therefore He determines nothing concerning this. The scope of His answer is, It was neither for any sin of his own, nor of his parents; but that the power of God might be displayed"—WESLEY.

4. The night is coming—"Christ is the Light. When the light is withdrawn, night comes. When no man can work—no man can do anything towards working out his salvation after this life is ended. Yet Christ can work always. But He was to work upon earth only during the day or season which was appointed for Him"—WESLEY.

5. I am the Light of the World—"I teach men inwardly by My Spirit, and outwardly by My preaching, what is the will of God; and I show them, by My example, how they must do it"—WESLEY.

Christ here compares Himself to the sun, the light of day, as in ch. 8. to the pillar of fire.

As is His wont, our Lord passes from the particular instance to the general law. I must work the works of Him that sent Me, while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work. As long as I am in the world, I am the Light of the World. (But see R.V.). The contrast of day and night is the contrast of light and darkness, labour and rest, activity and indolence, life and death. Every man has for his day's work his one day; when his night comes he can work no more. So, too, must Christ perform His great official day's work during His earthly pilgrimage. The day of life is irrecoverable. The great word of Christ's grew out of the incident, but it did not lead Him from His purpose of mercy. His thought expanded, but His heart still overshadowed the sufferer. He, the Light of the World, must for a short time longer dispel its darkness. Then He spat on the ground, made clay with the spittle, and smearing it on the blind man's eyes, bade him Go, wash in the pool of Siloam. The blind man went, washed, and was healed.

6. He anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay. This might almost have blinded a man that had sight. But what could it do towards curing the blind? It reminds us that God is no farther from the event when He works either with or without means, and that all the creatures are only that which His almighty operation makes them"—WESLEY.

7. Go, wash at the pool of Siloam. "Perhaps our Lord intended to make the miracle more taken notice of. For a crowd of people would naturally gather round Him, to observe the event of so strange a prescription. And it is exceeding probable, the guide who must have led him in traversing a great part of the city, would mention the errand he was going upon, and so call those who saw him to a greater attention. From the fountain of Siloam, which was without the walls of Jerusalem, a little stream flowed into the city, and was received in a kind of bason, near the Temple and called the Pool of Siloam. Which is by interpretation, Sent—and so was a type of the Messiah, who was 'sent' of God. He went and washed, and came seeing—he believed and obeyed, and found a blessing. Had he been wise in his own eyes, and reasoned like Naaman, on the impropriety of the means, he had justly been left in darkness. Lord, may our proud hearts be subdued to the methods of Thy recovering grace! May we leave Thee to choose how Thou wilt bestow favours, which it is our highest interest to receive on any terms"—WESLEY.

As to the use of means, TRENCH, with his usual beauty and suggestiveness, says: "A medicinal value was attributed in old time to saliva, above all for disorders in the eyes; it is similarly used in the case of another blind man (Mark 8. 23), and of one suffering from a defect in the organs of speech and hearing (Mark 7. 33); neither are we altogether without examples of a medicinal use of clay. Still we must not suppose that, besides His Divine power, the Lord also used natural remedies, or that these were more than conductors, not in themselves needful, but such as of His own free will He assumed, as channels to convey His grace. (Comp. 2 Kings 4. 41; Isa. 38. 21.) For other blind eyes He opened without employing any such means (Matt. 9. 27-30; 20. 30, 34). Probably the reasons which induced their use were ethical. It may have been a help to the weak faith of this man to find that something external was done. Nor may we leave out of sight a symbolic reference to Gen. 2. 7. The same creative Hand which wrought at the beginning is again at work. Christ ever made incidents illustrate principles, accidental occasions become the pivot on which moved eternal laws." I must work the works of Him that sent Me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work. He said, as introductory to the sign-full miracle, which Dr. Brown calls a most interesting statement from the mouth of Christ; intimating (1) that He had a precise work to do upon earth, with every particular of it arranged and laid out to Him; (2) that all He did upon earth was just the works of God—particularly going about doing good, though not exclusively by miracles; (3) that each work had its precise time and place in His programme of instructions, so to speak; hence (4) that as His period for work had definite termination, so by letting any one service pass by its allotted time, the whole would be disarranged, marred, and driven beyond its destined period for completion; (5) that He acted ever under the impulse of these considerations, as man—the night cometh when no man can work. This familiar proverb is as true for the heavenly kingdom as for this present world. No man who has not done his work in the day can do it in the night. Now or never is a phrase of solemn significance, which the young especially must ponder. There is a striking Jewish saying, "The day is short, and the task is great, and the workmen are sluggish, and the reward is much, and the master of the house is urgent." When He had thus spoken, He spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and anointed his eyes with the clay, and said unto him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam (which is by interpretation, Sent). He went away therefore, and washed, and came seeing. Clay and spittle were both believed in ancient times to possess curative properties. Why Christ used them is only a matter of conjecture. That they were totally inadequate to cure one blind from his birth was evident to the old-world observers. Hence they assumed that some moral object was contemplated, the object of arousing the popular observation more thoroughly by the man's going to the pool, or of putting the blind man's faith to the test, or of giving his faith, yet feeble, some outward action to which it might cling. As in other instances of healing, the look, the touch, the word of Jesus served as the medium of the Divine healing power. To the pool of Siloam some have attributed medicinal qualities. But the power was behind all second causes; it dwelt in the Cause of causes—the Almightiness of the Son of God. The sufferer believed, obeyed, and was healed. What were the emotions of the healed man as he first gazed upon a world to which he had been blind so long? "It is noticeable," says Dr. ABBOTT, "that Christ never cured without giving the healed something to do, as a test of his faith and obedience. When He was asked to heal, the simple request served as an indication of faith; when, as here, He volunteered the cure, He seems always to have required some act as an evidence of faith."

11. A man called Jesus—"he seems to have been before totally ignorant of Him"—WESLEY.

But now the blind man found himself in the presence of the Light of the World. There is no instance in the Gospels of our Lord becoming tired of helping. Misery confronted Him, suffering lay in His path, need followed Him. It has been profoundly said that He came into the world on account of sin. It is also true that He came on account of sorrow. He was the Saviour of the body as well as of the soul. God at the creation said, "Let light be"; here Christ says, Let there be light.

14. "Anointing the eyes with any kind of medicine on the Sabbath was particularly forbidden by the tradition of the elders"—WESLEY.

When God selects unlikely means He shows that all the glory is His. Elisha bade Naaman wash in the Jordan seven times. "God is His own Designer as well as Interpreter." The Sabbath is to be a day of rest for oneself, but a day of toil in blessing others.

16. This man is not of God—"not sent of God. How can a man that is a sinner—that is, one living in wilful sin—do such miracles?"—WESLEY.

17. What sayest thou of Him, for that He hath opened thine eyes—"what inference dost thou draw herefrom?"—WESLEY.

These words, of God and sinner, describe all times. We are "for" or "against" the truth. This miracle and the raising of Lazarus were important links in the chain by which His enemies led Christ to the cross. Faith in the Prophet led the blind man rapidly to faith in the Son of God. (See ver. 35.) But these questioners will not see. The owl in the fable affirmed that sunlight was of small account. How intense was the malignity that would have compelled this healed man to deny his Benefactor! The foes of Christ cared nothing for the beggar's sufferings.

22. He should be put out of the synagogue—"that is, be excommunicated"—WESLEY.

An investigation was conducted by hostile judges. (Read vers. 18–22.) Opinions were heard and possibilities weighed, and the result is, that while the miracle is not comprehended, the healing cannot be denied. They laboured hard to prove that the man was not born blind, and failed. They strove to make him deny the Healer, and failed. Then they placed his person under anathema, making him an outcast and an alien. But they only sent him through the land proclaiming the faith they wanted to destroy. Christianity is a fact. It has wrought its miracles of grace in every age. They cannot be explained away.

27. Are ye also—"as well as I, at length convinced, and willing to be His disciples?"—WESLEY.

And so the suffering, sightless man becomes an apostle and confessor of Christ. A double miracle was wrought upon him—the opening of the eyes of the body and then of the eyes of the soul. He became more than a match for these official guides of the people. How many know the right, yet fear to do it.

29. We know not whence He is—"by what power and authority He does these things"—WESLEY.

They reviled him—"but the insult was intended for our Lord." They had heard His claims, and now deliberately reject Him. Night birds are blind in the day-time.

30. The man answered—"utterly illiterate as he was. And with what strength and clearness of reason! So had God opened the eyes of his understanding, as well as his bodily eyes. Why, herein is a marvellous thing, that ye—the teachers and guides of the people, should not know that a man who has wrought a miracle, the like of which was never heard of before, must be from heaven, sent by God"—WESLEY.

31. We—"even we of the populace—know that God heareth not sinners—not impenitent sinners, so as to answer their prayers in this manner. The honest courage of this man in adhering to the truth, though he knew the consequence (ver. 22), gives him claim to the title of a confessor"—WESLEY.

33. He could do nothing—"of this kind; nothing miraculous"—WESLEY.

And yet more miracles are recorded as to the blind than any other disease. One of palsy, one of dropsy, two of leprosy, two of fever. Three dead were raised, but four blind were restored to sight. This miracle strikes us with greater power—the only one born blind.

34. Born in sins—"and therefore, they supposed, born blind. They cast him out—of the synagogue; excommunicated him"—WESLEY.

(See verse 22.) Humility will learn anywhere. Apollos was taught by two tent-makers. But these rabbis are too proud to learn, too malignant to inquire calmly. The healed man becomes the first confessor, as S. James was the first martyr. Excommunication in latter times has proved a terrible ban. In the days of ignorance men thought the priests could shut the gates of heaven.

35. Having found him—"for He had sought him"—WESLEY.

36. Who is He, that I may believe? "This implies some degree of faith already. He was ready to receive whatever Jesus said"—WESLEY.

37. Lord, I believe. "What an excellent spirit was this man of! of so deep and strong an understanding (as he had just shown, to the confusion of the Pharisees), and yet of so teachable a temper!"—WESLEY.

There is a pause between vers. 34 and 35. We know not how long Christ was searching. Place this by the side of the parable of the prodigal son, the story of Mary Magdalene, and the parable of the Good Shepherd, and you have a picture of the seeking Saviour, the One who died for men.

39. For judgment am I come into the world—"that is, The consequence of My coming will be, that by the just judgment of God, while the blind in body and soul receive their sight, they who boast they see will be given up to still greater blindness than before"—WESLEY.

The act He made a test of wavering. His texts were always concrete: they grew out of the occasion. They tried to destroy the light. Proud self-righteousness is a long way from the kingdom of God. Our Lord was always anticipating the day of judgment.

41. If ye had been blind—"invincibly ignorant; if ye had not had so many means of knowing—ye would have had no sin—comparatively to what ye have now. But now ye say—ye yourselves acknowledge—we see; therefore your sin remaineth—without excuse, without remedy"—WESLEY.

If they had been conscious of moral blindness they would have come to the Light of the World. They closed their eyes. The judgment hour of death will open the eyes of many. Will not that be too late?

THE TRIAL.—1. The Neighbours.—The first investigation is made formally and without prejudice by the common people. The answer of the man was short, sharp, and decisive, I went, and washed, and received sight. It is not unlike Cæsar's famous report, "I came, I saw, I conquered."

2. The Pharisees.—Between ver. 11 and ver. 35 the Evangelist tells how the beggar was brought before the Pharisees and cross-questioned.

3. The Parents.—With a prudence not divorced from a certain bluntness, they cast aside responsibility.

4. Recalled.—During the examination of the parents the man had been dismissed, he is now recalled, coaxed, and threatened.

5. Jesus heard that they had cast him out, and found him. He always seeks the outcasts. Recall the parables in Luke 15; the scene in the house of Simon (Luke 7. 36, seq.). Having found the man whom others spurned, our Lord drew him to Himself. (Read vers. 35–38.) Every miracle is an acted parable. We see in the healing of the blind man the outward and visible sign of the inward and spiritual truth that Christ brings the soul out of darkness into light. The Saviour is as prominent as the sufferer. Christ is the Light of heaven and earth's Fountain of salvation. Everyone who receives spiritual blessing confirms the New Testament revelation, and makes religion more real to the world. One thing I know, whereas I was blind, now I see. No preaching equals these facts of a spiritual change. "The history of the man who was born blind," LANGE says, "is the portrait or type of the great and sudden conversion of an upright man; the portrait of a simple, wise, cheerful, vigorous, and valiant manner of belief; the portrait of a leading from belief in the living God of miracles to the personal Christ; the portrait of a Jewish inquisition, as of the impotence of hierarchic excommunication. Hierarchic excommunication may have been ultimately impotent, but it was for the present, doubtless, inconvenient, and something more." FARRAR styles this man "Christ's first confessor," and adds, "Christ too, in all probability had either at this, or some previous time, been placed under the ban of lesser excommunication, or exclusion from the synagogue; for we scarcely ever again read of His re-entering any of those synagogues which, during the earlier years of His ministry, had been His favourite places of teaching and resort." The mystery of suffering cannot be resolved until we reach the Land of the Silences. But we can see a little way into the awful deeps. Sorrow helps us to realise the Unseen; it awakens spiritual susceptibilities. The man who has never had an ache or a pain is apt to be too occupied with the world to see visions of God or sympathise with others' suffering. There is a world behind the world of pleasure and success—the world of pain. The thought of this may awaken personal gratitude, and relative sympathy. Why should we escape? we are not better than others. Suffering which softens some, hardens others. Why was suffering sent? We know not. It is here. We can minister to it. And when death comes to the sufferer's relief we can remind him that in the world to which he goes there will be no more pain. Do not ponder the origin of evil, strive to remove it.

CHAPTER X.

S. JOHN has only two parables—the parable of the Vine and the parable of the Good Shepherd. There was so much in the life of Jesus, that each Evangelist was able to find something new. Strictly speaking, S. John has no parables, these two instances being allegories, the only instance of allegory in the Bible. An allegory is a sentence or discourse in which the principal subject is described by another subject resembling it, and we are left to collect the intention of the writer or speaker by the resemblance. Here the Shepherd is Jesus Christ, the sheep His followers. To the Jews, who first listened, the meaning would be simple. They had learned to think of God as the Shepherd of Israel. One of the most beautiful of the Psalms is the Song of the Divine Shepherd. Many of the prophets used the same similitude. When they went to the synagogue they heard the reader utter the rhythmic words: "He shall feed His flock like a shepherd: He shall gather the lambs with His arm, and carry them in His bosom." And in the latter scriptures our Lord is described as the great Shepherd of the sheep (Heb. 13. 20), and as the Chief Shepherd (1 Pet. 5. 4). But a chief shepherd implies under-shepherds. The prophets were so named; so are Christian ministers; so are Sunday-school teachers. And as the shepherds would have to account to the chief shepherd for the sheep intrusted to them, so will they. A reference to the shepherd-life of the East is necessary to clear conceptions of the images here used. In the evening the flock was led to an unroofed enclosure, surrounded with a low wall of stones—hence the climbeth up. Sometimes watch was kept at the door by a servant furnished with arms—the porter. In the morning comes the shepherd, is admitted by the porter, and calls the bell-wether. The particular animals in the flock had, and in our own day still have, their own names. Robbers often scaled the low wall by night. In France, a shepherd may be seen walking before his flock — not driving them as in England. A traveller in Greece met three shepherds with their flocks. One had under his care about six hundred and fifty sheep, another about seven hundred, and the third about seven hundred and fifty; in all, twenty-one hundred. These three flocks were put together. Each sheep had a separate name; it would not answer to any other name, nor to its own, unless called by its own shepherd. Each shepherd knew all his sheep, and also their names. If he saw that one was going in a dangerous direction, he called it, and it retraced its steps. If the way was narrow or steep he walked first, and the sheep followed. It was cold: the cold made the lambs tremble, and they could scarcely walk. The shepherds were clothed in large cloaks, gathered in at the waist by a girdle. They took these little lambs and put them in their bosoms. They took care not to stifle them, but they kept them warm. It is thus that Jesus did. "He shall gather the lambs with His arms," the Bible tells us, "and carry them in His bosom." Jesus has not left children to perish. Amongst the twenty-one hundred sheep, some were weak or fatigued. They could not walk much, especially in steep or miry places. Then the shepherds approached them, and placing their crooks beneath them, helped them to advance. They always treated them with the greatest tenderness. The Good Shepherd also does the same: He pities the weak, and assists them in their journey; He never abandons them: He makes them go out to find pasture.

1. He that entereth not by the door—"by Christ. He is the only lawful entrance. Into the sheepfold—the Church. He is a thief and a robber—in God's account. Such were all those teachers to whom our Lord had just been speaking"—WESLEY.

3. To him the doorkeeper openeth. 'Christ is considered as the Shepherd (ver. 11); as 'the door,' in the first and following verses. And as it is not unworthy of Christ to be styled 'the door,' by which both the sheep and the true pasture enter; so neither is it unworthy of God the Father to be styled 'the doorkeeper.' (See Acts 14. 27; 16. 14; Col. 4. 3; Rev. 3. 8.) And the sheep hear his voice. The circumstances that follow exactly agree with the customs of the ancient Eastern shepherds. They called their sheep by name, went before them, and the sheep followed them. So real Christians hear, listen to, understand, and obey, the voice of a shepherd whom Christ hath sent. And He counteth them His own, dearer than any friend or brother; calls, advises, directs, each 'by name, and leadeth them out in the paths of righteousness,' beside the waters of comfort"—WESLEY.

The sheep distinguish the voice of their shepherd from the cleverest imitations. In many flocks each sheep is named, and knows his name. An American, travelling in Syria, saw three shepherds bring their flocks to the same brook, and the flocks drank together. One shepherd arose and called out: "Men-ah! Men-ah!" (Arabic for "Follow me"). His sheep came out of the common herd and followed him. The next shepherd did the same, and his also came and followed him. They did not stop to count them. The American said to the remaining shepherd, "Give me your cloak, turban, and crook, and see if they won't follow me." So he arose and called out, "Men-ah! Men-ah!" but not a sheep moved, they knew not the voice of a stranger. Of the shepherd and his flock three things are stated—(1) the sheep know him (vers. 3, 4); (2) they follow him (vers. 4, 5); (3) they hear his voice (vers. 4–16). We are the sheep, and we may know by this test our relation to the Good Shepherd.

4. He goeth before them—"in all the ways of God; teaching them, in every point, by example as well as by precept. And the sheep follow him—they tread in his steps. For they know his voice—having the witness in themselves, that his words are 'the wisdom and the power of God.' Reader, art thou a shepherd of souls? Then answer to God,—Is it thus with thee and thy flock?"—WESLEY.

5. They will not follow a stranger—"one whom Christ hath not sent; who doth not answer the preceding description. Him 'they will not follow'—and who can constrain them to it? But will flee from him—as from the plague. For they know not the voice of strangers—thay cannot relish it; it is harsh and grating to them. They find nothing of God therein"—WESLEY.

"Some sheep," Dr. THOMSON, the Oriental traveller, tells us, "always keep near the shepherd, and are his especial favourites. Each of them has a name to which it answers joyfully, and the kind shepherd is ever distributing to such choice portions, which he gathers for that purpose. These are the contented, happy ones. They are in no danger of getting lost, or into mischief, nor do wild beasts or thieves come near them. The great body, however, are mere worldlings, intent upon their own pleasure or selfish interests; they run from bush to bush searching for variety or delicacies, and only now and then lift their heads to see where the shepherd is, or rather where the general flock is, lest they get so far away as to occasion remark in their little community, or rebuke from their keeper. Others, again, are restless and discontented, jumping into everybody's field, climbing into bushes, and even into leaning trees, whence they often fall and break their limbs. These cost the good shepherd incessant trouble. Then there are others incurably reckless, who stray far away, and are often utterly lost." Some of this description would apply to young men and maidens, if not old men and children. All we like sheep have gone astray. And astray is near akin to endangered. In the East the shepherds are well armed to defend their flocks against fierce wolves, leopards, and panthers, who prowl about the wild wadies, and frequently attack the sheep in the very presence of the shepherd. And when the thief and the robber come, the faithful shepherd has often to risk his life for the flock. Dr. THOMSON says, "I have seen more than one case in which he had literally to lay it down in the contest."

6. They—"the Pharisees, to whom our Lord more immediately spake, as appears from the close of the foregoing chapter"—WESLEY.

Christ stands out here expressly as the object and meaning of the parable. We must distinguish two acts: in the one Christ appears as the door of access to the Church and to God (vers. 1–10); in the other as the true Shepherd of the flock (vers. 11–18). Some have made a triple division. The Shepherd, in general (vers. 1–6); the door (vers. 7–10); the Good Shepherd (vers. 11–18). The division is not important: the truth is essential. Christ is all and in all. At first the lesson is involved in the simple story. Afterwards, the two chief facts are considered separately, the fold and the flock. In relation to the fold, Christ is the door; in relation to the flock, He is the Good Shepherd. Though all this admits of direct and important application to ministers, Sunday-school teachers, and others, who are faithful shepherds of the flock of God, it is, in its highest sense, true only of the great Shepherd of the sheep, who is here drawing His own portrait.

7. I am the door. "Christ is both the door, and the Shepherd, and all things"—WESLEY.

8. Whosoever are come—"independently of Me, assuming any part of My character, pretending, like your elders and rabbis, to a power over the consciences of men, attempting to make laws in the Church, and to teach their own traditions as the way of salvation: all those prophets and expounders of God's word, that enter not by the door of the sheepfold, but run before I have sent them by My Spirit. Our Lord seems in particular to speak of those that had undertaken this office since He began His ministry. Are thieves—stealing temporal profit to themselves. And robbers—plundering and murdering the sheep"—WESLEY.

9. If any one—"as a sheep—enter in by Me—through faith—he shall be safe—from the wolf, and from those murdering shepherds. And shall go in and out—shall continually attend on the shepherds whom I have sent. And shall find pasture—food for his soul in all circumstances"—WESLEY.

Jesus said, I am the door of the sheep.—Not the door of the fold; the door to the sheep; the door by which sheep alike and shepherd enter. Jesus identified Himself with us. He that entereth not by the door into the fold of the sheep is a thief and a robber (ver. 1). I am the door; by Me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and shall find pasture. Only through Christ can we enter the fold. "There is one God, one Mediator also between God and men." "Through Him we both have our access by one Spirit unto the Father." The fulness of the Christian life is here presented in its three elements—safety, liberty, and support: safety, "he shall be saved"; liberty, "he shall go in and go out"; support, "he shall find pasture." The old city of Troy had but one gate. Go round and round and round the city, and you could find no other. So to the strong and beautiful city of heaven there is but one gate, and no other. Do you know what it is? Christ says, "I am the door."

Christ, the door of the fold.—He is the ordained way to God. There is no door between the soul and Christ. The Incarnation is the world's salvation; the cross, the hope of the trusting spirit. He came to give thee more abundant life. In Him is life, and in this sense in Him only. So far as the under-shepherds are concerned, they exist only by His appointment. Whoever enters the Church to teach, except through Christ the door, the same is a thief and a robber.

10. The thief cometh not, but to steal, and to kill, and to destroy—"that is, nothing else can be the consequence of a shepherd's coming, who does not 'enter in by Me'"—WESLEY.

But the hireling. "It is not the bare receiving hire, which denominates a man an hireling (for 'the labourer is worthy of his hire,' Jesus Christ Himself being the judge; yea, and 'the Lord hath ordained, that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel'), but the loving hire—the loving the hire more than the work, the working for the sake of the hire. He is an hireling, who would not work, were it not for the hire; to whom this is the great, if not only, motive of working. O God! if a man who works only for hire is such a wretch, a mere thief and a robber, what is he who continually takes the hire, and yet does not work at all? The wolf—signifies any enemy who, by force or fraud, attacks the Christian's faith, liberty, or life. So the wolf seizeth, and scattereth the flock—he seizeth some, and scattereth the rest: the two ways of hurting the flock of Christ"—WESLEY.

13. The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling—"because he loves the hire, not the sheep"—WESLEY.

The thief cometh that he may steal, and kill, and destroy: I came that they may have life, and may have it abundantly. (Comp. ver. 8.) All that came before Me are thieves and robbers; but the sheep did not hear them. The false Messiahs and the self-commissioned teachers sought gain and dominion. Christ came not to get, but to give. Life itself is not all. The heathen knew this. They said one asked the gods for immortality, but forgot to pray for freedom from the incidents of age. He lived, but feebleness and weariness made life a misery. Christ is the Life of life; the Life of the body, soul, and spirit. And the Divine life He gives is life abounding—more life and fuller. The work of the shepherd was to (1) feed the sheep, (2) guard them. This implied labour and danger. Our Lord refers to this when He speaks of laying down His life. If a shepherd sees a sheep or goat wandering, he calls it back; but should it still keep on its course, he hurls a stone from his sling so as to fall just beyond it, and frighten it back to the flock. The fidelity of Eastern shepherds to their flocks is proverbial. In some districts of Palestine they are exposed to the Bedouins—wandering Arabs, who live by plunder. The yell of the hyæna and the shriek of the jackal may, even at this day, be heard close to Jerusalem, and venomous snakes are common in the hot seasons. Besides these, the shepherd has to guard against huge birds of prey, which swoop down on a stray kid or lamb. There are no lions in Palestine now, and bears are only seen in the upper gorges of Lebanon. But the shepherds of to-day are as manly and faithful as David long ago, when he went out single-handed at one time after a lion, and at another after a bear, and delivered the lambs out of their mouths, catching the lion by the beard when it turned on him, and slaying it. The good shepherd still giveth his life for the sheep. Now read our Lord's beautiful words: He that is a hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth; and the wolf catcheth them, and scattereth the sheep.

14. I know My sheep—"with a tender regard and special care. And am known of Mine—with an holy confidence and affection"—WESLEY.

15. As the Father knoweth Me, and I know the Father—"with such a knowledge as implies an inexpressible union. And I lay down My life—speaking of the present time; for His whole life was only a going unto death"—WESLEY.

I am the Good Shepherd: the good shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep. GEIKIE, condensing the thoughts of others, well illustrates this: "In the East, as in lonely mountainous districts of our own country, the relation of a shepherd to his flock is very close. The loneliness of shepherd life in these countries throws man and the creatures he tends so much together—binds them so to each other by a sense of companionship, and pleasures mutually enjoyed—that the Eastern shepherd, like the shepherd of our own mountains, forgets the distance between himself and his flock, and becomes their friend. We learn to love that for which we brave peril; and the dangers of torrents, of robbers, of wolves, of thirst, or of straying, endear the flock for which they are borne, to the shepherd." Herein lies the blessed mystery of the cross of Christ. The hireling fleeth: the good shepherd, if need be, gives his life. Jesus said, I am the door. Jesus said, I am the Good Shepherd. He came into the world to live among us, to live like us, and then to lay down His life for us. As ABBOTT says: "The good shepherd may or may not be called on to die for his sheep; but he always lays down his life for them. To lay down the life is to consecrate it, devote it to the flock, as a mother, who, living or dying, belongs to her children, surrenders herself to them. So we ought also to lay down our lives for the brethren (1 John 3. 16), though comparatively few are ever called on to die for them. Wyclif and Luther as truly laid down their lives for the flock as Huss and Tyndale. The sacrifice of Christ consisted not merely in His death, but in His whole Incarnation. His entire life—from His advent to the grave—was laid down for His sheep." David encountered the lion and the bear when he kept his father's sheep. In the martyr ages, bishops and teachers died in defence of their helpless flocks. Jesus is the pattern, the inspirer, and the reward of all who resist, even unto blood.

16. I have also other sheep—"whom He foreknew—which are not of this fold—not of the Jewish Church or nation, but Gentiles. I must bring them likewise—into My Church, the general assembly of those whose names are written in heaven. And there shall be one flock—(not one fold, a plain false print), no corrupt or divided flocks remaining—and one Shepherd—who laid down His life for the sheep, and will leave no hireling among them. This unity both of the flock and the shepherd shall be completed in its season. The shepherd shall bring all into one flock; and the whole flock shall hear the one Shepherd"—WESLEY.

17. I lay down My life, that I may take it again—"I cheerfully die to expiate the sins of men, to the end I may rise again for their justification"—WESLEY.

18. I lay it down of Myself—"by My own free act and deed. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again—I have an original power and right of Myself, both to lay it down as a ransom, and to take it again, after full satisfaction is made for the sins of the whole world. This commission have I received of My Father—which I readily execute. He chiefly spoke of the Father, before His suffering; of His own glory, after it. Our Lord's receiving this commission, as Mediator, is not to be considered as the ground of His power to lay down and resume His life. For this He had in Himself, as having an original right to dispose thereof, antecedent to the Father's commission. But this commission was the reason why He thus used His power in laying down His life. He did it in obedience to His Father"—WESLEY.

Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also must I bring, and they shall hear My voice: and they shall become one flock, and one Shepherd. (Read also vers. 27-29.) Several flocks were often gathered into one fold. We are to be "one flock," the same relation to the "one Lord." But we shall not be gathered into one fold until we reach heaven. Now, the sheep are scattered. Jesus said, Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring; and they shall hear My voice, and they shall become one flock, one Shepherd. Not one fold, but one flock; many communions, but one Christ. It is said that Mr. Wesley once dreamt that he came to the gate of Paradise, and asked, "Have you any Churchmen here?" and they answered, "No." "Have you any Baptists here?" and they answered, "No." "Have you any Methodists here?" and they answered, "No." The dreamer was troubled: but he was not long left in pain, a voice from within said, "They are all Christians here."

Christ the Shepherd of the sheep.—He knows His own sheep by name. He calls them. He feeds them. He guides them. He protects them. He gives His life for them. He gives, not simply He gave. Life is still in Christ; from Christ; leading towards Christ. The little band of disciples gathered about Him when He spake this parable, expanded into a world-wide and all-embracing Church, one flock and one Shepherd. The two flocks, Jews and Gentiles, became one under the care of the one Shepherd. We look forward to the day when Christendom and heathendom will become one flock, owned by, fed by, the one Shepherd. The rule of Christ over human souls is an invisible rule; their acquaintanceship is mutual and blessedly real. Thrice wretched is he who turns away from the true Shepherd, and seeks guidance elsewhere.

19, 20. A division arose. Our word "schism." Alas, the divisions of Christendom have been a scandal and a weakness! The garment of our Lord was without seam, woven from the top throughout. So should the Church be.

21. These are not the words—"the word in the original takes in actions too"—WESLEY.

Madness o'erleaps itself. A demon, a madman—this Son of God who had wrought such wonders, spoken such words. He was also separating men.

22. It was the Feast of the Dedication—"instituted by Judas Maccabæus (1 Macc. 4. 59) when he purged and dedicated the altar and Temple after they had been polluted. So our Lord observed festivals, even of human appointment. Is it not, at least, innocent for us to do the same?"—WESLEY.

23. In Solomon's portico. "Josephus informs us, that when Solomon built the Temple, he filled up a part of the adjacent valley, and built a portico over it towards the east. This was a noble structure, supported by a wall four hundred cubits high; and continued even to the time of Albinus and Agrippa, which was several years after the death of Christ"—WESLEY.

"A greater than Solomon is here." He came to His own Temple, and the worshippers received Him not.

24. Tell us plainly. Were they sincere? He read their hearts.

26. Ye do not believe, because ye are not of My sheep—"because ye do not, will not, follow Me; because ye are proud, unholy, lovers of praise, lovers of the world, lovers of pleasures, not of God"—WESLEY.

27, 28, 29. My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me, etc. "Our Lord still alludes to the discourse He had had before this festival. As if He had said, My sheep are those who (1) hear My voice by faith; (2) are known, that is, approved, by Me, as loving Me; and (3) follow Me, keep My commandments, with a believing, loving heart. And to those who (1) truly believe, observe three promises annexed to three conditions, I give eternal life. He does not say, I will give, but I give: for 'he that believeth hath everlasting life.' Those whom (2) I know truly to love Me shall never perish, provided they abide in My love: (3) Those who follow Me, neither men nor devils can pluck out of My hand. My Father who hath, by an unchangeable decree, given Me all that believe, love, and obey, is greater than all in heaven or earth; and none is able to pluck them out of His hand"—WESLEY.

I give. What majesty, what consciousness of Divinity! He was never less than LORD. Eternally safe, because of God's power.

30. I and the Father are one—"not by consent of will only, but by unity of power, and consequently of nature. 'Are'—this word confutes Sabellius, proving the plurality of persons. 'One'—this word confutes Arius, proving the unity of nature in God. Never did any prophet before, from the beginning of the world, use any one expression of himself, which could possibly be so interpreted as this and other expressions were by all that heard our Lord speak. Therefore, if He was not God, He must have been the vilest of men"—WESLEY.

Such language must have startled the most stoical. "In this verse He calmly takes His seat upon the ETERNAL THRONE." Thou art the King of Glory, O Christ!

31. Their purpose to stone Him He met by calm argument (see ver. 23). Note the objection and answer (vers. 33, 34).

35. If He—"God—called them gods, unto whom the word of God came—that is, to whom God was then speaking. And the Scripture cannot be broken—that is, nothing which is written therein can be censured or rejected"—WESLEY.

36. Say ye of Him whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world. "This sanctification, whereby He is essentially the Holy One of God, is mentioned as prior to His mission, and, together with it, implies, Christ was God in the highest sense, infinitely superior to that wherein those judges were so called"—WESLEY.

The argument is from the less to the greater. All prophets were sanctified, how much more the Son of God.

37, 38. He is content to be judged by His actions.

38. That ye may know and believe. "In some, a more exact knowledge precedes, in others, it follows, faith. I am in the Father, and the Father in Me. I and the Father are one. These two sentences illustrate each other"—WESLEY.

39, 40. They sought to kill Him, but He quietly escaped. A man is immortal until his work is done. His day's work was not yet finished. The hour for the cross had not yet come. He went to the neighbourhood of Jordan—the river of Palestine. To the desert place where John baptized—"and gave so honourable a testimony of Him"—WESLEY.

There the Baptist pointed Him out to the multitude. (Ch. 1. 36.) There the testimony was given by the opening heavens and the Divine voice.

41. John did no miracle—"an honour reserved for Him, whose forerunner he was"—WESLEY.

But all things that John spake of this man were true. The miracle worker had arrived. John the herald had spoken truly, and must soon retire.

42. And many believed on Him there. Divine sovereignty overruled their malice.

CHAPTER XI.

WE have no desire to multiply difficulties. But it is useless in these days of magazines to assume that our hearers are innocent of doubts, ignorant of denials that block the path of scriptural investigation. If ever mysterious truths were accepted without questioning, they are not in our time. Reverence need not be destroyed by rational inquiry, and faith has no fear of earnest research. The miracles of Jesus would be inexplicable if they were not the miracles of Jesus. "Why should it be thought a thing incredible that God should raise the dead?" When we rightly see Jesus, we are prepared to listen with reverent attention to His teaching, and to watch with wise, calm wonder His deeds of mercy and mystery. The chapter begins with the statement that a certain man was sick, Lazarus of Bethany, of the village of Mary and her sister Martha. A few verses afterwards Jesus Christ is reported to have said, This sickness is not unto death. A moment or two later, Jesus said, Lazarus is dead. The apparent contradiction is explained by the miracle of the resurrection. These two words—"sick," "dead,"—are the keynotes of the narrative, and we all learn all too soon how they bridge the gulf of nearly two thousand years. Martha and Mary seem to be our sisters, because they went to the school of sorrow, in which school we are all learners. We all have to shake hands with pain; to walk sometimes with sorrow for our companion.

1. One Lazarus. "It is probable, Lazarus was younger than his sisters. Bethany is named the town of Mary and Martha, and Lazarus is mentioned after them (ver. 5). Ecclesiastical history informs us that Lazarus was now thirty years old, and that he lived thirty years after Christ's ascension"—WESLEY.

BETHANY.—Next only to the garden of agony, Bethany is the most sacred spot to stricken hearts. Bethlehem was the cradle of His infancy; Nazareth, the home of His childhood; Capernaum, the city of His manhood; Bethany, His retreat from the world. Jesus loved Lazarus and wept by his grave. Bethany, the village of Mary and her sister Martha, owes everything to association with Jesus Christ. In itself only a wild mountain hamlet, the last collection of human habitations before the desert hills which reach to Jericho. High in the distance are the Perræan mountains; the foreground is the deep descent to the Jordan valley. On the farther side of that dark abyss, Martha and Mary knew that Christ was abiding when they sent their messenger; up that long ascent they had often watched His approach—up that long ascent He came, when, outside the village, Martha and Mary met Him, and the Jews stood round weeping. Bethany is the home of the closing days of our Lord's life. From thence He made His triumphal entry into Jerusalem. Here He slept His last six nights of His earthly life. From the vicinity of Bethany, on the wooded slopes beyond the ridges of Olivet, He ascended to heaven, still seen to the moment of His being parted from His disciples, and carried up from their steadfast gaze, blessing them with uplifted hands.

2. It was that Mary who afterwards anointed, etc. "She was more known than her elder sister Martha, and as such is named before her"—WESLEY.

THE HOUSEHOLD.—The family, so far as we know, consisted only of Martha, Mary, and their brother Lazarus. It has been conjectured that Martha was a widow, that her husband was, or had been, Simon the leper; and that Lazarus is identical with the gentle and holy rabbi of that name mentioned in the Talmud. These conjectures may or may not be true. From the Gospels we learn that they were a family in easy circumstances, and of sufficient dignity and position to excite considerable attention, not only in the little village of Bethany, but even in Jerusalem. "Martha" was the unchanged native equivalent of "lady." "Mary" and "Lazarus" were Greek forms of the old Hebrew "Miriam" and "Eleazar." Martha, the elder sister, has always stood in the sanctified imagination of the Church as the type of activity. Bustling, energetic, impulsive, she seized the realities of life with both hands earnestly—this "busy, motherly Martha." Mary was as still, sedate, and reflective as Martha was bustling and energetic. Mary is the type of reflection. Calm, meek, devotional, contemplative, she sat and listened to the words of Jesus. Of Lazarus we have but few notices. Judging from his sisters' intense grief, we may infer that he was a gentle, loving brother; hence he was so beloved. It is distinctly stated that Jesus loved Lazarus, and a friend of Jesus was worthy of friendship. Perchance Lazarus was cast into much the same human mould as that of his beloved Lord, and that the friendship of Jesus for him had been formed on the same principles on which friendships are formed still—a similarity of disposition, and some mental and moral resemblances. They may have been like-minded, so far as a fallible nature and the nature of a stainless humanity could be assimilated. Gentle, retiring, amiable, forgiving, heavenly-minded Lazarus—an imperfect and shadowy, but still a faithful, reflection and transcript of his Incarnate Lord!

3. He whom Thou lovest is sick. What a lovely portrait, and "a most womanly appeal to His known affection." "Note—(1) There are some followers of Jesus for whom He hath a special kindness." (Ch. 13. 23.) "(2) It is no new thing for those whom He loves to be sick. (3) It is a great blessing, when we are sick, to have those about us who will pray for us. (4) There is great encouragement to prayer for the sick, when we have reason to believe they are those Christ loves"—HENRY.

4. This sickness is not to death, but for the glory of God. "The event of this sickness will not be death, in the usual sense of the word, a final separation of his soul and body, but a manifestation of the glorious power of God"—WESLEY.

This saying was "Sufficient for the moment as a preparation both for the sisters and the disciples"—MEYER.

7. Let us go into Judea—"from the country east of Jordan, whither He had retired some time before, when the Jews sought to stone Him. (Ch. 10. 39, 40)"—WESLEY.

8. The disciples objected to the journey, on the ground of danger. But He knew that His hour was not yet come.

9. Are there not twelve hours in the day? "The Jews always divided the space from sunrise to sunset, were the days longer or shorter, into twelve parts; so that the hours of their day were all the year the same in number, though much shorter in winter than in summer. If any man walk in the day, he stumbleth not—as if He had said, So there is such a space, a determinate time, which God has allotted Me. During that time, I stumble not, amidst all the snares that are laid for Me. Because he seeth the light of this world—and so I see the light of God surrounding Me"—WESLEY.

10. But if a man walk in the night—"if he have not light from God; if His providence does no longer protect him"—WESLEY.

"The duty of the day is the day of the duty." A Christian must not move until God points out the way. Then, like Luther going to Worms, he feels all is well.

11. Our friend Lazarus sleepeth. "This He spoke just when he died. 'Sleepeth'—such is the death of good men in the language of Heaven. But the disciples did not yet understand this language. And the slowness of our understanding makes the Scripture often descend to our barbarous manner of speaking"—WESLEY.

Those dying in their sleep angels kiss their breath away, say the rabbis. Remember the speaker is the PRINCE OF LIFE.

12. The disciples did not pierce beneath the surface of the word. Hence Christ speaks plainly (vers. 13–15).

16. Thomas in Hebrew, as Didymus in Greek, signifies a twin. With Him—"with Jesus, whom he supposed the Jews would kill. It seems to be the language of despair"—WESLEY.

Thomas is despondent, but he will not forsake his Master. He will die with Him. Jesus did not hurry to the smitten home. Sorrow has lessons to teach that nothing else can. Endurance is a virtue. "Love and a cross," says GOSSNER, "man cannot make the two rhyme, but it is thus that God always rhymes." Jesus helped them in His way, not in theirs. Prayer is always answered; not always, perhaps seldom, after our own fashion and desires. Of course there is mystery in sickness and death. But where mystery is God is. As one has said, "Lazarus died, Judas Iscariot lived." True. What then? Let the earth keep silence. Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right? Heaven will not be the home of the silences; earth is; but in heaven explanations will be given. "We shall know." Death is a comma, not a full stop. He that believeth hath everlasting life.

17. He had been in the tomb four days. If much is told, much left untold in this narrative of wonder, it leaves on the mind a symmetrical impression. Jesus, Martha, Mary, Thomas, Lazarus, the Jews, the mourners, are individual, natural, distinct. The miracle itself is the last of a series. The seven miracles of the ministry, which S. John relates, are the turning the water into wine, the healing of the nobleman's son, the healing of the impotent man at Bethesda, the miraculous feeding of five thousand, the walking on the sea, the opening of the eyes of one born blind, and the raising of Lazarus. The first and last of these miracles were wrought in the centre of the family, as if to give the hearthstone reconsecration, and bind together heaven and earth.

19. Many of the Jews had come. The high social position of the sisters attracted citizens of Jerusalem. "Possibly they wished to re-gain this family in His absence."

20. Hearing of His approach, Martha went and met Him.

Mary sat in the house—"probably not hearing what was said"—WESLEY.

Sorrow had lessons to teach the memorable sisters. Their Divine Friend led them through the gate of death to the house of life. He said, Our friend Lazarus is fallen asleep. Men have always thrown a veil over the grave by calling death a sleep. God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. Jesus said, I am the Resurrection and the Life. The Book says, "In God we live"; Jesus says, I am the Life. When His hour was come, our Lord went to the house of sadness. Martha met Him; Mary waited for Him. Just like the different dispositions. One thought had occupied their minds, and now found expression, If Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. Neither of the sisters says, "Our brother." Grief is a lonely thing. It always says, "My brother," "my mother," "my sister," "my father," "my friend" is dead.

21. If Thou hadst been here. "'If, if' is the universal cry of humanity. 'But, but' is the reply of Omnipotence. 'If,' sinful, when an expression of grief that will not be reconciled to the will of God. 'If,' warranted, when an expression of pain investigating the causes of suffering. 'If,' salutary, when an expression of humiliation before God on account of actual neglect"—LANGE.

22. Whatsoever thou wilt ask, God will give it thee—"so that she already believed He could raise him from the dead"—WESLEY.

23. Thy brother shall rise again. We are arrested by the simple grandeur of the scene. Lazarus was still her brother though death had separated them—

> "One family we dwell in Him,
> One Church, above, beneath,
> Though now divided by the stream,
> The narrow stream, of Death."

24. I know that he shall rise again at the last day. It is the resignation of disappointment. She half expected a present deliverance. Hence the answer which has been the world's comfort through two thousand years.

25. I am the Resurrection—"of the dead—and the Life—of the living. He that believeth on Me, though he die, yet shall he live—in life everlasting"—WESLEY.

Note the emphasis on the I. It is I, the ever-living, life-giving Saviour.

26. Whosoever liveth and believeth on Me shall never die. "This great work is like the sun among the planets." Faith believes what transcends reason, while still believing that reason is not contradicted. Death is a loss if there be no hereafter, but a gain if there be. "To die is gain" (Phil. 1. 21). "Were there no other, Christ is Providence"—JEAN PAUL. "Were there no other, Christ is Resurrection"—STIER.

27–32. Mark the individual traits of character in the sisters. Mary uses the same words, half in reproach and half in expectation, which her sister had used. (See ver. 21.)

32. She fell at His feet. "This Martha had not done. So she makes amends for her slowness in coming"—WESLEY.

33. He groaned. "So He restrained His tears; so He stopped them soon after (ver. 38). He troubled himself—an expression amazingly elegant, and full of the highest propriety. For the affections of Jesus were not properly passions, but voluntary emotions, which were wholly in His own power. And this tender trouble, which He now voluntarily sustained, was full of the highest order and reason"—WESLEY.

The Greek Litany contains the sentence, "By Thine unknown agonies." Bethany, Gethsemane, and Calvary were not far apart.

34. Where have ye laid Him? Omniscience need not ask for information. But we cannot penetrate the mystery of the union of the human and Divine. "It was necessary," says Dr. PLUMMER, "to His work that He should know of Lazarus' death; it was not necessary that He should know how long he had been buried, nor where he had been buried. (Comp. 1. 48; 4. 18.) Similarly, S. Peter's prison-gate 'opens of its own accord'; Mary's house-door does not. (Acts 12. 10–16.)

35. Jesus wept—"out of sympathy with those who were in tears all around Him, as well as from a deep sense of the misery sin had brought upon human nature"—WESLEY.

It has been sometimes noted, that although Jesus is said to have wept, yet He was never, according to the record, seen to smile. The argument from silence is not a safe one. We can sympathise with the child who said in answer to this, Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto Me," and they would not come if He had not smiled. He who saw a beauty in every wayside flower, and heard a sermon on providence in the twitter of every tiny bird, was awake to the inspirations of life's joyous side. We know that He went to the marriage. We know, too, that He did not neglect the funeral. He may or may not have laughed. He did weep. He thirsted. He hungered. He groaned. He slept. He shed tears by the grave of Lazarus. He wept aloud over Jerusalem. Tears fell from Him at one time; at another He wept with the sorrow of lamentation. "The tears of the text," says DONNE, "are as a spring, a well, belonging to one household, the sisters of Lazarus. The tears over Jerusalem are as a river belonging to a whole country. The tears upon the cross are as the sea, belonging to the whole world." (Read Luke 19. 41; 22. 44; Heb. 5. 7.) Jesus wept is the shortest, and one of the most significant verses in the Bible.

36. The Jews therefore said, Behold how He loved him. "We thank you, O ye friends from Jerusalem! for this testimony to His human tenderness"—Dr. BROWN. Even a mother's love is but a reflection of the love of Christ. All our noblest faculties have dropped out of heaven.

37. Could not this person have even caused that this man should not have died?—"yet they never dreamed that He could raise him again. What a strange mixture of faith and unbelief!"—WESLEY.

38. It was a cave—"so Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and their wives, except Rachel, were buried in the grave of Machpelah. (Gen. 49. 29–31.) These caves were commonly in rocks, which abounded in that country, either hollowed by nature, or hewn by art. And the entrance was shut up with a great stone, which sometimes had a monumental inscription"—WESLEY.

39. Lord, by this time he stinketh. "Thus did reason and faith struggle together"—WESLEY.

Occurring only in S. John, the question has been pressed over and over again, Why did not the other Evangelists notice so wonderful an exhibition of Divine power? This may be explained — (1) by the characters of the Gospels, each one of which being a particular view of the life of Jesus, uses only such material as suits its purpose; (2) by historical circumstances, which made it seem advisable to the Evangelists, who wrote earlier, to omit from their records the history, probably because it needlessly awakened fanaticism; (3) by the fact that the other Evangelists concerned themselves chiefly with our Lord's Galilean ministry. Not one of the Evangelists proposes to give an exhaustive account of the parables, discourses, and miracles of Jesus. If this miracle differs in degree, it does not differ in principle from the corresponding miracles recorded by the other writers. The raising of Jairus' daughter recorded in Matt. 9. 18, 19, 23–26; Mark 5. 22, 24, 33–43; Luke 8. 41, 42, 49–56; and the raising of the widow's son recorded by S. Luke only (ch. 7. 11–16). Thus the three awakenings have a natural gradation. The child on his deathbed in the hushed circle of friends; the youth on his bier in presence of a funeral procession of acquaintances; the man in his grave in the midst of the Jews. One miracle may seem to us greater, more marvellous than another, but power belongeth unto God. The Lord of the violet is the Lord of the rose. Small and great are relative to earth, they may not be relative to heaven. The question to ask is, Was the miracle worthy of Jesus Christ? Regard what He is, then mark what He says, and what He does. "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways My ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts. I am the Lord."

40. Said I not. "It appears by this, that Christ had said more to Martha than is before recorded"—WESLEY.

41. Jesus lifted up His eyes—"not as if He applied to His Father for assistance; there is not the least show of this. He wrought the miracle with an air of absolute sovereignty, as the Lord of life and death. But it was as if He had said, I thank Thee that, by the disposals of Thy providence, Thou hast granted My desire, in this remarkable opportunity of exerting My power, and showing forth Thy praise"—WESLEY.

Father, I thank Thee—"words expressing confidence, and referring probably to earlier prayers"—LANGE. It has been said that the next verse furnishes the key to all the Father's responses, and the proof that their will is one. It is also the interpretation our Lord put on His Divine deeds among men. (See ver. 42.)

43. He cried with a loud voice—"that all who were present might hear—Lazarus, come forth. Jesus called him out of the tomb as easily as if he had been not only alive, but awake also"—WESLEY.

44. And he came forth, bound hand and foot with graveclothes—"which were wrapped round each hand and each foot. And his face was wrapped about with a napkin—if the Jews buried as the Egyptians did, the face was not covered with it, but it only went round the forehead, and under the chin; so that he might easily see his way"—WESLEY.

The same Divine Voice that said "Be light," and light was, said, Come forth, and he came forth. S. John does not tell us what himself or the other apostles thought or said. The miracle is declared, but not detailed. We know that Lazarus rose; we know not how. We have no picture of the joy with which the sisters welcomed their brother. This is left to imagination—

> "When Lazarus left his charnel cave,
> And home to Mary's house returned;
> Was this demanded—if he yearned
> To hear her weeping by his grave:
> Where wert thou, brother, those four days?
> There lives no record of reply.
> Which, telling what it is to die,
> Had surely added praise to praise.
> From every house the neighbours met,
> The streets were filled with joyful sound,
> A solemn gladness even crown'd
> The purple brows of Olivet.
> Behold a man raised up by Christ!
> The rest remaineth unreveal'd;
> He told it not; or something seal'd
> The lips of that Evangelist."

Little is told us concerning another world, not enough to satisfy curiosity, but enough to sustain courage. "Death and his brother Sleep" have been locked hand in hand. Death is destroyed, and immortality revealed and assured in Jesus Christ.

45. Many believed on Him. "And so the Son of God was glorified, according to what our Lord had said (ver. 4)"—WESLEY.

46. But some of them went to the Pharisees. "What a dreadful confirmation of that weighty truth, 'If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead'!"—WESLEY.

47. What do we?—"What? Believe. Yea, but death yields to the power of Christ sooner than infidelity"—WESLEY.

48. All men will believe—"and receive Him as the Messiah. And this will give such umbrage to the Romans, that they will come and subvert both our place—Temple—and nation—both our Church and State. Were they really afraid of this, or was it a fair colour only? Certainly it was no more; for they could not but know, that He that raised the dead was able to conquer the Romans"—WESLEY.

And so cowardice made them cruel.

49. That year—"that memorable year in which Christ was to die. It was the last and chief of Daniel's seventy weeks, the fortieth year before the destruction of Jerusalem, and was celebrated for various causes in the Jewish history. Therefore that year is so peculiarly mentioned. Caiaphas was the high priest both before and after it. Ye know nothing—he reproves their slow deliberations in so clear a case"—WESLEY.

50. It is expedient, that one man should die for the people. "So God overruled his tongue; for he spake not of himself—by his own spirit only, but by the spirit of prophecy. And thus he gave unawares as clear a testimony to the priestly, as Pilate did to the kingly, office of Christ"—WESLEY.

52. That He might gather into one Church all the children of God that were scattered abroad—"through all ages and nations"—WESLEY.

Caiaphas was unconsciously a prophet of God.

53. They took counsel. "The beginning of the end. The resurrection of Lazarus was connected with the death of Jesus"—WESLEY.

54. Jesus walked no more openly. "Note our Lord's prudence"—WESLEY.

55. The Passover of the Jews was at hand. "At this feast He became our Passover. Theirs was the shadow; ours the substance"—WESLEY.

Many went up, to purify themselves—"that they might remove all hindrances to their eating the Passover"—WESLEY.

56. They sought therefore for Jesus. His enemies cannot banish the thought of Him from their minds, and His friends will not.

57. The chief priests and the Pharisees had given commandment. The high priest issued a decree of arrest, and, says HENGSTENBERG, "on this decree of arrest Judas acted, and may have silenced his conscience by pretending obedience to the Church."

CHAPTER XII.

Vers. 1-11. THE FEAST AT BETHANY.—1. Six days before the Passover—"namely, on the Sabbath; that which was called by the Jews 'the great Sabbath.' This whole week was anciently termed, 'The great and holy week.' Jesus came—from Ephraim. (Ch. 11. 54)"—WESLEY.

2. "It seems, Martha was a person of some figure, from the great respect which was paid to her and her sister, in visits and condolences on Lazarus' death, as well as from the costly ointment mentioned in the next verse. And probably it was at their house our Lord and His disciples lodged, when He returned from Jerusalem to Bethany, every evening of the last week of His life, upon which He was now entered"—WESLEY.

3. Then Mary, taking a pound of ointment. There were two persons who poured ointment on Christ; one, toward the beginning of His ministry, at or near Nain (Luke 7. 37, etc.), the other, six days before His last Passover, at Bethany, the account of which is given here, as well as by S. Matthew and S. Mark.

This narrative must be compared with the parallels in S. Matthew and S. Mark.

S. MATTHEW.	S. MARK.	S. JOHN.
Ye know that after two days the Passover cometh, and the Son of Man is delivered up. Then were gathered together the chief priests and the elders, and they took counsel to kill Him. But they said not during the feast. Now when Jesus was in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, there came unto Him a woman having an alabaster cruse of exceeding precious ointment, and she poured it upon His head as He sat at meat.	Now after two days was the feast of the Passover, and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might kill Him. But they said not during the feast. And while He was in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, as He sat at meat there came a woman having an alabaster cruse of ointment, of spikenard, very costly, and she brake the cruse, and poured it over His head.	Jesus, therefore, six days before the Passover, came to Bethany, where Lazarus was, whom Jesus raised from the dead. So they made Him a supper there, and Martha served; but Lazarus was one of them that sat at meat with Him. Mary, therefore, took a pound of ointment of spikenard, very precious, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped His feet with her hair, and the house was filled with the odour of the ointment.

S. John gives the true note of time, six days before the Passover. S. Matthew and S. Mark disregard time for the sake of its connection with the treachery of Judas, which was called out by it. The Sabbath day was spent in quiet, in preparation for the tragic events that were near at hand, and on the evening they made Him a supper. Reverent fancy may compare the six days' work of creation with the six days' events that preceded the cross, the symbol of our redemption. S. Matthew and S. Mark say that this feast was given in the house of Simon the leper, a name which does not occur elsewhere. "Who, then, was this Simon the leper?" asks FARRAR. "That he was no longer a leper is of course certain, for otherwise he could not have been living in his own house, or mingling in general society. Had he then been cleansed by Jesus? and, if so, was this one cause of the profound belief in Him which prevailed in that little household, and of the tender affection with which they always welcomed Him? or again, was Simon now dead? We cannot answer these questions, nor are there sufficient data to enable us to decide whether he was the father of Martha and Mary and Lazarus, or, as some have conjectured, whether Martha was his widow, and the inheritor of his house." In an earlier period of our Lord's ministry a similar scene had been enacted. "One of the Pharisees desired Him that He would eat with him. And He entered into the Pharisee's house, and sat down to meat. And behold a woman which was in the city, a sinner, and when she knew that He was sitting at meat in the Pharisee's house, she brought an alabaster cruse of ointment, and standing behind at His feet, weeping, she began to wet His feet with her tears, and wiped them with the hair of her head, and kissed His feet, and anointed them with the ointment." This was an unknown woman; she was a sinner, an outcast from society. Mary of Bethany has a name; was well known; greatly honoured; probably she had often heard of the deed of the unknown sister. Such a remarkable act had entered the tradition of the scattered disciples. Mary of Bethany is the central object of this picture. But others played an important and natural part. Martha served. And there is a beauty of service as well as of self-forgetfulness; of cost and endurance. There could have been no feast without Martha. Lazarus sat at the table. He had been the recipent of restored life. Wonder and gratitude and awe would be marked in his face and demeanour, as he sat in the presence of the Lord and Giver of Life.

4. But one of His disciples saith, Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor? Disciples complained. According to S. Matthew the disciples had indignation. According to S. Mark, some had indignation. According to S. John, Judas Iscariot one of His disciples. The murmuring originated with Judas, and became contagious. S. John records Christ's vindication of the womanly deed, but he does not mention the promise that the deed should be proclaimed in all the world. Mary anointed Christ in silence; His speech defended her, and in the records and memories and affections of Christendom she hath an earthly immortality, in Christ's presence an eternal reward.

5. Three hundred pence. "With the change in values, three hundred shillings would be nearer the mark"—WESLEY.

6. The bag—"in which the funds of the small company were kept. The word bare may carry in itself the idea of misuse. Our Lord was sufficiently poor to receive the gifts of friends and followers"—WESLEY.

Let her alone, etc. (R.V. "Suffer her to keep it against the day of My burying." The simplest interpretation of this is, "Let her preserve what remains of it, not however to be sold for the poor, but to be used for My burial, which is near at hand"—C. B.

7. Against the day of My burial—"which now draws nigh"—WESLEY.

8. For the poor always ye have with you; but Me ye have not always. (Comp. Deut. 15. 11.) Every word of this verse occurs in the first two Gospels, though not quite in the same order. Here the emphasis is on "the poor," there on "always." The striking originality of the saying, and the large claim which it makes, are evidence of its origin from Him who spake as never man spake"—C. B. "It is remarkable," says WESTCOTT, "that the promise of the future record of the act of love (Matt. 26. 13; Mark 14. 9) is omitted by the one Evangelist who gives the name of the woman who showed this devotion to her Master."

9. Much people (R.V. "the common people"). Large caravans would be coming up from the Passover, and the news would quickly spread through the shifting crowds, who were already on the alert (ch. 11. 55) about Jesus, and were now anxious to see Lazarus"—C. B.

10. The chief priests consulted how to kill Lazarus also. "Here is the plain reason why the other Evangelists, who wrote while Lazarus was living, did not relate his story"—WESLEY.

Nothing is here said about the Pharisees (comp. ch. 11. 47, 57), who are, however, not necessarily excluded. Put Lazarus also to death. "These repeated references to the raising of Lazarus (ch. 11. 45, 47; 12. 1, 9, 10, 17) greatly strengthen the historical evidence for the miracle. They are quite inconsistent with the theory either of a misunderstanding or of deliberate fraud"—C. B.

11. Many of the Jews went away and believed on Jesus. Going away is indefinite, but it carries with it the idea of forsaking the priestly party. The open-minded were convinced of the reality of the miracle, and in some measure of the claims of Christ.

Vers. 14–19. THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRY INTO JERUSALEM.—"In this incident again S. John's narrative is parallel to that of the Synoptists, but more exact in details. The Synoptists say nothing of the rest at Bethany; and it appears at first sight as if they placed the triumphal entry on the same day as the journey from Jericho. (Matt. 20. 29 ff. and parallels.) And yet in each case there is the sign of a break. (Matt. 21. 1; Luke 19. 29.) And the return to Bethany noticed by S. Mark (ch. 11. 11) suggests at least that village for the starting-point. The same passage of S. Mark shows that the expulsion of the traders took place on the next day. So that it may be reasonably conjectured that the entry did not take place till the afternoon, when the Lord had time only to regard the whole state of things without doing any special work"—WESTCOTT.

12. The next day—"on Sunday. Who were come to the feast—so that this multitude consisted chiefly of Galileans, not men of Jerusalem"—WESLEY.

"The whole narrative must be compared with Matt. 21. 1 ff.; Mark 11. 1 ff.; Luke 19. 29 ff., in order to gain a sense of the tumultuous excitement of the scene. At last Christ yielded, on the eve of the Passion, to the enthusiasm of the people (ch. 6. 15)"—WESTCOTT.

Vers. 13–15.—The road from Bethany to Jerusalem wound through rich plantations of palm trees, and fruit and olive gardens. Eastern gardens are not flower gardens, nor private gardens, but the orchards, vineyards, and fig enclosures round a town. The way would be crowded with pilgrims going to the feast. Amongst these would be many who had witnessed His miracles, and heard His discourses. The voice of ancient prophecy had declared that her King would come to Zion, meek and sitting on an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass; and the hour for its fulfilment had now come. The triumphal entry was, therefore, the outcome of popular enthusiasm and national hope. The stream that followed Him from Bethany was met by a second, issuing from the Holy City, coming forth to meet the restorer of Lazarus. The two streams flowed together into Jerusalem. As they approached the descent of the Mount of Olives, their feelings found expression in the prophetic language of the Psalms, and with loud hosannas they glorified God, and uttered songs of welcome to the Son of David. Only a few Pharisees murmured. Soon the magnificent city, as if rising from an abyss, burst into view, with its background of gardens and suburbs, and its glorious Temple tower. The crowd uttered their emotions of gladness. He paused to weep. They saw only the outside of the glorious vision, the merely passing present. He beheld things as they are; and foresaw the future that had in it disgrace and doom.

15. Fear not—"for His meekness forbids fear, as well as the end of His coming"—WESLEY.

16. These things His disciples understood not at first. "The design of God's providential dispensations is seldom understood at first. We ought therefore to believe, though we understand not; and to give ourselves up to the Divine disposal. The great work of faith is, to embrace those things which 'we know not now,' but 'shall know hereafter.' When He had been glorified—at His ascension"—WESLEY.

17. When He called Lazarus out of the tomb. "How admirably does the apostle express as well the greatness of the miracle, as the facility with which it was wrought! The easiness of the Scripture style, on the most grand occurrences, is more sublime than all the pomp of orators"—WESLEY.

18. The multitude went to meet Him, because they heard—"from those who had seen the miracle. So in a little time both joined together to go before and to follow Him"—WESLEY.

19. Perceive ye, etc.—"the exaggerated expression of their chagrin, which in this Divine epic is brought into strong contrast with the triumph of Jesus. Compare a similar exaggeration from a similar cause (ch. 3. 26), 'All men come to Him.' After this confession of helplessness the Pharisees appear no more alone; the reckless hierarchy help them on to the catastrophe"—C. B.

Vers. 20-33. THE PETITION OF THE GREEKS AND THE VOICE FROM HEAVEN.—20. Certain Greeks—"a prelude of the Gentile Church. That these were circumcised does not appear: but they came up on purpose to worship the God of Israel"—WESLEY.

"The word is translated 'Gentiles' (ch. 7. 35). Care must be taken to distinguish in the New Testament between Hellenes or 'Greeks,' i.e. born Gentiles, who may or may not have become either Jewish proselytes or Christian converts, and Hellenistæ or 'Grecians,' as our Bible renders the word, i.e. Jews who spoke Greek and not Aramaic. Neither word occurs in the Synoptists. Hellenes are mentioned here (ch. 7. 35), and frequently in the Acts and in S. Paul's Epistles. Hellenistæ are mentioned only in Acts 6. 1 and 9. 29"—C. B.

21. These came to Philip, of Bethsaida in Galilee. "Perhaps they used to lodge there, in their journey to Jerusalem; or they might believe a Galilean would be more ready to serve them herein than a Jew. Sir—they spake to Him as to one they were little acquainted with. We would see Jesus—a modest request. They could scarce expect that He would now have time to talk with them"—WESLEY.

Wise men from the East came to the cradle of King Jesus; these Greeks from the West came to His cross. These "Emissaries from the West" opened the kingdom of heaven to Gentile believers. They were the first in that long line which reaches to our own time. We Westerns came to Jesus that day in the person of these representative men. An interesting tradition, but one on which we can lay no stress, says that they were emissaries from Abgarus V., king of Edessa, who, having been made aware of the miracles of Jesus and of the dangers to which He was now exposed, sent these emissaries to offer Him an asylum in His dominions. The legend adds, that though Jesus declined the offer, He rewarded the faith of Abgarus by writing him a letter, and healing him of a sickness. The tradition may be worthless, but the underlying truth is important. Hospitals, asylums, and ministries to the sick are born of the spirit which Christ infused into society. Indeed, the continental nations call the hospital "the Guest-house of God." S. John does not tell us who these Greeks were, why they sought Jesus, or why they came to Philip in particular. The unwritten in the Bible is very significant. Philip did not at once prefer their request to Jesus. He went and consulted his fellow-townsman, Andrew. He was unwilling without further counsel to grant or to refuse the strange request. Andrew and Philip appear in connection again (ch. 1. 44; 6. 7, 8; comp. Mark 3. 18). Andrew takes the first place. Perhaps at the time our Lord was in the interior of the Temple, into which no Gentiles dared to intrude. The Court of the Gentiles was divided from the inner square of the Temple by a stone fence, bearing, upon pillars placed at regular distances, the following words in Greek and Latin: "No alien must pass within the fence around the Temple and the Court. If anyone be caught doing so, he must blame himself for the death that will follow." The words, "We would see Jesus," spoken by the Greeks to Philip, have been regarded as an expression of the desire of the whole heathen world. It is the great missionary text. The world needs Jesus Christ, its Lord, who will one day come to be its Judge, and to that need He responds in His cross.

23. The hour is come, that the Son of Man should be glorified—"with the Father, and in the sight of every creature. But He must suffer first"—WESLEY.

The hour is come. At first Christ's coming was predicted. Ages waited. Then came the fulness of the time. Now the "hour" of His agony approaches; but He speaks of His glorification. After Good Friday comes Easter Day; after the night, the morning; after storm, sunshine; after winter, spring. There is another meaning implied rather than expressed. The Western world was now seeking Him. His own nation was rejecting Him, but the world was His. He made it; He redeemed it. His glorification at the right hand of God could not, however, be reached except by the way of the cross. For Him, as for us, was it true, "No cross, no crown." He illustrates by the parable of the grain of wheat. Life springs out of decay and death. Nature is a great preacher of spiritual truth. All that is best and truest and noblest in the life of eighteen centuries comes to us through Jesus Christ. Men perish; times change; dynasties are overthrown—but Christ is King of the ages.

24. Unless a grain of wheat die. "The late resurrection of Lazarus gave our Lord a natural occasion of speaking on this subject.

And, agreeable to His infinite knowledge, He singles out, from among so many thousands of seeds, almost the only one that dies in the earth; and which, therefore, was an exceeding proper similitude, peculiarly adapted to the purpose for which He uses it. The like is not to be found in any other grain, except millet and the large bean"—WESLEY.

These guests at the feast were to see the cross succeeding the triumphal entry, and He presents to their reflection beforehand the solution of the mystery, and a relief to its offence, in His words concerning the grain of wheat. Thus in a way in which no teacher had ever spoken He explains to them His system. The disciples with the Greeks, and the Greeks with the disciples, expect after the Hosanna still greater things, His universal glorification; and the Lord tells them, "Yea, verily the hour is come, but My glorification will proceed differently from your thoughts of it. As King, rather as the Saviour of all people, shall I soon be glorified, and deeper still, as the Son of Man, the universal and central Man, the Second Adam. But only by My dying will the Divine energy of My humanity be set free, and exerted for all mankind"—STIER. The civilisation of the Greeks has been defined as uniting in itself these characteristics—high perfection of the intellect and imagination, displaying itself in all the various forms of art and poetry, literature and philosophy — restless activity of mind and body, finding its exercise in athletic games, or in subtle disputations—love of the beautiful, quick perception, indefatigable inquiry. Death to them was a horror, a disharmony. Christ shows them that fuller life comes through death, glory through sacrifice, first by an example from nature (ver. 24), showing how the world is a great parable of God; then in the experience of discipleship (ver. 25); and lastly, and above all, in the Lord's own work (ver. 27). The Greek fear of death was reproved by the annual miracle of the grain of wheat. Selfishness is unworthy and unwise. We lose by retaining, and gain by surrendering.

25. He that loveth his life—"more than the will of God—shall lose it—eternally—and he that hateth his life—in comparison of the will of God—shall preserve it"—WESLEY.

26. Let him follow Me—"by hating his life. And where I am—in heaven. If any man serve Me thus, him will the Father honour"—WESLEY.

27. Now is My soul troubled. "He had various foretastes of His passion. And what shall I say—not, What shall I choose? For His heart was fixed in choosing the will of His Father; but He laboured for utterance. The two following clauses, Save Me from this hour—for this cause I came—into the world; 'for' the sake of this hour of suffering, seems to have glanced through His mind in one moment. But human language could not so express it"—WESLEY.

28. Father, glorify Thy name—"whatever I suffer. Now the trouble was over. I have glorified it—by Thy entrance into this hour. And I will glorify it—by Thy passing through it"—WESLEY.

These words have been interpreted in two different modes—(1) Shall I say, Father, save Me from this hour? as if it were a reflective monologue, instead of an address to the Father. (2) A veritable prayer, the prelude of Gethsemane. Our Lord lets us know His feelings. Pain, tears, blood, death, were to Him what they are to us. Compare the prayer in Gethsemane (Matt. 26. 39), and the prayers in the Psalms (ch. 6. 3, 4; 25. 17; 40. 12, 13; 69. 1). Gladness and sadness are interwoven. In the triumphal entry here; after the high priestly prayer; at the Supper (ch. 13. 31). Something more than momentary shrinking from death was in this great tragic grief of Jesus. The place whereon thou standest is holy ground. Let us be thankful that He came so near to us.

29. The multitude who stood, and heard—"a sound, but not the distinct words. In the most glorious revelations there may remain something obscure, to exercise our faith. Said it thundered—thunder did frequently attend a voice from heaven. Perhaps it did so now"—WESLEY.

The voice of God declares that the sublime prayer which had resulted from so great a conflict was answered. Divine voices are only intelligible to those who have susceptibility. Some regard it as natural; some as a Divine voice speaking in uninterpretable words; a few understood its message. A Divine voice accredited to Jesus at the Baptism and Transfiguration. The New Testament has its voices. (Acts 9. 7; 10. 13, 15.) Josephus records them. The "take read" of S. Augustine's conversion is a not remote parallel. In sublime anticipation the Saviour beholds the setting up of His mediatorial kingdom (vers. 31–36). All things shall gravitate to Christ.

31. Now—"this moment. And from this moment Christ thirsted more than ever, till His baptism was accomplished. Is the judgment of this world — that is, Now is the judgment given concerning it, whose it shall be. Now shall the prince of this world—Satan, who had gained possession of it by sin and death—be cast out—that is, judged, condemned, 'cast out' of his possession, and out of the bounds of Christ's kingdom"—WESLEY.

32. Lifted up from the earth. "This is an Hebraism, which signifies dying. Death in general is all that it usually imported; but our Lord made use of this phrase, rather than others that were equivalent, because it so well suited the particular manner of His death. I will draw all men—Gentiles, as well as Jews.

And those who follow My drawings Satan shall not be able to keep"—WESLEY.

THE ATTRACTION OF THE CROSS.—I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Myself. Here is the triumph of defeat. If we could have stood around the cross we should have heard the bystanders say, "All is over; the end has come." That end was a beginning. We may not judge by appearances. Defeat is often victory; failure success. He was lifted up upon the cross, before the gaze of Jew, Greek, and Roman. He rose from the dead, and ascended into heaven. For nigh upon two thousand years He has been lifted up before the gaze of the world. His drawing is an attraction, but not an enforcement. As in the days of His flesh, so now He has to say, "Ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life." "Christ, by His cross, will draw to Himself, not only men of all classes and climes, but all human interests and resources, all commerce, all enterprise, all art and science, all wealth and power in the world"—JACOBUS. Wyclif was burnt, and his ashes carried by the river to the sea. Wesley was persecuted, and by many rejected. To-day we enjoy the liberty Wyclif bought so dear; and twenty-five millions revere Wesley's name. Thus the truth wins its widening way. The crucified Saviour is to be the world's Lord and Master.

34. How sayest thou, The Son of Man must be lifted up—"how can these things be reconciled? Very easily. He first dies, and then abideth for ever. Who is this Son of Man—Is He the Christ?"—WESLEY.

35. Then Jesus said to them — "not answering them directly, but exhorting them to improve what they had heard already. The light—I and My doctrine"—WESLEY.

36. The children of light—"the children of God; wise, holy, happy"—WESLEY.

Walk while ye have the light, that darkness overtake you not. Now is sometimes now or never. Within forty years of the time our Lord spake these words, Jerusalem and the Temple were destroyed. Thus, literally, was the word fulfilled. But it is always fulfilling itself in the moral and spiritual life of men and women, girls and boys. He who would walk in darkness cannot really do so; he stumbles and falls. Progress is possible while the light shines. He came as a Light into the world, but men loved darkness rather than light. Light streams from Christ upon the road we have to travel. The rays of the Sun of Righteousness fall on the path. How impressive are these farewell words of Jesus!

37. Though He had done so many miracles before them—"so that they could not but see them"—WESLEY.

38. The arm of the Lord—"the power of God, manifested by Christ, in His preaching, miracles, and work of redemption"—WESLEY.

39. Therefore now they could not believe—"that is, by the just judgment of God, for their obstinacy and wilful resistance of the truth, they were at length so left to the hardness of their hearts, that neither the miracles nor doctrine of our Lord could make any impression upon them"—WESLEY.

41. When he saw His glory—"Christ's. (Isa. 6. 1, etc.) And it is there expressly said to be the glory of the Lord, Jehovah, the supreme God"—WESLEY.

44. Jesus said with a loud voice. "This which follows to the end of the chapter is, with S. John, the epilogue of our Lord's public discourses, and a kind of recapitulation of them. Believeth not on Me — not on Me alone. But also on Him that sent Me—because the Father hath sent the Son, and because He and the Father are one"—WESLEY.

45. And he that seeth Me—"by the eye of faith"—WESLEY.

47. I judge him not—"not now. For I am not now come to judge the world—see, Christ came to save even them that finally perish! Even these are a part of that world which He lived and died to save"—WESLEY.

50. His commandment—"kept — is life everlasting—that is, the way to it, and the beginning of it"—WESLEY.

"With this the first main division of the Gospel ends. Christ's revelation of HIMSELF to the world in His ministry is concluded. The Evangelist has set before us the testimony to the Christ, the work of the Christ, and the judgment respecting the work, which has ended in a conflict, and the conflict has reached a climax. We have reached the beginning of the end."

CHAPTER XIII.

"WE now enter upon the second main division of the Gospel. The Evangelist has given us thus far a narrative of Christ's ministry, presented to us in a series of typical scenes—ch. 1. 18–12. 50. He goes on to set forth the issues of Christ's ministry (chaps. 13–20.). The last chapter (ch. 21) forms the epilogue, balancing the first eighteen verses (ch. 1. 1–18), which form the prologue. The second main division of the Gospel, like the first, falls into three parts — (1) the inner glorification of Christ in His last discourses (chaps. 13–17); (2) the outer glorification of Christ in His passion (ch. 18, 19); (3) the victory completed in the Resurrection (ch. 20)"—C. B.

1. Before the feast—"namely, on Wednesday in the Paschal week. Having loved His own—His apostles. Loved them to the end—of His life"—WESLEY.

The narrative of the feet-washing is a page of contrasts.

DEATH CONFRONTS THE PRINCE OF LIFE.—Jesus knew that His hour was come—"the years of the ministry were closing. The Prince of Life must die. Strange that the Author and Giver of life should lay down His own. His hour was come. There are hours in our lives in which life is more intense: weeks, months, years of experience are crowded in them. We call them turning-points, decisive moments. When thinking and purposing are over, these must merge themselves into action or endurance, perhaps both. Such hours were those our Lord was now spending. Yet they did not stand alone. Ages prepared the way for the coming of Christ. The years of the ministry were closing. The Author and Giver of life will lay down His own. The hour was come that He should depart. Death to Him was only a departure. What's in a name? Much. Everything. A name is a thing revealed. It requires genius to pierce to the heart of a thing, and name it rightly. We are all tyrannised over by names. Death is a word that comes to us clothed with terror. Departure is tenderer, more soothing. In itself death is but the angel of God, sealing up the springs of life. But we are less fearful when this angel changes his name. Moses the lawgiver and Elijah the reformer, who came down from heaven to talk of our Saviour's going there, spake of His exodus, His departure. From this world to the next He Himself journeyed. "The exact word used," says WESTCOTT, "is only used here in this connection. It marks the transference from one sphere to another. (Comp. 1 John 3. 14.) Death for Christ, and in Him for the Christian, is not an interruption of being, but a change of the mode of being, a going to the Father, to His Father and ours." On the cross He robed Himself to enter the King's presence-chamber.

2. Having now—"probably now first"—WESLEY.

3. Jesus knowing—"though conscious of His own greatness, thus humbled Himself"—WESLEY.

To all outward appearance Christ was destitute. He had no emblems of royalty. Satan, Judas, and the priests were plotting against Him, and about to take His life. But Jesus knew that the Father had given all things into His hands, knew that He was come from God, and going back to God. So strangely were misery and majesty, poverty and princeliness, united.

4. Layeth aside His garments—"that part of them which would have hindered Him"—WESLEY.

5. Into the basin. "A large vessel was usually placed for this very purpose, wherever the Jews supped"—WESLEY.

This is the contrast of contrasts—the Divine Christ abasing Himself to the lowest servitude. The disciples had striven, perhaps were now at that moment striving, as to who should be the greatest. An act of service was to be performed. They will not acknowledge that one is greater than the rest; but He will bow to the lowliest ministry.

6. Coming to Simon Peter—this disciple, with a too ready tongue obeying a too hasty purpose, said, Thou shalt never wash my feet. His question was prompted by reverence—Dost Thou wash my feet? The emphasis is on Thou and my—Thou whom we have called "Master and "Lord."

7. What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter. "We do not now know perfectly any of His works, either of creation, providence, or grace. It is enough that we can love and obey Him 'now,' and that we shall 'know hereafter'"—WESLEY.

8. If I wash thee not—"if thou dost not submit to My will—thou hast no part with Me: thou art not My disciple. In a more general sense, it may mean, If I do not wash thee in My blood, and purify thee by My Spirit, thou canst have no communion with Me, nor any share in the blessings of My kingdom"—WESLEY.

S. Peter's resolve was marked by self-will. Thou shalt never wash my feet. Never, Peter? Christ echoes the word in a tone of regretful tenderness—Never, do you say? But if I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me. A light flashed across his mind, and he cried, Lord, if that be so, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head. This prayer was marked by hastiness. Before he did not reach Christ's purpose, now he goes beyond it. It is the same spirit which prompted him to pray, "Bid me come unto Thee on the water," and to boast, "Though all men should be offended because of Thee, yet will I never be offended." That never! His biography might be written around that word.

9. Lord, not my feet only. "How fain would man be wiser than God! Yet this was well-meant, though ignorant earnestness"—WESLEY.

10. And so ye, having been already cleansed, need only to wash your feet—"that is, to walk holy and undefiled"—WESLEY.

11. For He knew him that should betray Him. For Judas the feet-washing was a test. Around that table he gathered. He submitted to the washing, although his heart was full of evil thoughts. May we not read the act as Judas' last chance? A superhuman love was saying to him, "Will you be thus treacherous? Mark how I am submitting Myself. This is a slave's work I do for you. Why that treachery? Judas, abandon it."

12. So when He had washed their feet. For all the disciples the feet-washing was a gentle rebuke. Ye call Me Master and Lord, and so I am; but I have washed your feet. I, the Master, am doing what you, the servants, have refused to do.

13. Ye call me Master and Lord, and ye say well. He was never less than Lord. Though He humbled Himself, he had the mien of a king.

14. Ye ought also to wash one another's feet. "And why did they not? Why do we not read of any one apostle ever washing the feet of any other? Because they understood their Lord better. They knew He never designed that this should be literally taken. He designed to teach them the great lesson of humble love, as well as to confer inward purity upon them. And hereby He teaches us (1) in every possible way to assist each other in attaining that purity; (2) to wash each other's feet, by performing all sorts of good offices to each other, even those of the lowest kind, when opportunity serves, and the necessity of any calls for them"—WESLEY.

15. I have given you an example. S. Peter forgot the command in the hour of denial, but he recalled it in the hour of restoration. And long afterwards in his letters he specially emphasised the doctrine of Christ our Example. "I have given you an example." Discover it, ponder it, follow it.

16. The servant is not greater than his lord—"nor therefore ought to think much of either doing or suffering the same things"—WESLEY.

18. I speak not of you all—"when I call you happy. I know one of you twelve whom I have chosen—will betray Me, whereby that scripture will be fulfilled"—WESLEY.

20. "And I put My own honour upon you My ambassadors"—WESLEY.

21. One of you—"the speaking thus indefinitely at first was profitable to them all"—WESLEY.

One of you shall betray Me. Our Lord closed the lesson of the feet-washing by the pregnant sentence, If ye know these things, blessed are ye if ye do them. He knew that all would not do them. (Read vers. 18–22.) The choice here spoken of, WESTCOTT declares to be the historical choice to the apostolate. On the mystery of the choice of such a man as Judas he well says, "There are two groups of explanations of the choice of Judas. The first group regards the choice from the side of the Divine counsel; the second from the side of the human call. (1) It is said that he was chosen in obedience to God's will, in order that he might betray Christ. (2) It is said again by some that Christ, in making His choice o Judas, did not read the inmost depths and issues of his character; and by others, that seeing all distinctly even to the end, He kept him near to Himself as one trusted equally with the others of the Twelve. The question raised by the second group leads us at once to the final mystery of the union of perfect Divinity and perfect humanity in the one person of the Lord. And here the records of the Gospel lead us to believe that the Lord had perfect human knowledge, realised in a human way, and therefore limited in some sense, and separable in consciousness from His perfect Divine omniscience. He knew the thoughts of men also—latent in their manifold possibilities, and yet, as man, not in their actual future manifestations. These two final mysteries are not created by the fact that Judas was chosen by Christ among the Twelve. They really underlie all religious life, and indeed all finite life. Thus we may be content to have this concrete mystery as an example—the most terrible example—of the issues of the two fundamental mysteries of human existence."

But His knowledge of the certainties of the future did not prevent the trouble of His spirit from breaking forth. David's nearest friend became his bitterest foe. And in the sacred circle of the Twelve there was a betrayer. His grief-stirred soul felt this, as only His sensitive nature could.

22. The disciples looked one on another, doubting. The words give a vivid reminiscence of the actual scene.

23. There was lying in the bosom of Jesus—"that is, sitting next to Him at table. This phrase only expresses the then customary posture at meals, where the guests all leaned sideways on couches. And each was said to 'lie on the bosom' of him who was placed next above him. One of the disciples, whom Jesus loved—S. John avoids with great care the expressly naming himself. Perhaps our Lord now gave him the first proof of His peculiar love, by disclosing this secret to him"—WESLEY.

As the New Testament so often refers to the Eastern posture at meals, it will be well to illustrate through the eye, the organ that best receives and retains mental impressions. We copy from GEIKIE (who acknowledges that he has taken the diagram from the Dictionary of Antiquities) both text and illustration.

As the head of the group, Jesus naturally took the first place on the highest couch—the outermost, on the right of the hollow square—His face towards the second place; His feet outwards. Resting His left elbow and side on a cushion the whole breadth of the couch, His right hand was thus free, while the apostle next Him reclined so that his head lay, as it were, in his Master's bosom. It had been the custom in ancient times to eat the Passover standing, but the rabbis had changed it for the Gentile practice of reclining. It was like slaves, they said, to eat standing, and as Israel was not a race of slaves, but free men, they should eat the feast reclining; a flattery so pleasing to Jewish pride, that even the poorest adopted the new mode. But this Jewish pride in the apostles, made still more fierce by selfish ambition, in prospect of the political glory they still perversely hoped for, could ill brook to take a lower place than others. It was a grave matter for them, as for the Pharisees, who should have the highest seats; for, in their delusion, they assumed that it might affect their future position in the messianic state, to be founded, as they dreamed, presently. So the strife that had broken out on the other side of Jericho, once more distressed their Master, and He could only still it by repeating the keen rebuke He then gave them. "In My kingdom," said He, "to be humble is to be great: the lowest is, in it, the highest."

begin, and girding Himself with a towel, like a slave, after laying aside His upper garments, He poured water into a basin, and began to wash the feet of His disciples. Farrar has tried to picture the disciples around the table. Jesus, after having washed their feet, resumed His garments, and once more reclined at the meal. As He leaned there on His left elbow, John lay at His right, with his head quite close to Jesus' breast. Next to John, and at the top of the next mat or cushion, would probably be his brother James; and, as we infer from the few details of the meal, at the left of Jesus lay the Man of Kerioth, who may either have thrust himself into that position, or who, as the holder of the common purse, occupied a place of some prominence among the little band. It seems probable that Peter's place was at the top of the next mat, and at the left of Judas. And as the meal began, Jesus taught them what His act had meant.

24. Simon Peter—"behind Jesus, who lay between them"—WESLEY.

25. Leaning—"down, and so asking Him privately"—WESLEY.

26. Jesus answered—"in his ear. So careful was He not to offend (if it had been possible) even Judas himself. The sop—which He took up while He was speaking. He giveth it to Judas—and probably the other disciples thought Judas peculiarly happy. But when even this instance of our Lord's tenderness could not move him, then Satan took full possession"—WESLEY.

27. What thou doest, do quickly. "This is not a permission, much less a command. It is only as if He had said, If thou art determined to do it, why dost thou delay? hereby showing Judas that he could not be hid, and No more was needed; the struggle now would rather be for the lowest place. But He did not confine Himself to words. Rising from the couch, when the supper was just about to expressing His own readiness to suffer"—WESLEY.

28. None knew why He said this—"save John and Judas"—WESLEY.

30. He went out—"to the chief priests. But he returned afterward, and was with them when they ate the Passover (Matt. 26. 20), though not at the Lord's Supper"—WESLEY.

The die was cast. S. John delineates the stages of Judas' growing obduracy. Into the darkness of the night Judas went out. An outward symbol of the inner darkness of his disturbed life. After his departure our Lord spoke of the victory that lay on the other side the approaching conflict. Indeed, He regards the victory as already gained. "Now is the Son of Man glorified, and God is glorified in Him."

31. Jesus saith—"namely, the next day, on Thursday, in the morning. Here the scene, as it were, is opened for the discourse which is continued in the following chapters. Now—while I speak this. The Son of Man is glorified—being fully entered into His glorious work of redemption. This evidently relates to the glory which belongs to His suffering in so holy and victorious a manner"—WESLEY.

33. Little children. Nowhere else in the Gospels does Christ use this expression of tender affection. S. John appears never to have forgotten it. It occurs frequently in his First Epistle. Ye cannot come—"not yet; being not yet ripe for it"—WESLEY.

34. A new commandment—"not new in itself, but new in the school of Christ; for He had never before taught it them expressly. Likewise new as to the degree of it, as I have loved you"—WESLEY.

An anecdote of S. John's extreme old age, preserved by Jerome, is a striking comment on the commandment. It is related that the disciples of the apostle, wearied by his constant repetition of the words, "Little children, love one another," which was all he said when he was carried into their assembly, asked him why he always said this. "Because," he replied, "it is the Lord's commandment; and, if it only be fulfilled, it is enough."

35. By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples. "This is the true 'Note of the Church': not miracles, not formularies, not numbers, but love"—PLUMMER.

36. Peter saith, Lord, whither goest Thou? "S. Peter seems to have thought that Christ being rejected by the Jews would go to some other part of the earth to erect His throne, where He might reign without disturbance, according to the gross notions he had of Christ's kingdom. Thou canst not follow Me now—but Peter would not believe Him. And he did follow Him (ch 18. 15); but it was 'afar off,' and not without great loss"—WESLEY.

Where apostles fell, we may well stand with tremulous watchfulness.

37. Why cannot I follow Thee even now? I will lay down my life for Thy sake (R.V. "even now . . . life for Thee"). His courage was careless; his loyal devotion was proud of itself. Impetuous to a fault he required sternness, lest he should fall in the hour of danger. "Why cannot I follow Thee?" He knew not how nearly akin his strength was to weakness, his courage to cowardice. But his Lord did. (Read ver. 38.)

38. The cock shall not have crowed—"that is, cock-crowing shall not be over—till thou hast denied Me thrice. His threefold denial was thrice foretold: first, at the time mentioned here; secondly, at that mentioned by S. Luke; lastly, at that recorded by S. Matthew and S. Mark"—WESLEY.

The exact repetition of S. Peter's words gives a singular pathos to our Lord's reply.

CHAPTER XIV.

"We now come to that portion of the evangelical history which we may with propriety call its Holy of Holies. Our Evangelist, like a consecrated priest, alone opens up to us the view into this sanctuary. It is the record of the last moments spent by the Lord in the midst of His disciples before His passion, when words full of heavenly thought flowed from His sacred lips. All that His heart, glowing with love, had still to say to His friends, was compressed into this short season. At first (from ch. 13. 31) the intercourse took the form of conversation; sitting at the table, they talked familiarly together. But when (ch. 14. 31) the repast was finished, the language of Christ assumed a loftier strain; the disciples, assembled around their Master, listened to the words of life, and seldom spoke a word (only ch. 16. 17, 29). At length in the Redeemer's sublime intercessory prayer, His full soul was poured forth in express petitions to His heavenly Father on behalf of those who were His own. It is a peculiarity of these last chapters that they treat almost exclusively of the most profound relations—as that of the Son to the Father, and of both to the Spirit, that of Christ to the Church, and of the Church to the world. Moreover, a considerable portion of these sublime communications surpassed the point of view to which the disciples had at that time attained; hence the Redeemer frequently repeats the same sentiments, in order to impress them more deeply upon their minds, and, because of what they still did not understand, points them to the Holy Spirit, who would remind them of all His sayings, and lead them into all truth (ch. 14. 26)"—OLSHAUSEN. Such an evening, remarks Schaff, occurred but once in the world's history; the fulness of eternity itself was condensed into a few fleeting moments. The farewell words of our Lord (ch. 13. 31–17. 26) stand alone even in the Book of books. The nearest approach to them we may find in the parting song and blessing of Moses (Deut. 32 and 33), and the farewell address of S. Paul to the elders of Ephesus (Acts 20. 17, seq.). We have here more than words, we have things, verities, acts of infinite love going out from God, and going into the hearts of men. The main idea is—I in the Father, the Father in Me; I in the believers, the believers in Me, sharing My glory; or, as BENGEL puts it, "I came from My Father in heaven, I fulfilled His will on earth; I now return to My Father."

1. Let not your heart be troubled—"at My departure. Believe—this is the sum of all His discourse, which is urged, till they did believe (ch. 16. 30); and then our Lord prays and departs"—WESLEY.

Perhaps no page of the Bible has been read so often or by so many myriads of people as this. Trouble is so common; and our Lord gives us here a revelation concerning heaven. But before speaking of the next world He comforts us on the way thither. The humbled Peter is speechless and troubled, but the Lord, the great Consoler, utters His words, Let not your heart be troubled. Probably He would have spoken some such word with reference to Judas' defection, had not Peter's forwardness interrupted Him. Trust in God, trust in Me. The Revised Version reads as does the Authorised Version, Ye believe in God, believe also in Me, but inserts in margin, believe in God. "The words," says WESTCOTT, "are ambiguous, and can be interpreted in four ways, according as the verbs are taken severally, as in the indicative or imperative mood—(1) Ye believe in God, and if this be true, as assuredly it is, ye believe also in Me; (2) Ye believe in God, believe also in Me; (3) Believe in God, and

(as a natural consequence) ye believe in Me; (4) Believe in God, and believe in Me. The double imperative (4) suits the context best. Believe in God, and let your faith find in Me One on whom it can rest. Faith is the armour and consolation of the soul and of the life." "Jesus saw that His disciples were troubled (1) by the treachery of one of their number; (2) by the foretold fall of another; (3) by the number and intense hatred of their enemies; (4) by the knowledge that soon their Master would be taken away; (5) by their disappointment that the kingdom of God was not set up in the open and glorious way they expected; (6) by their dread of the unknown future"—PELOUBET. Hence their Divine Friend and ours said, Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me. Jesus makes God known to us.

2. In My Father's house are many mansions—"enough to receive both the holy angels, and your predecessors in the faith, and all that now believe, and a great multitude which no man can number"—WESLEY.

How simple and childlike is this picture! The idea of Father, house, home, rest, and room for all have entered into the world's language. The Old Testament teaches us that the Lord's throne is in heaven; and in our daily prayer, we say, "Our Father, who art in heaven." There are many mansions in the house on high. Nothing is said about their differing in dignity and beauty. There may be degrees of happiness hereafter, but such are neither expressed nor implied here. What is said is that there are many mansions; there is room enough for all. Heaven is both a place and a state. It is where God dwells, and manifests Himself. There we shall have a Father's love and care; every want will be supplied; sorrow and pain will be unknown; coldness and bitterness cannot enter there. The New Testament tells us more of what heaven is not than of what it is. Jesus Christ, who came from heaven, and knew so much, said so little. We have to wait until we get there, and then we shall say of it what the Queen of Sheba said of the wisdom of Solomon, "The half hath not been told us."

4. The way—"of faith, holiness, sufferings"—WESLEY.

5. Thomas saith—"taking Him in a gross sense"—WESLEY.

"The revelation which the Lord had given of the purpose of His approaching separation creates questioning among the disciples. How can they have any true conception of the way of which He spoke? How can they have any true knowledge of the Father? The first question is proposed by S. Thomas (vers. 5–7); and the second by S. Philip (vers. 8–11)"—WESTCOTT. How know we the way? the question shortly reads in the R.V. The answer of the Lord is more comprehensive than the question of the disciples; the question would have been answered by the simple, I am the way. But that required explanation, and the great Teacher was always pitiful towards the weakness and ignorance of the inquirers. THOMAS À KEMPIS beautifully paraphrases the reply of Jesus, "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Without the Way, there is no going; without the Truth, there is no knowing; without the Life, there is no living. I am the Way, which thou oughtest to follow; the Truth, which thou oughtest to trust; the Life, which thou oughtest to hope for. I am the inviolable Way, the infallible Truth, the endless Life."

6. "To the question concerning the way, He answers, I am the Way; to the question concerning knowledge, he answers, I am the Truth; to the question whither, I am the Life. The first is treated of in this verse; the second (vers. 7–17); the third (ver. 18, etc.)"—WESLEY.

Christ went to prepare a place for us, but we must be prepared for the place. Heaven is a prepared place for a prepared people. The heavenly life begins now. "He that believeth hath everlasting life." A poor man told Rowland Hill that the way to heaven was short, easy, and simple; comprising only three steps —"Out of self, unto Christ, into glory."

7. Ye have known—"ye have begun to know Him"—WESLEY.

8. Philip. For the fourth and last time S. Philip appears in this Gospel. Thrice he is mentioned in close connection with S. Andrew. Our Lord's answer silenced S. Thomas. S. Philip seizes on the last word, and seeks a more unquestionable vision. He will have the sight of the body rather than the sight of the soul. Possibly he thought of the vision once vouchsafed to Moses (Ex. 33. 17, seq.). The answer is direct and pathetic. Dost thou not know Me, Philip? He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father. No man hath seen God except as revealed. He is revealed in His Son. The wondrous Life is the all-sufficing revelation. The Son is the visible face of the Father. Let us set Christ before our eyes. To see God is blessedness; to see Christ is to see God; to see God in Christ is heaven. Look for no sign in the heavens or on the earth. Say with the Greeks of an earlier chapter, "We would see Jesus."

10. I am in the Father. The words that I speak, etc.—"that is, I am one with the Father in essence, in speaking, and in acting"—WESLEY.

11. Believe Me—"on My own word. Because I am—God. The works. This respects not merely the miracles themselves, but His sovereign, God-like way of performing them"—WESLEY.

"The English obliterates the fact that Christ now turns from S. Philip and addresses all the eleven: Believe is plural, not singular. You have been with Me long enough to believe what I say; but if not, at any rate believe what I do. My words need no credentials; but if credentials are demanded, there are My works. He had said the same, somewhat more severely to the Jews (ch. 10. 37, 38); and He repeats it much more severely in reference to the Jews (ch. 15. 22-24.) Note the progress from 'believe Me' here to 'believe on Me' in the next verse; the one grows out of the other"—C. B.

12. Greater works than these shall he do—"so one apostle wrought miracles merely by his shadow (Acts 5. 15); another by 'handkerchiefs carried from his body' (Acts 19. 12); and all spake with various tongues. But the converting one sinner is a greater work than all these. Because I go to My Father—to send you the Holy Ghost"—WESLEY

13. Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name. "(Comp. ch. 15. 16; 16. 23, 24, 26.) Anything that can rightly be asked in His name will be granted; there is no other limit. By 'in My name' is not, of course, meant the mere using the formula, 'through Jesus Christ.' Rather it means praying and working as Christ's representatives, in the same spirit in which Christ prayed and worked—'Not My will, but Thine, be done.' Prayers for other ends than this are excluded; not that it is said that they will not be granted, but there is no promise that they will. (Comp. 2 Cor. 12. 8, 9)"—C. B.

15. If ye love Me, keep My commandments. "Immediately after faith He exhorts to love and good works"—WESLEY.

16. And I will ask the Father. "Ver. 21 shows the connection between this and the preceding verses. And He will give you another Comforter. The Greek word signifies also an advocate, instructor, or encourager. Another—for Christ Himself was one. To remain with you for ever—with you, and your followers in faith to the end of the world"—WESLEY.

17. The Spirit of truth—"who has, reveals, testifies, and defends the truth as it is in Jesus. Whom the world—all who do not love or fear God—cannot receive, because it seeth Him not—having no spiritual sense, no internal eye, to discern Him; nor, consequently, knoweth Him. He shall be in you—as a constant guest. Your bodies and souls shall be temples of the Holy Ghost dwelling in you"—WESLEY.

18. I will not leave you orphans—"a word that is elegantly applied to those who have lost any dear friend. I come to you. What was certainly and speedily to be, our Lord speaks of as if it were already"—WESLEY.

THE ABIDING COMFORTER.—The word translated Comforter is employed five times in the New Testament; four times in this Gospel, by Christ, of the Holy Spirit (ch. 14. 16, 26; 15. 26; 16. 7); once in the First Epistle, by John of Christ (ch. 2. 1). Our translators render it "Comforter" in the Gospel and "Advocate" in the Epistle. Its meaning is the same as our "Counsel," one who pleads for another at a court of law. Our English word "Comforter" originally meant not only "Consoler" as now, but also "Strengthener" and "Supporter." Our Lord was about to leave His disciples; but they were not to be left like orphan children. The Spirit of God, who proceedeth from the Father and the Son, was to come and dwell in the Church for ever. Our Lord's last words echoed the first, "Peace I leave with you. . . . Let not your heart be troubled."

19. But ye see Me—"that is, ye shall certainly see Me. Because I live, ye shall live also—because I am the Living One in My Divine nature, and shall rise again in My human nature, and live for ever in heaven; therefore, ye shall live the life of faith and love on earth, and hereafter the life of glory"—WESLEY.

20. At that day—"when ye see Me after My resurrection; but more eminently at the day of Pentecost"—WESLEY.

21. He that hath My commandments—"written in his heart. I will manifest Myself to him—more abundantly"—WESLEY.

22. Judas. Excluding the genealogies of Jesus Christ we have six persons of this name in the New Testament—(1) This Judas, who was the son of a certain James (Luke 6. 16; Acts 1. 13); he is commonly identified with Lebbæus or Thaddæus. (2) Judas Iscariot. (3) The brother of Jesus Christ, and of James, Joses, and Simon (Matt. 13. 55; Mark 6. 3). (4) Judas, surnamed Barsabbas (Acts 15. 22, 27, 32.) (5) Judas of Galilee (Acts 5. 37). (6) Judas of Damascus (Acts 9. 11). Of these six the third is probably the author of the Epistle; so that this remark is the only thing recorded in the New Testament of Judas the apostle as distinct from the other apostles. Nor is anything really known of him from other sources"—C. B. There is no record of Iscariot having ever asked Jesus a single question. "Manifest Thyself. The word 'manifest' rouses Judas just as the word 'see' roused S. Philip (ver. 7). Both go wrong from the same cause, inability to see the spiritual meaning of Christ's words, but they go wrong in different ways. S. Philip wishes for a vision of the Father, a theophany, a suitable inauguration of the Messiah's kingdom. Judas supposes, with the rest of his countrymen, that the manifestation of the Messiah means a bodily appearance in glory before the whole world, to judge the Gentiles and restore the kingdom to the Jews. Once more we have the Jewish point of view given with convincing precision. (Comp. ch. 7. 4)"—C. B.

23. Jesus answered. Our Lord's answers are wider in meaning and range than their first application.

Jesus answered—"because ye love and obey Me, and they do not, therefore I will reveal Myself to you, and not to them. My Father will love him. The more any man loves and obeys, the more God will love him. And we will come to him, and make our abode with him—which implies such a large manifestation of the Divine presence and love, that the former, in justification, is as nothing in comparison of it"—WESLEY.

"The thought of God dwelling among His people was familiar to every Jew. (Ex. 25. 8; 29. 45; Zech. 2. 10, etc.) This is a thought far beyond that—God dwelling in the heart of the individual; and later Jewish philosophy had attained to this also. But the united indwelling of the Father and the Son, by means of the Spirit, is purely Christian. In these two verses (23, 24) the changes 'words,' 'sayings,' 'word,' give a wrong impression; they should run—'word,' 'words,' 'word.' In the Greek we have the same substantive, twice in the singular and once in the plural"—C. B.

24. Loveth Me not. The world's characteristic mark.

25. Being yet present (R.V. "While yet abiding"). It is S. John's favourite word.

26. The Comforter. The discourse returns to the subject of the Paraclete. (See on ver. 16.)

The epithet "Holy" is given to the Spirit thrice in this Gospel—ch. 1. 33; 20. 22; and here.

26. In My name—"for My sake, in My room, and as My agent. He will teach you all things—necessary for you to know. Here is a clear promise to the apostles and their successors in the faith, that the Holy Ghost will teach them all that truth which is needful for their salvation"—WESLEY.

"It is on the fulfilment of this promise to the apostles, that their sufficiency as witnesses of all that the Lord did and taught, and consequently the authenticity of the Gospel narrative, is grounded"—ALFORD.

27. "Peace I leave with you. Finally, the discourse returns to the point from which it started. Its object had been to reassure the sorrowful disciples against their Lord's departure, and with words of reassurance and consolation it concludes. These are thrown into the form of a leave-taking or farewell"—SANDAY. "Peace I leave with you is probably a solemn adaptation of the conventional form of taking leave in the East. (Comp. 'Go in peace," Judges 18. 6; 1 Sam. 1. 17; 20. 42; 29. 7; 2 Kings 5. 19; Mark 5. 34, etc.) The Apostle of the Gentiles perhaps purposely substitutes in his Epistles, 'Grace be with you all' for the traditional Jewish 'peace'"—C. B. Our Lord repeats the word with the emphatic "My." In this word peace all the blessings of heaven are comprised.

27. Peace I leave with you—"peace in general; peace with God, and with your own consciences. My peace—in particular; that peace which I enjoy, and which I create. I give—at this instant. Not as the world giveth—unsatisfying, unsettled, transient; but filling the soul with constant, even tranquillity. Lord, evermore give us this peace! How serenely may we pass through the most turbulent scenes of life, when all is quiet and harmonious within! Thou hast made peace through the blood of Thy cross; may we give all diligence to preserve the inestimable gift inviolate, till it issue in everlasting peace!"—WESLEY.

28. God the Father is greater than Me—"as He was man. As God, neither is greater nor less than the other"—WESLEY.

29. I have told you—"of My going and return"—WESLEY.

30. The prince of this world is coming—"to make his grand assault. But he hath nothing in Me—no right, no claim, or power. There is no guilt in Me to give him power over Me; no corruption to take part with his temptation"—WESLEY.

31. But—"I suffer him thus to assault Me. (1) Because it is the Father's commission to Me (ch. 10. 18). (2) To convince the world of My love to the Father, in being 'obedient unto death' (Phil. 2. 8). Arise, let us go hence—into the city, to the Passover. All that has been related from ch. 13. 31 was done and said on Thursday, without the city. But what follows in ch. 15. 16, 17 was said in the city, on the very evening of the Passover, just before He went over the brook Cedron"—WESLEY.

"We are probably to understand that they rise from table and prepare to depart, but that the contents of the next three chapters are spoken before they leave the room. (Comp. ch. 18. 1.) Others suppose that the room is left now, and that the next two chapters are discourses on the way towards Gethsemane, ch. 17 being spoken at some halting-place, probably the Temple"—C. B.

CHAPTER XV.

S. John, more than the other Evangelists, gives the very words of our Lord's discourses, but he does not record the parables of Jesus. Two parabolic discourses only—the Good Shepherd and the Vine—he records. There was so much in the wondrous life, as in the miracle of feeding, every Evangelist could take "a little," and when all the records were completed there was still much unwritten. The sacred writers do not give full and complete biographies of Jesus. To employ modern phrases, we have not His "Life and Letters," but only "Selections from His Works." It is not difficult to see why S. John gives us the allegory of the vine and its branches. It forms a part of those farewell discourses which he alone has preserved for us. There is a tinge of pensive sadness in it. It has the ring of last words. Out of the separation then impending there rises another and more awful separation—a separation fixed and final. If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch. Whilst, by the laws of suggestion, the thought of separation leads to the thought of union, abide in Me.

1. I am the true Vine — "so 'the true Bread' (ch. 6. 32); that is, the most excellent"—WESLEY.

The most prominent symbols of Israel in the Old Testament are the palm tree, the olive tree, and the vineyard. The God of the Old Testament revealed Himself in picture-alphabet. Whether the allegory was suggested by the "fruit of the vine" they had just used in the Last Supper, or by the great golden vine over the gate of the Temple, or by the vines in the gardens round about them, the narrative does not tell. Christ, the Father, and the disciples, stood in exactly the same relationship as the vine, the husbandman, and the branches. We are in God's hands. All our life is divinely watched. All our goodness is a Divine creation. Our dependence is complete. Christ is the true ideal Vine. Earthly things are mere shadows and similitudes of heavenly realities. Other relations which Christ bears to His people are represented by the symbols of the Shepherd and the flock, the Head and the members, the Corner-stone and the stone built upon it, the Bridegroom and the bride. A child said, "Jesus is the Vine, the grown-up people are the branches, and we, the children, are the little buds." Christ is all and in all, in doctrine and character.

Everyone that beareth fruit He purifieth—"'by obeying the truth' (1 Pet. 1. 22), and by inward or outward sufferings (Heb. 12. 10, 11). So purity and fruitfulness help each other. That it may bear more fruit—for this is one of the noblest rewards God can bestow on former acts of obedience, to make us yet more holy, and fit for further and more eminent service"—WESLEY.

Our Lord speaks first of the fruitless branches. Every branch in Me that beareth not fruit. So that there are degrees of being in Christ. A dead, fruitless branch is in the tree, but it does not receive the living and life-giving sap. And here our Lord speaks of those who are in the Vine, and yet not living. He is the root of humanity. He is the Saviour of all men in purpose, and the enlightener of all men in fact. He is the true Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. Before He became incarnate there were men groping in darkness, but not content to remain. They asked timidly, often blindly, always anxiously, questions concerning duty and destiny—the mystery of being. And to-day in lands where the name of Christ has not yet been heard, there are those who strain their eyes towards the light. The world, as such, is given to Christ. Many have heard the call of the gospel. Thousands in the churches are not fruit-bearing branches The children, who are consecrated to God in baptism, are "in Christ" in possibility. And if hereafter they are not ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified, and manfully to fight under His banner, against sin, the world, and the devil, they may continue Christ's faithful soldiers and servants unto their lives' end. When a door was opened in heaven, and S. John looked in, he saw the angelic and other worshippers gathered in circles round about the throne. So it is in the worship of earth. There is an outer circle of heathen, whether at home or abroad—the heathenism of ignorance, and the heathenism of obstinacy; a yet nearer circle of those who have identified themselves with God's Church. These stand in the outer courts of the Lord's house. Every branch in Me that beareth not fruit. A dead fruitless branch is in the tree, but it does not receive the living and life-giving sap. As ARNOT says, "The vine holds the branch, and the branch holds the vine. These two are one attachment. The mother clings to her child, and the child, in danger, clings to the mother. If the child were dead, neither would clasp the other. These two graspings stand or fall together; you must have both or neither."

3. Ye are clean. "All of you to whom I now speak are purged from the guilt and power of sin. By the word—which, applied by the Spirit, is the grand instrument of purifying the soul"—WESLEY.

4. Abide in Me—"ye who are now pure by living faith producing all holiness; by which alone ye can be in Me"—WESLEY.

Our Lord speaks of the once fruitful but now fruitless branches. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, so neither can ye, except ye abide in Me. Our Divine Teacher does not overstep the truth of life. Men may fall. As there is good amongst evil, so there is evil amongst good. Dives in Hades has his memories of goodness. Between the sun-like purity of a seraph, and the demoniac treachery of a Judas, there is an infinite sweep. Yet an archangel fell; and Judas felt remorse, if we may not call it penitence.

5. I am the Vine, ye are the branches. "Our Lord in this whole passage speaks of no branches but such as are, or at least were once, united to Him by living faith"—WESLEY.

Our Lord speaks of the fruitful branches.

I am the Vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in Me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit. The fruitful branches are in the vine; the life of the tree flows through them, and they are fruitful. A Christian is to live a vigorous, growing life. The biblical figures for it are not the stunted shrub, and the mean thorn tree of the desert; but the nobly waving palm and the giant cedar of Lebanon—"the trees of the Lord," in the unrivalled imagery of Hebrew prophets. Ever upward, like the spiral flame. Ever onward, like the trained athlete. Ever outward, like the life of the tree bursting into blossom, flower, and fruit. Thus may the Christian say, "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

6. If anyone abide not in Me—"by living faith, not by Church communion only. He may thus abide in Christ, and be withered all the time, and cast into the fire at last. He is cast out—of the vineyard, the invisible Church. Therefore he was in it once"—WESLEY.

The husbandman cuts all the branches—but with a difference. He cuts into the fruitful; he cuts away the unfruitful branches. If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and they gather them and cast them into the fire, and they are burned. Out of Christ is to be a branch sapless, withered, dead. Judas was probably in our Lord's thought. But Judas is not alone. These are terrible words—"cast forth, withered, cast into the fire, burned." They are not to be spoken about. They are for each one to ponder; tremble as he ponders; and take heedful warning. Words could not deepen their solemnity. They are a sudden glance into the awful possibilities of the eternal world, where, as here, like gathers to like, and sympathy and companionship are sought and found. From parable our Lord passes to plain statement. Continue in My love. Keep My commandments. Your joy shall be full. Ye are My friends. I have chosen you. The highest service in the world is that of friendship and love. The greatest satisfaction comes from self-forgetfulness. To believe that we are where God placed us, gives the highest happiness we are capable of receiving.

7. If ye abide in Me, ye shall ask. "Prayers themselves are a fruit of faith, and they produce more fruit"—WESLEY.

8. So shall ye be My disciples—"worthy of the name. To be a disciple of Christ is both the foundation and height of Christianity"—WESLEY.

9. Abide ye in My love—"keep your place in My affection. See that ye do not forfeit that invaluable blessing. How needless a caution, if it were impossible for them not to abide therein!"—WESLEY.

10. If ye keep My commandments, ye shall abide in My love. "On these terms, and no other, ye shall remain the objects of My special affection"—WESLEY.

11. That My joy might remain in you—"the same joy which I feel in loving the Father, and keeping His commandments"—WESLEY.

12. Your joy will be full if ye so love one another"—WESLEY.

Only the love of God to us and our love to Him can satisfy the deepest desires of our being. The two great commandments are really one: "If a man love not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

13. Greater love—"to his friends. He here speaks of them only"—WESLEY.

14. Ye are My friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you—"on this condition, not otherwise. A thunderbolt for Antinomianism. Who then dares assert that God's love does not at all depend on man's work?"—WESLEY.

The Lord of all is not ashamed to call us brethren. "As He can only be received as a complete Saviour, so He can only be served as a complete Lord"—FLAVEL.

15. Henceforth, I call ye not servants. Christ's servants became friends, but remain servants in work and reward. (Matt. 25. 21.) All Christ's servants are God's children. All things—"which might be of service to you"—WESLEY.

16. Ye—"My apostles—have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you — as clearly appears from the sacred history. And appointed you, that ye may go and bear fruit. I have chosen and appointed you for this end, that ye may go and convert sinners. And that your fruit may remain—that the fruit of your labours may remain to the end of the world—yea, to eternity. That whatsoever ye shall ask. The consequence of your going and bearing fruit will be, that all your prayers will be heard"—WESLEY.

Ye have not chosen Me. "A wholesome memento after the lofty things He had just said about the friendship they had been admitted to"—BROWN. A Divine election is constantly seen in the course of Providence in the world, and in individual life. "No difficulty emerges in theology which has not already appeared in philosophy"—BERKELEY.

17. These things I command you, that ye love one another. This was the beginning and end of all His precepts.

18. The world. The children of this world, as distinguished from the children of God It hath hated Me before it hated you. "Together with its reference to time, the expression is indicative of casuality and comparison; Me first, Me most, Me as the predecessor for whose sake it hateth you"—LANGE.

19. The world would love its own. "Whosoever will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." (Jas. 4. 4.) I have chosen you. The "I" is emphatic. Because ye are not of the world, therefore the world hateth you—"because your maxims, tempers, actions, are quite opposite to theirs. For the very same reason must the world in all ages hate those who are not of the world"—WESLEY.

20. The servant is not greater than his lord. "It belongs to the perfection of a disciple, who would be as his Master, that he should encounter the hatred of the world"—BRAUNE.

21. All these things will they do to you, because they know not Him that sent Me—"and in all ages and nations they who know not God will 'for this cause' hate and persecute those that do"—WESLEY.

22. If I had not come. A great claim lies beneath these words. "I" greater than prophets and apostles. They had not had sin—"not in this respect"—WESLEY.

This specific sin of unbelief. No cloke (R.V. "No excuse"). "The idea in 'cloke' is to cover up, to hide as with a garment, so that they may not be seen; whereas here the idea is of excuse for manifest sin"—ELLICOTT.

23. He that hateth Me—"as every unbeliever doth. For as the love of God is inseparable from faith, so is the hatred of God from unbelief"—WESLEY.

24. Gradation of guilt is here implied. "My works, Me, and the Father, to see and yet to hate; these two irreconcilables are reconciled by a God-hating world"—LÜCKE.

25. This cometh to pass that the word might be fulfilled. He constantly refers to Scripture.

26. When the Comforter is come, whom I will send you from the Father, the Spirit of Truth, who proceedeth from the Father, He shall testify of Me. "The Spirit's coming, and being sent by our Lord from the Father, to testify of Him, are personal characters, and plainly distinguish him from the Father and the Son; and His title as 'the Spirit of Truth,' together with His proceeding from the Father, can agree to none but a Divine Person. And that He proceeds from the Son, as well as from the Father, may be fairly argued from His being called 'the Spirit of Christ' (1 Pet. 1. 11), and from His being here said to be sent by Christ from the Father, as well as sent by the Father in His name"—WESLEY.

27. And ye also shall bear witness. "The witness is one and the same; the Spirit will witness in and by them"—ALFORD. "We" (of the present day) "first livingly experience and receive, through the New Testament Scriptures, the life, deeds, and sayings of our Lord, as eye and ear witnesses of the second degree; then we also wait humbly for power from on high; and then it is our obligation and right to testify with power and success what we have seen and heard in historical conviction and living experience"—LANGE. Only they are able to witness for Christ who have been with Him.

CHAPTER XVI.

THE PROMISE OF THE PARACLETE AND OF CHRIST'S RETURN.—The subjects are not kept distinct; they cross and interlace, like the strands in a rope. But the following divisions may conduce to clearness:—(1) The World and the Paraclete (vers. 1–11); (2) The Disciples and the Paraclete (vers. 12–15); (3) The sorrow of Christ's departure turned into joy by His return (vers. 16–24); (4) Summary and Conclusion of the Discourses (vers. 25–33)"—C. B.

1. These things—these discourses generally, especially the last section about the world's hatred of Him and them (ch. 15. 18–27). Should not be offended—should not be made to stumble—a metaphor frequent in Matthew and Mark, occurring thrice in Luke, and thrice in John. Through the world's persecution, the disciples might stumble and fall from the faith.

2. The time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think he doeth God service—"but blessed be God, the time is so far past that those who bear the name of Christ do not now generally suppose they do Him service by killing each other, for a difference in opinion or mode of worship"—WESLEY.

A punishment involving the direst consequences, socially and religiously. It was a moral outlawry, like losing caste in India.

3. They have not known the Father nor Me. "This is the true root of persecution in all its forms"—WESLEY.

4. I did not tell you these things at the beginning, because I was with you—"to bear the chief shock in My own person, and to screen you from it"—WESLEY.

5. None of you asketh Me—"now, when it is most seasonable. S. Peter did not ask this before (ch. 13. 36)"—WESLEY.

"As far as words go, S. Peter had asked this question (ch. 13. 36), and S. Thomas had suggested it (ch. 14. 5); but altogether in a different spirit from what is meant here. They were looking only at their own loss, instead of at His gain"—C. B.

6. Because I have said these things—explanatory of the mild reproach in ver. 5.

7. Nevertheless—refers to the sorrow in ver. 6—I tell you the truth. "I" is again emphatic. It is expedient for you—"in respect of the Comforter (ver. 7, etc.), and of Me (ver. 16, etc.), and of the Father (ver. 23), etc."—WESLEY.

The Holy Ghost "I believe in God, the Father Almighty." "I believe in Jesus Christ, His only Son, our Lord." "I believe in the Holy Ghost." These are the three most important sentences in the Apostles' Creed, a summary of Christian faith, so called because it contains a brief statement of the doctrines which the apostles taught. It is of great antiquity. It was always used before the rite of baptism, and has been employed in the Daily Service of the Church for fourteen hundred years. In our own Catechism, to the question, "Who is the Holy Spirit?" the answer is given, "The Holy Spirit is the Third Person in the Blessed Trinity, one in the Godhead with the Father and Son." This is the subject of revelation, and it is a great mystery. In answer to the question, "Is the Person of the Divine Spirit often mentioned in Scripture?" the reply is, "Yes, from the beginning of the Bible to the end, but especially in the New Testament."

Comforter. The word Paracletus, translated Comforter (margin, "Advocate" or "Helper"), is found in the New Testament only in the writings of S. John. It occurs four times in the Gospel (ch. 14. 16, 26; 15. 26; 16. 7), and is in these places uniformly translated Comforter; and once in his First Epistle (ch. 2. 1), where it is translated Advocate. This double rendering dates from Wyclif. Tyndale has the same renderings; and the two words have been preserved in the later English Bibles. In addition to the sense of pleader, like the English counsel, this word bears the meaning of counsellor, helper, patron. Wordsworth even makes the term mean sanctifier, teacher, comforter, exhorter, inspirer, counsellor, and guide, all in one. Westcott says that, in 1 John 2. 1, the sense "advocate" alone suits the argument, though the Greek Fathers explain the term as applied to the Lord, in the same way as in the Gospel. In the Gospel again the sense of advocate, counsel, one who pleads, convinces, convicts, in a great controversy, who strengthens on the one hand, and defends on the other, meeting formidable attacks, is alone adequate. Christ as the Advocate pleads the believer's cause with the Father against the accuser Satan. (1 John 3. 1; comp. Rom. 8. 26, and also Rev. 12. 10; Zech. 3. 1.) The Holy Spirit as the Advocate pleads the believer's cause against the world (John 16. 8 ff.); and also Christ's cause with the believer (ch. 14. 26; 15. 26; 16. 14).

8. He. "Observe His twofold office; toward the world (ver. 8, etc.), toward believers (ver. 12, etc.). Will convince—all of the world who do not obstinately resist, by your preaching and miracle — of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment. He who is convinced of sin, either accepts the righteousness of Christ, or is judged with Satan. An abundant accomplishment of this we find in the Acts of the Apostles"—WESLEY.

When He is come. Solemn and triumphant exaltation of spirit and proclamation. The effect of S. Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost is the first great historical comment on this verse. The history of the Church's work continues that comment.

9. Of sin—"particularly of unbelief, which is the confluence of all sins, and binds them all down upon us"—WESLEY.

Sin. The idea is that of missing a mark; then aberration from a prescribed law or rule of duty, either in general, or spoken of particular sins. The Christian use of the term implies a fall, and assumes responsibility. It is something more than accidental; and it is not born of a relentless fate. One sin may be relatively greater than another, but all sins are sinful. Great and little, mortal and venial, must not blind our eyes to the exceeding sinfulness of sin. Conviction of sin is a consciousness of sin and guilt. Pricked to the heart, and smitten in conscience, such a one is brought to a crisis that he will either sincerely repent and be converted, or harden his heart, and bring upon himself condemnation and ruin. To know that I am a sinner, and to realise it so as to be penitent, are not necessarily one and the same. We have need to know what sin is, and how Heaven regards it, that we may learn how it may be forgiven and purged away.

10. Of righteousness, because I go to My Father—"which the Spirit will testify, though ye do not then see Me. But I could not go to Him if I were not righteous"—WESLEY.

11. Of judgment. The world has its false standards of judgment. The Advocate corrects this error also. Righteousness. Right, righteous, righteousness—our words of daily speech are pre-eminently biblical. In the New Testament meaning, righteousness is the doing and being what is just and right. Theologically speaking, righteousness is through faith in Christ. The word righteousness occurs only in the chapter before us in S. John's Gospel. In his First Epistle it is found in the phrase do "righteousness" (ch. 2. 29; 3. 7, 10; comp. Rev. 22. 11). Two interpretations have been given to the word here by the long line of learned and devoted Bible students: the personal righteousness of Christ; the communicated justifying righteousness, apprehended by faith. Some would combine the two ideas. "If the conviction of righteousness," says one of these, "which the Spirit works in us were merely the conviction of God's righteousness, or of Christ's, we could only fall to the ground with awe-struck, palsied hearts; we could no more venture to look upon Christ than the naked eye can look upon the sun. But when we are thoroughly convinced that Christ's righteousness is our righteousness, the righteousness which He purposes to bestow upon mankind—that He came to fulfil all righteousness, not for His sake, but for ours, in order that He might give us all that we lack out of His exceeding abundance, then, indeed, a bright ray of joy and comfort darts through the heart." As in this passage the world and sin stand together, so do Christ and righteousness. He is Christ the righteous One. Judgment. "The revelation of the Divine glory," observes WESTCOTT, "carries with it a judgment, a separation. The fundamental notion of this judgment lies in the authoritative and final declaration of the state of man as he is in relation to God and apart from God. Judgment is in this sense contrasted with salvation, life. In one sense judgment, like the gift of life, is immediate. It lies in the existence of an actual relation, which carries with it its final consequences. In another sense it is still future, so far as it will be realised in a spiritual order of being in the last day. Meanwhile, the process is going on upon earth. The manifestation of perfect holiness presented to the world in the perfect self-sacrifice (ver. 30) has set up a standard which cannot be put out of sight. Under this aspect Christ's coming was a sentence of judgment."

The prince of this world is judged—"and in consequence, therefore, dethroned, deprived of the power he had so long usurped over men. Yet those who reject the deliverance offered them will remain slaves of Satan still"—WESLEY.

The prince of this world. The spirit of the world was concentrated in Satan, whom Christ conquered in the wilderness and on the cross. As to the title, "the prince of this world," comp. ch. 12. 31; 14. 30; see also Eph. 2. 2; 6. 12; 2 Cor. 4. 4. The title is common in Jewish writers. According to a remarkable tradition, God gave the whole world, except Israel, into the power of the angel of death. (Comp. Heb. 2. 14.)

12. I have yet many things to say—"concerning My passion, death, resurrection, and the consequences of it. These things we have, not in uncertain traditions, but in the Acts, the Epistles, and the Revelation. But ye cannot bear them now—both because of your littleness of faith, and your immoderate sorrow"—WESLEY.

13. The Spirit of Truth. The Holy Ghost is the living source of Divine revelation, and as such the Spirit of Truth. He makes truth inherent in believers, so that they grow in knowledge and grace. He bears many names—the Spirit of God; of the Father; of Christ; of the Lord; the Holy Ghost; the Spirit of Wisdom; of Power; of Adoption; of Life; of the earnest of eternal life. He is the Spirit by whom the truth finds expression, and is brought to man's spirit. (Ch. 14. 17; 15. 26; 1 John 4. 6.) The truth is that which the Spirit interprets and enforces.

When He is come. "It is universally allowed that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost dwell in all believers. And the internal agency of the Holy Ghost is generally admitted. That of the Father and the Son, as represented in this Gospel, deserves our deepest consideration. All the truth—'all evangelical truth'"—WESLEY.

Christianity touches the mental faculties. The Spirit is the Spirit of Truth, who shall guide you into all truth, "Ye have an unction from the Holy One." He will shew you things to come. The Epistles interpret the Gospels. Subsequent ages have confirmed both.

14. He shall glorify Me. The Redeemer has a lordship. The ages acknowledge Christ. All things are His. He is the gentle Jesus; but He is also the strong Son of God. To Him every knee shall bow.

15. All things that the Father hath are Mine. "Could any creature say this?"—WESLEY.

Christ claims to act in the Father's name. The superiority of the Father has reference to the human nature of Christ, who is equal to the Father as touching His Godhead, and inferior to that Father as touching His manhood.

16. A little while, and ye shall not see Me—"when I am buried. And again, a little while, and ye shall see Me—when I am risen—because I go to My Father. I die and rise again, in order to ascend to My Father"—WESLEY.

17, 18. What is this that He saith? They were perplexed, both about the apparent contradiction of not beholding and yet seeing, and also the departure to the Father.

19. Jesus said to them—"preventing their question"—WESLEY.

20. Ye will weep and lament—"when ye see Me dead—but your sorrow will be turned into joy—when ye see Me risen"—WESLEY.

"Not merely sorrow shall be succeeded by joy, but shall become joy. The withdrawal of the bodily presence of Christ shall be first a sorrow and then a joy. We have the same Greek construction of the rejected stone becoming the Head of the corner (Matt. 21. 42; Acts 4. 11), of the mustard sprout becoming a tree (Luke 13. 19), of the first Adam becoming a living soul (1 Cor. 15. 45)"—C. B.

22. Ye now therefore have sorrow. "This gives us no manner of authority to assert, all believers must come into a state of darkness. They never need lose either their peace or love, or the witness that they are the children of God. They never can lose these, but either through sin, or ignorance, or vehement temptation, or bodily disorder"—WESLEY.

23. In that day. "Not the forty days of His bodily presence between the resurrection and the ascension, but the many days of His spiritual presence from Pentecost onwards"—C. B.

23. Ye shall not question Me about anything—"which you do not now understand. You will not need to inquire of Me; for you will know all things clearly. Whatsoever ye shall ask—knowledge, love, or anything else—He will give it. Our Lord here gives us a carte blanche. Believer, write down what thou wilt. He had said (ch. 14. 13), 'I will do it,' where the discourse was of glorifying the Father through the Son. Here, speaking of the love of the Father to believers, He saith, 'He will give it'"—WESLEY.

24. Hitherto ye have asked nothing in My name—"for they had asked Him directly for all they wanted"—WESLEY.

Jesus was not yet glorified.

25. These things—referring as some think to vers. 19–24; others to ch. 15.–16. 24.

Proverbs (R.V. margin, 'parables'). The word implies generally in Scripture and Oriental usage something dark and enigmatical.

26. At that day ye shall ask—"for true knowledge begets prayer. And I say not, that I will pray. This in nowise implies, that He will not: it means only, the Father Himself now loves you, not only because of My intercession, but also because of the faith and love which He hath wrought in you"—WESLEY.

27. Himself. Without My intercession.

28. "In ver. 27 it is the temporal mission of Christ from the Father that is meant (comp. ch. 17. 8); in ver. 28 the eternal generation of the Son is also included (comp. ch. 8. 42). The verse would almost form a creed. The Son, of one substance with the Father, was born into the world, suffered, and returned to the Father"—C. B.

29. Plainly—in plainness or openness.

30. Thou knowest all things—"even our hearts. Although no question is asked Thee, yet Thou answerest the thoughts of everyone. By this we believe that Thou camest forth from God. They, as it were, echo back the words which He had spoken in ver. 27, implying, We believe in God; we believe also in Thee"—WESLEY.

31. Do ye now believe? Now means "at this stage of your course."

32. Ye shall be scattered. He saw the end from the beginning. The Father is with Me. Our Lord was always conscious of the Divine Presence.

33. These things. These farewell discourses. Might have peace. "Christ's ministry ends," says Dr. PLUMMER, "as His life began, with a message of peace" (Luke 2. 14). I have overcome. The pronoun is very emphatic. "In these last words He condenses the sum of the instruction which He had ministered to the disciples at the Last Supper"—NITZCH.

CHAPTER XVII.

EVEN in sacred things there are degrees of sacredness. And in entering the seventeenth chapter of S. John's Gospel, we are crossing the threshold of the Holy of Holies. Saintliest souls in all ages have bowed the head and taken off the shoes of their earthliness as they stepped upon this holy ground. Meyer calls it "the noblest and purest pearl of devotion in the New Testament." "Here," says DE WETTE, "all the parting discourses are summed up, and raised to the highest pitch of thought and feeling." It is beyond a doubt the sublimest part of the evangelical tradition, the pure expression of Christ's lofty consciousness and peace of God. Neither in the Scripture, nor in the literature of any nation, according to Luthardt, can there be found a composition which, in simplicity and depth, in grandeur and fervour, may be compared to this prayer. It could not be invented, but could proceed only from such a consciousness as the one which speaks here. But it could be preserved and reproduced by a personality so wholly devoted and conformed to the personality of Jesus as the Evangelist. Ewald writes of it as a prayer such as the world never heard, nor could hear. For Himself, He has little to ask, but as soon as His word takes the character of an intercession for His own, it becomes an irresistible stream of the most fervent love. Sentence rushes upon sentence with wonderful power, yet the repose is never disturbed. "If, in any human speech Divinity is manifest," says THOLUCK, "and sublimity is joined to condescending humility, it is in this prayer." "It is," remarks LUTHER, "verily an exceeding fervent, hearty prayer; a prayer wherein He discovereth, both unto us and to the Father, the abysses of His heart, and poureth forth its treasures." Spencer would never preach on this chapter; he declared that a true understanding of it mounted above the ordinary degree of faith which the Lord is wont to communicate to His people on their pilgrimage. The evening before his death, however, he caused it to be read to him three times in succession. Although the High Priestly Prayer is in the superlative degree, it does not stand alone. All the acts of life are linked by subtle and strong bonds. Special prayer is the outcome of a prayerful disposition. And in this, as in so much else, Jesus was made like unto His brethren. On other occasions we read that the Lord prayed. He opened and closed the day with the key of prayer. "In the morning, a great while before day, He rose up and went out, and departed into a desert place, and there prayed." "He continued all night in prayer to God." Prayer was known to be the habit of His life, for when the mothers brought the children they besought Him to lay His hands on them and pray. He began great enterprises and closed exhausting labours with prayer. After a night of prayer, He chose the Twelve; after a day of labour, He retired into the wilderness. He was praying when the Spirit descended upon Him at His baptism; He was praying when the fashion of His countenance was altered on the Transfiguration Mount. He who gave His Church the Lord's Prayer entered the agony on His knees, and hallowed the cross by His petitions. He uttered a thanksgiving when He pondered the mystery of rejection. "I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that Thou didst hide these things from the wise and understanding, and didst reveal them unto babes: yea, Father, for so it was well pleasing in Thy sight." Westcott notes that S. John never speaks in his narrative of the Lord as "praying," as the other Evangelists do, but on one occasion he gives words of thanksgiving which imply a previous prayer, "Jesus lifted up His eyes, and said, Father, I thank Thee that Thou hearest Me;" and on another occasion He gives a brief prayer, "Father, save Me from this hour. But for this cause came I unto this hour. Father, glorify Thy name." This is the true Lord's Prayer—the prayer which He Himself used, as distinguished from that which He taught His disciples. On other occasions we read that the Lord prayed (Matt. 14. 23; 19. 13; Mark 1. 35; Luke 3. 21; 5. 16; 9. 18, 28; 11. 1). But here the complete outline of what He said is preserved. It is a prayer for Himself, His apostles, and His Church to the end of time. The High Priestly Prayer some think was spoken in the Temple; others in the stillness of the night under the starry heaven, before the wondering disciples. There is no direct evidence to show where the prayer was uttered. But whether in the Temple, with which the noble history and the dearest hopes of the Jews were bound up; or the cathedral of nature, matters little. There would be a natural fitness in either. The prayer was probably spoken aloud. While praying to the Father He teaches the apostles. With eyes upraised to heaven Christ prays aloud, in order to the consolation and elevation of the disciples. He seeks His home above. He prays, as one has said, as the mighty Intercessor and Mediator, standing between earth and heaven, looking backward and forward, and comprehending all His present and future disciples in one holy and perfect fellowship with Himself and the eternal Father. All the circumstances of redemption proceeded according to a Divine law. The ages narrowed to the hour. There was neither delay nor haste.

1. "In this chapter our Lord prays—(1) for Himself (vers. 1–5); (2) for the apostles (vers. 6–19); and again (vers. 24–26); (3) for all believers (vers. 20–23); and (4) for the world (vers. 21–23). In this prayer He comprises all He had said from ch. 13. 31, and seals, as it were, all He had hitherto done, beholding all things past, present, and to come. This chapter contains the easiest words and the deepest sense of any in all the Scripture; yet is here no incoherent rhapsody, but the whole is closely and exactly connected"—WESLEY.

As this chapter is practically inexhaustible, we may add Dr. WESTCOTT'S analysis:—

The chapter falls into three main sections:—

1. The Son and the Father (vers. 1–5).
2. The Son and His immediate disciples (vers. 6–19).
3. The Son and the Church (vers. 20–26).

The subordinate divisions will be seen in the following analysis:—

1. The Son and the Father (vers. 1–5).

The Past as the Basis for the Future.

Prayer for fresh glory as the condition of the Father's glory (ver. 1).
Such was Christ's work on earth in its aim (ver. 2), method (ver. 3).
This had been accomplished (ver. 4). Christ therefore claims to resume His glory (ver. 5).

2. The Son and His immediate disciples (vers. 6–19).

The Revelation of the Father by the Son.

(1) The revelation given and accepted (vers. 6–8).
(2) The disciples watched over though left (vers. 9–11).
(3) The past work, and the future aim (vers. 12, 13).
(4) The conflict and the strength (vers. 14, 15).
(5) The issue (vers. 16–19).

3. The Son and the Church (vers. 20–26).

The Revelation of the Son to the Church and to the World.

(1) The unity of the Church, the conviction of the world.
By the faith of believers to come (vers. 20, 21).
By the glory of the disciples (vers. 22, 23).
(2) The progress of revelation.
By the contemplation of the glory of the Son (ver. 24).
By the revelation through the Son of the Father's name (vers. 25, 26).

Lifting up His eyes to heaven. Perhaps the prayer was spoken in the stillness of the night within the hearing of the wondering disciples. Christ prayed aloud that He might lift up the disciples to the throne of grace. S. John very seldom depicts the gestures or looks of our Lord, but this was an occasion of which the impression was indelible, and the upward look could not be passed over. A little later, when He prayed in the Garden of Gethsemane, He fell on His face to the ground. He was bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh; He shared our sorrows as well as our joys; He felt exultation and depression. When we think of God it is natural to look upward. Heaven is the abode of the Hearer of prayer and Giver of every good gift.

1. Father. "This simplicity of appellation highly became the Only-begotten Son of God; to which a believer then makes the nearest approach when he is fullest of love and humble confidence. The hour is come—the appointed time for it"—WESLEY.

The hour is come. The ages waited for Jesus Christ. In the fulness of time He appeared. The days of His ministry passed, and the hour of His suffering came. In our life, as in His, there are days, hours, sometimes moments, that decide destiny. They show what we are; they lead to salvation or condemnation. Glorify Thy Son. "The Son glorified the Father both before and after His own glorification. When He speaks to the Father, He does not style Himself Son of Man"—WESLEY.

Our Lord prayed first for the glory of God. In our daily prayer we say first of all, "Hallowed be Thy name." God's will is supreme. Hence, this Son, who always did the will of His Father, prayed, Glorify Thy Son, that Thy Son may also glorify Thee.

2. As Thou hast given Him power over all flesh. "This answers to, 'Glorify Thy Son.' That He may give eternal life, etc.

This answers to, 'That Thy Son may glorify Thee.' To all whom Thou hast given Him —to all believers. This is a clear proof that Christ designed His sacrifice should avail for all; yea, that 'all flesh,' every man, should partake of everlasting life. For as the Father had 'given Him power over all flesh,' so He gave Himself a ransom for all"—WESLEY.

In this solemn hour our Lord did not pray for outward blessings for His disciples. He is concerned with the inward—the spiritual, the abiding—summed up in one word—eternal life. Not merely life in heaven, but that life here which will lead to heaven, and find its fulness there.

3. To know—"by loving, holy faith—Thee the only true God—the only Cause and End of all things; not excluding the Son and the Holy Ghost, no more than the Father is excluded from being Lord (1 Cor. 8. 6); but the false gods of the heathens. And Jesus Christ —as their Prophet, Priest, and King. This is life eternal. It is both the way to, and the essence of, everlasting happiness"—WESLEY.

Mark the connection between life and knowledge. All truth is of God. He who inspired the writers of the Bible made the world.

4. I have finished the work. "Thus have I glorified Thee, laying the foundation of Thy kingdom on earth"—WESLEY.

Christ could look back upon His life and say, "Accomplished." See the R.V. of ver. 4. Human lives are broken, disjointed, fragmentary; Christ's was complete.

5. The glory which I had. "He does not say 'received.' He always had it, till He emptied Himself of it in the days of His flesh" —WESLEY.

6. I have manifested Thy name—"all Thy attributes; and, in particular, Thy paternal relation to believers—to the men whom Thou hast given Me—the apostles; and so ver. 12. They were Thine—by creation, and by descent from Abraham. And Thou hast given them Me—by giving them faith in what I have spoken. (So. ver. 9)"—WESLEY.

He did not live for Himself. He says, I manifest Thy name. He was always doing the will of God. Christ's work is described in this phrase. He lifted up His eyes to God, and prayed for the Divine glory. Now He turns to His disciples, and prays for them. He had revealed to them the name of God; He had taught them that God was their Father. He had done this that they might be assured of the Divine favour, and become obedient to the supreme will. Thine they were by creation, by providential care, by redemption. They belonged to God, and He came into the world to bring them back to their lost home. God was seeking them before they sought Him. Reverently we may say, "God wants us." When we come to Him we are welcome. They have kept Thy word. This word "keep" means to guard watchfully, as one guards a prisoner. The only way to keep God's word is to obey it.

7. Now they know that all things—"which I have done and spoken—are of Thee—and, consequently, right and true"—WESLEY.

8. They have received them—"by faith" —WESLEY.

9. I pray not for the world—"not in these petitions, which are adapted to the state of believers only. He prays for the world at vers. 21 and 23—that they may believe, that they may know God has sent Him. This no more proves that our Lord did not pray for the world, both before and afterward, than His praying for the apostles alone (vers. 6-19), proves that He did not pray for 'them also which shall believe through their word' (ver. 20)"—WESLEY.

When our Lord says, I pray not for the world, He does not mean that the world is not to be prayed for, for He Himself prayed for His enemies who crucified Him, but now He is praying especially for His disciples. The New Testament represents Him as continuing His prayer in heaven. "He ever liveth to make intercession." There should be no full stop at the end of ver. 9. (See R.V.)

10. All things that are Mine are Thine, and that are Thine are Mine. "These are very high and strong expressions, too grand for any mere creature to use; as implying that all things whatsoever, inclusive of the Divine nature, perfections, and operations, are the common property of the Father and the Son. And this is the original ground of that peculiar property which both the Father and the Son have in the persons who were given to Christ, as Mediator; according to what is said, in the close of the verse, of His being glorified by them — namely, believing in Him, and so acknowledging His glory"—WESLEY.

"It were not so much if He had only said, all Mine is Thine, for that we may all say, that all we have is God's. But this is a far greater thing, that He inverts this and says, all Thine is Mine. This can no creature say of God"—LUTHER. The fact that Christ is glorified in them forms a second reason for His special prayer for them. As a church s the "glory" of its founder, so are faithful disciples the living monuments in which Christ's glory is seen. "Those shall have an interest in Christ's intercession, in and by whom He is glorified"—M. HENRY.

11. I am no more in the world. "The declaration of the grounds on which the prayer is urged is followed by the statement of the circumstances which made the prayer necessary. Christ leaves the world, the disciples remain in the world; Master and scholars must then be separated, so that the old connection will be broken. Christ goes to the Father; He enters therefore upon a new sphere of His mediatorial work, in which His mode of action will be changed"—WESTCOTT. In the world. "Not said of place alone, for He is still here.

The words are descriptive of state, the state of men in the flesh; sometimes viewed on its darker side, as overcoming men and bringing in spiritual death; sometimes, as here, used in the most general sense" — ALFORD. Holy Father. The expression occurs nowhere else. Keep them through Thy name — "Thy power, mercy, wisdom — that they may be one—with us, and with each other; one body, separate from the world. As we are—by resemblance to us, though not equality"—WESLEY.

12. Those whom Thou hast given Me I have guarded, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition. "So one even of them whom God had given Him is lost. So far was even that decree from being unchangeable! That the scripture might be fulfilled—that is, whereby the scripture was fulfilled. The son of perdition signifies, one that deservedly perishes; as 'a son of death' (2 Sam. 12. 5), 'children of hell' (Matt. 23. 15), and 'children of wrath' (Eph. 2. 3), signify persons justly obnoxious to death, hell, wrath"—WESLEY.

Christ's continual watching over His disciples is expressed. The phrase son of perdition is used twice only in the New Testament, here of Judas, in 2 Thess. 2. 3 of "the man of sin." "Judas," WESTCOTT says, "was lost, but even the fall of Judas found a place in the whole scheme of Divine providence." "Judas," says THOLUCK, "was not an involuntary instrument of a Divine decree." And Dr. SCHAFF adds, "Judas lost himself. Even after the betrayal he might have been saved if he had in true penitence fled to the cross."

Ver. 13 shows that Christ is conscious of the effect which will be wrought by the reminiscence of this prayer. The prayer was uttered aloud that the disciples might draw strength from the words which they heard. "When believers confess their sins they should confess their want of joy in the Lord, as one of the saddest fruits of unbelief and carnality"—FLAVEL. "If we scan all the doctrines, all the institutions, all the precepts, all the promises of Christianity, will not each appear pregnant with matter of joy? will not each yield great reason, and strong obligation, to the duty of rejoicing evermore?"—BARROW. In the world—"that is, before I leave the world. My joy—the joy I feel at going to the Father"—WESLEY.

14. I have given. I in emphatic opposition to the world. Thy word. The revelation of God as a whole.

15. That Thou wouldest take them out of the world — "not yet. But that Thou wouldest keep them from the evil one—who reigns therein"—WESLEY.

The conflict is the condition of victory. As CALVIN says, "God wills that His people should do battle, but He permits them not to be wounded unto death." S. John especially dwells upon the personal character of the evil with which man has to contend. (1 John 2. 13 14.) Our Lord's ideal "is not freedom from work, but strength to do it; not freedom from suffering, but joy in an abiding sense of the Father's love; not absence from the world, but grace to make it better by our presence; not holy lives driven from the world, and living apart from it, but holy lives spent in the world and leavening it" — ELLICOTT. But whilst the disciples are on the earth they are in danger. (Read vers. 12–15.) They were assured of Christ's protection, but He did not shield them from the world's hatred. They were in the world, but they were not to be of the world. And so He prays they may be kept from all evil. Only God could keep them, but they could aid their own safety,—by union that they may be one; by consecration that they might be sanctified (vers. 16–21). In ancient story we find two famous characters who sought to pass safely by the Isle of the Sirens, whose song was so entrancing that the sailors who came within its sound were led to steer straight for their shore, where they were wrecked. Ulysses stuffed wax in the sailors' ears, and then had himself bound to the mast, while he sailed within sound of the bewitching strains. He then longed to rush to the shore of the tempters; but he was bound, and he could not make the sailors hear his cries. On the other hand, Orpheus took his lyre and made sweeter music, and sang more delightful songs, and thus overcame the song of the tempters. As the rising sun makes the stars fade away, so the Christian is kept from the evil by the greater attractions of Christ, by seeing His glory, by entering into His joy. That which Christ prayed for, we ought to strive for—knowledge and obedience. First know God, and then serve Him. We must know God's will before we can do it; knowledge is the eye to direct the foot of obedience. We find God by knowledge, but we enjoy Him by love. Let us live as if we could see the flash of the eye of God, that eye which is ever watchful, that never slumbers nor sleeps.

17. Sanctify — "consecrate them, by the anointing of Thy Spirit, to their office, and perfect them in holiness by means of Thy word"—WESLEY.

19. I sanctify Myself—"I devote Myself, as a victim, to be sacrificed"—WESLEY.

20. For them who will believe—"in all ages"—WESLEY.

The limitation stated in ver. 9 is at an end; through the Church He prays for the world (ver. 21).

21. As Thou art in Me. "This also is to be understood in a way of similitude, and not of sameness or equality. That the world may believe. Here Christ prays for the world. Observe the sum of His whole prayer—(1) receive Me into Thy own and My glory; (2) let My apostles share therein; (3) and all other believers; (4) and let all the world believe"—WESLEY.

22. The glory which Thou hast given Me I have given them—"the glory of the Only-begotten shines in all the sons of God. How great is the majesty of Christians!"—WESLEY.

"The hosts of all those, who not until after His own death (ch. 12. 24) shall enter, through the preaching of the apostles, into the kingdom of God, rise before the consciousness of Christ. His desires for them are summed up in the single petition for their unity with Him and the Father. And this unity is infinitely more than mere unanimity, since it rests upon unity of spirit and life, and the perfect communion of all good things pertains to its manifestations; according to ver. 22, even the unity of the glory"—THOLUCK. "The eternal unity of believers with one another will produce such external results ('see how these Christians love one another'), that the world will be induced to believe. Christian unity and love (Matt. 7. 12; Luke 6. 31; 1 Cor. 13) is a moral miracle, a conquest of the resisting will of man, and therefore more convincing than a physical miracle, which is a conquest of unresisting nature. Hence the divisions and animosities of Christians are a perpetual stumbling-block to the world"—C. B.

23. I in them, etc. (Comp. the parable of the vine and the branches.) "(1) Union with Christ; (2) Union with the Father through Him; (3) Union with each other resulting from these"—M. HENRY. According to this prayer the unity of the Church means the conversion of the world.

24. "Here He returns to the apostles. I will. He asks as having a right to be heard, and prays, not as a servant, but a Son. That they may behold My glory—herein is the happiness of heaven (1 John 3. 2)"—WESLEY. I will. (Comp. 21. 22; Matt. 8. 3; 23. 37; 26. 39; Luke 12. 49.) Behold My glory. The scene of this vision is not defined. The foundation of the world. Our Lord thrice uses this expression—here, Luke 11. 50, and Matt. 25. 34. Two of those who heard it reproduced it. (1 Pet. 1. 20; Rev. 13. 8; 17. 8; comp. Eph. 1. 4; Heb. 4. 3; 9. 26.) "The words distinctly imply the personal pre-existence of Christ. The thought of an eternal love active in the depths of Divine Being presents, perhaps, as much as we can faintly apprehend of the doctrine of the essential Trinity"—C. B.

25, 26. At the close there is one more glance at the opposition between the world and the Church.

25. Righteous Father. "The admission of believers to God through Christ flows even from the justice of God"—WESLEY.

"The epithet harmonises with the appeal to the justice of God which follows, which is based on a simple statement of the facts. The world knew not God; Christ knew Him; the disciples knew that Christ was sent by Him. Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"—C. B.

26. I have declared to them Thy name—"Thy new best name of love. That the love wherewith Thou hast loved Me—and I—that Thou and Thy love and I and My love, may be in them—that they may love Me with that love"—WESLEY.

I in them. "The last word of the last prayer corresponds with the last word of His discourse, 'I have overcome the world' (ch. 16. 33). He is Himself the source of victory and life"—WESTCOTT. "These last words of Christ's mediatorial prayer sum up its purpose. They are the thread which runs through all these farewell discourses. He is going away, and yet abides with them. His bodily presence passes away, His spiritual presence remains for ever; not seen with the eye without, but felt, as life and strength within. Having known Christ after the flesh; now they know Him so no more: they are in Christ, a new creation (2 Cor. 5. 16, 17)"—PLUMMER. "The last word of this sublime prayer is," as STIER says, "a better seal than any doxology or Amen." "How sublimely this prayer was realised in the history of the apostles, the Acts and the Epistles," says GEIKIE, "abundantly illustrate. It was their common glory to believe that nothing could separate them from the love of God in Christ. The contrast between the dejected, faint-hearted, materialising Galilean fishermen and peasants of the Gospels, and the heroic, spiritual confessors of Pentecost and after times, is itself a miracle, great beyond all others. The illumination of soul, the grandeur of conception, the loftiness of aim, and a transformation from a lower to an infinitely higher mental and moral condition, as complete as the change from early twilight to noon, can find their only solution in the admission that they must have received the miraculous spiritual enlightenment from above, which Jesus had promised to send them."

CHAPTER XVIII.

IN the history of the Passion, as recorded by S. John, there are many points of connection with the other Gospels. Thoughtful readers will find it interesting to trace the resemblances and contrasts; and they will gain besides a sense of the reality and life-likeness of the Divine portrait. We give an outline of the relations as summarised by Dr. WESTCOTT:—

This last main division of the Gospel falls naturally into four principal sections:—

1. The betrayal (ch. 18. 1–11).
2. The double trial (ch. 18. 12–19. 16).
3. The end (ch. 19. 17–42).
4. The new life (ch. 20).

1. In comparing the narrative of S. John with the parallel narratives of the Synoptists, it must be observed generally that here, as everywhere, S. John fixes the attention of the reader upon the ideas which the several events bring out and illustrate. The Passion and Resurrection are for him revelations of the Person of Christ. The objective fact is a "sign" of something which lies deeper. It is a superficial and inadequate treatment of his narrative to regard it as a historical supplement of the other narratives, or of the current oral narrative on which they were based. It does, it is true, become in part such a supplement, because it is a portrayal of the main spiritual aspects of the facts illustrated from the fulness of immediate knowledge, but the record is independent and complete in itself. It is a whole, and, like the rest of the Gospel, an interpretation of the inner meaning of the history which it contains. Thus, in the history of the Passion, three thoughts among others rise into clear prominence:—

(1) The voluntariness of Christ's sufferings:

Ch. 18. 4.	Ch. 18. 36.
,, 18. 2.	,, 19. 28.
,, 18. 11.	,, 19. 30.

(2) The fulfilment of a Divine plan in Christ's sufferings:

Ch. 18. 4.	Ch. 19. 11.
,, 18. 9.	,, 19. 24.
,, 18. 11.	,, 19. 28.

(3) The majesty which shines through Christ's sufferings:

Ch. 18. 6.	Ch. 19. 11.
,, 18. 20 ff.	,, 19. 26 f.
,, 18. 37.	,, 19. 36 f.

The narrative in this sense becomes a commentary on earlier words which pointed to the end, (1) ch. 10. 17, 18; (2) ch. 13. 1; (3) ch. 13. 31.

2. In several places the full meaning of S. John's narrative is first obtained by the help of words or incidents preserved by the Synoptists. His narrative assumes facts found in them, e.g. ch. 18. 11, 33, 40; 19. 41.

3. The main incidents recorded by more than one of the other Evangelists, which are omitted by S. John, are—

The agony (Matt., Mark, Luke).
The traitor's kiss (Matt., Mark, Luke).
The desertion by all (Matt., Mark). (Comp. John 16. 32.)
The examination before the Sanhedrim at night; the false witness; the adjuration; the great confession (Matt., Mark).
The mockery as Prophet (Matt., Mark, Luke).
The Council at daybreak (Matt., Mark, Luke).
The mockery after condemnation (Matt., Mark).
The impressment of Simon (Matt., Mark, Luke).
The reproaches of spectators (Matt., Mark, Luke) and of the robbers (Matt., Mark, Luke).
The darkness (Matt., Mark, Luke).
The cry from Isa. 22 (Matt., Mark).
The rending of the veil (Matt., Mark).
The confession of the centurion (Matt., Mark, Luke).

Other incidents omitted by S. John are recorded by single Evangelists.

S. MATTHEW.

Power over the hosts of heaven.
Pilate's wife's message.
Pilate's hand washing.
The self-condemnation of the Jews.
The earthquake.

S. MARK.

The flight of the young man.
Pilate's question as to the death of Christ.

S. LUKE.

The examination before Herod.
The lamentation of the women.
Three "words" from the cross (ch. 23. 34, 43, 46).
The repentance of one of the robbers.

4. THE MAIN INCIDENTS PECULIAR TO S. JOHN ARE:

The words of power at the arrest (ch. 18. 4–9).
The examination before Annas (ch. 18. 13–24).
The first conference of the Jews with Pilate, and Pilate's private examination (ch. 18. 28–37; 19. 9–11). (Comp. Matt. 27. 11; Mark 15. 2; Luke 23. 3.)

The first mockery and the Ecce Homo (ch. 19. 2–5).
Pilate's maintenance of his words (ch. 19. 21, 22)
The last charge (ch. 19. 25–27).
The thirst, "It is finished" (ch. 19. 28–30).
The piercing the side (ch. 19. 31–37).
The ministry of Nicodemus (ch. 19. 39).

5. In the narrative of incidents recorded elsewhere, S. John constantly adds details, often minute, and yet most significant — e.g. ch. 18. 1, 2, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 26, 28; ch. 19. 14, 17, 19, 23, 41. In the midst of great differences of detail, the Synoptists and S. John offer many impressive resemblances as to the spirit and character of the proceedings; e.g.—(1) The activity of the high priests (i.e. the Sadducean hierarchy) as distinguished from the Pharisees.

(2) The course of the accusation:—civil charge: religious charge: personal influence.

(3) The silence of the Lord in His public accusations, with the significant exception (Matt. 26. 64).

(4) The tone of mockery.

(5) The character of Pilate: haughty, contemptuous, vacillating, selfish.

Vers. 1–11. THE BETRAYAL.—Jesus and the disciples stand over against Judas and the adversaries. The substance of this section is peculiar to S. John, though it presents many points of contact with the Synoptic narratives. The conflict which the other Evangelists record is here presupposed, and regarded in its issues. The victory follows the battle. The Lord acts freely, and with sovereign and protecting power towards His enemies and His disciples at the moment when He is given over for death. It is enough, the hour is come; behold, the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. A man is immortal until his work is done. The Son of Man sustained Himself by the thought of the Divine purpose and the predestined hour.

1. A garden—"probably belonging to one of His friends. He might retire to this private place, not only for the advantage of secret devotion, but also that the people might not be alarmed at His apprehension; nor attempt, in the first sallies of their zeal, to rescue Him in a tumultuous manner. Cedron was (as the name signifies) a dark, shady valley, on the east side of Jerusalem, between the city and the Mount of Olives; through which a little brook ran, which took its name from it. It was this brook which David, a type of Christ, went over, with the people weeping, in his flight from Absalom"—WESLEY.

The gardens of the Bible will well repay our entrance. There is the garden of Paradise, which was situate in the midst of Eden. You will read of it in the Book of Genesis. It was, doubtless, a fairer place than we have ever seen. There was the King's Garden. You will read of it in the Book of Nehemiah; it was near the Pool of Siloam, and was formed by the meeting of two valleys. To the old Hebrew poets, a well-watered garden was a picture of fertility and prosperity. There was the Garden of Gethsemane, situated across the brook Cedron. There was the Garden of the Burial. In Joseph's garden, in a new tomb, our Lord was laid. Now we are in the Garden of Gethsemane. To Christian minds its inexhaustible associations are the offspring of a single event—the agony of the Son of God on the evening preceding His passion. We know, however, from the Evangelists (Luke and John) that our Lord ofttimes resorted thither with His disciples. As we cannot visit the spot, the next best thing is to see it through the eyes of others. Dr. GEIKIE thus describes the scenery as it is to-day: "In the steep, rocky part of the Cedron valley, near the tombs of the Jewish cemetery, there are no olive trees to be seen, but they begin to be numerous on the upper side of the little bridge, and there are some almond trees on Mount Moriah. The walls of the Temple enclosure proudly crown the eastern side of the hill, their colossal size still exciting the same astonishment as it once roused in the disciples, when they called aloud, 'Master, see what manner of stones and what buildings.' On the bridge, or near it, some lepers were standing or sitting on the ground, begging; hideous in their looks and their poverty. A water-seller or two also were standing at the wall, offering their doubtful beverage to passers-by. The bridge is the one passage from the east side of Jerusalem to Mount Olivet and Siloam; so that there are always some people passing. Sheep graze on the wretched growth near the tombs; their guardians, picturesque in their poverty, resting in some shady spot near. Asses with burdens of all kinds jog along over the sheets of rock, their drivers walking quietly behind the last one. The creatures never think of running, and there is only one possible path, so that it is not necessary to lead them. A church, known as the Chapel of the Tomb of the Virgin, stands within white walls on the eastern side of the bridge, and a short way down from it is a garden, to name which is enough—Gethsemane, 'the oil press,' the spot to which, or to some place near, our Lord betook Himself after the institution of the Last Supper on the night of His betrayal. Here, in the shadow of the trees of peace, amidst stillness, loneliness, and darkness, except for the light of the Passover moon, His soul was troubled even unto death. Here He endured His more than mortal agony, till calmness returned with the holy submission, that once and again rose from His inmost heart, 'Father, not My will, but Thine, be done.' Numerous olive trees still grow on the slopes and in the hollow, and of these the Franciscans have enclosed seven within a high wall, in the belief that they are the very trees under which our Saviour prayed. It is, however, impossible to tell the exact spot where Jesus knelt. At one time the garden was larger than at present, and contained several churches and chapels. The scene of the arrest of Christ was pointed out in the Middle Ages in what is now called the Chapel of the Sweat, and the traditions respecting other spots have varied, but only within narrow limits; for since the fourth century, at all events, the garden has always remained the same. The wall of Gethsemane, facing Jerusalem, is continuous, the entrance to the garden being by a small door at the eastern or Mount of Olives' side. Immediately outside this, you are shown the spot where Peter, James, and John are said to have slept during the agony, and the fragment of a pillar, a few paces to the south, is pointed to as the place where Judas betrayed his Master with a kiss. The seven olive trees are very old. Roses, pinks, and other flowers blossom. Olive oil from the trees of the garden is sold at a high price, and relics made from the stones of the olives are in great request."

The Arrest.—John takes us immediately after the High Priestly Prayer, out over the brook Cedron. In the garden of anguish and victory, the Second Adam began to make atonement for the sin which the first Adam committed in the garden of Paradise. Judas knew the place; and having sold his Master for thirty pieces of silver, he led a mixed multitude of Roman soldiers, members of the Temple watch, servants, high priests, and elders, and curious onlookers, within the sacred enclosure. The soldiers had swords, and the servants of the Council, staves. Although it was the Easter full moon, they provided themselves with lanterns and torches; as if our Lord would hide Himself, or as if He would defend Himself. Strange that those who had seen Him call Lazarus from the grave did not fear to approach Him in anger! With a word of calm majesty, Let us go forth, He went to meet His foes. Whom seek ye? was His simple and sublime question. Adam had to be sought among the trees of Paradise; this Son of God declares Himself. And now a miracle of control causes them to fall backward. What a standing miracle was our Lord's personality! When He drew the veil that shrouded His majesty men trembled. The agony and prayer in Gethsemane are only implied in S. John's narrative. Their record is in Matt. 26. 37-46; Mark. 14. 32-42; Luke 22. 41-46. Humanly speaking, the calmness of Christ came from this solemn fellowship. He had said, "Not My will, but Thine, be done," and went forth without fear.

3. A troop of soldiers—"a cohort of Roman foot"—WESLEY.

6. As soon as He said, I am He, they went backward, and fell to the ground. How amazing is it, that they should renew the assault, after so sensible an experience both of His power and mercy! But probably the priests among them might persuade themselves and their attendants, that this also was done by Beelzebub; and that it was through the providence of God, not the indulgence of Jesus, that they received no further damage.

8. If ye seek Me, let these (My disciples) go. "It was an eminent instance of His power over the spirits of men, that they so far obeyed this word as not to seize even Peter, when he had cut off the ear of Malchus"—WESLEY.

The Interpreting Word.—Let these go their way: that the saying might be fulfilled, Of those that Thou hast given Me I lost not one. The saying is quoted from Christ's prayer (ch. 17. 12). This was not the complete fulfilment of these words, but one instance of their fulfilment, and showing that they still refer to our bodily safety, as well as our spiritual salvation. Christ's words have many fulfilments; they are inexhaustible. The special mention of the soldiers and the Temple officers fixes attention on the combination of Gentile and Jew in this first stage of the Passion. He appeared defeated, but when "He lifts for an instant the mantle which screened His Divinity," they flee and fall before Him.

10. Then Simon Peter. "No other Evangelist names him: nor could they safely. But S. John, writing after his death, might do it without any such inconvenience"—WESLEY.

Simon Peter's sword.—Always impulsive, he struck now before he spoke, almost before he thought. Perhaps he wished by this blow to make good his vow, "I will lay down my life for Thy sake." It was also his design to give a signal to rise in arms against the foe, but our Lord's kingdom is not of this world, and He will not use worldly weapons. The Jews among the company seem to have been foremost in the arrest. The incident of Simon and Malchus is described by all the Evangelists, but S. John alone mentions the names of Peter and Malchus. It is impossible to tell what position Malchus held. He was prominent in his action, and thus marked himself out for attack. Christ will not lay down the cup now He has taken it into His hands. The same image of a cup occurs in Matt. 20. 22; Mark 10. 38; and in connection with this scene (Matt. 26. 39; Mark 14. 36; Luke 22. 42). The image is also found in the Old Testament. (Ps. 75. 8; Ezek. 23. 31.) The cause of Christ is not to be defended by carnal weapons.

13. "Annas had been high priest before his son-in-law, Caiaphas. And though he had for some time resigned that office, yet they paid so much regard to his age and experience, that they brought Christ to Annas first. But we do not read of anything remarkable which passed at the house of Annas; for which reason, His being carried thither is omitted by the other Evangelists"—WESLEY.

Annas was a remarkable figure in the Jewish history of the time. He and his five sons held the high priesthood in succession. The relationship of Caiaphas to Annas is not mentioned by any writer except S. John. Annas and Caiaphas are agreed in opposition to Jesus the King.

17. Art not thou also—"as well as the other—one of this man's disciples? She does not appear to have asked with any design to hurt him"—WESLEY.

"John had hurried on to the scene where Christ was being examined, as at the cross (ch. 19. 26) he kept close to his Master, and in neither case was molested. Peter who followed afar off (Luke 22. 54), and that rather out of curiosity to see the end (Matt. 26. 58) than out of love, encountered temptation, and fell"—PLUMMER. "Peter's love took him as far as the palace, but his fear prevented him entering in"—CHRYSOSTOM.

20. I spake openly—"as to the manner. Continually—as to the time. In the synagogue and Temple—as to the place. In secret have I said nothing—no point of doctrine which I have not taught in public"—WESLEY.

"There is a strong emphasis on 'I.' Christ answers no questions about His disciples. He bears the brunt Himself alone. Moreover, He seems to contrast the openness of His proceedings with the secrecy of His enemies"—C. B.

21. Why askest thou Me?—"whom thou wilt not believe"—WESLEY.

22. Answerest Thou the high priest so?—"with so little reverence"—WESLEY.

24. Now Annas had sent him to Caiaphas—as is implied (ver. 15)—bound—being still bound (ver. 12).

28. They went not into the palace themselves, lest they should be defiled—"by going into a house which was not purged from leaven." (Deut. 16. 4.)

31. It is not lawful for us to put any man to death. The power of inflicting capital punishment had been taken from them that very year. So "the sceptre was departed from Judah," and transferred to the Romans.

32. Signifying what death He should die—"for crucifixion was not a Jewish, but a Roman punishment. So that had He not been condemned by the Roman governor, He could not have been crucified"—WESLEY.

The movement in taking Jesus from Annas to Caiaphas once more attracted attention to the stranger by the fire, and led to Peter's denial. This is one of the few incidents S.

John has in common with the other Evangelists. (See the parallel passages.) The Jewish or ecclesiastical trial is now ended, and the Roman or civil trial begun.

33–35. Pilate. His connection with Jesus has given him an earthly immortality. The ecclesiastical trial was conducted before Annas and Caiaphas; the civil trial before Pilate. Pontius Pilate was the sixth Roman governor, or, speaking more accurately, procurator of Judea, and held this office for ten years during the reign of Tiberius (A.D. 25–35). He is also mentioned by Tacitus in the famous passage, "The author of that name (Christiani) or sect was Christ, who was capitally punished under Tiberius by Pontius Pilate, the procurator." The procurator was generally a Roman knight, acting under the governor of a province as collector of the revenue, and judge in cases arising under it. But Pontius Pilate had full military and judicial authority in Judea, as being a small province attached to the larger Syria; he was responsible to the governor of Syria. Cæsarea was the regular abode of the Roman governors. The Passover brought Pilate to Jerusalem, as disturbances were most to be apprehended when the people were gathered from the country for the feast. King of the Jews. "Pilate's question," WESTCOTT says, "may mean either, 'Art Thou He who has just now become notorious under this title?' or, 'Dost Thou claim the title, as it is said?' The title itself would be likely to arrest Pilate's attention, whether he had heard it spoken of before in connection with the entry into Jerusalem, or only now from the Jews. And further, he would rightly conclude that the title, when thus put forward, would be fitted to call out any fanaticism which there might be in a political enthusiast. The full form which the accusation assumed is given in Luke 23. 2. (See also ch. 19. 12.) In each of the Four Gospels, the first words of Pilate to Jesus are the same, 'Art Thou the King of the Jews?'"

36. My kingdom is not of this world—"is not an external, but a spiritual, kingdom. That I might not be delivered to the Jews—which Pilate had already attempted to do (ver. 31); and afterwards actually did (ch. 19. 16)" —WESLEY.

The Kingdom of Christ.—The possessive pronoun is emphasised: My kingdom, My servants. The Jews had a conception of a kingdom; the Sanhedrim had servants. So had Jesus, but the contrast is greater than the resemblance. Christ's kingdom is in the world, but not of it. It does not derive its origin or its support from earthly forces. (Comp. 8. 23; 15. 19; 17. 14–16; 1 John 2. 16; 4. 5.)

37. Thou sayest—the truth. To this end was I born—"speaking of His human origin: His Divine was above Pilate's comprehension. Yet it is intimated in the following words, I came into the world that I might witness to the truth—which was both declared to the Jews, and, in the process of His passion, to the princes of the Gentiles also. Everyone that is of the truth—that is a lover of it. Heareth My voice—an universal maxim. Every sincere lover of truth will hear Him, so as to understand and practise what He saith"—WESLEY.

38. What is truth?—"said Pilate, a courtier; perhaps meaning, What signifies truth? Is that a thing worth hazarding your life for? So he left Him presently, to plead with the Jews for Him, looking upon Him as an innocent, but weak, man"—WESLEY.

The Truth . . . What is truth? Pilate's question is general. Truth anywhere, he seems to say, is hard to find, difficult to determine. What is truth? This is the question of questions. Obey the truth thou knowest, and thou shalt know more and yet more.

Faultless.—I find in Him no fault at all.

39, 40. Barabbas or Jesus.—Now Barabbas was a robber.

CHAPTER XIX.

Vers. 1–16. THE TRIALS OF JESUS.—"Suffered under Pontius Pilate." This is one of the articles of the Apostles' Creed. We are now entering the Holy Place of the Gospels, and beholding the most wonderful thing in the history of the world. The Son of God is arraigned before the judgment-seat of a Roman. The immaculate Purity is charged with crimes. There are five trials of Jesus—(1) before Annas, a preliminary examination; (2) before Caiaphas and the Council; (3) before Pilate; (4) before Herod; (5) before Pilate again, the final trial recorded in this chapter. One of the famous paintings in the world, "The Ecce Homo," takes its subject from Pilate's words. The story of the trial of Jesus is found in Matt. 26. 57 to 27. 31; Mark 14. 53 to 15. 20; Luke 22. 54 to 23. 25; ch. 18. 13 to 19. 16. The mockery of Jesus by the servants and others took place in the court of Caiaphas' palace in the early hours of Friday morning. (See Matt. 26. 67, 68; Mark 14. 65; Luke 22. 63–65.) The Sanhedrim reassembled at daybreak, and condemned Jesus to death; but as they had no power to execute their sentence, they brought Him to Pilate. In the previous chapter, which must be read in connection with this, we have the record of Pilate's interview with the Jews, and private conference with Jesus. He publicly declared the innocence of Jesus, and sent Him to Herod. On His return, he made another attempt to release Him. At the moment the people were choosing Barabbas instead of Jesus, Pilate was warned through his wife's dream. This choice between Jesus and Barabbas led a poet to sing—

"Once to every man and nation comes a moment to decide
In the strife of truth with falsehood, for the good or evil side;

Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right—
And the choice goes by for ever, 'twixt that darkness and that light."

After this selection, Pilate made his fifth attempt to release Jesus by scourging instead of crucifixion. "S. John, combined with S. Luke, makes it clear that the scourging was inflicted as a separate punishment, in the hope that it would suffice, and not merely as the usual accompaniment of crucifixion"—C. B. The Jew, EDERSHEIM, tells us that the scourge of leather thongs was loaded with lead, or armed with spikes and bones, which lacerated back and chest and face, till the victim sometimes fell down before the judge, a bleeding mass of torn flesh. "Thus, He was wounded for our transgressions; He was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and by His stripes we are healed." The soldiers also mocked Him, and with the tough twigs of a thorny plant, twisted into a mock laurel wreath, like that worn at times by the Cæsars, they placed this crown of thorns upon His temples. And taking a cast-off soldier's mantle, they flung it around Him in imitation of the purple robe worn by kings. These acts of mockery they interpreted by words of mockery; He all the time maintaining a majestic silence. "He was led as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so He opens not His mouth."

"With the soldiers, straitly bound,
Forth the Saviour fareth;
Over all His holy form,
Bleeding wounds He beareth.
He a crown of woven thorns,
King of Glory, weareth,
And each one, with bended knee,
Fresher taunts prepareth.

They Thy mild and tender flesh,
O Redeemer, beating,
To the column bind Thee fast,
For the scourge preparing;
Thus the ransom of our peace
Cruel stripes are tearing,
As the streams that flow therefrom
Fully are declaring.

After passed He through the street,
As the morn grew colder,
And the heavy, bitter cross
Bare He on His shoulder.
Thronged the windows and the doors
Many a rude beholder;
But He found no comforter
There, and no upholder."

Thus sang a sweet singer of the twelfth century, who died and left no name.

7. By our law He ought to die, because He made Himself the Son of God—"which they understood in the highest sense, and therefore accounted blasphemy"—WESLEY.

8. He was the more afraid. "He seems to have been afraid before of shedding innocent blood"—WESLEY.

9. Whence art Thou?—"that is, Whose son art Thou?"—WESLEY.

11. Thou couldest have no power over Me—"for I have done nothing to expose Me to the power of any magistrate. Therefore he that delivered Me to thee—namely, Caiaphas, knowing this, is more blamable than thou"—WESLEY.

13. Pilate sat down on the judgment-seat—"which was then without the palace. In a place called, in Greek, the Pavement—on account of a beautiful piece of mosaic work, with which the floor was adorned. But in Hebrew, Gabbatha—or the high place, because it stood on an eminence, so that the judge, sitting on his throne, might be seen and heard by a considerable number of people"—WESLEY.

14. It was the preparation of the Passover. "For this reason both the Jews and Pilate were desirous to bring the matter to a conclusion. Every Friday was called the preparation; namely, for the Sabbath. And as often as the Passover fell on a Friday, that day was called the preparation of the Passover"—WESLEY.

Vers. 17–30. JESUS CRUCIFIED.—"The record of the last scene of the passion contains very much that is peculiar to S. John: The challenging of the title (vers. 20–22), the last bequest (vers. 25–27), two words (vers. 28–30), the piercing of the side (vers. 31–37), the ministry of Nicodemus (ver. 39 f.). For a time at least S. John was an eye-witness (vers. 26–35).

"The narrative falls into the following sections:—

1. The Crucifixion (vers. 17–22).
2. The two groups of bystanders (vers. 23–27).
3. The fulfilment (vers. 28–30).
4. The two requests (vers. 31–42).

"Generally, it will be observed that S. John dwells on the fulfilment of the old covenant, on prophecies and types (vers. 24–28, 36, 37), and on the majesty of the Lord in suffering. In all the will of God and the will of Christ is seen to be accomplished. In especial, S. John seems to insist on details (ver. 29) which tended to identify the Lord with the paschal lamb, both as offered and as consumed"—WESTCOTT.

Taking our station with the beloved disciple, as near as possible to the person of the suffering Saviour, we join the procession as it takes its departure from the palace of the high priest. Jesus no longer wears the purple robe in which He had been mocked. The cross to which He was to be nailed had been prepared. It was probably a tree, with limbs of a proper size and shape to adapt it to the purpose. S. Peter styles it a tree (1 Pet. 2. 24), and it repeatedly receives the same designation from the historian Luke (Acts 5. 30; 10. 39; 13. 29). It is laid on the Condemned, and the procession starts for the place of execution. Suddenly its progress is arrested. The Saviour sinks beneath the burden that has been laid on Him. No severity of the soldiers can cause Him to rise beneath it. It is not obstinacy, it is exhaustion.

"One Simon—a Jew, from Cyrene—who is met in the way, is compelled to take the cross and bear it after Him. Jesus seems to have borne the cross as far as the city gate. It was as they were coming out (Matt. 27. 32) that they met Simon the Cyrenian coming in from the country (Mark 15. 21)"—MACDONALD. A close comparison of the several Evangelists has led some to think that our Lord never loosed His cross, Simon merely lifting one end. On which, DR. LANGE beautifully says, "Here, as always, the Saviour bears the heaviest part of the burden, while the lightest part rests on him who follows after Christ." An imaginative writer—General WALLACE—thus describes the scene: "He was nearly dead. Every few steps He staggered, as if He would fall. A stained gown, badly torn, hung from His shoulders over a seamless under-tunic. His bare feet left red splotches upon the stones. An inscription on a board was tied to His neck. A crown of thorns had been crushed hard down upon His head, making cruel wounds, from which streams of blood, now dry and blackened, had run over His face and neck. The long hair, tangled in the thorns, was clotted thick. The skin, where it could be seen, was ghastly white. His hands were tied before Him. Back somewhere in the city, He had fallen exhausted, under the transverse of His cross, which, as a condemned person, custom required Him to bear to the place of execution; now, a countryman carried the burden in His stead. Four soldiers went with Him as a guard against the mob, who sometimes, nevertheless, broke through and struck Him with sticks, and spit upon Him. Yet no sound escaped Him, neither remonstrance nor groan." Why could not Christ bear His own cross, who was able to bear the sins of the whole world when hanging upon the cross? How could death conquer the Lord of Life? Probably the cross was very heavy. He was much weakened with His long watching and agony of the night before. He was made like unto us in the possession of the infirmities incident to complete humanity. He was bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. Thus, in company with soldiers, priests, and others,—a curious crowd,—His mother, with other faithful women, He went along the Way of Sorrow. There is a tradition that Veronica, a pious lady of Jerusalem, was moved with pity on beholding the bloody and perspiring face of our Lord when on the way to crucifixion, and manifested her sympathy by giving Him her head-cloth to wipe off the perspiration. And in response to her kindness, He returned the cloth with His features imprinted on it. There is another well-known tradition of the Wandering Jew, who, as Jesus with the cross passed his place of business, and leaned for rest against his porch, harshly bade Him move on. On this account his remorse condemned him to wander up and down the earth, and never find rest till Jesus shall come again. Traditions narrate many incidents in the sad procession, but only one such incident is recorded in the Gospel history. S. Luke tells us that among the vast multitude of people who followed Jesus were many women. They beat upon their breasts and uttered cries of sorrow. He stilled them with the words, "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for Me." And then He predicted days of grief. Many who listened, lived to suffer the horrors of the time when powerful Rome besieged the city and destroyed the Temple.

17. Bearing His cross — "not the whole cross, for that was too large and heavy, but the transverse beam of it, to which His hands were afterwards fastened. This they used to make the person to be executed carry"—WESLEY.

The place called Golgotha. Golgotha is a Hebrew word, meaning a skull. From its Latin equivalent—calvaria—comes our English word Calvary. The place was so named because it was a small knoll in the shape of a skull. We often compare a hill to a head. "The exact site is unknown. But we know that it was (1) apparently a well-known spot, (2) outside the gate (comp. Heb. 13. 12), but (3) near the city (ch. 19. 20), (4) on a thoroughfare leading into the country (Luke 23. 26), and (5) contained a garden or orchard (ch. 19. 41)" — MACLEAR. An ancient tradition from the fourth century places Golgotha a short distance north of Zion, within the present wall, where has been built the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. Modern research inclines to a site upon the knoll containing the cave called the "Grotto of Jeremiah." It is outside of the north wall of the city, but near to it, about one hundred yards distant. It is well that the sacred spot should be unknown. It is too holy to be desecrated by idolatrous susperstition. The Apostles and Evangelists barely allude to the places of our Lord's birth, death, and resurrection; they fixed their eyes upon the great facts themselves, and upon the ever-living Christ in heaven. With Him two others. Christ was crucified between two robbers—one penitent, one impenitent. At first both reviled Him, but one's heart was softened, and he sought forgiveness. For him Christ opened the kingdom of heaven. One was saved in the last hour, that none may despair; one only, that none might presume.

19. Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews. "Undoubtedly these were the very words, although the other Evangelists do not express them at large"—WESLEY.

20. It was written in Latin — "for the majesty of the Roman empire. In Hebrew—because it was the language of the nation. And in Greek—for the information of the Hellenists, who spoke that language, and came in great numbers to the feast"—WESLEY.

22. What I have written I have written —"that shall stand"—WESLEY.

Pilate's word, written in the three languages, was probably thus:

> The Aramaic—Jesus, the Nazarene, King of the Jews.
> The Greek—This is Jesus, the King of the Jews.
> The Latin—The King of the Jews.

According to the reading of Revised Version the Latin stood second, i.e. the national dialect, the official dialect, the common dialect. The three world-languages owned Christ.

Pilate wrote a title in the three world-languages—Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. And thus Christ received the world's unconscious homage. In His hour of apparent defeat, men hailed Him King. Pilate, like Caiaphas, became a prophet of truth.

23. The vesture—"the upper garment"—WESLEY.

24. They parted My garments among them. "No circumstances of David's life bore any resemblance to this, or to several other passages in the twenty-second Psalm. So that in this scripture, as in some others, the prophet seems to have been thrown into a preternatural ecstasy, wherein, personating the Messiah, he spoke barely what the Spirit dictated, without any regard to himself"—WESLEY.

Our Lord's worldly possessions fell into the hands of His executioners. They parted His garments among them. But the seamless robe they did not sever. From the earliest times that seamless robe has been regarded as a symbol of the unity of His Church.

25. His mother's sister. "But we do not read she had any brother. She was her father's heir, and as such transmitted the right of the kingdom of David to Jesus. Mary, the wife of Cleophas — called likewise Alphæus, the father, as Mary was the mother, of James and Joses and Simon and Judas"—WESLEY.

27. Behold thy mother—"to whom thou art now to perform the part of a son, in My place: a peculiar honour which Christ conferred on him. From that hour—from the time of our Lord's death"—WESLEY.

While He suffered, the women stood beholding; amongst them His own mother. He committed her to the care of S. John:—

> "Weeping stood His mother, sighing
> By the cross, where Jesus, dying,
> Hung aloft on Calvary:
> Through her soul, in sorrow moaning,
> Bowed in grief, in spirit groaning,
> Pierced the sword in misery."

LONGFELLOW says: "Even He that died for us upon the cross, in the last hour, in the unutterable agony of death, was mindful of His mother, as if to teach us that this holy love should be our last worldly thought, the last point of earth from which the soul should take its flight to heaven."

29. A stalk of hyssop—"which in those countries grows exceeding large and strong"—WESLEY.

30. It is finished—"My suffering; the purchase of man's redemption. He delivered up His spirit—to God (Matt. 27. 50)"—WESLEY.

Many things connected with the crucifixion the Evangelist assumes to be already familiar. Of the Seven Words on the Cross we find one in Matthew, three in Luke, three in John—

> "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."
> "Verily, I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise."
> "Woman, behold thy son."
> "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?"
> "I thirst."
> "It is finished."
> "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit."

The cross, once the sign of ignominy and disgrace, is now the symbol of honour, the sign-manual of Christendom. The cry, It is finished! may have ruptured some of the vessels of His heart, for no sooner had it been uttered than He bowed His head upon His breast, and yielded His life a ransom for many. "Finished," as LANGE says, 'was His holy life; with His life His struggle, with His struggle His work, with His work the redemption, with the redemption the foundation of the new world. It was His farewell to earth. He had found rest at last in His own heaven, His Father's home." It is finished. The life and the ministry; His task and our salvation were now complete.

31. Lest the bodies should remain on the cross on the Sabbath—"which they would have accounted a profanation of any Sabbath, but of that in particular. For that Sabbath was a great day—being not only a Sabbath, but the second day of the feast of unleavened bread, from whence they reckoned the weeks to Pentecost; and also the day for presenting and offering the sheaf of new corn: so that it was a triple solemnity"—WESLEY.

34. Forthwith there came out blood and water. "It was strange, seeing He was dead, that blood should come out; more strange that water also; and most strange of all that both should come out immediately, at one time and yet distinctly. It was pure and true water as well as pure and true blood. The asseveration of the beholder and testifier of it shows both the truth and greatness of the miracle and mystery"—WESLEY.

35. His testimony is true—"valid, unexceptionable. And he knoweth — and his conscience beareth him witness that he testifieth this for no other end than that ye may believe"—WESLEY.

36. A bone of it shall not be broken. "This was orignally spoken of the paschal lamb, an eniment type of Christ"—WESLEY.

37. They shall look on Him whom they have pierced — "He was 'pierced' by a soldier's spear. They who have occasioned His sufferings by their sins (and who has not?) 'shall' either 'look upon Him' in this world with penitential sorrow; or with terror when

He cometh in the clouds of heaven. (Rev. 1. 7)"—WESLEY.

38, 39. Joseph of Arimathea asked Pilate. And Nicodemus also came—"acknowledging Christ, when even His chosen disciples forsook Him. In that extremity Joseph was no longer afraid, Nicodemus no longer ashamed"—WESLEY.

"The Synoptists tell us that Joseph of Arimathea was rich, a member of the Sanhedrim, a good and just man, who had not consented to the Sanhedrim's counsel and crime, one who, like Simeon and Anna, watched for the kingdom of God, and had become a disciple of Christ. Nicodemus also was a member of the Sanhedrim (ch. 3. 1), and his acquaintance with Joseph is thus explained. And it is S. Mark who tells us that Joseph was one of the Sanhedrim; S. John who brings him into contact with Nicodemus. It would seem as if Joseph's unusual courage had inspired Nicodemus also. We are not told whether or no Nicodemus had consented to the counsel and deed of them"—C. B. "We read of none of the apostles at Christ's funeral; fear had put them to flight; but Joseph and Nicodemus appeared boldly. If God strengthen the weak, and leave the strong to the prevalency of their own fears, the weak shall be as David, and the strong as tow"—BURKITT.

41. In the place where He was crucified. "There was a garden in the same tract of land; but the cross did not stand in the garden"—WESLEY.

The record of the first sin is associated with a garden. In a garden He began His passion, from a garden He rose. He changed the valley of the shadow of death into a garden.

42. Because of the preparation—"that is, they chose the rather to lay Him in that sepulchre which was nigh, because it was the day before the Sabbath, which also was drawing to an end; so that they had no time to carry Him far"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XX.

Vers. 1–18. JESUS RISEN. — Importance of the Resurrection.—Without the resurrection of our Lord it has been said the Christian Church is inconceivable. That the enemies of Christianity have made their assault upon it we know too well. And yet a keen German critic says: "Nothing stands more historically certain than that Jesus rose from the dead and appeared again to His followers, or than that their seeing Him thus again was the beginning of a higher faith, and of all their Christian work in the world. It is equally certain that they thus saw Him, not as a common man, or as a shade or ghost risen from the grave, but as the one only Son of God—already more than man at once in nature and power; and that all who thus beheld Him recognised at once, and instinctively, His unique, Divine dignity, and firmly believed in it thenceforth. The Twelve and others had, indeed, learned to look on Him even in life as the true messianic King and the Son of God, but from the moment of His reappearing they recognised more clearly and fully the Divine side of His nature, and saw in Him the conqueror of death. Yet the two pictures of Him thus fixed in their minds were in their essence identical. That former familiar presence of the earthly Christ, and this higher vision of Him, with its depth of emotion and ecstatic joy, were so interrelated that, even in the first days or weeks after His death, they could never have seen in Him the heavenly Messiah, if they had not first known Him so well as the earthly." And the English Arnold is not one whit behind the German Ewald. "This truth that the Lord has risen," says ARNOLD, "which was received by those who first heard it with wonder at least equal to their joy, has been repeated to us so often, from our earliest childhood, that we hear it without its exciting in us any strong sensation whatever. It rests, as it were, quietly in our minds, neither disputed nor doubted, nor yet truly believed. It is like a fact of common history; a part of our knowledge when we are reminded of it, but one which we rarely have occasion to draw forth from the storehouse of our memory. We are not aware of its importance, of how much is wrapped up in it to perish, if this corner-stone of our faith could by any means be moved. We have not noticed the peculiar manner in which it is spoken of by the apostles; and how different it is from all the other miracles recorded in Scripture. For they might stand or fall with no consequence to our eternal hopes, so long as this single one remains sure; but if this one could fail us, all the rest would profit us nothing. If Christ be not risen, our faith is vain, we are yet in our sins; and they who have died in the faith of Christians have ventured their souls upon nothing, and have died to rise again no more. That vague belief in our immortality, with the expression of which we are so familiar, will do well enough for our careless and prosperous hours, when nothing assails it; but it is too weak for a season of real trial. It has been truly observed, that those ancient writers who have written most eloquently and beautifully of their hope of an eternal life, appear to have found little real comfort from it, when the evils of this world pressed them hardly. The natural arguments in favour of an eternal existence may be met with other reasons on the contrary side; and in a matter of such moment, when we practically feel its importance, a mere preponderance of probability on one side more than the other is far from sufficient to satisfy us. But the word of Jesus, confirmed by His deeds, sets our anxiety to rest. He was dead and is alive, and He has promised that they who live and believe in Him shall be with Him where He is, that they may see and partake of His glory."

Died, Rose, and Revived.—It will add to the interest of our present study if we find the links in the chain of events which bind together the important articles of our Creed: "Jesus Christ our Lord, who was crucified, dead, and buried. He descended into hell. The third day He rose again from the dead." As one has said: "It is quite impossible that so astounding an event, coming upon various portions of the body of disciples from various quarters and in various forms, should not have been related by four independent witnesses in the scattered and fragmentary way in which we now find it. In the depth beneath this varied surface of narration rests the great central fact of the resurrection itself, unmoved and immovable." The Rev. J. J. HALCOMBE, in his work on the Four Gospels, thus presents a connected narrative:—

Jesus is buried (John 19. 41, 42; Luke 23. 53, 54; Matt. 27. 60; Mark 15. 46). (Space forbids our quoting the passages. But they should be read. It is an important study in Christian evidences. In no other way can we see so clearly what measures were adopted to prevent deception, and how broadly based is the proof of the resurrection of Christ our Lord and Saviour.)

The sepulchre is closed (Matt. 27. 60; Mark 15. 46).

Mary Magdalene and the other Mary sit by the sepulchre (Matt. 27. 61; Mark 15. 47).

The women from Galilee prepare spices and ointments (Luke 23. 55, 56).

The sepulchre is sealed and watched (Matt. 27. 62–66).

Later on the Sabbath day Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of James and Joses visit the sepulchre (Matt. 28. 1).

When the Sabbath was past, the two Marys and Salome buy spices (Mark 16. 1).

The stone rolled away from the sepulchre (Matt. 28. 2–4).

On the morning of the first day, while it was yet dark, Mary Magdalene comes alone to the sepulchre (John 20. 1).

At early dawn she is joined by the women from Galilee, and after sunrise by the mother of James (Luke 23. 56; 24; Mark 16. 2).

The stone is found to be rolled back (Mark 16. 3, 4; Luke 24. 2).

An angel announces the resurrection, and invites the women to enter the sepulchre (Matt. 28. 5, 6).

Entering into the sepulchre in company with the angel, a second angel appears to them (Mark 16. 5; Luke 24. 3, 4).

The women are affrighted (Mark 16. 5; Luke 24. 5).

The angels address the women (Mark 16. 6, 7; Matt. 28. 7; Luke 24. 5–7).

Most of the women flee (Mark 16. 8).

Mary Magdalene and the other Mary obey the angel's command and haste to Peter and John (Matt. 28. 8; John 20. 2–9).

Peter and John leave the tomb, but Mary remains (John 20. 10–17; Mark 16. 9).

Being joined by Mary Magdalene, the other women remember Christ's words and tell the whole body of disciples (Luke 24. 8, 9; Matt. 28. 9, 10; Luke 24. 9, 11; Mark 16. 10, 11; John 20. 18).

S. Luke's testimony concerning Peter (Luke 24.12).

The soldiers and the chief priests (Matt. 28. 11–15).

The journey to Emmaus (Mark 16. 12; Luke 24. 13–33).

The two disciples report (Mark 16. 13).

They join the Eleven (Luke 24. 33–35).

Christ's first appearance to the disciples, Thomas being absent (Luke 24. 36–43; John 20. 19–25).

Another appearance, Thomas present (John 20. 26–29).

Many signs are recorded (John 20. 30–31).

3. Peter went out—"of the city"—WESLEY.

6, 7. Peter seeth the linen clothes lie, and the napkin folded up. "The angels, who ministered to Him when He rose, undoubtedly folded up the napkin and linen clothes"—WESLEY.

8. He saw—"that the body was not there. And believed—that they had taken it away, as Mary said"—WESLEY.

9. For as yet—"they had no thought of His rising again"—WESLEY.

10. They went home—"not seeing what they could do further"—WESLEY.

11. But Mary stood—"with more constancy"—WESLEY.

16. Jesus saith to her, Mary—"with His usual voice and accent"—WESLEY.

17. Touch Me not—"or rather, Do not cling to Me (for she held Him by the feet, Matt. 28. 9); detain Me not now. You will have other opportunities of conversing with Me. For I am not ascended to My Father—I have not yet left the world. But go immediately to My brethren. Thus does He intimate, in the strongest manner, the forgiveness of their fault, even without ever mentioning it. These exquisite touches, which everywhere abound in the evangelical writings, show how perfectly Christ knew our frame. I ascend—He anticipates it in His thoughts, and so speaks of it as a thing already present—to My Father, and your Father; My God, and your God. This uncommon expression shows that the Only-begotten Son has all kind of fellowship with God. And a fellowship with God the Father, some way resembling His own, He bestows upon His brethren. Yet He does not say, 'our' God; for no creature can be raised to an equality with Him; but 'My' God, 'and your God': intimating that the Father is His in a singular and incommunicable manner; and ours, through Him, in such a kind as a creature is capable of"—WESLEY.

Lord of the Dead and Living.—No attempt is made to describe the Resurrection. No one saw Him rise. They saw Him after He had risen. No attempt is made to describe the Creation. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And God saw everything that He had made, and behold it was very good." No attempt is made to describe the Incarnation. "He was made flesh, and dwelt among us." We might contend that the same power that gives life can restore it. But the reverent New Testament reveals the miracle without defining it, and then proceeds to teach that death is conquered. Death is robbed of its sting, now Christ has risen. (Read 1 Cor. 15. 20–28; 1 Thess. 4. 13–18.) If we die unto sin and live unto righteousness, we shall rise from the grave and ascend into heaven. "But now hath Christ been raised from the dead, the firstfruits of them that are asleep" (1 Cor. 15. 20). Death hath no dominion over Him: it shall not always have dominion over us.

Thomas convinced (vers. 19–31).—The details of the section (vers. 19–23) are peculiar to S. John—the closed doors, the fear of the Jews, the absence of S. Thomas, the mission, the promise; but the fact of the appearance to the assembled disciples on the evening of the first Easter day is recorded by S. Luke and S. Mark.

S. Mark.	S. Luke.
And afterward He was manifested unto the eleven themselves as they sat at meat; and He upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen Him after He was risen.	And as they spake He Himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you. But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they beheld a spirit, and He said unto them, Why are ye troubled? and wherefore do reasonings arise in your heart? See My hands and My feet, that it is I Myself: handle Me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye behold Me having. And when He had said this, He showed them His hands and His feet.

S. Mark recounts and emphasises the rebuking of their unbelief. S. Luke touches it more gently, but gives the reason for the justness of the rebuke. He tells the story of the Emmaus journey, and shows that these travellers had already borne their Easter testimony to the disciples. They had evidence on which to base their faith. This was probably the fifth appearance on that Easter day. Our want of knowledge of all the details makes it difficult, perhaps impossible to state, the precise order of all the occurrences. But minor differences, with substantial agreement, give an air of reality that verbal agreement does not always possess.

1. To Mary of Magdala our Lord first appeared. She supposed Him to be the gardener, and in an agony of appeal said, Sir, if thou hast borne Him hence, tell me where thou hast laid Him, and I will take Him away. Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned and said to the disciples, I have seen the Lord.

2. Nor was her testimony unsupported. Jesus met the other women also and said to them, "All hail!" Terror mingled with their emotion as they clasped His feet. "Fear not," He said to them, "go, bid My brethren that they depart into Galilee, and there shall they see Me."

3. The third appearance of Jesus was to Peter. The details are wholly unknown to us.

4. He appeared to the two disciples on their way to Emmaus.

5. To the ten disciples assembled with closed doors. S. Thomas was absent.

6. A week later our Lord appeared to the disciples when S. Thomas was present.

7. To seven of the apostles by the Sea of Galilee in connection with the draught of fishes, and the morning meal.

8. On a mountain in Galilee.

9. To S. James. S. Paul mentions this in 1 Cor. 15.

10. From Jerusalem to Bethany He accompanied His disciples, and vanished out of their sight.

One characteristic, as GEIKIE, following Ewald, observes, is common to all the appearances recounted: they never pass outside the purely spiritual bounds we instinctively associate with the mysterious existence on which Jesus had entered. Even when most closely touching the material and earthly, He is always seen speaking and acting only as a Spirit, coming suddenly, revealing Himself in an imperceptibly increasing completeness, which culminates at last in some unmistakable sign, and presently vanishes as suddenly as He appeared. To some He made Himself known, as to Mary and the women, by a single word, or by brief sentences, the voice carrying instant conviction with it; to others, in a lengthened communion, as with the disciples going to Emmaus, kindling their souls by the higher sense He gave to the Scriptures, and by a repetition of the symbolic breaking of bread, which, on the last night, He had enjoined on the Eleven; to others again, as to S. Thomas, by an outward material proof from the wounds of His person; and to still others, by joining them in their simple repast, as with the disciples on the shore of the Lake of Galilee. The ten disciples gathered in silence and seclusion for fear of the Jews; were alarmed by their Lord's appearing; comforted by His "peace be unto you"; assured by a sight of His wounded hands and pierced side; and enriched through the spirit of inspiration and help He breathed upon them; their doubts vanished, their fear subsided, and faith took possession of them.

21. Peace be unto you. "This is the foundation of the mission of a true gospel minister,—peace in his own soul (2 Cor. 4. 1). As the Father hath sent Me, so send I you. Christ was the Apostle of the Father (Heb. 3. 1); S. Peter and the rest, the apostles of Christ"—WESLEY.

22. He breathed on them—"new life and vigour—and saith, As ye receive this breath out of My mouth, so receive ye the Spirit out of My fulness. The Holy Ghost—influencing you in a peculiar manner, to fit you for your great embassy. This was an earnest of Pentecost"—WESLEY.

23. Whose soever sins ye remit. "According to the tenor of the gospel; that is, supposing them to repent and believe. They are remitted; and whose soever sins ye retain (supposing them to remain impenitent), they are retained—so far is plain. But here arises a difficulty. Are not the sins of one who truly repents, and unfeignedly believes in Christ, 'remitted' without sacerdotal absolution; and are not the sins of one who does not repent or believe 'retained' even with it? What, then, does this commission imply? Can it imply any more than (1) a power of declaring with authority the Christian terms of pardon? whose sins are remitted, and whose retained? as in our daily form of absolution; and (2) a power of inflicting and remitting ecclesiastical censures? that is, of excluding from and readmitting into a Christian congregation"—WESLEY.

26. After eight days—"on the next Sunday"—WESLEY.

28. And Thomas said, My Lord and my God. "The disciples had said, We have seen the Lord. S. Thomas now not only acknowledges Him to be the Lord, as he had done before, and to be risen, as his fellow-disciples had affirmed, but also confesses His Godhead; and that more explicitly than any other had yet done. And all this he did without thrusting his hand into His side"—WESLEY.

The character of S. Thomas, as revealed in the few notices in the Gospel of S. John, is that of "a man slow to believe, seeing all the difficulties of a case, subject to despondency, viewing things on the darkest side, and yet full of ardent love for his Master." This feature of his character has been caught in these later ages. In the famous statue of him by Thorwaldsen, in the church at Copenhagen, he stands, the thoughtful, meditative man, with the rule in his hand for the due measuring of evidence and argument. Amongst the last words that Dr. Arnold repeated before his own sudden death was the blessing of Christ on the faith of S. Thomas. In the New Testament we hear of S. Thomas only twice again, once on the Sea of Galilee with the eleven disciples, where he is ranked next after S. Peter (ch. 21. 2), and again in the assembly of the apostles after the Ascension (Acts 1. 13). Legends make him a missionary in Persia and Judea, and a martyr to conviction.

30. Jesus wrought many miracles, which are not written in this book—"of S. John; nor indeed of the other Evangelists"—WESLEY.

31. But these things are written that ye may believe—"that ye may be confirmed in believing. Faith cometh sometime by reading, though ordinarily by hearing"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER XXI.

"This chapter is evidently an appendix to the Gospel, which is completed by ch. 20. It is impossible to suppose that it was the original design of the Evangelist to add the incidents of ch. 21 after ch. 20. 30, 31, which verses form a solemn close to his record of the great history of the conflict of faith and unbelief in the life of Christ; and the general scope of the contents of this chapter is distinct from the development of the plans which is declared to be completed in ch. 20. The manifestation of the Lord, which is given in detail in it, is not designed to create faith in the fact of His resurrection, but to illustrate His action in the society; He guides and supports and assigns their parts to His disciples. On the other hand, it is equally clear that ch. 21. 1–23, was written by the author of the Gospel. The style and the general character of the language alike lead to this conclusion; and there is no evidence to show that the Gospel was published before the appendix was added to it. The occasion of the addition is probably to be found in the circulation of the saying of the Lord as to John (ch. 21. 23). The clear exposition of this saying carried with it naturally a recital of the circumstances under which it was spoken.

"The contents of the chapter are peculiar to S. John. The narrative falls into two main divisions:—

1. The Lord and the body of disciples. Their work: His gift (vers. 1–14).
2. The Lord and individual disciples. His determination of their work (vers. 15–23).

"The two last verses (24, 25) contain an identification of the writer of the Gospel, and a renewed testimony (comp. ch. 20. 30) to the infinite multiplicity of Christ's works"—WESTCOTT.

2. There were together—"at home, in one house"—WESLEY.

4. They knew not that it was Jesus—"probably their eyes were holden"—WESLEY.

6. They were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes. "This was not only a demonstration of the power of our Lord, but a kind supply for them and their families, and such as might be of service to them when they waited afterward in Jerusalem. It was likewise an emblem of the great success which should attend them as 'fishers of men'"—WESLEY.

7. Peter girt on his upper coat (for he was stripped of it before)—"reverencing the presence of his Lord—and threw himself into the sea—to swim to Him immediately. The love of Christ draws men through fire and water"—WESLEY.

We have only the record of eleven appearances during the forty days. He did not remain with the disciples all the time. A change had passed upon Him. But He did not remain away altogether. He had not forgotten them. As Dr. ROBERT TUCK has said, "The forty days in the resurrection-body was Christ's great effort to help the disciples to realise that He was a spiritual Messiah, a spiritual Saviour. The contrast between relations with Christ, seen as a fellow-man, and Christ unseen, apprehended only by thought and love, was too vast and too abrupt. So He stayed on earth those forty days, always present, but sometimes seen and sometimes unseen. Those disciples felt that any moment He might come into the sphere of their vision, and so they were helped to realise that He was always close, near; and they were prepared for the time when they would no longer have any sensible helps and manifestations." Dr. ARNOLD said: "I have been used for many years to study the history of other times, and to examine and weigh the evidences of those who have written about them; and I know of no one fact in the history of mankind which is proved by better and fuller evidence of every sort, to the mind of a fair inquirer, than that Christ died and rose again from the dead." Of this supreme fact the apostles and holy women were witnesses. That they were true witnesses is proven not only from their character, but also from the fact that they had nothing to gain and everything to lose by the testimony, if it were false.

1. They based all their hopes upon the resurrection.
2. This faith was in direct opposition to their previous belief and worldly interests.
3. They had every opportunity to convince themselves of its truth.
4. They induced thousands of the enemies of Christ to believe in it.
5. Their lives were transformed by this faith.
6. They suffered for it.
7. They died for it.
8. The Christian Church was built upon this foundation.
9. A change in the Sabbath day arose from this belief.

After His resurrection, our Lord appeared to His disciples occasionally, unexpectedly, and in a way somewhat unearthly, though yet really and corporeally. The word manifested marks the appearance as depending on the Lord's will. He was so pleased to reveal Himself. The place of appearance was the Sea of Tiberias, a name not occurring elsewhere in the Gospels. The disciples had returned to their old life. Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing. They say unto him, We also come with thee. They went forth. But for S. Peter's decision they would have remained in moody idleness. The world is divided into leaders and followers. Some suggest, others execute. The cure for despondency is work. They went forth, and entered into the boat, and that night they took nothing. The night season is the most favourable time for catching fish. Yet there were unsuccessful nights; such an one was this. A symbol of the utter failure of the fishers of men without Christ. In life generally toil is often unsuccessful; "night" brings "nothing." Festive joy and hard work alternated in the life of these disciples; they alternate in ours. "Night" brought "nothing"; "morning" brought "Jesus." When day was now breaking, Jesus stood on the beach. Interpreters at all times have pointed to the significant contrast in the positions of the Lord and the disciples, He on the firm ground and they on the restless waters. It is perhaps vain to give any simply natural explanation of the failure of the disciples to recognise Christ. Perhaps there had been some considerable interval since the last manifestation, and having agreed to betake themselves to their secular employment, they would be unprepared to expect Him. After the resurrection He was known as He pleased, and not necessarily at once (ch. 20. 4, et seq.; Luke 24. 31). A word of inquiry; a command to resume their labour; then a miraculous abundance: such are the steps of this wondrous narrative. Alone they labour in vain; with Christ, labour has a sufficient reward. But it was the old toil, with the old net, in the old waters. That sea is a symbol of our life. Christ is always near, though not always recognised. Labour without God's blessing is labour in vain. S. John, by a certain sympathy with Christ, first discerned His presence; Simon Peter, in his spirited, decided manner, first rushed to Him. On the shore they found a fire; and when the net was brought to land, they counted the marvellous haul, one hundred and fifty and three. The significant differences between the circumstances of the miraculous draught of fishes at the beginning of the Lord's ministry, and of this after the resurrection, may be noted.

LUKE 5.	JOHN 21.
He said unto Simon, Put out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught.	He said unto them, Cast the net on the right side of the boat, and ye shall find.
Master, we toiled all night and took nothing; but at Thy word I will let down the nets.	That night they took nothing.
They enclosed a great multitude of fishes.	They cast, and were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes.
Their nets were breaking.	For all there were so many, the net was not rent.
They filled both the boats, so that they began to sink.	Then other disciples came in the little boat, dragging the net full of fishes.
But Simon Peter fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord.	When Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he cast himself into the sea.

After the miracle and the revelation they sat down to the prepared meal. Whether the provision was miraculous or not is not declared. The first impression would be that it was miraculous. But there are degrees in the miraculous. And He who could provide an ass by simply sending a message could easily have obtained a meal by what men call natural means. For natural is in another sense supernatural. These fishers of men were in the hands of that God who holdeth the winds in the hollow of His hands, and whose paths are in the seas. They learnt that they were held in perfect safety. In the Church of S. Nazaro, Florence, there is an epitaph on the tomb of a soldier, fit for the whole race: "Johannes Divultius, who never rested, rests — hush." Our dead friends are alive with Christ; they have risen: one day they too will appear. And in heaven they and we shall sit down together at a table prepared by God. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more."

12. Come ye and dine—"our Lord needed not food. And none presumed—to ask a needless question"—WESLEY.

14. The third time—"that He appeared to so many of the apostles together"—WESLEY.

15. Simon, son of Jonah. "The appellation Christ had given him when he made that glorious confession (Matt. 16), the remembrance of which might make him more deeply sensible of his late denial of Him whom he had so confessed. Lovest thou Me. Thrice our Lord asks him, who had denied Him thrice. More than these—thy fellow-disciples—do? Peter thought so once (Matt. 26. 33); but he now answers only, I love Thee, without adding, 'more than these.' Thou knowest. He had now learned by sad experience that Jesus knew his heart. My lambs—the weakest and tenderest of the flock"—WESLEY.

17. Because He said the third time—"as if He did not believe him"—WESLEY.

18. When thou art old. "He lived about thirty-six years after this. Another shall gird thee. They were tied to the cross till the nails were driven in. And shall carry thee—with the cross—where thou wouldest not—according to nature; to the place where the cross was set up"—WESLEY.

19. By what death he should glorify God. "It is not only by acting but chiefly by suffering that the saints glorify God. Follow Me—showing hereby likewise what death he should die"—WESLEY.

20. Peter turning — "as he was walking after Christ—seeth the disciple whom Jesus loved following Him. There is a peculiar spirit and tenderness in this plain passage. Christ orders S. Peter to follow Him in token of his readiness to be crucified in His cause. S. John stays not for the call; he rises and follows Him too, but says not one word of his own love or zeal. He chose that the action only should speak this; and even when he records the circumstance, he tells us not what that action meant, but with great simplicity relates the fact only. If here and there a generous heart sees and emulates it, be it so; but he is not solicitous that men should admire it. It was addressed to his beloved Master, and it was enough that He understood it"—WESLEY.

22. If I will that he tarry — "without dying—till I come—to judgment. Certainly he did tarry till Christ came to destroy Jerusalem. And who can tell when or how he died? What is it to thee—who art to follow Me long before"—WESLEY.

23. The brethren—that is, the Christians. Our Lord Himself taught them that appellation. (Ch. 20. 17.) Yet Jesus did not say to him that he should not die—not expressly. And S. John himself, at the time of writing his Gospel, seems not to have known clearly whether he should die or not.

The Denier Restored.

QUESTIONS.	ANSWERS.	COMMANDS.
Lovest thou Me more than these?	Yea, Lord, Thou knowest that I love Thee.	Feed My lambs.
Lovest thou Me?	Yea, Lord, Thou knowest that I love Thee.	Tend My sheep.
Lovest Thou Me?	Lord, Thou knowest all things; Thou knowest that I love Thee.	Feed My sheep.

"Feed," as distinguished from the word which follows, "tend," expresses the providing with food. "Tend"—to be shepherd of—My sheep. The lambs require to be fed; the sheep require to be guided. A true teacher neglects neither. The thrice-repeated denial is here met by the thrice-repeated assurance of devotion. And this devotion was devotion unto death, resistance even unto blood.

24. This is the disciple who testified—"being still alive after he had wrote. And we know that his testimony is true. The Church added these words to S. John's Gospel, as Tertius did those to S. Paul's Epistle to the Romans (ch. 16. 22)"—WESLEY.

25. If they were to be written particularly—"every fact, and all the circumstances of it. I suppose. This expression, which softens the hyperbole, shows that S. John wrote this verse"—WESLEY.

"If it be asked why the Gospels are not larger, it may be briefly answered—It was not because they had exhausted their subject; but (1) it was not needful to write more, (2) it was not possible to write all; (3) it was not advisable to write much"—M. HENRY. "Though but little," says SCHAFF, "has been written on the life of Christ by the Evangelists, that little is of more account than all the literature of the world, and has been more productive of books, as well as thoughts and deeds, than any number of biographies of sages and saints of ancient and modern times. The Gospels and the Bible generally rise like Mount Ararat high above the flood of literature; they are the sacred library for all nations, the literary sanctuary for scholars and the covenant people; they combine word and work, letter and spirit, earth and heaven, time and eternity."

THE

ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Book of the Acts of the Apostles scarcely requires an introduction. No unprejudiced reader can fail to recognise in it the work of a well-informed and intelligent eye-witness of many of the scenes which it describes. And this impression is deepened by study of the political and social condition of the various races which acknowledged the sway of the Roman emperor during the first century of Christianity.

Internal evidence of various kinds proves it to have been written by the author of the Third Gospel, and to have been intended as a continuation of that narrative, and ancient and uncontradicted tradition ascribes both books to S. Luke, whom S. Paul mentions in three of his Epistles as a beloved associate and fellow-labourer. They are both dedicated to the same person, to whose name in the Gospel an epithet is applied which intimates a comparatively high position, in social if not in political life, the same epithet which is applied to Felix in the letter of Claudius Lysias and in the oration of Tertullus, and to Festus by S. Paul. Of course, it will not be understood that the books were written for Theophilus only, but for the entire Church of Jews and Gentiles.

The subject of the Acts of the Apostles is well described in Smith's Biblical Dictionary. It is "the fulfilment of the promise of the Father by the descent of the Holy Ghost, and the results of that outpouring by the dispersion of the gospel among Jews and Gentiles." The principle involved in the Saviour's command to His apostles to preach the gospel among all nations, but to begin at Jerusalem, runs through the entire narrative. The author first shows us the little band of the disciples waiting for the coming of their Guide and Comforter, evidencing their faith in the promise of His Advent by electing one of their brethren to take the place of Judas Iscariot, employing the brief interval of peace in filling up the ranks of the apostles, that they might be ready to move at once to the attack when the promised Captain should come among them. He shows us how He came, and how, in the midst of an outburst of wonder and gratitude, the preaching of the gospel began.

The results of the faithful ministry of the apostles, accompanied by this new Spiritual Agency, were seen first in the conversion of large numbers of their fellow-countrymen, S. Peter occupying the most prominent position in this part of the narrative, and opening the door of faith, first to the Jews on the day of Pentecost, and afterwards to the Gentiles in the house of Cornelius. In due time, however, another agent appears upon the scene, specially qualified by his intellectual character as well as by his broad culture and his providential training, to present the truth to the civilised nations of Western Asia and of Europe; and the historian dwells with evident delight on the miraculous conversion, the labours, the sufferings, and the success of the Apostle Paul. He shows how he founded churches, in spite of opposition and persecution, in many of the Asiatic provinces, overcoming difficulties, which might well have seemed insuperable, by a rare union of courage with tact and prudence; how he crossed into Macedonia and went forward into Greece, gaining yet more signal success in Europe than he had won in Asia, and how his long-cherished purpose of visiting Italy and preaching at Rome was fulfilled in a manner he would not have chosen, by his being sent there as a prisoner in chains. The narrative leaves him there, as if to remind us that it was no part of the historian's intention to present a complete biography of S. Paul, but simply the beginning of a history of the growth of the Christian Church.

The principal sources of the following notes on the Acts of the Apostles—apart from Mr. Wesley's Notes, which are incorporated entire, and the well-known Wesleyan commentaries consulted throughout this work—are Lange, Conybeare and Howson, the Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges, and Webster and Wilkinson's Greek Testament.

CHAPTER I.

Vers. 1–14. CONNECTION WITH FORMER HISTORY—THE GREAT PROMISE RENEWED—THE ASCENSION. — 1. "In that important season which reached from the resurrection of Christ to His ascension the former treatise ends, and this begins; this describing the acts of the Holy Ghost by the apostles, as that does the acts of Jesus Christ. Of all things—in a summary manner—which Jesus began to do, until the day—that is, of all things which Jesus did from the beginning till that day"—WESLEY.

"This book professes to be the second part of the Gospel of S. Luke, so that the Acts of the Apostles is nothing else than a continuance of the life of our Lord. The experiences of the disciples and first churches are only seen in a true and sacred light when they are understood as the operations of the exalted Lord, and of the Spirit promised and sent by Him"—L. Theophilus, for whose information both this and "the former treatise" were written, was evidently a Gentile Christian. (Luke 1. 3.)

2. After having given commandment. "In the third verse S. Luke expresses in general terms what Christ said to His apostles during those 'forty days.' But in the fourth and following verses he declares what He said on the day of His ascension. He had brought his former account down to that day. And from that day begins the Acts of the Apostles"—WESLEY.

The Son did not return to the bosom of the Father until He had secured the progress of His work on earth, by leaving to His chosen apostles the command to preach the gospel and the promise of the Holy Spirit. (Mark 16. 19; Luke 9. 51; 24. 51; ch. 1. 9; 1 Tim. 3. 16; Matt. 28. 19; Mark 16. 15; John 20. 21; ch. 10. 41, 42.)

3. Being seen of them forty days—"that is, many times during that space—and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God—which was the sum of all His discourses with them before His passion also"—WESLEY.

Many infallible proofs — "proofs that amounted to a demonstration and could not possibly deceive them, for by speaking to, by walking and by eating with them, He gave them a certain indication that He lived; His being seen and handled by them was a sure evidence that He had a true and natural body, and His permitting Thomas to view the scars of His feet and hands, and put his hand into His side, was a certain token that the body which was raised was the same that was crucified and pierced by the soldier's lance"—B. (Mark 16. 14; Luke 24. 36; John 20. 19, 26; 21. 1, 14; 1 Cor. 15. 5.)

4. Wait for the promise of the Father, which ye have heard from Me. "When He was with them a little before, as it is recorded"—WESLEY. (Luke 24. 49.)

The last command of our Lord to His disciples was that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait there for the gift of the Holy Ghost. This cost them self-denial, for, according to their natural feelings, they would rather have avoided Jerusalem. But it was the will of God that the Law should go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, that where the enmity of man against the Lord's Anointed broke forth most violently there grace should show itself yet more mightily, and that through the outpouring of the Spirit, through the conversion of thousands, and through many miracles, the name of Christ should triumph most gloriously. (Luke 24. 43, 49; John 14. 16, 26, 27; 15. 26; 16. 7; ch. 2. 33.)

5. Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost. "And so are all true believers, to the end of the world. But the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost also are here promised"—WESLEY.

Not many days hence. He does not tell them how many, because He would have them to keep themselves every day in a state of mind fit to receive it—a disposition of humility, desire, and expectation. It was a great honour which Christ did John the Baptist, in not only quoting his words but making this great blessing to be the accomplishment of them. Thus He "confirmed the word of His servants" (Isa. 44. 26). (Matt. 3. 11; ch. 11. 16; 19. 4; Joel 3. 18; ch. 2. 4; 11. 15.)

6. Dost Thou at this time—"at the time Thou now speakest of, 'not many days hence'—restore the kingdom to Israel? They still seemed to dream of an outward, temporal kingdom, in which the Jews should have dominion over all nations. It seems they came in a body, having before concerted the design, to ask when this kingdom would come"—WESLEY.

"They seem to have expected that when the Spirit was in so extraordinary a manner poured out, and the world, according to Christ's prediction, was convinced of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment, the whole nation of the Jews would own Him for their Messiah, would shake off its subjection to the Romans, and would rise to very extensive and perhaps universal dominion"—B. (Matt. 24. 3; Isa. 1. 26; Dan. 7. 27; Amos 9. 11.)

7. The times or the seasons. "'Times,' in the language of the Scripture, denote a longer, 'seasons,' a shorter space. Which the Father hath put in His own power. To be revealed, when and to whom it pleaseth Him"—WESLEY.

So the R.V. "His own authority." "Christ is parting from them, and parts in love, and yet He gives them this rebuke, which is intended as a caution to His Church in all ages, to take heed of splitting upon the rock which was fatal to our first parents, an inordinate desire of forbidden knowledge"—M. H. (Matt. 24. 36; Mark 13. 32; 1 Thess. 5. 1.)

8. But ye shall receive power—and shall be witnesses to Me—"that is, ye shall be empowered to witness My gospel, both by your preaching and suffering"—WESLEY.

"Their impatience the Lord kindly puts to rest with the word, It is not your business to know, and to their duty He points with the encouraging promise, 'But ye shall receive the Holy Ghost.' Thus they themselves help forward the time and the hour of the Messiah's kingdom on earth. There is no better remedy for distempered speculations than active work in spiritual and secular things"—L. In Jerusalem, in Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth. The Master intimates His will in reference to the order in which the glad tidings shall reach Jews, Samaritans, and Gentiles—and the history illustrates the prediction. (Luke 24. 48, 49; John 15. 27; ch. 1. 22; 2. 32.)

9. When He had spoken these things, "He blessed them" (Luke 24. 51), and while they beheld—had their eyes fixed upon Him, receiving His blessing—He was taken up, and a cloud received Him out of their sight. "He began His ascension in the sight of His disciples; they saw Him go up toward heaven, and had actually their eyes upon Him, with so much care and intention of mind that they could not be deceived. He finished it out of their sight, in a cloud. If we wish to know what became of Him then, we may find (Dan. 7. 13)—'One like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought Him near before Him'"—M. H. (Luke 24. 51; John 6. 62.)

10. While they looked steadfastly toward heaven as He went up—as though expecting some visible result of His entrance would immediately appear—two men, in white apparel, doubtless recognised by the apostles as angels. The white apparel was emblematic of purity and happiness. (Matt. 28. 3; Mark 16. 5; Luke 24. 4; John 20. 12; ch. 10. 3.)

11. Ye men of Galilee—a title of honour now, since He that was called a Galilean was exalted to the throne of heaven—why stand ye gazing? Religious contemplation and joy are never to make us forgetful of religious duty. Shall so come in like manner—"that is, visible in a cloud, in His own person, with the same body, and with such majesty and glory as you have now seen Him ascend with"—B. (Ch. 2. 7; 13. 31; Dan. 7. 13; Matt. 24. 30; Mark 13. 26; Luke 21. 27; John 14. 3; 1 Thess. 1. 10; 4. 16; 2 Thess. 1. 10; Rev. 1. 7.)

12. A Sabbath day's journey. "The Jews generally fix this to two thousand cubits, which is not a mile"—WESLEY.

"God had not thus limited them, but they limited themselves. And thus far it is a rule to us, not to journey on the Sabbath any more than in order to the Sabbath work"—M. H. (Luke 24. 52.)

13. They went up into the upper room. "The upper rooms, so frequently mentioned in Scripture, were chambers in the highest part of the house, set apart by the Jews for private prayer. These, on account of their being so retired and convenient, the apostles now used for all the offices of religion"—WESLEY. (Ch. 9. 37, 39; 20. 8; Matt. 10. 2-4; Luke 6. 15, 16; Jude 1.)

14. His brethren—"His near kinsmen, who, for some time, did not believe; it seems, not till near His death"—WESLEY.

These all continued in prayer and supplication. Their faith in the promise did not prevent, but suggest, the most earnest prayer for its fulfilment. With the women, formerly mentioned as attending at the cross, and being early at the sepulchre. And Mary the mother of Jesus. Mentioned here the last time in the Scriptures,—not receiving homage, but joining other disciples in prayer. (Ch. 2. 1, 46; Luke 23. 49, 55; 24. 10; Matt. 13. 55.)

Vers. 15-26. MATTHIAS APPOINTED IN THE PLACE OF JUDAS.—15. The number of persons together—"who were together in the upper room—were an hundred and twenty. But He had undoubtedly many more in other places; of whom more than five hundred saw Him at once after His resurrection (1 Cor. 15. 6)"—WESLEY. (Rev. 3. 4.)

16. "Men, brethren" — WESLEY. (R.V. "Brethren.") This scripture must needs have been fulfilled. S. Peter does not say that David has spoken of Judas, but that the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David has prophesied of Judas. In the 69th and the 109th Psalms David described his own sufferings, and denounced vengeance on his own enemies, but under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost he employed words which find their fullest accomplishment in the sufferings of the Redeemer, and in the punishment of the traitor, whose expulsion from office and whose horrible end was foreshadowed in the destruction of those who had betrayed David. (Ps. 41. 9; John 13. 18; Luke 22. 47; John 18. 3.)

17, 18. This man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity—"that is, a field was purchased with the reward of his iniquity; though very possibly Judas might design the purchase. And falling down on his face. It seems the rope broke before, or as, he died"—WESLEY.

S. Matthew mentions one single incident in the fate of the suicide. S. Luke completes the terrible story. (Matt. 10. 4; Luke 6. 16; ch. 1. 25; 12. 25; 20. 24; 21. 19; Matt. 27. 5; Matt. 26. 15; 2 Pet. 2. 15.)

19. In their own tongue. "This expression, 'that is the field of blood,' S. Luke seems to have added to the words of S. Peter, for the use of Theophilus and other readers who did not understand Hebrew"—WESLEY.

The name which was shortly afterwards given to the field attests the notoriety of the circumstances connected with it.

20. His bishopric—(that is, "his apostleship"—WESLEY; R.V. "office"). The quotations are from two different psalms, and in the former the plural is changed into the singular in order to point out its application more distinctly. The latter is evidently intended to introduce the proposal which was now to be made. Note that his habitation was to be desolate, so that no man should dwell therein, but not so his office. God will not allow His work to suffer eventually through the unfaithfulness of those who are entrusted with it. (Ps. 69. 25; 109. 8.)

21. All the time that the Lord Jesus was going in and out—"that is, conversing familiarly—over us—as our Master"—WESLEY.

The R.V. retains the translation of the A.V., "among us," but gives the other meaning in the margin. The ambiguity is perhaps intentional. Only one requisite is named in those who were fitted for the apostolic office, constant intercourse with the disciples during the whole of the ministry of the Lord Jesus. This was not only because the apostles were specially witnesses of Jesus, and ought therefore to be able to speak from a long and familiar acquaintance with Him; it was also because a man who had attached himself to Jesus and His disciples during the whole of His public life must have had strong convictions of the truth, and great fidelity to principle, in virtue of which a special office in the Church might with confidence be entrusted to him.

22. To be a witness with us of His resurrection—"and of the circumstances which preceded and followed it"—WESLEY.

The witness of the resurrection was the peculiar theme of the apostle's ministry. It is the basis of argument and appeal in the recorded speeches of S. Peter and S. Paul, and it is described as the special subject of the powerful testimony of all the apostles in the primitive Church at Jerusalem. Indeed, this great miracle was the crowning and indispensable attestation of the claims their Master made, and gave Divine authority to their ministry. (Mark 1. 1; John 15. 27; ch. 1. 8, 9; 4. 33.)

23. And they appointed two. "So far as the faithful could go by consulting together, but no farther. Therefore here commenced the proper use of the lot, whereby a matter of importance, which cannot be determined by any ordinary method, is committed to the Divine decision"—WESLEY.

Probably the number of men from whom such a choice could be made was not large, and the whole assembly agreed in the fitness of these two. (Ch. 15. 22.)

24. This earnest prayer of the assembled disciples appears to have been addressed especially to their ascended Master, of whom, even in His humiliation, we read that He needed not that any should testify of man, for He knew what was in man. It confessed their lack of wisdom, and it acknowledged the right of the Head of the Church to appoint His own apostles. So also S. Paul's appointment to the same office was "not by man." (1 Sam. 16. 7; 1 Chron. 28. 9; 29. 17; Jer. 11. 20; 17. 10; ch. 15. 8; Rev. 2. 23.)

25. Fell—by his transgression, some time before his death. To go to his own place—"that which his crimes had deserved, and which he had chosen for himself, far from the other apostles, in the region of death"—WESLEY. (Ch. 1. 17.)

26. The lot fell upon Matthias. "The transaction itself—that is, the filling up of the place of Judas in the apostolic circle by Matthias—has been censured as rash, and contrary to the will of God; for S. Paul was already fixed upon to supply the place of Judas, though called at a later period. But this opinion is entirely unfounded. We find no indication by which God made known His displeasure of the choice; for that we hear nothing of the deeds of Matthias proves as little as the like circumstances show with regard to any of the Twelve. And S. Paul never gave himself out as one of the Twelve; on the contrary, he distinguishes himself from them (1 Cor. 15. 5), he belonged not to them; for he was, by virtue of his calling, the Apostle of the Gentiles"—L. (Gal. 2. 9.)

CHAPTER II.

Vers. 1–13. THE PROMISE FULFILLED—AMAZEMENT OF THE PEOPLE.—1. "At the Pentecost of Sinai in the Old Testament, and the Pentecost of Jerusalem in the New, were the two grand manifestations of God, the legal and the evangelical; the one from the mountain, and the other from heaven; the terrible and the merciful one. They were all with one accord in one place. So here was a conjunction of company, minds, and place; the whole hundred and twenty being present"—WESLEY.

"As our Lord was crucified at one of the great Jewish feasts, it was fit that He should be glorified at another. And this of Pentecost was chosen with peculiar propriety, as next succeeding that of the Passover, at which He suffered; and also, as it was celebrated in commemoration of the giving of the Law from Mount Sinai, and as the first-fruits were then offered and anointed. (Ex. 19. 1-11; Lev. 23. 17.) As further reasons why it was proper that this time should be chosen, it may be observed — (1) That as great multitudes of people were wont to assemble at Jerusalem at all the Jewish feasts, so it is probable that the peculiar solemnity of this feast, the general expectation of the Messiah that now prevailed amongst them, and the length of the days (as it was about the middle of summer) would bring greater numbers than usual thither on this occasion. This would make the miracle more public, and cause the fame of it to be spread the sooner and farther, which would contribute much to the propagation of the gospel among all nations. (2) As this feast of the Pentecost happened on the first day of the week, by the effusion of the Holy Spirit on this day, added to the resurrection of Christ taking place on it, greater honour was put upon the day, and it was more manifestly confirmed to be the Christian Sabbath. This directs us, in observing it, to give God praise, particularly for these two great blessings"—B.

All with one accord in one place. "We cannot forget how often, while their Master was with them, there were strifes among them which should be greatest; but now all these strifes were at an end, we hear no more of them; what they had received already of the Holy Ghost, when Christ breathed on them, had in a good measure rectified the mistakes upon which those contests were grounded, and had disposed them to holy love. They had prayed more together of late than usual (Acts 1. 14), and that made them love one another better. By His grace He thus prepared them for the gift of the Holy Ghost; for that blessed Dove comes not where there is noise and clamour, but moves upon the face of the still waters, not the rugged ones. Would we have the Spirit poured upon us from on high, let us be all of one accord, and notwithstanding variety of sentiments and interests, as no doubt there was among those disciples, let us agree to love one another; for where brethren dwell together in unity, there it is that the Lord commands His blessing"—M. H. (Lev. 23. 15; Deut. 16. 9; ch. 20. 16; 1. 14.)

2. And suddenly there was a sound from heaven. "So will the Son of Man come to judgment. And it filled all the house—that is, all that part of the Temple—where they were sitting"—WESLEY.

"Many expositors have supposed that the house where the disciples met belonged to the Temple, namely, that it was one of the thirty rooms in the adjoining buildings of the Temple mentioned by Josephus. But there is no positive ground for the supposition. It is not to be imagined that the disciples, without exciting attention, could have been able to meet together in any part of the Temple in such numbers, and as an exclusive society, unmixed with other Israelites"—L. (Ch. 4. 31.)

3. And there appeared distinct tongues, as of fire—"that is, small flames of fire. This is all which the phrase, 'tongues of fire,' means in the language of the LXX. Yet it might intimate God's touching their tongues, as it were (together with their hearts), with Divine fire: His giving them such words as were active and penetrating, even as flaming fire"—WESLEY.

The R.V. translates, "tongues parting asunder," in the margin, "parting among them," or "distributing themselves." "Scintillations, coruscations, or flashes of fire, were probably at first frequent through every part of the room where they were sitting; at last these flashes became defined, and a lambent flame, in the form of a cloven tongue, became stationary on the head of each disciple; a proof that the Spirit of God had made each His temple and residence. That unusual appearances of fire were considered emblems of the presence and influence of God both the Scriptures and the Jewish writings amply prove"—C.

4. And they began to speak with other tongues. "The miracle was not in the ears of the hearers (as some have unaccountably supposed), but in the mouth of the speakers. And this family praising God together, with the tongues of all the world, was an earnest that the whole world should in due time praise God in their various tongues. As the Spirit gave them utterance. Moses, the type of the Law, was of a slow tongue; but the gospel speaks with a fiery and flaming one"—WESLEY.

They were all filled with the Holy Ghost—that is, all the hundred and twenty, as appears from ver. 1. "At the time of this wonderful appearance the whole company were replenished with both the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, not only in order to their own salvation, but also and especially to qualify them to be Christ's witnesses to mankind, both Jews and Gentiles, according to His promise. And began to speak with other tongues—to speak languages of which they had been before entirely ignorant. They did not speak now and then a word of another tongue, or stammer out some broken sentences, but spoke each language as readily, properly, and elegantly as if it had been their mother-tongue. They spake not from any previous thought, but as the Spirit gave them utterance; He furnished them with the matter as well as the language"—B. (Ch. 1. 5; Mark 16. 17; ch. 10. 46; 19. 6; 1 Cor. 12. 10, 28, 30; 13. 1; 14. 2, etc.)

5. And there were dwelling in Jerusalem Jews—"gathered from all parts, by the peculiar providence of God"—WESLEY.

Devout men, disposed to religion, and that had the fear of God before their eyes. From every nation under heaven. "The expression is hyperbolical, noting that there were some from most of the then known parts of the world; as much as ever Tyre was, or London is, the rendezvous of trading people from all parts, Jerusalem at that time was of religious people from all parts"—M. H.

6. The multitude came together, and were confounded. "The motions of their minds were swift and various"—WESLEY.

The R.V. "When this sound was heard," referring to ver. 2.

9. Judea. "The dialect of which greatly differed from that of Galilee. Asia, the country strictly so called"—WESLEY.

Not the continent of Asia, nor what we commonly understand as Asia Minor, but the Roman province embracing the western part of Asia Minor, of which Ephesus was the capital.

10. Roman sojourners. "Born at Rome, but now living at Jerusalem. These seem to have come to Jerusalem after those who are above-mentioned. All of them were partly Jews by birth, and partly proselytes"—WESLEY.

11. Cretans. "One island seems to be mentioned for all. The wonderful works of God—probably those which related to the miracles, death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ, together with the effusion of His Spirit, as a fulfilment of His promises, and the glorious dispensations of gospel grace"—WESLEY.

"They heard them both praise God for these great things, and instruct the people concerning these things in their own tongue, according as they perceived the language of their hearers, or those that inquired of them, to be. Now, though perhaps, by dwelling some time at Jerusalem, they were got to be so much masters of the Jewish tongue as that they could have understood the meaning of the disciples if they had spoken that language, yet (1) this was more strange, and helped to convince their judgment that this doctrine was of God; for tongues were for a sign to them that believed not (1 Cor. 14. 22); (2) it was more kind, and helped to engage their affections. And this is to us a plain intimation of the mind and will of God that the Scriptures should be read and public worship performed in the vulgar tongue of the nations"—M. H.

12. They were all amazed—"all the devout men"—WESLEY.

13. But others mocking. "The world begins with mocking, thence proceeds to cavilling (ch. 4. 7); to threats (ch. 4. 17); to imprisoning (ch. 5. 18); to blows (ch. 5. 40); to slaughter (ch. 7. 58). These mockers appear to have been some of the natives of Judea, and inhabitants of Jerusalem (who understood only the dialect of the country), by the apostle's immediately directing his discourse to them in the next verse. They are full of sweet wine—so the Greek word properly signifies: there was no new wine so early in the year as Pentecost. Thus natural men are wont to ascribe supernatural things to mere natural causes; and many times as impudently and unskilfully as in the present case"—WESLEY.

"Not that they were so absurd as to think that wine in the head would enable men to speak languages they never learned; but these, being native Jews, knew not, as the others did, that these were really the languages of other nations, and therefore took what they said to be gibberish and nonsense, such as drunkards sometimes talk"—M. H. Note the word, "mocking."

Vers. 14–47. "THE FIRST GOSPEL SERMON AND ITS SUCCESS"—WESLEY.

14. Then Peter standing up—"all the gestures, all the words, of S. Peter show the utmost sobriety—lifted up his voice—with cheerfulness and boldness—and said to them. This discourse has three parts, each of which (vers. 14, 22, 29) begins with the same appellation, Men; only to the last part he prefixes with more familiarity the additional word, Brethren. Men of Judea—that is, ye that were born in Judea. S. Peter spoke in Hebrew, which they all understood"—WESLEY.

Peter, standing up with the eleven, "who were then in company with him, and who doubtless also, all or at least most of them, addressed the people, some in one language and others in another, speaking by turns, or even all together in different parts of the assembly. S. Peter, however, it appears, spoke first, and, addressing himself to the native Jews, undoubtedly spoke in the language of the country, the Chaldæo-Syriac. It is probable that others, in other languages, uttered similar truths; and certainly it was not by S. Peter's preaching only, but that of all or most of the hundred and twenty, that three thousand souls were that day converted and added to the Church. But S. Peter's sermon is recorded to be an evidence for him that he was thoroughly recovered from his fall, and restored to the Divine favour"—B.

15. It is but the third hour of the day—"that is, nine in the morning. And on the solemn festivals the Jews rarely ate or drank anything till noon"—WESLEY. (1 Thess. 5. 17.)

"S. Peter begins with the jeering remarks of some of the spectators, denies and refutes their slanderous supposition by pointing them to the early hour of the day; for the third hour was the first hour of prayer, corresponding to the morning sacrifice; and before this, especially on a feast day, durst no Israelite taste anything. The mildness and moderation with which S. Peter deals with the observation is worthy of remark, and is as noble as it is prudent, dealing with it as the actual though erroneous impression of the people, and not as wicked mockery and blasphemy, spoken against their better knowledge"—L.

16. But this is that which was spoken by the prophet—"but there is another and better way of accounting for this"—WESLEY.

17. "The times of the Messiah are frequently called the last days, the gospel being the last dispensation of Divine grace. I will pour out of My Spirit—not on the day of Pentecost only—upon all flesh—on persons of every age, sex, and rank. And your young men shall see visions. In young men the outward senses are most vigorous, and the bodily strength is entire, whereby they are best qualified to sustain the shock which usually attends the visions of God. In old men the internal senses are most vigorous, suited to Divine dreams. Not that the old are wholly excluded from the former, nor the young from the latter"—WESLEY.

"A bare denial does not suffice for an answer, and would fail to make any favourable impression. In order to convince, we must not only say No, but also Yes, and be able to testify a truth. And this S. Peter does. He explains that the fact at which they wondered was nothing else than the fulfilment of the Divine promise made by the prophet Joel"—L. (Isa. 44. 3; Ezek. 11. 19; 36. 27; Joel 2. 28, 29; Zech. 12. 10; John 7. 38.)

18. And upon My servants—"on those who are literally in a state of servitude"—WESLEY.

"These words are quoted to show that under the gospel dispensation neither bond nor free, male nor female, is excluded from sharing in the gifts and graces of the Spirit"—C. (Ch. 21. 4, 9, 10; 1 Cor. 12. 10, 28; 14. 1.)

19. And I will show prodigies in heaven above, and signs on earth beneath. "Great revelations of grace are usually attended with great judgments on those who reject it. 'In heaven'—treated of (ver. 20). 'On earth'—described in this verse. Such signs were those mentioned (ver. 22) before the passion of Christ; which are so mentioned as to include those at the very time of the passion and resurrection, at the destruction of Jerusalem, and at the end of the world. Terrible indeed were those prodigies in particular which preceded the destruction of Jerusalem: such as the flaming sword hanging over the city, and the fiery comet, pointing down upon it for a year; the light that shone upon the Temple and the altar in the night, as if it had been noonday; the opening of the great and heavy gate of the Temple without hands; the voice heard from the most holy place, 'Let us depart hence'; the admonition of Jesus, the son of Ananus, crying for seven years together, 'Woe, woe, woe'; the vision of contending armies in the air, and of intrenchments thrown up against a city there represented; the terrible thunders and lightnings, and dreadful earthquakes, which every one considered as portending some great evil;—all which, through the singular providence of God, are particularly recorded by Josephus. Blood — war and slaughter. Fire — burnings of houses and towns, involving all in clouds of smoke"—WESLEY.

"The prophecy of Joel was primarily fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, but also looked onwards to its destruction by the Romans, and ultimately to the end of the world itself. S. Peter has good reason for not ending his quotation at ver. 18, but adding also what follows; he places intentionally, as the background of his picture, the Divine judgments, indeed the final judgment, in order to display the fate of the enemies of God, and thus more impressively to point souls to Jesus Christ as their Saviour and Deliverer"—L. (Joel 2. 30, 31.)

20. The moon shall be turned into blood—"a bloody colour—before the day of the Lord—eminently, the last day; though not excluding any other day or season, wherein the Lord shall manifest His glory, in taking vengeance of His adversaries"—WESLEY. (Matt. 24. 29; Mark 13. 24; Luke 21. 25.)

21. But whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord. "This expression implies the whole of religion, and particularly prayer uttered in faith. Shall be saved—from all those plagues; from sin and hell"—WESLEY.

"Of course the promise is of universal application, yet it had a special fulfilment at the destruction of Jerusalem. That all the Christians did escape, not one of them perishing in these devastations, stands attested by most respectable authority"—C. (Rom. 10. 13.)

22. Approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by Him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know. "Observe the amazing stress which S. Peter laid upon Christ's miracles—(1) the matter of fact cannot be denied; they were done 'in the midst of you'—in the midst of your country, your city, your solemn assemblies; 'as ye yourselves also know,' you have been eye-witnesses of His miracles, and I appeal to yourselves; (2) the inference from them cannot be disputed—if He did these miracles, certainly God approved of Him, showed Him to be, what He declared Himself to be, the Son of God, and the Saviour of the world"—B. We recognise one reason for the command to "begin at Jerusalem." (John 3. 2; 14. 10, 11; ch. 10. 38; Heb. 2. 4.)

23. Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. "The apostle here anticipates an objection, Why did God suffer such a Person to be so treated; did He not know what wicked men intended to do; and had He not power to prevent it? Yea, He knew all that those wicked men intended to do. And He had power to blast all their designs in a moment. But He did not exert that power, because He 'so loved the world'; because it was the determinate counsel of His love to redeem mankind from eternal death by the death of His only-begotten Son"—WESLEY.

By wicked hands (R.V. "by the hand of lawless men"—or "men without the law"). "S. Peter places the sufferings of Jesus in a twofold light, the human and the Divine. On the human side he represents them as a complicated act, in which different persons co-operated; the chief persons to whom the guilt belongs are the Israelites; the instrumental persons, by whose hands the crucifixion was performed, are the Gentiles who have not the Law (of Moses), that is to say the Romans, not only the Roman soldiers but also the Roman governor; and lastly, there is in the word delivered, at least an allusion to the treason of Judas. But the apostle, in saying to all his hearers without distinction, ye have slain Him, whereas, without doubt, there were many who were not present when Jesus suffered several weeks before, evidently affirms that the crucifixion of Jesus was an act of the nation as such, and involved national guilt. But in order to answer the natural inquiry, How could this have happened if Jesus was such a man of God? S. Peter adverts to the Divine side of the transaction. God not only knew all this, but also had predetermined it"—L. (Matt. 26. 24; Luke 22. 22; 24. 44; ch. 3. 18; 4. 28; 5. 30.)

24. Having loosed the pains of death. "The word properly means, the pains of a woman in travail. As it was not possible that He should be held under it. Because the Scripture must needs be fulfilled"—WESLEY.

"Though S. Peter's declaration concerning the death of Christ is rich in meaning, yet it is expressed in few words. On the other hand, he treats of the resurrection of Jesus in not less than nine verses, from which it is evident that it was this which he held it to be his chief task to testify. What S. Peter says of the resurrection has a twofold character—(1) he bears simple witness to it, in his own name, and in that of the apostles, who were eye-witnesses and ear-witnesses of their Master's resurrection-life; (2) he views the resurrection of Christ in the light of prophecy, as a fact which was predicted by David, and must be fulfilled in Jesus. The expression 'it was not possible' has been variously interpreted; but the chief thing affirmed, and according to the context the only thing, is that Jesus could not possibly be overcome of death, because it was prophesied, and the Divine promise must be fulfilled. This, however, does not exclude the idea that the victorious power and fulness of life of the Anointed of God is the internal ground both of the promise and its fulfilment"—L. (Ch. 2. 32; 3. 15; 4. 10; 10. 40; 13. 30, 34; 17. 31; Rom. 4. 24; 8. 11; 1 Cor. 6. 14; 15. 15; 2 Cor. 4. 14; Gal. 1. 1; Eph. 1. 20; Col. 2. 12; 1 Thess. 1. 10; Heb. 13. 20; 1 Pet. 1. 21.)

25. For David speaketh concerning Him—viz. Ps. 16. 8—(R.V. I beheld the Lord, etc.). The entire quotation is from the LXX. version. S. Peter argues that it could not be of himself that the Psalmist spake, for they had evidence that the words could not be truly said of him; but that, having regard to God's promise, he spake of Him who was to be born from his line, as identified with himself.

26. My tongue was glad. "In the psalm it is 'My glory rejoiceth,' for our tongue is our glory, the faculty of speech is an honour to us"—B. (Comp. the Prayer-Book version of Ps. 108. 1, "I will give praise with the best member that I have.")

27. Thou wilt not leave My soul in Hades—"the invisible world. But it does not appear that ever our Lord went into hell. His soul, when it was separated from the body, did not go thither, but to Paradise (Luke 23. 43). The meaning is, Thou wilt not leave My soul in its separate state, not suffer My body to be corrupted"—WESLEY.

And when we say in the Apostles' Creed, "He descended into hell," we mean that the death of Christ was a real death, that the body and soul were separated, the body going into the sepulchre, the soul to the abode of separate spirits, called Hades, or the invisible world.

28. Thou hast made known to Me the ways of life—"that is, Thou hast raised Me from the dead." Thou wilt fill Me with joy by Thy countenance—"when I ascend to Thy right hand"—WESLEY.

29. The patriarch, "a more honourable title than king"—WESLEY.

Let me freely speak unto you—"Let it be no offence to you if I tell you that David cannot be understood here as speaking of himself." That he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. "And as no one ever pretended that he was risen, therefore he could not say of himself that he should not see corruption"—B. (1 Kings 2. 10; ch. 13. 36.)

30, 31. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins (R.V., following the best manuscripts, He would set one upon His throne; he, foreseeing this, spake of the resurrection of the Christ, etc.). (2 Sam. 7. 12, 13; Ps. 132. 11; Luke 1. 32, 69; Rom. 1. 3; 2 Tim. 2. 8.) "S. Peter argues thus: It is plain David did not speak this of himself; therefore he spake of Christ's rising. But how does that promise of a kingdom imply His resurrection? Because He did not receive it before He died, and because His kingdom was to endure for ever"—WESLEY. (2 Sam. 7. 13; Ps. 16. 10; ch. 13. 35.)

32. We all are witnesses. The reference is especially to the Eleven, with whom S. Peter stood up (ch. 1. 14), though not to the exclusion of many others who were present. (Ch. 2. 24; 1. 8.)

33. Being exalted by the right hand of God. "'By the right hand'—that is, as were saved—"from their sins; from the guilt and power of them"—WESLEY. (R.V. translates "those that were being saved.") (Luke 2. 52; ch. 4. 33; Rom. 14. 18; ch. 5. 14; 11. 24.)

In this remarkable passage we have a striking description of the primitive Church—(1) The members of it were regular in their attendance on holy ordinances; they were constant in their attendance on the preaching of the word, frequently received the Lord's Supper, continued instant in prayer, social and public as well as private, and abounded in praise and thanksgiving; (2) their charity was as eminent as their piety—they were peculiarly loving and kind to one another, suffering no one to want what another had; (3) God owned them for His people, giving daily tokens of His presence, and bearing testimony to the word of His grace, so that multitudes, both of men and women, were added to the society of the faithful.

CHAPTER III.

Vers. 1–10. THE MIRACULOUS CURE OF THE LAME MAN.—1. The ninth hour. "The Jews divided the time from sunrise to sunset into twelve hours, which were, consequently, of unequal length at different times of the year, as the days were longer or shorter. The third hour, therefore, was nine in the morning; the ninth, three in the afternoon; but not exactly. For the third was the middle space between sunrise and noon; which, if the sun rose at five (the earliest hour of its rising in that climate), was half an hour after eight; if at seven (the latest hour of its rising there), was half an hour after nine. The chief hours of prayer were the third and ninth; at which seasons the morning and evening sacrifices were offered, and incense (a kind of emblem representing prayer) burnt on the golden altar"—WESLEY.

What is said in the previous chapter of the whole Church, that they continued daily in the Temple, is here seen in a stated instance. The two apostles repair from the city to the Temple at the hour of prayer. (Ch. 2. 46; Ps. 55. 17.)

2. At the gate of the Temple called Beautiful. "This gate was added by Herod the Great, between the Court of the Gentiles and that of Israel. It was thirty cubits high, and fifteen broad, and made of Corinthian brass, more pompous in its workmanship and splendour than those that were covered with silver and gold"—WESLEY. (Ch. 14. 8; John 9. 8.)

4. Peter, fastening his eyes upon him with John—"that is, looking steadfastly at him, feeling doubtless a strong emotion of soul, which intimated to him that the Divine power would be exerted in a miracle"—B.

6. Then said Peter, Silver and gold have I none. "How unlike his supposed successor! Can the bishop of Rome either say or do the same?"—WESLEY.

This, we may observe, was after the estates were sold (ch. 2. 45), and shows how far the apostles were from enriching themselves by the treasures which passed through their hands. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth—"by the power of Him who, in contempt, is called Jesus of Nazareth"—B. (Ch. 4. 10.) Rise up and walk (R.V. "Walk").

7. And lifted him up. "A sign, intimating the supernatural help he should receive, if he exerted himself as he was commanded. When God by His word enjoins us to rise, and to walk in the ways of His commandments, if we mix faith with that word, and rely upon the power of it, He will give us His Spirit, to take us by the hand and lift us up. If we set ourselves to do what we can, in dependence on the Divine aid, God has promised grace to enable us to do what of ourselves we cannot"—B. His feet and ancle bones received strength. "Which would not have been the case if he had not attempted to rise"—B.

8. Entered with them into the Temple. Into the Court of Israel, to offer the first-fruits of his thanksgivings, sometimes walking and sometimes leaping, for joy, and to show that he was perfectly healed. And praising God—"in a rapture of astonishment and thankfulness. This man, being but newly cured, was in this excess of joy and thankfulness; all true converts walk and praise God, but young converts perhaps leap more, as it were, in His praises"—B. (Isa. 35. 6.)

9, 10. All the people saw—and knew. "They were not so perverse as to make any doubt whether he was the same man that had sat begging, as the Pharisees had questioned concerning the blind man that Christ cured (John 9. 18), for they saw him walking and praising God, and probably took notice of a change in his mind; for he was now as loud in praising God as he had used to be in begging relief. And they were filled with wonder and amazement. This effect appears to have been produced by the late effusion of the Spirit; the people, at least those in Jerusalem, were more affected with the miracles which the apostles wrought than they had been with those of the same kind performed by Christ Himself"—B. (Like John 9. 8.)

Vers. 11–26. PETER'S SERMON IN THE TEMPLE. —11. As he held Peter and John (R.V.)—full of gratitude for the great blessing he had received through their instrumentality—the people ran together—some to gratify their curiosity, others with a desire to hear them—in the porch called Solomon's—a covered entrance to the Court of Israel, said to be a remnant of the original temple of Solomon. Jesus walked there, and spoke to a less patient audience than S. Peter had. (John 10. 23, etc.)

12. Peter answered the people—who were running together, and inquiring into the circumstances of the fact.

13. The God of our fathers. "This was wisely introduced in the beginning of his discourse, that it might appear they taught no new religion, inconsistent with that of Moses, and were far from having the least design to divert their regards from the God of Israel. Hath glorified His Son—by this miracle. Whom ye delivered up—when God had given Him to you, and when ye ought to have received Him as a most precious treasure, and to have preserved Him with all your power"—WESLEY.

His servant Jesus (R.V. margin, "Child"). (Ch. 5. 30; John 7. 39; 12. 16; 17. 1; Matt. 27. 2, 20; Mark 15. 11; Luke 23. 18, 20, 21; John 18. 40; 19. 15; ch. 13. 28.)

14. Ye renounced the Holy One (R.V. "The Holy and Righteous One")—whom God had marked out as such. And the Just One—"even in the judgment of Pilate"—WESLEY. (Ps. 16. 10; Mark 1. 24; Luke 1. 35; ch. 2. 27; 4. 27; 7. 52; 22. 14.)

15. And killed the Prince of Life (margin, "Author"). "Even Him who had life in Himself, and was appointed to be the Author of life, spiritual and eternal, to His followers. You did at once a wicked and a foolish thing, in taking away His life who would have been your Life and Saviour, and in supposing you could conquer and extinguish in death the Prince of Life"—B. Whereof we are witnesses. The apostles were specially appointed to be witnesses of the resurrection. (Heb. 2. 10; 5. 9; 1 John 5. 11; ch. 2. 24, 32.)

16. His name—"Himself; His power and love. The faith which is by Him—of which He is the Giver, as well as the Object"—WESLEY.

Through faith in His name. "A confidence in Him, a dependence on Him, a believing application to Him, and expectation from Him. Dr. Lightfoot suggests that faith is twice named in this verse, because of the apostle's faith in doing this miracle, and the cripple's faith in receiving it; but I suppose it relates chiefly, if not only, to the former; they that wrought this miracle by faith derived power from Christ to work it, and therefore returned all the glory to Him. By this true and just account of the miracle, S. Peter both confirmed the great gospel truth they were to preach to the world—that Jesus Christ is the great Healer and Saviour, and recommended the great gospel duty of faith in Him, as the only way of receiving benefit by Him"—B. (Matt. 9. 22; ch. 4. 10; 14. 9.)

17. And now, brethren—"a word full of courtesy and compassion—I wot—he speaks to their heart—that through ignorance ye did it—which lessened, though it could not take away, the guilt. As did also your rulers—the prejudice lying from the authority of the chief priests and elders he here removes, but with great tenderness. He does not call them 'our,' but 'your,' rulers; for as the Jewish dispensation ceased at the death of Christ, consequently so did the authority of its rulers"—WESLEY.

"This was the language of S. Peter's charity, and it teaches us to make the best of those whom we desire to make better; not to aggravate, but, as far as may be, to extenuate their faults and sins. Perhaps S. Peter perceived, by the countenances of his hearers, that they were struck with great horror at being informed that they had murdered the Messiah, the Prince of Life, and that they were ready to sink down in distress; and therefore he saw it needful to mitigate a little the charge he had made against them, that they might not utterly despair. And in speaking as he did, he only followed the example of his Master, who prayed for His murderers and pleaded 'they know not what they do'"—B. (Luke 23. 34; John 16. 3; ch. 13. 27; 1 Cor. 2. 8; 1 Tim. 1. 13.)

18. But God—"who was not ignorant, permitted this which He had foretold, to bring good out of it"—WESLEY.

"Though this was no extenuation of their guilt, yet it was an encouragement to them to repent, and to hope for mercy: first, because God's gracious designs were carried on by it, as Joseph reminded his brethren (Gen. 50. 19, 20), and especially because the sufferings and death of Christ were the ground for that display of mercy He now encouraged them to hope for"—B. (Luke 24. 44; ch. 26. 22; Ps. 22; Isa. 50. 6; 53. 5, etc.; Dan. 9. 26; 1 Pet. 1. 10, 11.)

19. Be converted—"be turned from sin and Satan unto God. (See Acts 26. 20.) But this term, so common in modern writings, very rarely occurs in Scripture; perhaps not once in the sense we now use it—for an entire change from vice to holiness. That the times of refreshing—wherein God largely bestows His refreshing grace—may come—to you also. To others they will assuredly come, whether ye repent or not"—WESLEY.

So the R.V. "Repent therefore, and turn again, that your sins may be blotted out, that so there come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." "A glorious model how to preach repentance in an apostolic manner. We are always in danger of running into extremes, and either exciting in people too soon and too hastily the hope of forgiveness of sins, or demanding too much from them before we assure them of forgiveness. The apostles teach us the true medium"—L. "Times of refreshing"—S. Peter apprehended that the conversion of the Jews, as a people, would be attended with some extraordinary scene of prosperity and joy, and would open a speedy way to Christ's descent from heaven, in order to the restitution of all things. (Ch. 2. 38.)

20. And He may send. "The apostles generally speak of our Lord's second coming as being just at hand. Who was before appointed — before the foundation of the world"—WESLEY.

R.V. "And that He may send the Christ who hath been appointed for you, even Jesus" —"1. You shall have Christ in His spiritual presence in and by His Spirit accompanying His word. 2. The apostle meant that God would send Christ to destroy the unbelieving and persecuting Jews, and so deliver His true servants, and give them a quiet possession of the gospel, which would be a time of refreshing to all that received it. 3. There is a reference to the conversion of the Jews, which when it takes place will be a time of refreshing indeed both to them and to the whole Church"—B.

21. Whom the heavens must receive. "You must not expect Him to appear immediately; He has ascended to heaven, and remains there. Till the times of the restitution of all things. The apostle here comprises at once the whole course of the times of the New Testament, between our Lord's ascension and His coming in glory. The most eminent of these are the apostolic age, and that of the spotless Church, which will consist of all the Jews and Gentiles united, after all persecutions and apostasies are at an end"—WESLEY.

All His holy prophets. (The R.V. omits "all"). (Ch. 1. 11; Matt. 17. 11; Luke 1. 70.)

22. For Moses indeed said ("the first of these prophets whose writings are preserved")—The Lord shall raise you up a prophet like unto me—"and that in many particulars. Moses instituted the Jewish Church; Christ instituted the Christian. With the prophesying of Moses was soon joined the effect, the deliverance of Israel from Egypt; with the prophesying of Christ that grand effect, the deliverance of His people from sin and death. Those who could not bear the voice of God yet desired to hear that of Moses; much more do those who are wearied with the Law desire to hear the voice of Christ. Moses spake to the people all and only those things which God had commanded him; so did Christ. But though He was like Moses, yet was He infinitely superior to him in person as well as in office"—WESLEY.

The R.V., however, gives in the margin, instead of "like unto me," the rendering "as He raised up me." (Deut. 18. 15, 18, 19; ch. 7. 37.)

23. Every soul, who will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people. "One cannot imagine a more masterly address than this, to warn the Jews of the dreadful consequence of their infidelity, in the very words of their favourite prophet, out of a pretended zeal for whom they rejected Christ"—WESLEY.

24. Yea, and all the prophets — "that succeeded Moses, particularly from Samuel, have likewise foretold of these days—the days of the Messiah"—WESLEY.

25. Ye are the sons of the prophets, and of the covenant—"that is, heirs of the prophecies. To you properly, as the first heirs, belong the prophecies and the covenant"—WESLEY.

The R.V. also "sons of the prophets." Those of the later ages of the Jewish Church might fitly be called "the children of the prophets," because they heard the voices of the prophets, which were read in their synagogues every Sabbath day. (Ch. 13. 27.) More distinctly still were they "children of the covenant," for God's covenant was made with Abraham and his seed. (Ch. 2. 39; Rom. 9. 4, 8; 15. 8; Gal. 3. 26; Gen. 12. 3; 18. 15; 22. 18; 26. 4; 28. 14; Gal. 3. 8.)

26. Unto you first. "The apostle says God sent Christ to the Jews first, because the personal ministry of Christ was confined to them; and after His resurrection, though He was to be preached by His apostles to all nations, yet they were to begin at Jerusalem (Luke 24. 47); and when they went to other nations, they always first preached to the Jews whom they found there"—B. God having raised up His Son Jesus. (R.V. translates "having raised His Servant," and omits the name.) S. Peter repeats the title which he gave to his Master in ver. 13, and in both cases refers to Isa. 42. 1, which was a recognised prophecy of the Messiah. To bless you, by turning you from your iniquities—"which is the great gospel blessing"—WESLEY. (Matt. 10. 5; 15. 24; Luke 24. 47; ch. 13. 32, 33, 46; ver. 22; Matt. 1. 21.)

CHAPTER IV.

Vers. 1-12. BEGINNING OF PERSECUTION—FIRST ARREST OF PETER AND JOHN.—1. And as they were speaking to the people, the priests came upon them. "So wisely did God order that they should first bear a full testimony to the truth in the Temple, and then in the great Council; to which they could have had no access had they not been brought before it as criminals"—WESLEY.

"The priests"—those whose duty it was at the time to take charge of the Temple services, and who probably took offence at the multitudes assembled in the Temple court. The captain of the Temple had charge of the guard of priests and Levites who watched the Temple at night. He was apparently a civil as well as a religious officer, for we find he went with the officers to make the second arrest of the apostles. (Luke 24. 4; ch. 5. 24.)

2. The priests being grieved—"that the name of Jesus was preached to the people. Especially they were offended at the doctrine of His resurrection; for as they had put Him to death, His rising again proved Him to be the 'Just One,' and so brought His blood upon their heads. The priests were grieved, lest their office and Temple services should decline, and Christianity take root, through the preaching of the apostles, and their power of working miracles. The captain of the Temple—being concerned to prevent all sedition and disorder. The Sadducees — being displeased at the overturning all their doctrines; particularly with regard to the resurrection"—WESLEY.

For "grieved" the R.V. has "sore troubled." (Matt. 22. 23; ch. 23. 8.)

3. It was now eventide. "As S. Peter and S. John went up to the Temple at three in the afternoon the expression here makes it probable that some considerable time was spent in preaching to the people. Consequently, what we have in the former chapter is only an abstract, or a specimen, of the discourses delivered on the occasion; which is probably generally the case as to the speeches recorded by the sacred historians as well as others"—B.

4. Howbeit many believed. The number of the men—"besides women and children—was about five thousand—so many did our Lord now feed at once with the bread from heaven!"—WESLEY.

The R.V. "The number of the men came to be about five thousand," including of course the three thousand converted at Pentecost. But, in the five thousand, women and children were not reckoned; the word "men" is emphatic.

5, 6. A meeting of the Sanhedrim, who are described by their proper titles—rulers, and elders, and scribes—"who were eminent for power, for wisdom, and for learning"—and some of them by their names. Annas—"who had been the high priest — and Caiaphas—who was so then"—WESLEY.

Annas and Caiaphas are mentioned together as high priests when John commenced his ministry. (Luke 3. 2.) At both times Caiaphas was the actual high priest, but his father-in-law Annas, having previously filled the office for several years, still retained the name and much of the authority. (Luke 3. 2; John 11. 49; 18. 13.)

7. Set them in the midst. The Sanhedrim sat in a circle. By what name—"by what authority—have ye done this? They seem to speak ambiguously on purpose"—WESLEY.

"The special point of inquiry, in reference to the miracle, was the power by which the apostles had acted, the person whom they had named, and on whom they had relied. Of course the rulers knew very well that the apostles preached Jesus, and the resurrection of the dead, and the healing of the sick, through Jesus. They ask them to tease them, and to see if they could get anything out of them that looked criminal"—M. H.

8, 9. Then Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost. "That moment. God moves His instruments, not when they please, but just when He sees it needful. Ye rulers—he gives them the honour due to their office"—WESLEY.

"On two different occasions, recorded in Matt. 10. 9 and in Luke 21. 14, Jesus had promised to His disciples that in their trial before rulers and in the synagogues, the Holy Spirit would speak in them and through them, so that it was unnecessary for them to be careful how or what they should speak—yea, that their adversaries would not be able to resist or answer their wisdom and eloquence. Here, for the first time, the promise was fulfilled. Precisely at the moment when it was necessary and important—'then,' S. Peter was filled with the Holy Ghost; that is, the Holy Spirit, who since Pentecost had dwelt in him and the other disciples, was now poured more fully into his mind and heart, so that he was able to defend himself, and to bear testimony for Jesus, not only fearlessly and joyously, but also with wisdom and in the most suitable manner. If we this day are examined concerning a good deed done to an impotent man (R.V.). As regards the miracle, S. Peter in his answer testifies that it was a good deed and not an evil deed which he and S. John had performed, that the impotent man was actually healed, made whole, 'saved,' for which he appeals to the man himself who was present, that the power of healing and salvation rested in Jesus Christ the Crucified and Risen One—yea, that salvation for all men under the whole heaven is given only in Jesus Christ"—L.

10. Be it known to you all. "Probably the herald of God proclaimed this with a loud voice. Whom God hath raised from the dead—they knew in their own consciences that it was so; and though they had hired the soldiers to tell a most senseless and incredible tale to the contrary (Matt. 28. 12–15), yet it is observable they did not, so far as we can learn, dare to plead it before S. Peter and S. John"—WESLEY. (Ch. 3. 6, 16; 2. 24.)

11. The stone set at nought of you the builders (R.V.). This passage, from Ps. 118, was first quoted by our Lord (Matt. 21. 42). S. Peter inserts the emphatic "you" as an interpretation and comment on the prophecy. (Ps. 118. 22; Isa. 28. 16; Matt. 21. 42.)

12. There is no other name whereby we must be saved. "The apostle uses a beautiful gradation from the temporal deliverance which had been wrought for the poor cripple, by the power of Christ, to that of a much nobler and more important kind, which is wrought by Christ for impotent and sinful souls. He therein follows the admirable custom of his great Lord and Master, who continually took occasion from earthly, to speak of spiritual things"—WESLEY. (Matt. 1. 21; ch. 10. 43; 1 Tim. 2. 5, 6.)

13. "Illiterate and uneducated men. Even by such men (though not by such only) hath God in all ages caused His word to be preached before the world"—WESLEY.

The boldness of Peter and John. "The word implies freedom and readiness of speech, such as would not be expected from the un-learned. Christ's speeches had produced a similar impression in Jerusalem. (John 7. 15.) They took knowledge of them, etc. When they understood that they had been with Jesus, had been conversant with Him, and trained up under Him, they knew what to impute their boldness to—nay, their boldness in Divine things was enough to show with whom they had associated, and from whom they had had their education"—B. (Matt. 11. 25; 1 Cor. 1. 27.)

Vers. 15-22. THE ATTEMPT TO SILENCE THE APOSTLES.—15, 16, 17. A notable miracle. We cannot deny it, yet that it spread no further. That faith is not an affair of mathematical evidence and demonstration, but of the heart and will, is evident from the result of this judicial transaction. The cured cripple stood as a visible proof, an unexceptionable witness. That his healing was effected by the apostles, in the name of Jesus, no one questioned. Nothing was wanting to an intellectual conviction in the members of the Sanhedrim. Yet they resisted, and endeavoured to put down, all preaching or speaking of Jesus. (John 11. 47; ch. 3. 9, 10.)

17. But that it spread no further. "For they look upon it as a mere gangrene. So do all the world upon genuine Christianity. Let us severely threaten them. Great men, ye do nothing. They have a greater than you to flee to"—WESLEY.

"See how the malice of hell fights against the counsels of heaven. God will have the knowledge of Christ to spread over the whole world; but the chief priests would have it spread no further; at which He that sits in heaven laughs"—B.

18. "They charged them not to speak—privately. Nor teach—publicly"—WESLEY.

"We do not find that they gave them any reason why the doctrine of Christ must be suppressed; they did not say it was either false or dangerous, or of any ill tendency; and they were ashamed to own the true reason, namely, that it testified against their hypocrisy and wickedness"—B. (Ch. 5. 40.)

19. "Whether it be just to obey you rather than God, judge ye. Was it not by the same Spirit that Socrates, when they were condemning him to death for teaching the people, said, 'O ye Athenians, I embrace and love you; but I will obey God rather than you. And if you would spare my life on condition I should cease to teach my fellow-citizens, I would die a thousand times rather than accept the proposal'"—WESLEY. (Ch. 5. 29.)

21. Finding nothing how they might punish them. "Not thinking it proper, under all the circumstances, to proceed to any further extremities at that time, since they could find nothing in their conduct for which they could punish them with any show of reason. Because of the people, who had been eye-witnesses of the miracle, and whose resentment they feared"—B. They all glorified God. "So much wiser were the people than those who were over them!"—WESLEY. (Matt. 21. 26; Luke 20. 6, 19; 32. 2; ch. 5. 26; 3. 7, 8.)

22. For the man was above forty years old. "The disease was of long standing, and therefore the more inveterate; but all difficulties, small or great, yield equally to the sovereign power of God. It is as easy with God to convert a sinner of forty or fourscore, as one of ten years old"—C. "To one who looked upon the circumstances with a physician's eye, as Luke would, this feature would be most noticeable"—C. B.

Vers. 23-37. THE CHURCH AT PRAYER—RENEWED BAPTISM OF THE SPIRIT.—23. And being let go, they went to their own company—"who probably were at this time met together, praying for them"—B. (Ch. 12. 12.)

24. When they heard that—"a Divine inspiration coming upon all who were present, in an extraordinary manner—they lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and said"—B. "The sense is, Lord, Thou hast all power. And Thy word is fulfilled. Men do rage against Thee; but it is in vain"—WESLEY. (2 Kings 19. 15.)

25. Who by the Holy Ghost, by the mouth of our father David Thy servant, didst say (R.V.) (Ps. 2. 1.)

27. Whom Thou hast anointed. "To be King of Israel"—WESLEY. (Matt. 26. 3; Luke 22. 2; 23. 1-8; 1. 13; 4. 18; John 10. 36.)

28. "The sense is, But they could do no more than Thou wast pleased to permit, according to Thy determinate counsel, to save mankind by the sufferings of Thy Son. And what was needful for this end Thou did'st before determine to permit to be done"—WESLEY. (Ch. 2. 23; 3. 18).

The number of circumstances in this single prophecy enumerated as fulfilled is very remarkable.

29. With all boldness. (Vers. 13, 31; ch. 9. 27; 13. 46; 14. 3; 19. 8; 26. 26; 28. 31; Eph. 6. 19.)

30. While Thou stretchest forth Thy hand to heal (R.V.) "Exertest Thy power"—WESLEY. (Ch. 2. 43; 5. 12; 3. 6, 16; ver. 29.)

"This is the first Christian Church prayer that we know. The worshippers relied upon the omnipotence of God, who made heaven and earth. They pleaded the Divine promise concerning the establishment of the kingdom of His Son. They show the genuine Christian spirit, nothing of revenge or carnal zeal, nothing about the destruction of their enemies. As Christ came not to judge the world but to save it, so the apostles and believers are not inflamed with the judicial and fiery zeal of Elias, but with warm love to souls, who are to be rescued by their words and deeds, and brought to salvation in Christ"—L. "It must be remembered that the word Child as applied to the Lord Jesus in vers. 27 and 30 is in the R.V. more accurately Servant; it is the same word which in ver. 25 is applied to David. The reference is to Christ, not in His eternal Sonship, but in His official character"—C. B.

31. The place was shaken. "This earthquake was an evidence of the presence of God, and a most direct answer to their prayer, so far as the prayer concerned themselves. The earthquake proclaimed the 'stretched-out arm of God'"—C. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost—"afresh"—WESLEY.

"One communication of the Holy Spirit always makes way and disposes for another. Neither apostle nor private Christian can subsist in the Divine life without frequent influences from on high. Had these disciples depended on their pentecostal grace, they might have sunk now under the terror and menaces of their combined and powerful foes. God gives for the time being, but no stock for futurity, because He will keep all His followers continually dependent on Himself"—C. And spake with boldness. "So their petition was granted"—WESLEY. (Ch. 2. 2, 4; 16. 26; ver. 29.)

32. And the multitude of them that believed — "Every individual person"—WESLEY.

Were of one heart and one soul. "Their love, their hopes, their passions joined. And not so much as one—in so great a multitude this was a necessary consequence of that union of heart — said that ought of the things which he had was his own. It is impossible any one should, while all were of one soul. So long as that truly Christian love continued, they could not but have all things common"—WESLEY.

"Each was as welcome to participate in them as the original proprietor could be, being, in those new bonds of Christian fellowship, as dear to him as himself"—B. (Ch. 5. 12; Rom. 15. 5, 6; 2 Cor. 13. 11; Phil. 1. 27; 2. 2; 1 Pet. 3. 8; ch. 2. 44.)

33. Gave the apostles their witness (R.V.). And great grace—"a large measure of the inward power of the Holy Ghost"—WESLEY.

Was upon them all. "Directing all their thoughts, words, and actions"—WESLEY.

The power of the apostles' ministry is specially mentioned as given in answer to the prayer in ver. 29. (Ch. 1. 8, 22; 2. 47.)

34. Neither was there any one among them that wanted. "We may observe, this is added as the proof that 'great grace was upon them all.' And it was the immediate, necessary consequence of it; yea, and must be, to the end of the world. In all ages and nations, the same cause, the same degree of grace, could not but, in like circumstances, produce the same effect. For whosoever were possessors of houses or lands sold them—not that there was any particular command for this; but there was great grace and great love; of which this was the natural fruit"—WESLEY.

"The words do certainly seem to import that all the possessors of land in the Church sold something, but not that they disposed of their entire possessions; it is not even mentioned that anyone disposed of all that he had"—L. (Ch. 2. 45.)

35. And distribution was made. "At first by the apostles themselves, afterwards by them whom they appointed"—WESLEY.

36, 37. A son of consolation. "Not only on account of his so largely assisting the poor with his fortune, but also of those peculiar gifts of the Spirit, whereby he was so well qualified both to comfort and to exhort"—WESLEY.

Having land — ("an estate" — WESLEY; R.V. "a field"). "Probably of considerable value. It is not unlikely that it was in Cyprus. Being a Levite he had no portion, no distinct inheritance, in Israel"—WESLEY.

"It is worthy of remark that the two apostles of the Gentiles, though of Jewish extraction, were both born in Gentile countries, S. Paul in Cilicia, S. Barnabas in Cyprus. This gave them many advantages; served to remove prejudices from the heathens, and gave them no doubt much facility in the Greek tongue, without which they could have done but little in Asia Minor, nor in most parts of the Roman empire where they travelled"—C. (Vers. 34, 35; ch. 5. 1, 2.)

CHAPTER V.

Vers. 1-11. ANANIAS AND SAPPHIRA. — 1. But a certain man named Ananias. "It is certain, not a believer; for all that believed 'were of one heart and of one soul.' Probably, not baptized; but intending now to offer himself for baptism"—WESLEY.

2. And bringing a certain part. "As if it had been the whole: perhaps, saying that it was so"—WESLEY. (Ch. 4. 37.)

3. To lie to the Holy Ghost—"who is in us—and to keep back. Here was the first instance of it. This was the first attempt to bring propriety of goods into the Christian Church"—WESLEY. (Num. 30. 2; Deut. 23. 21; Eccl. 5. 4; Luke 22. 3.)

4. "While it remained, did it not remain thine? It is true whosoever among the Christians, not one excepted, 'had houses or lands, sold them, and laid the price at the feet of the apostles'; but it was in his own choice to be a Christian or not, and consequently either to sell his land or to keep it. And when it was sold, was it not in thy power? For it does not appear that he professed himself a Christian when he sold it. Why hast thou conceived this thing in thy heart—so profanely to dissemble on so solemn an occasion? Thou hast not lied to men only, but to God also. Hence the Godhead of the Holy Ghost evidently appears; since lying to Him (ver. 3) is lying to God"—WESLEY.

It may be remarked that few commentators have agreed with Mr. Wesley that the action of Ananias was the first attempt to bring propriety of goods, or private property, into the Church. To most of them it has appeared that the language of S. Peter in ver. 4. clearly asserts that the personal rights of individuals over their property were recognised by the authorities of the Church as distinctly as by the law of the land. "Ananias and Sapphira were evidently persons who professed faith in Christ, with the rest of the disciples. While all were making sacrifices for the present necessity they came forward among the rest, pretending to bring all the money they had got for a possession (of what kind we know not), which they had sold. A part of this price, however, they kept back, thinking probably that, as the whole was their own, they had a right to do with it as they pleased; and so they had—they were under no necessity to sell their possession; but the act of selling it for the ostensible purpose of bringing it into the common stock left them no further control over it, or property in it; and their pretence, that the money which they brought was the whole produce of the sale, was a direct lie in itself, and an attempt to deceive the Holy Spirit, under whose influence they pretended to act. This constituted the iniquity of their sin"—C. Why hath Satan filled thine heart? "Here we see S. Peter, under the infallible guidance of the Spirit of Truth, bearing testimony to the agency of Satan in exciting men to wickedness. To lie unto the Holy Ghost—that is, that thou shouldest attempt to impose upon the Spirit of God, namely, the Spirit with which the apostles were endued. Whiles it remained, was it not thine own? It evidently appears from hence that no Christian converts were obliged to sell their estates"—B. "What S. Peter says is important with reference to the doctrine of the Holy Ghost. He refers the action of Ananias and Sapphira wholly to the Holy Ghost. He judges the deed, not from the standpoint of the apostles as individuals, or of the Church as a human fellowship; their sin is a sin against the Holy Ghost, a crimen læsæ majestatis against Him. Accordingly, both the personality and the Divinity of the Holy Ghost are testified. He is described as a Person whom we may 'tempt,' that is, put to the proof, and whom we may seek to deceive by falsehood; and He is described as a Divine Person when S. Peter says, Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God"—L. "The question of S. Peter, Why hath Satan filled thine heart? contains more than one truth in reference to Satan. First of all, the existence and reality of Satan—that is to say, of the Evil Spirit, who is the Prince of Darkness, is throughout undeniably to be understood. It cannot here be considered a mere allegory; the matter was too serious, and the speech of the apostle is much too impressive, severe, and direct for that. Again, there is here a proof that evil does not exist and grow isolated in the human breast, but is connected and interwoven with the kingdom of evil in the invisible world. And precisely the worst sins—the subtlest hypocrisy, where evil clothes itself in the holiest garments of light—are the operations of Satan. Further, the vehement and strong expression of the Apostle Peter supposes that there exist different degrees of the influence and working of Satan, from the smallest temptation to the filling of the heart, that is, entirely and completely taking possession of it, which is the terrible contrast to being 'filled with the Spirit.' And, lastly, the freedom of the will, and the responsibility of man, even in relation to the powerful promptings of the devil, are indirectly yet unmistakably expressed. For S. Peter says, Why hath Satan filled thine heart? And the reason which he seeks is evidently not in Satan, but in Ananias. The question has undeniably this meaning, Why hast thou consented that Satan should fill thine heart? The apostle indirectly testifies that man may resist the devil, and that man is responsible if he give himself up to Satanic influence"—L.

5. And Ananias fell down and expired. "And this severity was not only just, considering that complication of vainglory, covetousness, fraud, and impiety, which this action contained; but it was also wise and gracious, as it would effectually deter any others from following his example. It was likewise a convincing proof of the upright conduct of the apostles, in managing the sums with which they were entrusted, and in general of their Divine mission. For none can imagine that S. Peter would have had the assurance to pronounce, and much less the power to execute such a sentence, if he had been guilty himself of a fraud of the same kind; or had been belying the Holy Ghost in the whole of his pretensions to be under His immediate direction"—WESLEY. (Vers. 10, 11.)

6. The young men—belonging to the disciples then present—wound him up (R.V. "wrapped him round"). (John 19. 40.)

7. About the space of three hours. "How precious a space! The woman had a longer time for repentance"—WESLEY.

8. If ye sold the land for so much—"Naming the sum"—WESLEY.

"The woman had not only longer time for consideration, but S. Peter, by a more pointed question, gave her a much better opportunity for reflection, and for giving glory to God"—L. Yea, for so much. "Ananias and his wife had agreed to tell the same story; and the bargain being private, they thought they might safely affirm what they did. It is lamentable to see those relations, who should quicken one another to that which is good, hardening one another in that which is evil"—B.

10. Then fell she down straightway. "There are many instances of sudden death, which are not to be looked upon as the punishment of gross sins; it may be intended as a favour to some, that a quick passage is granted them. The deaths here mentioned were, doubtless, in judgment"—B.

11. The Church. "This is the first time it is mentioned. And here is a native specimen of a New Testament Church; which is, a company of men, called by the gospel, grafted into Christ by baptism, animated by love, united by all kind of fellowship, and disciplined by the death of Ananias and Sapphira"—WESLEY.

The word Church occurs in ch. 2. 47 in A.V., but the best MSS. omit the word, and it is omitted in the R.V. (Ver. 5; ch. 2. 43; 19. 17.)

Vers. 12–16. INFLUENCE ON THE CHURCH—PURITY AND PROGRESS.—12, 13. And by the hands of the apostles were many signs. "Now the gospel power returned to its proper channel, which is that of grace and goodness"—B. And they were all—"all the believers. None of the rest—no formalists or hypocrites. Durst join themselves—in an outward show only, like Ananias and Sapphira"—WESLEY. (Ch. 2. 43, 47; 14. 3; 19. 11; Rom. 15. 19; 2 Cor. 12. 12; Heb. 2. 4; ch. 3. 11; 4. 21, 32; John 9. 22; 12. 42; 19. 38.)

14. "But so much the more were true believers added, because the unbelievers kept at a distance"—WESLEY.

15. Insomuch that they brought the sick into the streets—"because, it is probable, the priests would not allow them to bring them into the Temple to Solomon's Porch—that at the least the shadow of Peter. They had faith to believe that this would be the means of healing them; and it is probable that they were not disappointed, but that some, at least, were thus healed, as the woman mentioned in the gospel was, by touching Christ's garment"—B. (Matt. 9. 21; 14. 36; ch. 19. 12.)

16. The cities round about Jerusalem (R.V.). "The opportunity was given the apostles, both of convincing people's judgments, by these miracles, of the heavenly origin of the doctrine they preached, and also of engaging people's affections both to them and it, by giving them specimens of its manifest beneficial tendency"—B. "The miraculous punishment had done its work, both in the Church and on those without. The Church was admonished to watchfulness, and warned not to grieve the Holy Ghost. And the people received the conviction that a man must submit himself, with his whole heart, to the rule of the Spirit, if he would join the Church; that a mere external fellowship, for appearance sake, avails nothing. Yet, in spite of the example of punishment, believers were the more added to the Lord. Thus it does not happen as false prudence fears, which preserves nothing of the seriousness and severity of Church discipline, lest it should frighten people away. No! Discipline well kept will improve matters. By pruning, God promotes the growth of the tree of the Church"—L. The miracles of healing were the special fulfilment of the Master's promise. (Mark 16. 17, 18; John 14. 12.)

Vers. 17–32. THE TWELVE APPREHENDED—RELEASED BY AN ANGEL—AND APPEARING VOLUNTARILY BEFORE THE SANHEDRIM.—17. The high priest and the sect of the Sadducees. "A goodly company for the priest! He and these deniers of any angel or resurrection were filled with zeal—angry, bitter, persecuting zeal"—WESLEY.

R.V. "jealousy," A.V. "indignation." "As the preaching of the apostles had its centre point in the testimony of the resurrection of Jesus, it naturally followed that it was the Sadducees who were stirred up to the most active opposition"—L.

18. Put them in the common prison—"where the vilest malefactors were lodged"—WESLEY. (Luke 21. 12.)

19. But the angel of the Lord—in spite of locks and bars, and without giving any alarm to keepers or to other prisoners. (Ch. 12. 7; 16. 26.)

20. The words of this life—"that is, 'these words of life,' words which show the way to life everlasting"—WESLEY.

Comp. ch. 13. 26—"the words of this salvation." "In this charge given them observe—(1) Where they must preach—In the Temple; it is not for the preachers of Christ's gospel to retire into corners as long as they have an opportunity of preaching in the great congregation. (2) To whom they must preach—Speak to the people—not to princes or rulers only, but to the people, who are in general more willing to be taught, and whose souls are equally precious; to all the people, for all are alike concerned. (3) How they must preach—Stand and speak—not only publicly, that all may hear, but boldly and resolutely; stand up and speak, as those who resolve to stand to it, to live and die by it. (4) What they must preach—All the words of this life. The gospel is concerning matters of life and death. They must preach all the 'words of this life,' and not conceal any for fear of offending. Christ's witnesses are sworn to speak the whole truth"—M. H. (John 6. 68; 17. 3; 1 John 5. 11.)

21. And when they heard that. "It must have been a satisfaction to them to receive fresh orders from Heaven; otherwise they might have questioned whether, since they had now received their liberty, they should preach as publicly as they had done, Christ having said, 'When they persecute you in one city, flee to another.' But as soon as they knew the will of God, they took the first opportunity of obeying it"—B. But the high priest came, and called the Council. The expressions imply a formal meeting of the entire Sanhedrim, probably convened previously. (Ch. 4. 5, 6.)

23. "We found the prison shut. The angel probably had shut the doors again"—WESLEY.

24. "They doubted what this should be (A.V. and R.V. 'whereunto this should grow'). They were even at their wits' end; the world in persecuting the children of God entangle themselves in numberless difficulties"—WESLEY. (Luke 24. 4; ch. 4. 1.)

26. Then went the captain. Without violence. "This symptom of the voice of the people is remarkable. The guard supposed it possible that the people would have stoned them if they used violence. The popular favour towards the apostles without doubt reached its highest point. This is explainable from the numerous benefits conferred on whole families by the healing of the sick, as well as by this last occurrence—that the apostles, imprisoned the day before, were delivered without human aid"—L. (Matt. 21. 26.)

28. Did we not strictly command you not to teach? "See the poor cunning of the enemies of the gospel. They make laws and interdicts at their pleasure, which those who obey God cannot but break; and then take occasion thereby to censure and punish the innocent as guilty"—WESLEY.

Ye would bring the blood of this Man upon us—"an artful and invidious word. The apostles did not desire to accuse any man. They simply declared the naked truth"—WESLEY.

The high priest designedly alludes to Jesus without mentioning Him; he speaks of "this Name" and "this Man," as if it were incompatible with his dignity even to name Jesus. Yet his language intimates a secret disturbance of conscience, a fear of the fulfilment of their own imprecation. (Matt. 23. 35; 27. 25; ch. 4. 18; 2. 23, 26; 3. 15; 7. 52.)

29. Then Peter—"in the name or all the apostles—said. He does not now give them the titles of honour which he did before (ch. 4. 8), but enters directly upon the subject, and justifies what he had done. This is, as it were, a continuation of that discourse, but with an increase of severity"—WESLEY. (Ch. 4. 19.)

30. The God of our fathers. "It was well to introduce this, that the Council might see that they preached no strange god"—C. Hath raised up Jesus—"of the seed of David, according to the promises made to our fathers"—WESLEY.

Whom ye slew, hanging Him on a tree (R.V.). "The apostles intimate that the guilt of the crucifixion was as truly upon the Jews as if the acts had been done by their own hands and not by those of the Roman soldiers"—L. (Ch. 3. 13, 15; 22. 14; 10. 39; 13. 29; Gal. 3. 13; 1 Pet. 2. 24.)

31. Him hath God exalted—"from the grave to heaven—to give repentance—whereby Jesus is received as a Prince—and forgiveness of sins—whereby He is received as a Saviour. Hence some infer, that repentance and faith are as much gifts as forgiveness of sins. Not so; for man co-operates in the former, but not in the latter. God alone forgives sins"—WESLEY.

"Observe, we cannot have Christ to be our Saviour, unless we be willing to take Him for our Ruler. We cannot be redeemed and healed by Him unless we give up ourselves to be governed by Him"—B. (Ch. 2. 33, 36; Phil. 2. 9; Heb. 2. 10; 12. 2; ch. 3. 13; Matt. 1. 21; Luke 24. 47; ch. 3. 26; 13. 38; Eph. 1. 7; Col. 1. 14.)

32. And we are witnesses (R.V.). "And if we should be silent, as you would have us be, we should be false to a trust of the greatest possible importance"—B. And also the Holy Ghost—"a much greater witness"—WESLEY.

The appeal is to the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit, which so many of the believers received. (John 15. 26, 27; ch. 2. 4; 10. 44.)

Vers. 33-42. SPEECH OF GAMALIEL — THE APOSTLES BEATEN AND DISMISSED.—33. They were cut to the heart—literally, "they were sawn asunder," namely, with anger and indignation. "When a sermon was preached to the people to this purpose they were 'pierced to the heart' (ch. 2. 37), namely, with remorse and godly sorrow. Thus the same gospel is to some 'a savour of life unto life,' and to others 'of death unto death'"—B. (Ch. 2. 37; 7. 54.)

34. But a certain Pharisee. "And, as such, believing the resurrection of the dead. A doctor, or 'teacher,' of the Law—that is, a scribe, and, indeed, one of the highest rank—had in honour by all the people—except the Sadducees. Rising up in the Council. So God can raise defenders of His servants whensoever and wheresoever He pleases"—WESLEY.

"The interference of Gamaliel may be ascribed, under Divine providence, to the jealousy which existed between the Pharisees and Sadducees, to which S. Paul afterwards owed his preservation. Gamaliel is said to have been the son of good old Simeon, mentioned Luke 2. 25, and the person at whose feet S. Paul was brought up"—B. (Ch. 22. 3.)

36. Before these days. "He prudently mentions the facts first, and then makes the inference"—WESLEY.

"Josephus mentions Theudas, a leader of an insurrection (Antiq. 20. 5), but this happened fourteen or fifteen years after Gamaliel's speech. There were probably two persons of the same name, as there were four Simons within forty years, and three Judases within ten years, all leaders of insurrections"—W. W.

37. In the days of the enrolment (R.V.). "The false prophet and the true. (1) The former rises up of his own accord, like Theudas and Judas; the latter is raised up by God. (2) The former draws away the people after him; the latter leads them to the Lord. (3) The former falls as a wandering star; the latter will shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars for ever and ever"—L.

38. Let them alone. "In a cause which is manifestly good, we should immediately join. In a cause, on the other hand, which is manifestly evil, we should immediately oppose. But in a sudden, new, doubtful occurrence, this advice is eminently useful. If this counsel or this work. He seems to correct himself, as if it were some sudden work rather than a counsel or design. And so it was; for the apostles had no counsel, plan, or design of their own; but were mere instruments in the hand of God; working just as He led them, from day to day"—WESLEY. (Prov. 21. 30; Isa. 8. 10; Matt. 15. 13.)

39. If it is of God (R.V.), which does not appear to me impossible, ye cannot overthrow it. (Luke 21. 15; 1 Cor. 1. 25; ch. 7. 51; 9. 5; 23. 9.)

40. And beaten them. Doubtless the scourging was suggested as a compromise, when the majority of the Council agreed in the view taken by Gamaliel. Compare the proposal of Pilate, when he "found no fault in this Man." (Ch. 4. 18; Matt. 10. 17; 23. 34; Mark 13. 9.)

41. Rejoicing to suffer shame. "This is a sure mark of the truth—joy in affliction, such as is true, deep, pure"—WESLEY.

Scourging was a common punishment among the Jews, but was regarded as peculiarly disgraceful. The apostles remembered their Master's command, "Rejoice in that day" (Matt. 5. 12). (Rom. 5. 3; 2 Cor. 12. 10; Phil. 1. 29; Heb. 10. 34; Jas. 1. 2; 1 Pet. 4. 13, 16.)

42. And every day in the Temple, and at home (R.V.) they preached Jesus Christ. They not only preached concerning Him, but preached Him; they preached "not themselves but Christ Jesus the Lord," as the one Saviour of lost sinners. (Ch. 2. 46; 4. 20, 29.)

CHAPTER VI.

Vers. 1–7. COMPLAINT ABOUT THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE POOR FUNDS—DEACONS APPOINTED.

—1. In these days, when the number of the disciples was multiplying, there arose a murmuring of the Grecian Jews (R.V.). "Here was the first breach made on those who were before 'of one heart, and of one soul.' Partiality crept in unawares on some, and murmuring on others. Ah, Lord, how short a time did pure, genuine, undefiled Christianity remain in the world! O the depth! How unsearchable are Thy counsels! Marvellous are Thy ways, O King of saints! The Hellenists were Jews born out of Palestine. They were so called because they used the Greek as their mother tongue"—WESLEY. (Ch. 2. 41; 4. 4; 5. 14; ver. 7; ch. 9. 26; 11. 20; 4. 33.)

"In this partiality of the Hebrews, and murmuring of the Hellenists, were the seeds of a general persecution sown. Did God ever, in any age or country, withdraw His restraining providence, and let loose the world upon the Christians, till there was a cause among themselves? Is not an open, general persecution always both penal and medicinal? a punishment of those that will not accept of milder reproofs, as well as a medicine to heal their sickness? and at the same time a means both of purifying and strengthening those whose heart is still right with God?"—WESLEY.

2. Then the Twelve. "By the readiness of the apostles to take measures to remedy what was complained of we may infer that cause for complaint had been shown. This may easily have come to pass without any fault on the part of the Twelve, simply from the sudden growth of the number of Christians"—C. B. Called the multitude of the disciples—it was important that the whole Church should be satisfied. Forsake the word of God (R.V.). The word in the original is a strong form, and indicates that the whole time of the Twelve was being spent on this disbursement. By tables is meant the bench or counter at which the money was distributed. (See Matt. 21. 12.) "In the first Church the primary business of apostles, evangelists, and bishops was to preach the word of God; the secondary, to take a kind of paternal care (the Church being then like a family) for the food, especially of the poor, the strangers, and the widows. Afterwards the deacons of both sexes were constituted for this latter business; and whatever time they had to spare from this they employed in works of spiritual mercy. But their proper office was to take care of the poor. And when some of them afterwards preached the gospel, they did this, not by virtue of their deaconship, but of another commission, that of evangelists, which they probably received, not before but after they were appointed deacons. And it is not unlikely that others were chosen deacons, or stewards, in their room, when any of these commenced evangelists"—WESLEY. (Ex. 18. 17.)

3. Of good report—"that there may be no room to suspect them of partiality or injustice. Full of the Holy Ghost and of wisdom. For it is not a light matter to dispense even the temporal goods of the Church. To do even this well, a large measure both of the gifts and grace of God is requisite. Whom we will set over this business. It would have been happy for the Church had its ordinary ministers in every age taken the same care to act in concert with the people committed to their charge, which the apostles themselves, extraordinary as their office was, did on this and other occasions"—WESLEY. (Deut. 1. 13; ch. 1. 21; 16. 2; 1 Tim. 3. 7.)

4. We will constantly attend to prayer, and to the ministry of the word. "This is doubtless the proper business of a Christian bishop—to speak to God, in prayer; to men, in preaching His word, as ambassadors for Christ"—WESLEY.

"By these two the kingdom of Christ must be advanced, and additions made to it; we must prophesy upon the dry bones, and then pray for a Spirit of life from God to enter into them. The apostles were endued with extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, tongues and miracles; and yet that which they gave themselves continually to was preaching and praying, by which they might edify the Church"—M. H. (Ch. 2. 42.)

5. And they chose—"it seems seven Hellenists (Grecian Jews), as their names show. And Nicolas a proselyte—to whom the proselytes would the more readily apply"—WESLEY.

"We may observe the generous and brotherly feeling of the whole multitude, conceding so much to the complainants"—W. W. (Ch. 11. 24; 8. 5, 26; 21. 8; Rev. 2. 6, 15.)

6. They laid their hands on them. "Both that they might express their solemn appointment to the office, and confer upon them such extraordinary gifts as would qualify them more abundantly for the full discharge of it"—B. (Ch. 1. 24; 8. 17; 9. 17; 13. 3; 1 Tim. 4. 14; 5. 22; 2 Tim. 1. 6.)

7. And the word of God grew—"the hindrances being removed"—WESLEY.

And a great company of the priests. "From Ezra 2. 36-39 it appears that 4289 priests returned from Babylon, the number of whom was at this time much increased. This was the most remarkable class of converts, as the priests were naturally the most opposed to the new dispensation"—W. W. (Ch. 12. 24; 19. 20; Col. 1. 6; John 12. 42.)

Vers. 8–15. ENERGY AND USEFULNESS OF S. STEPHEN: HIS ARREST.—8. Great wonders and miracles among the people—"openly in the sight of all. Our Lord promised that the signs of miracles should not only follow them that preached but them that believed"—B. (Mark 16. 17.)

9. There arose certain of the synagogue, which is called. "It was one and the same synagogue which consisted of these several nations. Saul of Cilicia was doubtless a member of it; whence it is not at all improbable that Gamaliel presided over it. Libertines—so they were called whose fathers were once slaves, and afterwards made free. This was the case of many Jews who had been taken captive by the Romans"—WESLEY.

Disputing with Stephen—"arguing with him concerning his doctrine, with a view to prevent the success of his preaching"—B.

10. The wisdom and the Spirit—"that is, the Spirit of wisdom, which spake by him. They thought they only disputed with S. Stephen, but they were disputing with the Spirit of God in him, for whom they were an unequal match. Then was fulfilled that promise, 'I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay or resist' (Luke 21. 15)"—B. (Ch. 5. 39; Ex. 4. 12; Isa. 54. 17.)

11. They suborned men. They had recourse to a mean and dishonest fraud. Blasphemous words against Moses and against God. The particular words to which this false construction was applied are given in ver. 14. (1 Kings 21. 10, 13; Matt. 26. 59, 60.)

12. They stirred up the people. Here for the first time we find the people united with the elders and scribes in enmity against the Church of Jesus. It was told them that the glory of the Temple was spoken against, which was the one thing most sacred to them, both on grounds of patriotism and religion; and the people were easily roused to fury.

14. We have heard him say—"so they might. But yet the consequence they drew would not follow"—WESLEY.

What the tenor of S. Stephen's language must have been may be gathered from ch. 7. 48: "The Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands." Perhaps, also, he had repeated some of his Master's sayings, such as His declaration to the woman of Samaria—"The hour cometh when, neither in this mountain nor yet in Jerusalem, shall men worship the Father"; or His solemn prediction to His disciples—"There shall not be left one stone upon another"—and tried to teach the spirituality of true worship, and the universality of the new dispensation. (Ch. 25. 8; Dan. 9. 26.)

15. As the face of an angel—"covered with supernatural lustre. They reckoned his preaching of Jesus to be the Christ was destroying Moses and the Law; and God bears witness to him, with the same glory as He did to Moses, when He gave the Law by him"—WESLEY.

CHAPTER VII.

Vers. 1–53. S. STEPHEN'S DEFENCE BEFORE THE SANHEDRIM.—2. And he said. "S. Stephen had been accused of blasphemy against Moses, and even against God; and of speaking against the Temple and the Law, threatening that Jesus would destroy the one, and change the other. In answer to this accusation, rehearsing, as it were, the articles of his historical creed, he speaks of God with high reverence, and a grateful sense of a long series of acts of goodness to the Israelites; and of Moses with great respect, on account of his important and honourable employments under God; of the Temple with regard, as being built to the honour of God—yet not with such superstition as the Jews, putting them in mind that no Temple could comprehend God; and he was going on, no doubt, when he was interrupted by their clamour, to speak to the last point, the destruction of the Temple, and the change of the Law by Christ. Men, brethren, and fathers, hearken. The sum of his discourse is this: I acknowledge the glory of God revealed to the fathers (ver. 2); the calling of Moses

(ver. 34, etc.); the dignity of the Law (vers. 8, 38, 44); the holiness of 'this place' (vers. 7, 45, 47). And indeed the Law is more ancient than the Temple; the promise more ancient than the Law. For God showed Himself the God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and their children freely (vers. 2, etc., 9, etc., 17, etc., 32, 34, 45); and they showed faith and obedience to God (vers. 4, 20, etc., 23); particularly by their regard for the Law (ver. 8); and the promised land (ver. 16). Meantime, God never confined His presence to this one place, or to the observers of the Law. For He hath been acceptably worshipped before the Law was given or the Temple built, and out of this land (vers. 2, 9, 33, 44). And that our fathers and their posterity were not tied down to this land, their various sojournings (vers. 4, etc., 14, 29, 44) and exile (ver. 43) show. But you and your fathers have always been evil (ver. 9); have withstood Moses (vers. 25, etc., 39, etc.); have despised the land (ver. 39); forsaken God (ver. 40, etc.); superstitiously honoured the Temple (ver. 48); resisted God and His Spirit (ver. 50); killed the prophets and the Messiah Himself (ver. 51); and kept not the Law for which ye contend (ver. 53). Therefore God is not bound to you, much less to you alone. And truly this solemn testimony of S. Stephen is most worthy of his character, as 'a man full of the Holy Ghost, and of faith, and power'; in which, though he does not advance so many regular propositions contradictory to those of his adversaries, yet he closely and nervously answers them all. Nor can we doubt but he would, from these premises, have drawn inferences touching the destruction of the Temple, the abrogation of the Mosaic Law, the punishment of that rebellious people, and, above all, touching Jesus of Nazareth, the true Messiah, had not his discourse been interrupted by the clamours of the multitude stopping their ears and rushing upon him. Men, brethren, and fathers—all who are here present, whether ye are my equals in years, or of more advanced age. The word which in this and in many other places is rendered 'men' is a mere expletive. The God of glory—the glorious God—appeared to Abraham before he dwelt in Haran—therefore Abraham knew God long before he was in this land"—WESLEY. (Ch. 22. 1.)

3. Which I will show thee. "Abraham knew not whither he went"—WESLEY. (Gen. 12. 1.)

4. After his father was dead. "While Terah lived, Abraham lived partly with him, partly in Canaan; but after he died, altogether in Canaan"—WESLEY.

This is Bengel's suggestion, made with the view of reconciling S. Stephen's statement with the chronology in the Book of Genesis. It may perhaps be added, that the fullest confidence in the inspiration of Holy Scripture does not make it necessary to believe that S. Stephen was absolutely accurate in every detail of this long and unprepared speech. The facts on which he relied were universally admitted; and the argument from them was irresistible. (Gen. 11. 31; 12. 4, 5.)

5. No, not to set his foot on. "For the field mentioned (ver. 16) he did not receive by a Divine donation, but bought it; even thereby showing that he was a stranger in the land"—WESLEY.

Yet He promised that He would give it to him for a possession—"which promise Abraham firmly believed that God would fulfil; his faith triumphed over all seeming difficulties, and he confidently trusted in the power, love, and faithfulness of God"—B. (Gen. 12. 7; 13. 15; 15. 3, 18; 17. 8; 26. 3.)

6. That his seed should sojourn in a strange land. "When God had brought Abraham into this country, He did not keep him and his posterity here till the time when they were to enter upon the possession of it; on the contrary, God informed him in vision that his seed should be strangers in a foreign land, where they would be made slaves, and treated with great cruelty; and that these events, with the circumstances preparatory to them, should extend themselves to the full period of four hundred years"—B. (Gen. 15. 13, 16; Ex. 12. 40; Gal. 3. 17.)

7. They shall serve Me. "Not the Egyptians"—WESLEY.

In this place—"in this land, erecting a temple for the performance of My worship here"—B. "The words are not in the promise given to Abraham, but are apparently taken from Ex. 3. 12, where they refer to Sinai. S. Stephen's object may have been to intimate that which is laid to his charge, concerning the highest worship of God being no longer restricted to the Temple and Jerusalem, is nothing more than they were taught by a study of their own history"—C. B.

8. And so he begat Isaac. "After the covenant was given, of which circumcision was the seal"—WESLEY.

The twelve patriarchs—"the twelve sons of Jacob, so called because each became the head of a family or tribe"—WESLEY. (Gen. 17. 9–11; 21. 2–4; 25. 26; 29. 31, etc.; 30. 5, etc.; 35. 18, 23.)

9. Sold Joseph into Egypt—"where he became a slave. But God was with him—though he was not in this land"—WESLEY. (Gen. 37. 4, 11, 28; Ps. 105. 17; Gen. 39. 2, 21, 23.)

10. And delivered him out of all his afflictions. "From what S. Stephen relates of the story of Joseph, it was natural for the members of the Council to infer that the greatest favourites of Heaven might suffer by the envy of those who are called the Israel of God; and might be exalted by Him, after being rejected by them; a thought worthy of their consideration with respect to Jesus"—B. (Gen. 41, 37; 42. 6.)

11. Now there came a dearth—"according to the prediction of Joseph"—B. (Gen. 41. 54.)

12. Sent our fathers first—"without Benjamin"—WESLEY. (Gen 42. 1.)

13. And at the second time. Joseph's kindred (R.V. "Joseph's race"). (Gen. 45. 4, 16.)

14. Seventy-five souls. "So the seventy interpreters (whom S. Stephen follows), one son and a grandson of Manasseh and three children of Ephraim being added to the seventy persons mentioned in Gen. 46. 27"—WESLEY. (Gen. 45. 9, 27; 46. 27; Deut. 10. 22.)

15. So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died—"after being supported there about seventeen years, by the filial gratitude of his son Joseph"—B. (Gen. 46. 5; 49. 33; Ex. 1. 6.)

16. And were carried over into Sychem (R.V. and WESLEY, "Shechem"). "It seems that S. Stephen, rapidly running over so many circumstances of history, has no leisure (nor was it needful where they were so well known) to recite them all distinctly. Therefore he here contracts into one two different sepulchres, places, and purchases, so as, in the former history, to name the buyer, omitting the seller; in the latter, to name the seller, omitting the buyer. Abraham bought a burying-place of the children of Heth. (Gen. 23. 3–18.) There Jacob was buried. Jacob bought a field of the children of Hamor. There Joseph was buried. You see here how S. Stephen contracts these two purchases into one. This concise manner of speaking, strange as it seems to us, was common among the Hebrews; particularly when, in a case notoriously known, the speaker mentioned but part of the story, and left the rest, which would have interrupted the current of his discourse, to be supplied in the mind of the hearer. And laid in the sepulchre that Abraham bought. The first land which these strangers bought was for a sepulchre. They sought for a country in heaven. Perhaps the whole sentence might be rendered thus: So Jacob went down into Egypt and died, he and our fathers, and were carried over to Shechem, and laid by the sons (that is, descendants) of Hamor the father of Shechem, in the sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money"—WESLEY.

A sum of money of the sons of Emmor the father of Sychem (R.V. "A price in silver of the sons of Hamor in Shechem"). (Ex. 13. 19; Josh. 24. 32; Gen. 23. 16; 35. 19.)

17. When the time of the promise. Concerning the multiplication of Abraham's seed. (Gen. 15. 5, 6, 13; Ex. 1. 7–9; Ps. 105. 24, 25.)

18. Another king—"probably of another family"—WESLEY.

19. Cast out their young children (R.V. "That they should cast out their babes"; WESLEY, "Exposed"). "Cast out to perish by hunger or wild beasts"—WESLEY. (Ex. 1. 22.)

20. In which time—"a sad but a seasonable time"—WESLEY.

Moses. Exceeding fair (literally, "fair unto God," R.V. margin). So Nineveh was "an exceeding great city" (Jonah 3. 3)—literally, "great unto God." (Ex. 2. 2; Heb. 11. 23.)

21. Pharaoh's daughter took him up. "By which means, being designed for a kingdom, he had all those advantages of education which he could not have had if he had not been exposed"—WESLEY. (Ex. 2. 3–10.)

22. In all the wisdom of the Egyptians—"which was then celebrated in all the world, and for many ages afterwards"—WESLEY.

"Geography, geometry, arithmetic, astronomy, natural history, physic, and hieroglyphics, are all mentioned by ancient writers as branches of Egyptian literature"—B. And mighty in words—"deep, solid, weighty, though not of a ready utterance"—WESLEY. (Luke 24. 19.)

23. It came into his heart—"probably by an impulse from God"—WESLEY. (Ex. 2. 11, 12.)

24. Seeing one wronged—"probably by one of the task-masters"—WESLEY.

25. They understood it not—"such was their stupidity and sloth, which made him afterwards unwilling to go to them"—WESLEY.

This incident is narrated in detail in preparation for the rebuke in ver. 51.

26. He showed himself—"of his own accord unexpectedly"—WESLEY. (Ex. 2. 13.)

27. Who appointed thee? "Under the pretence of the want of a call by man, the instruments of God are often rejected"—WESLEY. (Luke 12. 14; ch. 4. 7.)

29. Was a stranger in the land of Madian—at the north-east point of the Red Sea. (Ex. 2. 15, 22; 4. 20; 18. 34.)

30. An angel of the Lord (WESLEY, "The angel of the Lord"; R.V. "An angel," omitting "of the Lord"). "The Son of God, as appears from His styling Himself Jehovah. In a flame of fire—signifying the majesty of God then present"—WESLEY. (Ex. 3. 2.)

32. The God of thy fathers. (Matt. 22. 32; Heb. 11. 16.)

33. Then said the Lord, Loose thy shoes (WESLEY and R.V.). "An ancient token of reverence"—WESLEY.

For the place is holy ground. "The holiness of places depends on the peculiar presence of God there"—WESLEY. (Ex. 3. 5; Josh. 5. 15.)

34. Am come down to deliver them. Though God is present in all places, yet He speaks here of coming down to deliver them, because that deliverance was typical of what Christ did, when "for us men and for our salvation He came down from heaven"—M. H. (Ex. 3. 7.)

35. This Moses whom they refused—"namely, forty years before. Probably not they but their fathers did it, and God imputes it to them. So God frequently imputes the sins of the fathers to those of their children who are of the same spirit. Him did God send to be a deliverer—which is much more than a judge. By the hand of—that is, by means of—the Angel. This Angel, who spake to Moses on Mount Sinai, expressly called Himself Jehovah; a name which cannot, without the highest presumption, be assumed by any created angel, since 'He whose name alone is Jehovah is the Most High over all the earth' (Ps. 83. 18). It was therefore the Son of God who delivered the law to Moses under the character of Jehovah, and who is here spoken of as the Angel of the Covenant, in respect of His mediatorial office"—WESLEY.

"This Moses." "The repetition of the word is evidently designed to draw the attention of the hearers to the remarkable parallel between Moses and Jesus in their rejection by those whom they came to deliver"—W. W. In the original, five successive clauses (in vers. 35–38) begin with the word "this." (Ex. 14. 19; Num. 20. 16; Ex. 12. 41; 33. 1, 7–11, 14; Ps. 105. 27; Ex. 14. 21, 27–29; 16. 1, 35.)

37. The Lord will raise you up a prophet—"S. Stephen here shows that there is no opposition between Moses and Christ"—WESLEY.

S. Stephen does Moses the greatest honour, by showing how one of the most important of his prophecies was fulfilled. (Deut. 18. 15, 18; ch. 3. 22; Matt. 17. 5.)

38. In the Church in the wilderness. "The camp of Israel is so called with good reason; for it was a sacred society, incorporated by a Divine charter, under a Divine government, and blessed with a Divine revelation. It was the honour of Moses that he was in that Church, and many a time it would have been destroyed if Moses had not been in it to intercede for it. But Christ is the President and Guide of a more excellent Church than that in the wilderness; and is more in it than Moses could be in that, as being the life and soul of it"—B. This is he—"Moses. With the angel, and with our fathers—as a mediator between them. Who received the living oracles. Every period beginning with 'And the Lord said unto Moses' is properly an oracle. But the oracles here intended are chiefly the ten commandments. These are termed 'living,' because all 'the word of God,' applied by His Spirit, 'is living and powerful' (Heb. 4. 12); enlightening the eyes, rejoicing the heart, converting the soul, raising the dead"—WESLEY. (Ex. 19. 3, 17; Isa. 63. 9; Gal. 3. 19; Heb. 2. 2; Ex. 21. 1; Deut. 5. 27, 31; 33. 4; John 1. 17; Rom. 3. 2.)

39. In their hearts turned back into Egypt. "In their hearts they turned to the idolatry of Egypt, i.e. fell into heresy. (Ex. 32. 1, 4; Ezek. 20. 7.) Then they longed after the delicacies and plenty of Egypt, i.e. were led astray by worldliness and sensuality. (Num. 11. 5.) At length they openly proposed to return to the land of Egypt, i.e. lapsed into apostasy and infidelity"—W. W. (Num. 14. 4.)

40. Make us gods to go before us. "Back into Egypt"—WESLEY. (Ex. 32. 1.)

41. And they made a calf—"in imitation of Apis, the Egyptian god"—WESLEY.

"This was in imitation of the sacred ox, called Apis, under which form the Egyptians worshipped Osiris, the inventor of agriculture. Aaron did not proclaim a feast to Apis, but to Jehovah. When Jeroboam introduced the worship of the golden calves at Dan and Bethel, he used the same expressions concerning them as the people in the wilderness. (1 Kings 12. 28.) Though Aaron and Jeroboam intended to worship Jehovah, their conduct made way for the worst species of idolatry"—W. W.

Rejoiced in the works of their hands—"in the god they had made"—WESLEY. (Deut. 9. 16; Ps. 106. 19.)

42. God turned—"from them in anger—and gave them up—frequently, from the time of the golden calf to the time of Amos and afterwards. The host of heaven. The stars are called an army or host because of their number, order, and powerful influence. In the book of the prophets—of the twelve prophets, which the Jews always wrote together in one book. Have ye offered. The passage of Amos referred to (ch. 5. 25, etc.) consists of two parts: of which the former confirms ver. 41, of the sin of the people; the latter, the beginning of ver. 42, concerning their punishment. 'Have ye offered' to Me? They had offered many sacrifices; but God did not accept them as offered to Him, because they sacrificed to idols also, and did not sacrifice to Him with an upright heart"—WESLEY. (Ps. 81. 12; Ezek. 20. 25, 39; Rom. 1. 24; 2 Thess. 2. 11; Deut. 4. 9; 17. 3; 2 Kings 17. 16; 21. 3; Jer. 19. 13; Amos 5. 25, 26.)

43. Ye took up—"probably not long after the golden calf, but secretly, else Moses would have mentioned it—the shrine—a small, portable chapel, in which was the image of their god. Moloch was the planet Mars, which they worshipped under a human shape. Remphan—that is, Saturn, they represented by a star. And I will carry you beyond Babylon—that is, beyond Damascus (which is the word in Amos) and Babylon. This was fulfilled by the king of Assyria"—WESLEY. (2 Kings 17. 6.)

S. Stephen quotes literally from the LXX. translation, which, as a Hellenist Jew, he constantly studied. The original Hebrew is somewhat obscure. The A.V. has "Ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun your images"; the R.V. "Ye have borne Siccuth your king and Chiun your images." Remphan, or rather Rephan, which the LXX. substitutes for Chiun, is said to be the Egyptian name for Saturn, and may have been inserted by them as an equivalent of that other name which is found nowhere else but in Amos. The whole idea of the passage is that the stars were worshipped by the Israelites in the wilderness.

44. Our fathers had the tabernacle of the testimony. "'The testimony' was, properly, the two tables of stone on which the ten commandments were written. Hence the ark which contained them is frequently called 'the ark of the testimony'; and the whole tabernacle in this place—the tabernacle of the testimony, according to the model which he had seen—when he was caught up in the visions of God on the mount"—WESLEY.

As S. Stephen had been accused of blaspheming the Temple he takes occasion to speak of their sacred places with due reverence, as raised by special direction from God; and yet corrects that extravagant regard for them, and confidence in them, which the Jews entertained. (Ex. 25. 40; 26. 30; Heb. 8. 5.)

45. Which also our fathers, in their turn, brought in with Joshua when they entered on the possession of the nations, etc. (R.V.) "Which our fathers having received—from their ancestors—brought into the possession of the Gentiles—into the land which the Gentiles possessed before. So that God's favour is not a necessary consequence of inhabiting this land. All along S. Stephen intimates two things—(1) that God always loved good men in every land; (2) that He never loved bad men even in this"—WESLEY.

Unto the days of David—that is, the tabernacle continued for many ages, even unto David's time, to be the resort of pious worshippers in Israel. (Josh. 3. 14; Neh. 9. 24; Ps. 44. 2; 78. 55; ch. 13. 19.)

46. Who petitioned to find a habitation for the God of Jacob. "But he did not obtain his petition. For God remained without any temple till Solomon built Him a house. Observe how wisely the word is chosen with respect to what follows"—WESLEY. (1 Sam. 16. 1; 2 Sam. 7. 1; Ps. 89. 19; ch. 13. 22; 1 Kings 8. 17; 1 Chron. 22. 7; Ps. 132. 4, 5; 1 Kings 6. 1; 8. 20; 1 Chron. 17. 12; 2 Chron. 3. 1.)

48. Yet the Most High inhabiteth not temples made with hands (R.V. "houses")—"as Solomon declared at the very dedication of the Temple. (1 Kings 8. 27.) The Most High—whom, as such, no building can contain"—WESLEY. (2 Chron. 2. 6; 6. 18; ch. 17. 24.)

49, 50. What is the place of My rest? "Have I need to rest?"—WESLEY.

What need have I of a house, either to rest in, or to show My glory? Hath not My hand made all these things? "Whatever splendour any temples may have, did not I form the materials with which they were built, and endow the workmen that fashioned them with all their art and genius? Do not imagine, then, that such structures confer any obligation upon Me, or can charm Me to continue My abode there"—B. (Isa. 56. 1, 2; Matt. 5. 34, 35; 23. 22.)

51. Ye stiff-necked. "S. Stephen, finding by a confused murmur in the place that they understood whither his discourse tended, and perceiving that they would soon interrupt him, applied himself more closely to his persecutors in these remarkable words, which he addressed to them under the influence of the Holy Spirit"—B. "Ye stiff-necked"—"not bowing the neck to God's yoke—and uncircumcised in heart—so they showed themselves (ver. 54)—and ears—as they showed (ver. 57). So far were they from receiving the word of God into their hearts that they would not hear it even with their ears. Ye, and your fathers, always—as often as ever ye are called—resist the Holy Ghost—testifying, by the prophets, of Jesus and the whole truth. This is the sum of what he had shown at large"—WESLEY.

Circumcision was the sign of submission to the Jewish religion in its fullest requirements, so the word "uncircumcised" became a synonym for obstinate resistance to what God had revealed, and we read in the Old Testament of the uncircumcised heart. But there was a daring fidelity in the application of such a term to these bigoted Jews. (Ex. 32. 9; 33. 3; Isa. 48. 4; Lev. 26. 41; Deut. 10. 16; Jer. 4. 4; 6. 10; 9. 26; Ezek. 44. 9.)

52. Which of the prophets. Christ brought the same charge against Jerusalem. The Just One—so called in several passages by way of eminence, as being alone perfectly righteous. (2 Chron. 26. 16; Matt. 21. 35; 23. 34, 37; 1 Thess. 2. 15; ch. 3. 14.)

53. Who have received the Law by the administration of angels. "God, when He gave the Law on Mount Sinai, was attended 'with thousands of His angels'"—WESLEY. (Gal. 3. 19; Ps. 68. 17; Ex. 20. 1; Heb. 2. 2.)

The speech of S. Stephen consists chiefly of a recital of the history of Israel, in which the past serves as a mirror to the present, illustrating the freedom with which God had revealed Himself in various countries and under different circumstances, and also the habitual unsusceptibility and opposition of Israel, both in earlier and in present times. This last thought is, at the close of ver. 51, expressed in open and emphatic reproach.

Vers. 54–60. EFFECT OF THE SPEECH—THE FIRST MARTYRDOM.—54. They were cut to the heart. The same effect which followed the speech of the apostles before the same persons. (Ch. 5. 33.)

55. But he, looking steadfastly up to heaven, saw the glory of God. "Doubtless he saw such a glorious representation, God miraculously operating on his imagination, as on Ezekiel's, when he 'sat in his house at Babylon,' and saw Jerusalem, and seemed to himself 'transported thither' (Ezek. 8. 1–4). And probably other martyrs, when called to suffer the last extremity, have had extraordinary assistance of some similar kind"—WESLEY.

In the time of greatest danger, no power can prevent us looking steadfastly into heaven, or can intercept the help we may thus secure from heaven. (Ch. 6. 5.)

56. I see the Son of Man standing—"as it were, just ready to receive him! Otherwise He is said to sit at the right hand of God"—WESLEY.

The Son of Man. "This name, which the Redeemer so often used Himself, is never used by the Evangelists, or in any of the Epistles, or elsewhere in the Acts. It is appropriately used by S. Stephen to denote that Jesus appeared in His human form, and as the Representative of mankind, encouraging the martyr to follow Him"—W. W. (Ezek. 1. 1; Matt. 3. 16; ch. 10. 11; Dan. 7. 13.)

57. They rushed upon him—"before any sentence passed"—WESLEY.

58. And cast him out of the city. This was in strict accordance with the Mosaic Law. And the witnesses—whose hands were first upon him to put him to death. A young man, whose name was Saul. "O Saul, couldest thou have believed, if one had told thee, that thou thyself shouldest be stoned in the same cause; and shouldest triumph in committing thy soul, likewise, to that Jesus whom thou art now blaspheming! His dying prayer reached thee, as well as many others. And the martyr S. Stephen, and Saul the persecutor (afterwards his brother both in faith and martyrdom), are now joined in everlasting friendship, and dwell together in the happy company of those who 'have made their robes white in the blood of the Lamb'"—WESLEY.

"The proceedings in connection with the death of S. Stephen were evidently judicial from first to last. How are we to reconcile this with the declaration of the Jews, that under the Roman Government they no longer retained the power of inflicting capital punishment? (John 18. 31.) Both are quite consistent, if we conceive that the Sanhedrim ventured occasionally to exercise their original powers, when the absence, or the negligence, or the connivance of the Roman governor would allow them to do so with safety"—L. (1 Kings 21. 13; Luke 4. 29; Heb. 13. 12; Lev. 24. 16; Deut. 13. 9, 10; 17. 7; ch. 8. 1; 22. 20.)

59. And they stoned Stephen, invoking and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. "This is the literal translation of the words, the name of God not being in the original. Nevertheless, such a solemn prayer to Christ, in which a departing soul is thus committed into His hands, is such an act of worship as no good man could have paid to a mere creature: S. Stephen here worshipping Christ in the very same manner in which Christ worshipped the Father on the cross"—WESLEY. (R.V. "Calling upon the Lord, and saying.") (Ch. 9. 14; Ps. 31. 5; Luke 23. 46.)

60. Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. In this dying prayer, as well as in that which preceded it, there is a distinct imitation of the spirit and temper of the Lord Jesus. "Grant, Lord, that in all our sufferings here upon earth for the testimony of Thy truth, we may steadfastly look up to heaven, and by faith behold the glory that shall be revealed; and, being filled with the Holy Ghost, may learn to love and bless our persecutors by the example of Thy first martyr, S. Stephen, who prayed for his murderers to Thee, O blessed Jesus, who standest at the right hand of God to succour all those that suffer for Thee, our only Mediator and Advocate"—Collect, S. Stephen's Day. (Ch. 9. 40; 20. 36; 21. 5; Matt. 5. 44; Luke 6. 28; 23. 34.)

CHAPTER VIII.

Vers. 1-4. THE CHURCH SCATTERED BY PERSECUTION.—1. At that time there was a great persecution against the Church—"their adversaries, having tasted blood, were the more eager. And they were all dispersed—not all the Church; if so, who would have remained for the apostles to teach, or Saul to persecute? But all the teachers except the apostles, who, though in most danger, stayed with the flock"—WESLEY.

"There arose on that day a great persecution" (R.V.). (Ch. 7. 58; 22. 20; 11. 19.)

2. Devout men—"who feared God more than persecution. And yet were they not of little faith? else they would not have made so great lamentation"—WESLEY.

This demonstration of feeling would doubtless increase the exasperation of the Sanhedrim. (Gen. 23. 2; 50. 10; 2 Sam. 3. 21.)

3. Saul made havoc of the Church—"like some furious beast of prey. So the Greek word properly signifies"—WESLEY.

"Laid waste the Church" (R.V.) Entering into every house—"where Christians assembled for worship; or every house that was supposed to have Christians in it. Men and women—regarding neither age nor sex"—WESLEY. (Ch. 7. 58; 9. 1, 13, 21; 22. 4; 26. 10, 11; 1 Cor. 15. 9; Gal. 1. 13; Phil. 3. 6; 1 Tim. 1. 13.)

4. Therefore they that were dispersed went everywhere. "These very words are reassumed after, as it were, a long parenthesis (ch. 11. 19), and the thread of the story continued"—WESLEY.

The dispersed preached the word. Thus, by the storm, the seeds hitherto collected in one place are scattered hither and thither, and carried to a distance, where they germinate and bear fruit. Thus the Redeemer knows how to convert into good that which men intended for evil; not only to hinder their wicked designs, but by means of them to secure an unexpected furtherance of His kingdom"—L. (Matt. 10. 23; ch. 11. 19.) It will be noted that the great majority of the dispersed

Christians held no office in the Church; yet they preached wherever they came, and this spread of the gospel without the holy city, this planting of the Church in the regions beyond, was effected not by the apostles but by an entirely voluntary and unofficial agency.

Vers. 5–13. PHILIP IN SAMARIA—BAPTISM OF SIMON MAGUS.—5. Then Philip. "S. Stephen being taken away, Philip, his next colleague, (not the apostle) rises in his place"—WESLEY.

It is evident that the deacon and not the apostle is intended. The apostles remained in Jerusalem; and this Philip had not the power of communicating the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit, as the apostles did. (Ch. 6. 5.)

6. And the people with one accord. It is certain that the Samaritans were better prepared to receive the gospel than the Gentile nations, as they worshipped the true God, and acknowledged the authority of the five books of Moses. And the command of Christ (ch. 1. 8) directed the apostles to preach to them second only to the Jews. Hearing and seeing (R.V. "When they heard and saw the signs which he did").

7. Unclean spirits crying with a loud voice — which showed that they came out with great reluctance, overcome by a superior power. (Mark 16. 17.)

8. Great joy in that city—caused partly by the healing of so many sick, but chiefly by the fact that these "signs" authenticated Philip's message concerning the Saviour. Here is the harvest of the seed sown by Jesus some years before. (John 4.)

9. A certain man, using magic. "So there was such a thing as witchcraft once; in Asia, at least, if not in Europe and America"—WESLEY.

From the Greek word magos, sorcerer, or magician, this man is usually known as Simon Magus. The history given of him on the authority of Justin Martyr, who lived about a hundred years later, represents him as being, after the events recorded in this chapter, persistently hostile to S. Peter, and as following the apostle to Rome to oppose his teaching. But much that is related is of very doubtful authority. Bewitched the people (R.V. "amazed"). (Ch. 13. 6; 5. 36.)

10. This man is the great power of God (R.V. "This man is that power of God which is called Great"). "This doubtless imports that they imagined they recognised in the person of Simon a kind of theophany, and believed that the mighty power of God had appeared in him. S. Luke makes a distinction between the magician's own statement and the delusion of the people. He perhaps found it advisable, for his own interest, to make statements concerning himself wrapped in a certain mysterious reserve"—L. And it is to be noted that the general expectation that some great person was to arise among the Jews contributed to the temporary success of pretenders like Simon, Elymas, and many others.

12. But when they believed—"what Philip preached, they then saw and felt the real power of God and submitted thereto"—WESLEY. (Ch. 1. 3.)

13. And Simon believed — "that is, was convinced of the truth"—WESLEY.

Miracles and signs (R.V. "And beholding signs and great miracles wrought, he was amazed"). "Real miracles produced on Simon the same effect which his false miracles produced on others. (Vers. 9, 11.) We see in this, as in a thousand nearer instances, that there may be speculative faith in the gospel where there is no true piety"—B.

Vers. 14–25. PETER AND JOHN IN SAMARIA — SIMON MAGUS UNMASKED. 14. And the apostles hearing that Samaria—the inhabitants of that country—had received the word of God — by faith. Sent Peter and John. "He that sends must be superior, or at least equal, to him that is sent. It follows, that the college of the apostles was equal, if not superior, to S. Peter"—WESLEY.

The Twelve, though they remained in Jerusalem, considered themselves responsible for the administration of the entire Church.

15. The Holy Ghost. "In His miraculous gifts, or His sanctifying power? Probably in both"—WESLEY.

"Not that all, who had been baptized in Samaria, might receive the miraculous gifts; for it was never so in any Church, no, not in that of Jerusalem; but that some might receive these gifts for the confirmation of the gospel, and especially such as were designed for office in the Church, or to be eminently active members of it"—B. (Ch. 2. 38.)

16. For as yet He was fallen upon none of them. "None of them were endued with those extraordinary gifts, although they had been wonderfully displayed in the miracles which Philip performed"—B. Baptized into the name (R.V.). The preposition "into," which was used also at the institution of the Sacrament, implies the tie by which new converts are in baptism bound to Christ, as His followers, servants, worshippers. (Ch. 19. 2; Matt. 28. 19; ch. 2. 38; 10. 48; 19. 5.)

17. Then laid they their hands on them. "So Ananias laid his hands on Saul (ch. 9. 17), and he received the Holy Ghost. But on Cornelius and his companions (ch. 10. 44) the same gift was bestowed while S. Peter spake unto them. They received the Holy Ghost —that is, these new converts spake with tongues, and performed other extraordinary works. Thus God put honour upon the apostolic office, and bore witness to His truth"—B. (Ch. 6. 6; 19. 6; Heb. 6. 2.)

18, 19. Simon offered them money. "And hence the procuring any ministerial function or ecclesiastical benefice by money is termed Simony"—WESLEY.

The character of the man is shown by what he asks for. He does not desire the Holy Ghost for himself, as a spiritual gift; he asks that he may be enabled to bestow, what he looks upon as a higher power than his own magic, upon others. And as he offered to buy this power we may be sure he meant to sell it.

20. Thy money perish with thee. "S. Peter was unable to conceal his righteous indignation. His words are not to be considered as an imprecation, but as a strong intimation to Simon of his danger"—B. (Matt. 10. 8; 2 Kings 5. 16; ch. 2. 38; 10. 45; 11. 17.)

21. Thou hast neither part—"by purchase—nor lot—given gratis—in this matter—this gift of God. For thy heart is not right before God. Probably S. Peter discerned this long before he declared it; although it does not appear that God gave to any of the apostles an universal power of discerning the hearts of all they conversed with, any more than an universal power of healing all the sick they came near. This we are sure S. Paul had not; though he was not inferior to the chief of the apostles. Otherwise, he would not have suffered the illness of Epaphroditus to have brought him so near to death (Phil. 2. 25–27); nor have left so useful a fellow-labourer as Trophimus sick at Miletus (2 Tim. 4. 20)"—WESLEY.

"Though we cannot infer from everything that a man saith or does amiss, that he is a hypocrite in the profession he makes of religion, yet conduct like this of Simon can by no means consist with a state of grace. His offering money for a spiritual gift was an incontestable evidence—(1) that he was yet under the power of a worldly and carnal spirit; and (2) that he was yet a mere natural man, who received not the things of the Spirit of God. His heart, as S. Peter tells him, was not right; and we are as our hearts are—if they be not right, we are wrong"—B.

22, 23. Repent, if perhaps the thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee. "Without all doubt, if he had repented, he would have been forgiven. The doubt was, whether he would repent. Thou art in the gall of bitterness—in the highest degree of wickedness, which is bitterness, that is, misery to the soul—and in the bond of iniquity—fast bound therewith"—WESLEY.

"S. Peter makes the attainment of forgiveness doubtful to Simon, because the sincerity of his repentance was doubtful. It is dangerous, and contrary to Scripture, to make the forgiveness of sins uncertain, to represent it as something of which the soul can never be assured in an undoubted manner, as the Romish Church does. But, on the other hand, it is unscriptural, and dangerous to souls, to sever forgiveness from moral susceptibility and preparedness—that is, from true repentance"—L. (Dan. 4. 29; 2 Tim. 2. 25; Heb. 12. 15.)

24. Pray ye to the Lord for me. The word "ye" is emphatic. In his utter spiritual ignorance, he thinks their prayers are more important than his own repentance. That none of the things come upon me. He seeks to be delivered from punishment, he expresses no desire for deliverance from sin. The evident absence of true repentance fully justified the apostle's sad "if perhaps." (Gen. 20. 7, 17; Ex. 8. 8; Num. 21. 7; 1 Kings 13. 6; Job 42. 8; Jas. 5. 16.)

Vers. 26–40. PHILIP THE DEACON BAPTIZES THE ETHIOPIAN.—26. The angel (R.V. "An angel of the Lord"). The way, which is desert. "There were two ways from Jerusalem to Gaza; one desert, the other through a more populous country"—WESLEY.

Gaza was one of the five chief cities of the Philistines. It was on the southern border of Canaan, and about an hour's journey from the Mediterranean.

27. An eunuch. "Chief officers were anciently called eunuchs, though not always literally such; because such used to be chief ministers in the Eastern courts. Candace, queen of the Ethiopians. So all the queens of Ethiopia were called"—WESLEY.

Ethiopia, in its most extended sense, embraced the modern Nubia, Senaar, Kordofan, and Northern Abyssinia, and in its more definite sense the kingdom of Meroë, from the junction of the Blue and White branches of the Nile to the border of Egypt. Shortly before our Saviour's birth a native dynasty of females, holding the official title of Candace, held sway in Ethiopia, and even resisted the advance of the Roman arms. Who had the charge of all her treasure. His character had already won the confidence of his sovereign. Had come to Jerusalem for to worship. He was a proselyte to the Jewish religion, and had taken this long journey in order to sacrifice and to worship in the Temple. (Zeph. 3. 10; John 12. 20.)

28. Sitting in his chariot, he read the prophet Isaiah. "God meeteth those that remember Him in His ways. It is good to read, hear, seek information, even in a journey. Why should we not redeem all our time?"—WESLEY.

29. The Spirit said. This was the first intimation Philip had of the purpose for which he was sent to that desert country.

30. And Philip running to him, said. "He did not begin about the weather, news, or the like. In speaking for God, we may frequently come to the point at once without circumlocution"—WESLEY.

Heard him read. For he read aloud, both that his own mind might be more deeply impressed, and that his servants might receive some benefit by it.

31. How can I, except some man should guide me? "He was thirsting after the truth, seeking it as honestly as anyone can do, but he did not understand the prophecy, because he had no guide. But as soon as Philip showed him the way to Jesus, and brought him by the word and sacrament into fellowship with the Redeemer, he needs no more a guide. Christ Himself is now to him the Way, the Truth, and the Life, and the Holy Spirit will guide him into all truth. (John 16. 13.) That the chamberlain feels the want of a guide by no means proves, as Romanists teach, that the Bible without the guidance of the Church is insufficient; otherwise Philip would not have been caught away from his convert until means had been provided for his further instruction. But after his baptism he is left alone, and he goes on his way rejoicing, for he has found the Saviour, and with Him light for the Scriptures"—L. He desired Philip to come up, and sit with him. "Such was his modesty and thirst after instruction"—WESLEY.

32. The portion of Scripture. "By reading that very chapter, the fifty-third of Isaiah, many Jews, yea and atheists, have been converted. Some of them history records. God knoweth them all"—WESLEY. (Isa. 53. 7, 8.)

33. In His humiliation His judgment was taken away—"that is, when He was a Man He had no justice shown Him. To take away a person's judgment is a proverbial phrase for oppressing him. And who shall declare, or 'count,' His generation?—that is, who can number His seed (Isa. 53. 10), which He has purchased by laying down His life?"—WESLEY.

"The verses quoted are given verbatim from the LXX., which it is evident that the eunuch was reading. That version was made in Egypt for the use of the Jews residing there, and it was probably the form in which Old Testament Scripture was most familiar to the eunuch, and also to Philip. The translation varies in some points from the original, but it is sufficiently close to express the mind of the Spirit, and to form the subject of Philip's discourse. The expression, Who shall declare His generation? has been interpreted, 'Who shall describe His contemporaries?' (and their wickedness), for they have taken away His life"—L. Mr. Wesley's interpretation is that of Calvin and Beza, others have interpreted the word "generation" either of His eternal generation or His incarnation. Bishop Lowth translates, "His manner of life who shall declare?" referring to the custom of calling witnesses to character.

34. Of whom speaketh the prophet this? Some of the Jews interpreted this passage as relating to the Messiah, some to the whole congregation of Israel. In the beginning of Isa. 61 the prophet was supposed to refer to himself, which may have suggested a similar reference here.

35. Preached unto him Jesus—"preached to him glad tidings of Jesus." "After he had laid before him the predictions recorded in Scripture, and especially in this chapter, concerning the character, the sufferings, the death, the resurrection, and the mediatorial triumphs of the Messiah—he doubtless witnessed to him of the glorious accomplishment of them in the person of the Lord Jesus. And although no miracle was wrought to attest Philip's ministry, yet such an influence accompanied it that the eunuch was convinced, and was prepared heartily to accept Jesus of Nazareth as Lord and Christ"—B. (Luke 24. 27; ch. 18. 28.)

36. And as they went on the way, they came to a certain water. "Thus even the circumstances of the journey were under the direction of God. The kingdom of God suits itself to external circumstances, without any violence; as air yields to all bodies, and yet pervades all. What hindereth me to be baptized?—probably he had been circumcised; otherwise Cornelius would not have been the first-fruits of the Gentiles"—WESLEY.

37. This verse is omitted in the oldest and best manuscripts, and is therefore not found in the R.V. Probably it was first inserted in the margin of a manuscript by some scribe who imagined the narrative of baptism incomplete without a confession of faith.

38. And they both went down—"out of the chariot. It does not follow that he was baptized by immersion. The text neither affirms nor intimates anything concerning it"—WESLEY.

"Though Philip had very lately been deceived in Simon Magus, yet he did not scruple to baptize the eunuch immediately on his profession of faith. If some hypocrites crowd into the Church, they shall answer for their hypocrisy and not we"—B.

39. The Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip—"carried him away with a miraculous swiftness, without any action or labour of his own. This had befallen several of the prophets"—WESLEY.

And he went on his way rejoicing (R.V. "for he went," etc.). The reason that the eunuch saw him no more was that he pursued his journey, and did not seek to find the messenger of Divine mercy who had mysteriously disappeared. He was happy in the new light, and the new life, of the gospel of Jesus Christ; and he had no doubt that Philip was safe. (1 Kings 18. 12; 2 Kings 2. 16; Ezek. 3. 12, 14.) Observe that Philip was miraculously sent to his work, and was miraculously removed when his work was done; but no miracle helped him in the work itself; he met a stranger on the road, he accosted him courteously, and talked to him of Jesus. We sometimes preach most successfully, because most closely and most tenderly, to an audience of one. But Philip was found at Azotus—"probably none saw him from his leaving the eunuch till he was there"—WESLEY.

Till he came to Cæsarea. This was Cæsarea Sebaste, and must be distinguished from Cæsarea Philippi, which is mentioned in Matt. 16. 13; this was the capital of the Roman province of Judea; Cornelius the centurion was stationed there; S. Paul was sent there under escort, and appeared before Felix and Drusilla, and before Festus, Agrippa, and Bernice. Philip settled there, perhaps for life; at least, we shall find him and his family there much later in this history. (Ch. 21. 8, 9.)

CHAPTER IX.

Vers. 1-9. SAUL'S MISSION TO DAMASCUS—THE HEAVENLY VISION.—1, 2. Saul desired letters to Damascus to the synagogues—there were thousands of Jews residing in Damascus, and of course many synagogues. This way (R.V. "The way"). Bound—"by the connivance, if not authority, of the governor, under Aretas the king"—WESLEY.

Damascus was at this time in the possession of Aretas, king of Arabia Petræa. (Ch. 8. 3; Gal. 1. 3; 1 Tim. 1. 13.)

3. And suddenly. "When God suddenly and vehemently attacks a sinner, it is the highest act of mercy. So Saul, when his rage was come to the height, is taught not to 'breathe slaughter.' And what was wanting in time to confirm him in his discipleship is compensated by the inexpressible terror he sustained. By this also the suddenly-constituted apostle was guarded against the grand snare into which novices are apt to fall"—WESLEY.

A light from heaven. "It is plain, from ch. 22. 14 and other texts, that he saw amid this glory a human form, which yet he might not at first imagine to be that of Jesus"—B. (Ch. 22. 6; 26. 12; 1 Cor. 15. 8.)

4. He heard a voice—"severe yet full of grace"—WESLEY. Why persecutest thou Me? "The persecutions of Christ's disciples are represented as the persecutions of Christ Himself, because of their union with Him by the Holy Spirit, which makes them members of His body; and especially because of the sympathy which He has with them in all their sufferings"—B. (Matt. 25. 40, etc.)

5. To kick against the goads "is a Syriac proverb, expressing an attempt that brings nothing but pain"—WESLEY.

6. And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him. These words are not found in the oldest MSS., and are therefore omitted in R.V. They have evidently been inserted in this place for the sake of making a complete narrative, by the combination of the different particulars given in ch. 26. 14 and 22. 10. It shall be told thee. "So God Himself sends Saul to be taught by a man, as the angel does Cornelius. (Ch. 10. 5.) Admirable condescension, that the Lord deals with us by men like ourselves"—WESLEY.

"It was encouragement enough for Saul to have further instruction promised him. But (1) he must not have it yet—let him consider a while what he has done in persecuting Christ and His people, and be deeply humbled for that, and then he shall be told what he has further to do; (2) he must not have it in this way, by a voice from heaven—he shall be told what he shall do by a man like himself, whose terror shall not make him afraid"—B.

7. The men stood—"having risen before Saul; for they also fell to the ground (ch. 26. 14). It is probable they all journeyed on foot. Hearing the noise—but not an articulate voice. And seeing the light, but not Jesus Himself (ch. 26. 13)"—WESLEY. (Dan. 10. 7; ch. 22. 9.)

8. They led him by the hand—"for as they had not looked earnestly and steadfastly, as Saul had done, on the glorious light which surrounded the person of Christ, but had lain with their faces on the ground, their eyesight remained"—B.

9. And he was three days. "An important season. So long he seems to have been in the pangs of the new birth. Without sight—by scales growing over his eyes, to intimate to him the blindness of the state he had been in, to impress him with a deeper sense of the almighty power of Christ, and to turn his thoughts inward, while he was less capable of conversing with outward objects. This was likewise a manifest token to others of what had happened to him in his journey, and ought to have humbled and convinced those bigoted Jews to whom he had been sent from the Sanhedrim"—WESLEY.

Did neither eat nor drink. "In remorse and terror he humbled himself before the Lord, in the mode to which, as a strict Pharisee, he had been accustomed; yet not in the spirit of a Pharisee, but of the publican in the parable"—W. W. "With fasting he joined fervent and repeated prayer, perhaps to the Lord Jesus; in which he made confession of his sin, and earnest supplication for pardon; all of which, being certain signs of his repentance, are in ver. 11 mentioned as such"—B. "The essential point of this occurrence before Damascus was, that Jesus appeared personally to Saul; first He made Himself seen in the light from heaven, and immediately addressed him, made Himself known, and directed him to go into the city, where the will of God would be further revealed to him. The first and strongest impression was, Jesus lives. Saul had persecuted the disciples on the supposition that Jesus of Nazareth had remained in the state of the dead. Now Jesus personally appears to him; he receives direct and personal certainty that Jesus, the Crucified, is alive. And Saul received also a profound impression of the glory of Christ in His exaltation. The light which shone round about him was a light from heaven, the glory which encircles God. And the voice with which Jesus addresses him has in it something overwhelming; he immediately feels the pre-eminence of the Person who appears, and is compelled to bow and submit. In short, Jesus not only lives, but lives exalted in heaven, lives and rules in Divine glory. And this was not a dream, not an exclusively subjective transaction, not a spiritual manifestation; but, as is manifest from vers. 17, 27, and from 1 Cor. 15. 8, an actual appearance in this world of sense"—L. "This was ample evidence to produce intellectual conviction; and evidently it was accompanied by a secret spiritual power. The apostle says to the Galatians, 'It pleased God to reveal His Son in me.' So did the Saviour exalted give repentance"—G.

Vers. 10–19. THE HUMAN AGENCY—SAUL'S CONVERSION.—10. A certain disciple, named Ananias—not distinguished, even among Christians; not mentioned in the subsequent history. His special qualification for the service to which he was sent was his spotless character. (Ch. 22. 12.)

11. The street which is called Straight. This long straight street still runs through Damascus. Behold, he is praying. "He was shown thus to Ananias"—WESLEY. (Ch. 21. 39; 22. 3.)

12. And hath seen in a vision. Compare, with the history in the next chapter of the conversion of Cornelius, the simultaneous preparation of Ananias and Saul, and of Peter and Cornelius; the hesitation in each case to attempt the work; the unhesitating obedience when the Divine will was clearly known. A man called Ananias—"his name also was revealed to Saul"—WESLEY.

The words "in a vision" omitted in R.V.

13. But he answered. "How natural is it to reason against God!"—WESLEY.

14. He hath authority—probably the Christians in Jerusalem had communicated this information. All that call on Thy name—"that is, all Christians"—WESLEY.

"Thy name"—for the Lord who appeared was the Lord Jesus. (Ver. 21; ch. 7. 59; 22. 16; 1 Cor. 1. 2; 2 Tim. 2. 22.) "Now why doth Ananias thus object? Does he say, Why should I do him a kindness, who has done us so much unkindness? No; Christ had taught him to render good for evil. But if he be such a persecutor of Christians—(1) Will it be safe for Ananias to go to him? (2) Will it be to any purpose to go to him? Can such a hard heart be ever softened?"—B.

15. Go thy way. "The Lord simply insists upon the command, but sets at ease His anxious servant by telling him that Saul will do no more mischief"—L. He is a chosen vessel, to bear My name—"that is, to testify of Me. It is undeniable that some men are unconditionally chosen or elected to do some works for God"—WESLEY.

Before the Gentiles. This was a revelation to Ananias, for Jewish Christians did not yet contemplate the inclusion of the whole world in the Church of Christ. And kings—before Agrippa, and before Cæsar himself. (Ch. 13. 2; 22. 21; 26. 17; Rom. 1. 1; 1 Cor. 15. 10; Gal. 1. 15; Eph. 3. 7, 8; 1 Tim. 2. 7; 2 Tim. 1. 11; Rom. 1. 5; 11. 13; Gal. 2. 7, 8; ch. 25. 22, 23; 26. 1.)

16. For I. "Do thou as thou art commanded; I will take care of the rest. Will show him—in fact, through the whole course of his ministry—how great things he must suffer—so far will he be now from persecuting others"—WESLEY. (Ch. 20. 23; 21. 11; 2 Cor. 11. 23.)

17. Brother Saul. The readiness of Ananias to hail the persecutor on his repentance as a brother intimated to Saul God's readiness to receive him as a son. The Lord, even Jesus—combining the name "Lord," used by Saul when the vision appeared, with the name "Jesus," which Christ uttered in reply to Saul's inquiry. Thus was brought to Saul from without a confirmation of the reality of what he had seen three days before. Hath sent me. "Ananias does not tell Saul all which Christ had said concerning him. It was not expedient that he should know yet to how great a dignity he was called"—WESLEY.

S. Luke does not profess to give here the entire conversation. (See also ch. 22. 14–16; 8. 7; 2. 4; 4. 31; 8. 17; 13. 52.)

18. There fell from his eyes as it had been scales—something like scales. The word rendered "scales" is used as a technical term for a disease of the eye, by Hippocrates, the great physician of antiquity, with whose writings S. Luke was probably acquainted. Of course, in this case, both the malady and the cure were supernatural. He was baptized—and thereby submitted himself to the government of Christ, and cast himself upon His grace.

19. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples at Damascus. Not for the purpose of learning Christian truth from them (see Gal. 1. 12), but of satisfying them that he was well acquainted with it, and had a commission to preach it with authority.

Vers. 20–30. SAUL PREACHES CHRIST, AND IS COMPELLED TO FLEE.—20. Preached Christ (R.V. "Proclaimed Jesus in the synagogues"). (Ch. 8. 37.)

21. All that heard were amazed. "No doubt this was regarded as a great confirmation of the truth of Christianity, as indeed it has been ever since. This miracle on the mind of such a man outshone the miracles upon men's bodies"—B. (Ch. 8. 3; ver. 1; Gal. 1. 13, 23.)

22. Saul increased in strength. The best answer to any who doubt the sincerity of our conversion is growth in the new life. Confounded the Jews, proving that Jesus is the Messiah. Saul "proved" from prophecy and its fulfilment, from the agreement of the messianic prophecies with the historical facts in the life of Jesus, that Jesus is the Messiah. On the other hand, that Jesus is the Son of God, Saul proclaimed (ver. 20)—that is, he did not seek to prove it by inferences from the Old Testament, but declared it by direct and simple testimony from his own experience. (Ch. 18. 28.)

23. And after many days were fulfilled—in which many events must have taken place. We learn from Gal. 1. 16–18 that during this time he "went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus," and that he did not go up to Jerusalem until three years after his conversion. (Ch. 23. 12; 25. 3; 2 Cor. 11. 26.)

24. They guarded the gates day and night—"that is, the governor did, at their request"—WESLEY. (2 Cor. 11. 32.)

25. Let him down by the wall in a basket. Professor Hackett observed at Damascus "windows in the external face of the wall, opening into houses on the inside of the city." So Rahab let down the spies, and so David escaped from Saul. (Josh. 2. 15; 1 Sam. 19. 12.)

26. And coming to Jerusalem—"three years after (Gal. 1. 18). These three years S. Paul passes over (ch. 22. 7) likewise"—WESLEY.

Believed not that he was a disciple. "It may seem strange that so remarkable an event as Saul's conversion should be unknown to the Christians at Jerusalem; but it is to be considered that there was not then the facility of correspondence between distant places which we have now, and that the war then subsisting between Herod Antipas and Aretas would probably interrupt that between Damascus and Jerusalem. S. Paul might now well think himself in evil case, when the Jews had abandoned and persecuted him, and the Christians would not receive him"—B. (Ch. 22. 17; Gal. 1. 17, 18.)

27. But Barnabas took him. They may have been acquainted before. Cyprus is within a few hours' sail of Cilicia. To the apostles—"S. Peter and S. James. (Gal. 1. 18, 19.) And declared. He who has been an enemy to the truth ought not to be trusted till he gives proof that he is changed"—WESLEY. (Ch. 4. 36; 13. 2; vers. 20, 22.)

29. Disputed against the Grecians—or "Grecian Jews" (R.V.), probably in the same synagogue, "of them of Cilicia," in which S. Stephen had employed the same arguments. But they went about to slay him—more suddenly and terribly enraged against him than even against S. Stephen, because the champion in whom they trusted had turned against them. (Ch. 6. 1; 11. 20; ver. 23; 2 Cor. 11. 26.)

30. Which when the brethren knew—remembering how the putting S. Stephen to death, upon his disputing with the Grecians, had been the beginning of a great persecution, they hastened S. Paul out of the way. Yet it was also by direction from heaven, as he himself tells us (ch. 22. 17, 18), that he left Jerusalem at this time, Christ ordering him to go out of it, because he was sent to the Gentiles.

Vers. 31–43. THE CHURCH LEFT AT PEACE—MIRACLES PERFORMED BY PETER.—31. Then had the Churches rest (R.V. "So the Church . . . had peace"). It is not meant that the quiet was only due to the absence of Saul, who had left Jerusalem three years before, and had only spent fifteen days there on his return. It is rather explained by the consternation of the Jews at the determination of Caligula to place his statue in the temple of Jerusalem. This profanation was averted, partly by the determined opposition of the Jews, and partly by the intercession of Herod Agrippa. Then the Church—"the whole body of Christian believers—had peace—their bitterest persecutor being converted. And being built up—in holy, loving faith, continually increasing. And walking in—that is, speaking and acting only from this principle—the fear of God and the comfort of the Holy Ghost. An excellent mixture of inward and outward peace, tempered with filial fear"—WESLEY. (Ch. 8. 1.)

32. Peter passed throughout all quarters. This was an apostolic journey of visitation and inspection, wherever the disciples that were dispersed had planted churches. The saints. This name was given to members of the Christian Church at a very early period. (See ver. 13 in this chapter.) It shows at least how high a standard they set for themselves. (Ch. 8. 14.)

33. Which had kept his bed eight years—so that his cure was evidently miraculous.

34. Jesus Christ maketh thee whole. As in the case of the lame man at the gate of the Temple, S. Peter is careful to have it understood it is not by his own power or holiness the miracle is done. (Ch. 3. 6, 16; 4. 10.)

35. Lydda—"was a large town, one day's journey from Jerusalem. It stood in the plain or valley of Sharon, which extended from Cæsarea to Joppa, and was noted for its fruitfulness"—WESLEY.

Saron (R.V. "Sharon"). (1 Chron. 5. 16; ch. 11. 21.)

36. There was at Joppa—a seaport on the Mediterranean, about forty miles from Jerusalem. The materials for Solomon's temple were landed there by Tyrian seamen; Jonah took ship there for Tarshish. Modern tourists to Palestine frequently land there. Tabitha, which is by interpretation Dorcas. "She was probably a Hellenist Jew, known among the Hebrews by the Syriac name Tabitha; while the Greeks called her, in their own language, Dorcas. They are both words of the same import, and signify a roe or fawn"—WESLEY. (1 Tim. 2. 10; Titus 3. 8.)

38. The disciples sent to him—"probably none of those at Joppa had the gift of miracles. Nor is it certain that they expected a miracle from him"—WESLEY.

"They do not mention the reason for their desiring his coming. If they had any expectation of his restoring her to life, it was a remarkable instance of faith; for it does not appear that any of the apostles had as yet raised anyone from the dead"—B.

39. All the widows—"who had been relieved by her benevolence"—B. Perhaps the widows supported by the Church. (1 Tim. 5. 3-9.) While she was with them—"that is, before she died"—WESLEY.

40. Peter having put them all out—"that he might have the better opportunity of wrestling with God in prayer. Said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes, and seeing Peter, sat up. Who can imagine the surprise of Dorcas when called back to life? or of her friends when they saw her alive? For the sake of themselves and of the poor, there was cause of rejoicing; and much more for such a confirmation of the gospel. Yet to herself it was matter of resignation, not joy, to be called back to these scenes of vanity. But doubtless her remaining days were still more zealously spent in the service of her Saviour and her God. Thus was a richer treasure laid up for her in heaven, and she afterward returned to a more exceeding weight of glory than that from which so astonishing a providence had recalled her for a season"—WESLEY.

"S. Peter put them forth, as Christ did at the raising of Jairus's daughter, when S. Peter was present"—C. B. "He addressed himself to God in solemn prayer, as Christ did when He raised Lazarus; but Christ's prayer was with the authority of a Son who quickeneth whom He will, S. Peter's was with the submission of a servant under direction, and therefore he kneeled down when he offered it"—B. (Matt. 9. 25; ch. 7. 60; Mark 5. 41, 42; John 11. 43.)

41. Called the saints and widows. The petition sent to S. Peter had been the supplication of the whole Church at Joppa.

42. Many believed in the Lord—not only in Joppa, but in other places, with which Joppa had intercourse by trade. (John 11. 45; 12. 11.)

43. Tarried many days in Joppa. The miracle had prepared the people to receive the doctrine which he remained to instruct them in. Simon a tanner. From the necessary contact with dead animals, the occupation was held as abominable by the Jews. Either S. Peter's choice of a residence was limited by poverty or otherwise, or his Jewish prejudices had already begun to pass away, when he went to lodge at the house of Simon.

CHAPTER X.

Vers. 1-8. CORNELIUS, INSTRUCTED BY AN ANGEL, SENDS FOR S. PETER.—1. And there was a certain man—"the first-fruits of the Gentiles—in Cæsarea—where Philip had been before. (Ch. 8. 40.) So that the doctrine of salvation by faith in Jesus was not unknown there. Cæsarea was the seat of the civil government, as Jerusalem was of the ecclesiastical. It is observable that the gospel made its way first through the metropolitan cities. So it first seized Jerusalem and Cæsarea; afterwards Philippi, Athens, Corinth, Ephesus, Rome itself. A centurion—or captain—of that called the Italian band—that is, troop or company"—WESLEY.

"The gospel had hitherto been preached only to the Jews and Samaritans, and to such Gentiles as had by circumcision become complete proselytes to Judaism. God was now determined to open the way for the publication of it to the uncircumcised Gentiles, and to admit them to His Church by baptism, on the terms of true repentance and faith in Christ. This remarkable change in the economy of Divine grace, this discovery of the gospel to the Gentiles, and the bringing of them, who had been 'strangers and foreigners,' to be 'fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God,' without laying them under any obligation to observe the Ceremonial Law, was such a mystery to the apostles themselves, and such a surprise (Eph. 3. 3, 6), that it concerns us carefully to observe all the circumstances of the beginning of this great work"—B.

2. A devout man — a Gentile who had abandoned idolatry, and who worshipped the true God, but who was not a proselyte to Judaism. Feared God with all his house. The soldier whom he sent to S. Peter is called "devout" in ver. 7. Who gave much alms to the people—"that is, to the Jews, many of whom were at that time extremely poor"—WESLEY. (Ver. 22; ch. 8. 2; 22. 12; 5. 35.)

3. He saw in a vision—"not in a trance, like S. Peter—plainly (R.V. 'openly')—so as to leave one not accustomed to things of this kind no room to suspect any imposition"—WESLEY.

The ninth hour of the day—the hour for evening prayer. (Ch. 3. 1.) In this respect he had conformed to the usages of the Jews. (Ver. 30; ch. 11. 13.)

4. What is it, Lord? "The words imply his readiness to perform what shall be commanded, as though he had said, What wilt Thou have me to do"?—C. B. Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God. "Dare any man say, these were only splendid sins; or that they were an abomination before God? And yet it is certain, in the Christian sense, Cornelius was then an unbeliever. He had not then faith in Christ. So certain is it, that everyone who seeks faith in Christ should seek it in prayer, and doing good to all men; though, in strictness, what is not exactly according to the Divine rule must stand in need of Divine favour and indulgence"—WESLEY.

5, 6. He shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do. These words are omitted in R.V. In S. Peter's own account (ch. 11. 14), we have "who shall tell thee words whereby thou and all thy house may be saved." The prayer of Cornelius had been for light; and he is directed to the instructor whom he needs. "Two things here are worthy of particular attention—(1) Cornelius is influenced continually by the fear of God; from that principle he prays and gives alms, is religious himself, and maintains religion in his family. And he is accepted of God. Nevertheless, it is now necessary that he should do something further; he must accept the Christian faith which God is now establishing among men. Not, he might do it if he pleased, and it would be an improvement of his religion; but he must do it, his doing it is absolutely indispensable to his acceptance with God for the future. Prayers and alms are still accepted from those who believe in God and fear Him, if they have not an opportunity of knowing more. But with those to whom the gospel is preached, it is necessary in order to the acceptance of their persons, prayers, and alms that they should believe that Jesus is the Christ, and should confide in Him alone for acceptance. (2) Though Cornelius has now an angel from heaven talking to him, yet he must not receive the gospel of Christ from this angel, nor be told by him what he ought to do, but must send for S. Peter. Not to angels, but to saints, compassed about with infirmity, was 'this grace given'"—B. (Ch. 9. 43; 11. 14.)

7. A devout soldier. "How many such attendants have our modern officers? A devout soldier would now be looked upon as little better than a deserter from his colours"—WESLEY.

Mr. Wesley's Notes were published in 1754. He lived to reckon devout soldiers among his own people. There were reported in 1892 20,494 declared Wesleyans, of whom 1466 were Church members, in the Army and Royal Navy.

8. He declared all these things to them. They had known his former hopes and prayers, and Cornelius had confidence in them; and he wished them to be able to answer any questions S. Peter might ask, and if necessary to urge him to comply.

Vers. 9–24. PETER PREPARED BY A VISION, GOES AT ONCE TO CORNELIUS.—9. Peter went upon the housetop to pray. The houses had flat roofs, on which people walked to take the air, and where they conversed, meditated, and prayed. About the sixth hour—midday, the second of the stated hours for prayer. (Ch. 11. 5.)

10. And he became very hungry—"at the usual meal-time. The symbols in visions and trances, it is easy to observe, are generally suited to the state of the natural faculties"—WESLEY.

He fell into a trance—"such a rapture of mind as makes the person who falls into it insensible of external objects, while his imagination is impressed by striking scenes which pass before it"—B. This was entirely different from the actual appearance of the angel to Cornelius, but it was equally supernatural.

11. Knit at the four corners, and let down (R.V. "let down by four corners"). "Tied at the corners—not all in one knot; but each fastened, as it were, up to heaven"—WESLEY. (Ch. 7. 56; Rev. 19. 11.)

12. All manner, etc. (R.V. omits "and wild beasts.")

13, 14. Peter said, Not so, Lord—in nowise, Lord. "When God commands a strange, or seemingly improper, thing, the first objection frequently finds pardon. But it ought not to be repeated. This doubt and delay of S. Peter had several good effects. Hereby the will of God in this important point was made more evident and incontestable, and S. Peter also, having been so slow of belief himself, could the more easily bear the doubting of his brethren"—WESLEY. (Ch. 15. 9.)

S. Peter might well hesitate, for the voice that bade him kill and eat what was set before him in vision, must have been as hard as to tell a Brahmin to break his caste, with the addition, that he knew these restrictions were commanded by God Himself. (Lev. 11. 4; 20. 25; Deut. 14. 3, 7; Ezek. 4. 14.)

15. What God hath cleansed—"purified—hath made and declared clean. Nothing but what is clean can come down from heaven. S. Peter well remembered this saying, in the Council at Jerusalem (ch. 15. 9)"—WESLEY. (Matt. 15. 11; ver. 28; Rom. 14. 14, 17, 20; 1 Cor. 10. 25; 1 Tim. 4. 4; Titus 1. 15.)

16. This was done thrice—"to make the deeper impression"—WESLEY.

17. While Peter doubted in himself, behold, the men. "Frequently the things which befall us within and from without, at the same time, are a key to each other. The things which thus occur and agree together ought to be diligently attended to"—WESLEY.

Doubted in himself (R.V. "Was much perplexed"). He did not doubt that it was a heavenly vision; all his doubt was concerning the meaning of it.

19, 20. The Spirit said unto him—suggested to his mind, as manifestly as if He had whispered in his ear—Behold, men seek thee. Arise, therefore, and go down and go with them, nothing doubting. "How gradually was S. Peter prepared to receive this new admonition of the Spirit! Thus God is wont to lead on His children by degrees, always giving them light for the present hour"—WESLEY. (Ch. 11. 12; 15. 7.)

21. What is the cause wherefore ye are come? Probably he would recognise them all as Gentiles, and one as a soldier.

22. Cornelius the centurion. To obviate as far as possible any prejudice which S. Peter might have against Cornelius as a Gentile they describe his character, and add, as an irresistible argument, that he had been warned by an angel to send for S. Peter. (Vers. 1, 2; ch. 22. 12.)

23. Called them in and lodged them—"the first step towards laying aside Jewish scruples. Certain brethren from Joppa—Jewish Christians (ver. 45), six in number (ch. 11. 12)—probably desired by the apostle to go with him, that they might be witnesses of what happened, as this was an affair in which some difficulties might arise, and some censure be incurred from the Jewish converts. How pleasing a mixture have we here of prudence and humility! Sufficient to teach us a prudent caution in our best-intended actions, that our good may not be evil spoken of"—B.

24. Cornelius was waiting for them—"not engaging himself in any secular business during that solemn time, but being altogether intent upon this one thing"—WESLEY.

His kinsmen and near friends. Doubtless men of like mind with Cornelius in faith and worship. They had been informed that S. Peter was expected, and were all waiting for the promised instruction.

Vers. 25–48. PETER PREACHES TO CORNELIUS AND HIS FRIENDS, AND THE HOLY GHOST DESCENDS ON THEM.—25. Worshipped him. It was not a Roman custom to offer the salaam to any man. Cornelius prostrated himself as to a superhuman visitor.

26. I myself am a man—"and not God, who alone ought to be worshipped"—WESLEY. (Ch. 14. 14, 15; Rev. 19. 10; 22. 9.)

27, 28. An unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew. "It was not made unlawful by the law of God, but by the precepts of their wise men, which they regarded as no less binding. They did not forbid them to do business with Gentiles, but to eat and drink, or to hold friendly intercourse"—B. But God hath showed me. "He speaks sparingly to them of his former doubt, and his late vision"—WESLEY. (John 4. 9; 18. 28; ch. 11. 3; Gal. 2. 12, 14; ch. 15. 8, 9; Eph. 3. 6.)

29. I ask for what intent ye have sent for me? "S. Peter knew this already. But he puts Cornelius on telling the story, both that the rest might be informed, and Cornelius himself more impressed by the narration; the repetition of which, even as we read it, gives a new dignity and spirit to S. Peter's succeeding discourse"—WESLEY.

30. Four days ago I was fasting. "The first of these days he had the vision; the second, his messengers come to Joppa; on the third, S. Peter set out: and on the fourth, came to Cæsarea"—WESLEY.

R.V. "Four days ago until this hour I was keeping the ninth hour of prayer in my house." "This makes the time of S. Peter's arrival to be after the ninth hour of the day. The prayers of Cornelius had been continued some time before the angel appeared"—C. B. A man in bright clothing—like that of the angels who appeared at the resurrection and the ascension. (Ch. 1. 10; Matt. 28. 3; Mark 16. 5; Luke 24. 4.)

31. Thy prayer is heard. "Doubtless he had been praying for instruction how to worship God in the most acceptable manner — WESLEY.

Thine alms had in remembrance. God looks not only on the outward gift, but on the inward affection from which it proceeds. (Vers. 4, etc.; Dan. 10. 12; Heb. 6. 10.)

33. Now therefore we are all present before God—"the language of every truly Christian congregation"—WESLEY.

To hear all things that are commanded thee of God—"to know and do whatsoever He shall require of us. In this spirit ought everyone that would profit by the word of God to attend upon it"—B.

34. Peter opened his mouth. The expression always intimates the commencement of an important discourse. I perceive of a truth—"more clearly than ever, from such a concurrence of circumstances—that God is not a respecter of persons—is not partial in His love. The words mean, in a particular sense, that He does not confine His love to one nation; in general, that He is loving to every man, and willeth all men should be saved"—WESLEY. (Deut. 10. 17; 2 Chron. 19. 7; Job 34. 19; Rom. 2. 11; Gal. 2. 6; Eph. 6. 9; Col. 3. 25; 1 Pet. 1. 17.)

35. But in every nation he that feareth Him, and worketh righteousness—"he that first reverences God, as great, wise, good—the Cause, End, and Governor of all things; and secondly, from this awful regard to Him, not only avoids all known evil, but endeavours, according to the best light he has, to do all things well. Is accepted of Him—through Christ, though he knows Him not. The assertion is express, and admits of no exception. He is in the favour of God, whether enjoying His written words and ordinances or not. Nevertheless, the addition of these is an unspeakable blessing to those who were before, in some measure, accepted; otherwise, God would never have sent an angel from heaven to direct Cornelius to S. Peter"—WESLEY.

See note on ver. 6. (Ch. 15. 9; Rom. 2. 13, 17; 3. 22, 29; 10. 12, 13; 1 Cor. 12. 13; Gal. 3. 28; Eph. 2. 13, 18; 3. 6.)

36. The word, etc. (R.V. "The word which He sent unto the children of Israel, preaching good tidings of peace"). "This is the word which God sent — when He sent His Son into the world. Preaching—proclaiming by Him—peace—between God and man, whether Jew or Gentile, by the God-Man. He is Lord of both; yea, Lord of and over all"—WESLEY. (Isa. 57. 19; Eph. 2. 14, 16, 17; Col. 1. 20; Matt. 28. 18; Rom. 10. 12; 1 Cor. 15. 27; Eph. 1. 20, 22; 1 Pet. 3. 22; Rev. 17. 14; 19. 16.)

37. That word—ye know the word that was published. "You know the facts in general, the meaning of which I shall now more particularly explain and confirm to you. The baptism which John preached — to which he invited them by his preaching, in token of their repentance. This began in Galilee, which was near Cæsarea"—WESLEY. (Luke 4. 14.)

38. How God anointed Jesus—"particularly at His baptism, thereby inaugurating Him to His office. With the Holy Ghost and with power. It is worthy our remark, that frequently, when the Holy Ghost is mentioned, there is added a word particularly adapted to the present circumstances. So the deacons were to be 'full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom' (ch. 6. 3); S. Barnabas was 'full of the Holy Ghost and faith' (11. 24); the disciples were 'filled with joy and with the Holy Ghost' (13. 52); and here, where His mighty works are mentioned, Christ Himself is said to be 'anointed with the Holy Ghost and with power.' For God was with Him. He speaks sparingly here of the majesty of Christ, as considering the state of his hearers" —WESLEY.

"'God anointed Jesus.' The apostle refers to Christ as the promised Messiah; for as Messiah signifies the Anointed One, and Christ has the same signification in Greek; and the Messiah, according to the prophets, was to work miracles, S. Peter proclaims Jesus as the Messiah, and refers to the miracles which He wrought, as the proof of it"—C. (Luke 4. 18; ch. 2. 22; 4. 27; Heb. 1. 9; John 3. 2.)

39. And we are witnesses—His apostles, having been with Him from the beginning of His public ministry. (Ch. 2. 32; 5. 30.)

40. Showed Him openly (R.V. "Gave Him to be made manifest"). "Christ was not openly showed; but by many proofs it was made clear to those who saw Him that it was the same body, though now glorified, which had been wounded on the cross, but was alive again"—C. B. (Ch. 2. 24.)

41. Not now to all the people—as before His death. To us who did eat and drink with Him—"that is, conversed familiarly and continually with Him in the time of His ministry"—WESLEY.

Witnesses chosen before of God. Jesus also speaks of His apostles as given unto Him by God. (John 17. 6; 14. 17, 22; ch. 13. 31; Luke 24. 30, 43; John 21. 13.)

42. It is He who is ordained of God the Judge of the living and the dead—"of all men, whether they are alive at His coming, or had died before it. This was declaring to them, in the strongest terms, how entirely their happiness depended on a timely and humble subjection to Him who was to be their final Judge" —WESLEY.

So Christ had taught in His personal ministry. (Matt. 28. 19, 20; ch. 1. 8; John 5. 22. 27; ch. 17. 31.)

43. To Him give all the prophets witness. "Speaking to heathens, he does not quote any in particular. That every one that believeth in Him — whether he be Jew or Gentile— receiveth remission of sins—though he had not before either feared God, or worked righteousness"—WESLEY.

The appeal to the prophets certainly intimates that Cornelius and his household were not entirely ignorant of the Jewish Scriptures. (Isa. 53. 11; Jer. 31. 34; Dan. 9. 24; Micah 7. 18; Zech. 13. 1; Mal. 4. 2; ch. 26. 22; 15. 9; 26. 18; Rom. 10. 11; Gal. 3. 22.)

44. While Peter yet spake — "before he had finished, and without any imposition of hands"—B.

The Holy Ghost fell on all that were hearing the word. "Thus were they consecrated to God, as the first-fruits of the Gentiles. And thus did God give a clear and satisfactory evidence that He had accepted them as well as the Jews"—WESLEY.

The Holy Spirit was given before baptism, or imposition of hands, to show that the admission of the Gentiles was in no degree due to the agency or will of S. Peter, but was the immediate act of God. To this S. Peter alludes in his defence of his conduct (ch. 11. 15). (Ch. 4. 31; 8. 15–17.)

45. The believers of the circumcision—"the believing Jews"—WESLEY—that is, the six men who had accompanied S. Peter from Joppa. They were astonished, for they saw it incontestably proved that those who had never been circumcised, or been made converts to Judaism, might not only become Christian believers, but might be partakers of the highest privileges of the Church. (Ver. 23; ch. 11. 18; Gal. 3. 14.)

46. They heard them speak with tongues. The same kinds of manifestation attended the gift as on the day of Pentecost. (Ch. 11. 15.)

47. Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, who have received the Holy Ghost? "He does not say, They have the baptism of the Spirit; therefore they do not need baptism with water, but just the contrary; if they have received the Spirit, then baptize them with water. How easily is this question decided, if we will take the word of God for our Judge! Either men have received the Holy Ghost, or not. If they have not, 'Repent,' saith God, 'and be baptized, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.' If they have, if they are already baptized with the Holy Ghost, then 'who can forbid water?'" —WESLEY. (Ch. 11. 17; 15. 8, 9; Rom. 10. 12.)

48. And he commanded them to be baptized (R.V. "in the name of Jesus Christ")— "which implies the Father who anointed Him, and the Spirit with which He was anointed to His office. But as these Gentiles had before believed in God the Father, and could not but now believe in the Holy Ghost, under whose powerful influence they were at this very time, there was the less need of taking notice that they were baptized into the belief and profession of the sacred Three; though doubtless the apostle administered the ordinance in that very form which Christ Himself had prescribed"—WESLEY.

"'Commanded them to be baptized.' Choosing to make use of the ministry of his brethren, that by this means the expression of their consent might be the more explicit"—B. "S. Peter seems to have refrained from baptizing converts, and we know that S. Paul did so; and the latter indicates a reason which may have influenced all the Twelve to appoint others to baptize, lest factions should arise"—C. B. (Ch. 2. 38; 8. 16.) The point at which the Holy Spirit fell upon the hearers intimates what was the chief thing Cornelius desired to know, and that S. Peter was commissioned to teach. Cornelius felt the need of a clearer sense of the Divine acceptance, and had sincerely prayed for light. S. Peter preaches to him Jesus Christ—speaking of His life, His death, His resurrection, and His mediatorial glory; then announces in ver. 43 the great message of mercy through Him. He offers forgiveness to every one, implying that all are sinners; he declares that Christ is the Mediator of reconciliation; and he teaches faith in Him as the only condition of salvation. At once Cornelius saw the light which he had longed for, and, as his heart was opening to receive it, the Holy Spirit came.

CHAPTER XI.

Vers. 1–18. PETER JUSTIFIES HIS CONDUCT BEFORE THE JEWISH CHRISTIANS.—1. The apostles and brethren heard. The news of these occurrences reached them while S. Peter yet tarried at Cæsarea.

2. They of the circumcision contended with him. "There seems no reason to exclude any of the believing Jews, except the apostles, from this contention; for they were 'all zealous of the Law,' and of their customs, and could not endure that any Jew should act contrary to them (ch. 21. 20, 21), and S. Peter himself had been of that mind until he received the vision; and even afterwards on one occasion he withdrew himself from the believing Gentiles, for fear of the Jews"—B. (Gal. 2. 12; ch. 10. 45.)

3. Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised. The word was one of great reproach in the mouth of a Jew; the employment of it shows strong feeling. (Ch. 10. 28; Gal. 2. 12.)

4. Peter laid all things before them. "So he did not take it ill to be questioned, or desire to be treated as infallible. And he answers the more mildly, because it related to a point which he had not readily believed himself"—WESLEY.

It is evident that the Jewish Christians had no idea of the supremacy, much less of the infallibility of S. Peter. (Luke 1. 3; ch. 10. 9, etc.)

5. In a trance—"which suspends the use of the outward senses"—WESLEY.

11. The house where I was (R.V. "where we were").

12. These six brethren. The new reading in ver. 11, which has the support of the best MSS., makes it probable that these brethren were his companions in the journey which he was making "throughout all quarters" (ch. 9. 32), and so were lodging with him at Simon's house in Joppa. (John 16. 13; ch. 10. 19; 15. 7; 10. 23.)

13. An angel in his house (R.V. "The angel standing")—of whom you have already heard by common report. (Ch. 10. 30.)

14. Saved—"with the full Christian salvation, both in this world and the world to come"—WESLEY.

17. To us when we believed. "The sense is, Because we believed, not because we were circumcised, was the Holy Ghost given to us. What was I?—a mere instrument in God's hand. They had inquired only concerning his 'eating with the Gentiles.' He satisfies them likewise concerning his baptizing them; and shows that he had done right in going to Cornelius, not only by the command of God, but also by the event, the descent of the Holy Ghost. And who are we that we should withstand God?—particularly by laying down rules of Christian communion, which exclude any whom He has admitted into the Church of the first-born from worshipping God together. Oh that all church governors would consider how bold an usurpation this is on the authority of the supreme Lord of the Church! Oh that the sin of thus withstanding God may not be laid to the charge of those who, perhaps with a good intention, but in an over-fondness for their own forms, have done it, and are continually doing it!"—WESLEY. (Ch. 10. 47.)

18. They glorified God—"being fully satisfied. Repentance unto life. True repentance is a change from spiritual death to spiritual life, and leads to life everlasting"—WESLEY.

"But though those who heard the account of S. Peter were satisfied that God had called Gentiles into His Church as well as Jews, there were others who maintained the necessity of the observance of the older Covenant, some perhaps from a real though misguided zeal for the Law, others from national pride and bigotry (Gal. 6. 13); and hence arose dissensions in the Church, which caused much trouble"—C. B. (Rom. 10. 12, 13; 15. 9, 16.)

Vers. 19–30. FURTHER SPREAD OF THE GOSPEL—THE CHURCH AT ANTIOCH.—19. They who had been dispersed. "S. Luke here resumes the thread of his narration, in the very words where he broke it off (ch. 8. 4)—as far as Phenicia north, Cyprus to the west, and Antioch to the east"—WESLEY. (Ch. 8. 1.)

20. Some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene—"who were more accustomed to converse with the Gentiles—who coming into Antioch—then the capital of Syria and, next to Rome and Alexandria, the most considerable city of the empire. Spake to the Greeks.

As the Greeks were the most celebrated of the Gentile nations near Judea, the Jews called all the Gentiles by that name. Here we have the first account of the preaching the gospel to the idolatrous Gentiles. All those to whom it had been preached before did at least worship one God, the God of Israel"—WESLEY.

R.V. also has "spake unto the Greeks," instead of "Grecians." By "Grecians" we understand Greek-speaking Jews, such as those mentioned in ch. 6. 1. The change of word is required not only by the best MSS., but by the sense of the context. As the Grecians or Hellenists were Jews, there is, on the common reading, no difference between the conduct of these preachers and those mentioned in the preceding verse. (Ch. 6. 1; 9. 29.)

21. And the hand of the Lord—"that is, the power of His Spirit"—WESLEY.

Was with them—indicating His approval of their conduct, as well as crowning it with success. (Luke 1. 66; ch. 2. 47; 9. 35.)

22. Tidings came to the ears of the Church at Jerusalem. And as they had lately seen a way opened for the conversion of the Gentiles, they received information of this further progress of the gospel with peculiar pleasure. And they sent forth Barnabas—as S. Peter and S. John were sent to Samaria under similar circumstances. (Ch. 8. 14.) S. Barnabas, being a native of Cyprus, would probably know something of the men of Cyprus and Cyrene, who had begun the work. (Ch. 9. 27.)

23. Who was glad. Where the work of Divine grace is unmistakable, there the child of God rejoices and finds himself at home. Cleave unto the Lord—not simply to His Church, or to His doctrine, but to Himself. Spiritual union with Christ Himself is the only true Christian life. (Ch. 13. 43; 19. 22.)

24. Full of the Holy Ghost and of faith. The same character as is ascribed to S. Stephen. Divine wisdom had directed the choice of the Church; S. Barnabas was not the man to restrain the zeal and energy of those who were already in the field, but to lead them to more earnest and successful labour. (Ver. 21; ch. 6. 5; ch. 5. 14.)

25. To Tarsus to seek Saul. S. Barnabas, at an earlier period, brought Saul to the apostles, and to the Church at Jerusalem; now he brings him to Antioch. The history of the conversion of Saul was known to S. Barnabas, and therefore he must have known the declaration of the Redeemer, that Saul was chosen to bear His name before Gentiles and before kings. And thus the thought was suggested that this great Gentile city was the place for Saul, that such a sphere of labour would suit him, and that he might be the agent of great good. But Saul had withdrawn to his native city, had disappeared not only from his enemies but from his Christian brethren; so that S. Barnabas had to seek him out, and Saul returned to Antioch in his company. (Ch. 9. 20.)

26. A whole year—probably the first time Saul had the opportunity of quiet and consecutive labour. Taught much people. Much teaching would be needed by the various classes of persons who were brought together in the Church in Antioch. And the disciples were first called Christians at Antioch. "Here it was that they first received this standing appellation. They were before termed Nazarenes and Galileans"—WESLEY.

"The name was evidently invented by the Gentiles; as they called men Pompeians, Cæsarians, Herodians, because of their political opinions and associations, it was natural for them, when they met with persons who made their allegiance to Christ conspicuous, to call them Christians. The circumstance indicates that believers in Antioch cleaved to Christ as a real Person, the King and Lord of His redeemed people"—L.

27, 28. Agabus rising up—"in the congregation. All the world—the word generally signifies the Roman empire. And so it is doubtless to be taken here"—WESLEY.

Which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar—the emperor then reigning. It began, according to Josephus, in the fourth year of his reign, but was still more severe during the two years following. (Ch. 2. 17; 13. 1; 15. 32; 21. 9; 1 Cor. 12. 28; Eph. 4. 11; ch. 21. 10.)

29, 30. Then—"understanding the distress they would otherwise be in on that account—the disciples determined to send relief to the brethren in Judea—who herein received a manifest proof of the reality of their conversion. Sending it to the elders—who gave it to the deacons to be distributed as every one had need"—WESLEY.

The poverty of the Church at Jerusalem doubtless arose in the first instance from persecution. The wealthier members, who would otherwise have assisted their brethren, would be in the greatest danger and would be the first to leave the city. "The elders." This is the first mention of this office in the Christian Church. They are again mentioned in ch. 20. 17; and in S. Paul's address to the elders or presbyters of the Church at Ephesus, he reminds them that the Holy Ghost had made them overseers or bishops. The distinction between the two offices, which early arose, was entirely a human and prudential arrangement. (Rom. 15. 26; 1 Cor. 16. 1; 2 Cor. 9. 1; ch. 12. 25.)

CHAPTER XII.

Vers. 1–19. HEROD'S PERSECUTION—PETER IMPRISONED, AND DELIVERED BY AN ANGEL.—1. At that time—"so wisely did God mix rest and persecution in due time and measure succeeding each other—Herod (Agrippa), the latter was his Roman, the former his Syrian name. He was the grandson of Herod the Great, nephew to Herod Antipas, who beheaded John the Baptist, brother to Herodias, and father to that Agrippa before whom S. Paul afterward made his defence. Caligula made him king of the tetrarchy of his uncle Philip, to which he afterwards added the territories of Antipas. Claudius made him also king of Judea, and added thereto the dominions of Lysanias"—WESLEY.

Josephus describes him as mild, generous, and compassionate, and especially as strongly attached to the Jewish Law.

2. James the brother of John. "So one of the brothers went to God the first, the other the last, of the apostles"—WESLEY.

"This early execution of one of the apostles after our Lord's death would illustrate the courage of the rest in going on with their ministry, since it would show that their miraculous powers did not secure them from the sword of their enemies"—B. (Matt. 4. 21; 20. 23.)

3. It pleased the Jews. "This appears to have been the leading principle of his government"—B. Then were the days of unleavened bread—"at which the Jews came together from all parts"—WESLEY.

The popular feeling, which had been in favour of the gospel, from Pentecost to the death of S. Stephen, had now set in the contrary direction.

. Four quaternions—"sixteen men, who watched by turns, day and night"—WESLEY.

After Easter (R.V. "After the Passover"). "This intention was, after the paschal lamb was eaten and the seven days' festival quite finished, to gratify the people by putting him to death publicly"—B. "It may have been Herod's intention to present him for trial before the Sanhedrim, and to execute their sentence"—W. W. (John 21. 18.)

5. Continual prayer was made for him. "Yet, when their prayer was answered, they could scarcely believe it (ver. 15). But why had they not prayed for S. James also? Because he was put to death as soon as apprehended"—WESLEY.

R.V. "But prayer was made earnestly of the Church." "The Greek also intimates that it was incessant, kept up, always going on"—W. W. (2 Cor. 1. 11; Eph. 6. 18; 1 Thess. 5. 17.)

6. Peter was sleeping—"easy and void of fear—between two soldiers—sufficiently secured, to all human appearance"—WESLEY.

"It is likely the Jews remembered how all the apostles had escaped, when they had formerly put them in prison, and that it was at their request that such a number of soldiers were appointed to guard S. Peter"—B.

7. The angel of the Lord came upon him (R.V. "stood by him"). The word is the same which is used of the angel appearing to the shepherds (Luke 2. 9), where the passage continues, "And the glory of the Lord shone round about them," words strikingly parallel with this description of S. Peter's release, "And a light shined in the prison." Raised him up (R.V. "Awoke him"). His chains—"with which his right arm was bound to one of the soldiers, and his left arm to the other"—WESLEY. (Ch. 5. 19.)

8. Gird thyself. "Probably he had put off his girdle, sandals, and upper garment before he lay down to sleep"—WESLEY.

"These directions, given thus in detail, are perfectly natural. A man suddenly aroused, by such a visitor, would be in amazement, and would need to be told to do each particular thing"—W. W.

9, 10. The first and second ward—"at each of which was a guard of soldiers. The gate opened of its own accord—without either S. Peter or the angel touching it. And they went on through one street—that S. Peter might know which way to go. And the angel departed from him—being himself sufficient for what remained to be done"—WESLEY. (Ps. 126. 1; ch. 10. 3, 17; 11. 5; 16. 26.)

11. Now I know of a truth—"that this is not a vision"—WESLEY. (Ver. 9.)

The Lord hath sent His angel—"as He formerly did"—B. (Ch. 5. 19.) "This deliverance of S. Peter represents to us our redemption by Christ, which is not only the proclaiming of liberty to the captives, but the bringing them out of the prison-house. The grace of God, like this angel of the Lord, brings light first into the prison by the opening of the understanding, smites the sleeping sinner on the side by the awakening of the conscience, causeth the chains to fall off from the hands by the renewing of the will; and then gives the word of command, 'Gird thyself, and follow Me.' Difficulties are to be passed through, and the opposition of Satan and his instruments, a first and second ward, an untoward generation, from which we are concerned to save ourselves, and shall be saved by the grace of God, if we put ourselves under the Divine conduct. And at length the iron gate shall be opened to us to enter into the New Jerusalem"—M. H. (See Wesley's Hymns, 201, 4; Ps. 34. 7; Dan. 3. 28; 6. 22; Heb. 1. 14; Job 5. 19; Ps. 33. 18, 19; 34. 22; 41. 2; 97. 10; 2 Cor. 1. 10; 2 Pet. 2. 9.)

12. And having considered—"what was best to be done. Many were gathered together—at midnight"—WESLEY.

"Mary was sister to S. Barnabas, as we learn from Col. 4. 10. We do not read of the father of S. Mark anywhere; and it is probable that Mary was a widow"—C. B. (Ch. 4. 23; 15. 37; ver. 5.)

13. The gate—"at some distance from the house. To hearken—if any one knocked"—WESLEY.

"Saul had entered into every house, and carried off men and women to prison, and there was a prospect of a like persecution. So Rhoda was not minded to open till she knew who was seeking admission"—C. B.

14. And knowing Peter's voice—"bidding her open the door"—WESLEY.

Opened not for gladness. "A touch of nature, showing the reality of the event"—W. W.

15. They said, Thou art mad. "As we say, Sure you are not in your senses to talk so. It is his angel. It was a common opinion among the Jews that every man had his particular guardian angel, who frequently assumed both his shape and voice. But this is a point on which the Scriptures are silent"—WESLEY. (Gen. 48. 16; Matt. 18. 10.)

17. Beckoning to them. "Many of whom, being amazed, were talking together. And he said, Show these things to James—the brother or kinsman of our Lord, and author of the Epistle which bears his name. He appears to have been a person of considerable weight and importance, probably the chief overseer of that province, and of the Church in Jerusalem in particular. He went into another place—where he might be better concealed, till the storm was over"—WESLEY.

The times were altered since the day when, after his former deliverance, he could go and speak to the people in the Temple at the dawn of day. Then the populace were a protection to the Church, now they were bitterly hostile. And probably more was to be feared from Herod's soldiers, if any difficulty should arise in carrying out the orders given them, than from the captain of the Temple and his officers. (Ch. 13. 16; 19. 33; 11. 40.)

18, 19. No small stir among the soldiers—"ready to accuse each other of negligence or treachery"—B. Herod commanded them to be put to death. "And thus the wicked suffered in the room of the righteous. And going down from Judea—with shame for not having brought forth S. Peter, according to his promise"—WESLEY.

"This deliverance of S. Peter out of prison is one of the most remarkable instances of answer to prayer. There were, so to speak, two powers wrestling with each other: the power of the world will hold fast the apostle and put him to death; the Church will rescue him. The world has all material instruments at its disposal—prisons, chains, and fetters, soldiers and weapons; the Church has none of these, but instead of them prayer, united and continual prayer. The whole of the new nature which Divine grace had given, their faith on God in Christ, their love to one another, their Christian hope,—all are concentrated in prayer. And such prayer, laying hold on the omnipotence of God, prevails easily over all the power of the world"—L.

Vers. 20-25. DEATH OF HEROD AGRIPPA—GROWTH OF THE CHURCH.—20. Highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon. It is improbable that Herod intended actual war, which would have given offence to the Imperial government. He could bring them into great distress, by simply closing his frontier against trade with them. Having gained Blastus—"to their side, they sued for, and obtained, peace—reconciliation with Herod. And so the Christians of those parts were, by the providence of God, delivered from scarcity. Their country was nourished—was provided with corn—by the king's country. Thus Hiram also, king of Tyre, desired of Solomon 'food,' or corn, for his household"—WESLEY. (1 Kings 5. 9; Ezek. 27. 17.)

21. And on a set day—"which was solemnised yearly, in honour of Claudius Cæsar—Herod arrayed in royal apparel—in a garment so wrought with silver that the rays of the rising sun striking upon and being reflected from it, dazzled the eyes of the beholders. The people shouted, It is the voice of a god. Such profane flattery they frequently paid to princes. But the commonness of a wicked custom rather increases than lessens the guilt of it"—WESLEY.

Josephus confirms this account of the death of Herod (A.D. 44), mentioning the set day, the splendid robe, the flattery of the multitude who hailed him as a god, the immediate attack of illness so that he had to be carried to his palace, and his death five days after.

23. And immediately—"God does not delay to vindicate His injured honour—an angel of the Lord smote him. Of this other historians say nothing: so wide a difference is there between Divine and human history! An angel of the Lord brought out S. Peter; an angel smote Herod. Men did not see the instruments in either case. These were only known to the people of God. Because he gave not glory to God. He willingly received it to himself, and by this sacrilege filled up the measure of his iniquities. So then vengeance tarried not. And he was eaten by worms—or vermin. How changed! And on the fifth day expired in exquisite torture. Such was the event! the persecutor perished, and the gospel grew and multiplied"—WESLEY.

"Christ, as Lord and King, protects and increases His Church. For the first time are the civil authority, the people of Israel, and their hierarchical rulers, united against the Church. At the beginning the hierarchy stood alone, and afterwards it stood united with the people; now Herod is joined with them, concentrating in himself all the political power under the Roman authority. But Christ is always with His people, and to Him is committed all power in heaven and in earth. The power of the world, which raises itself against God and Christ, suffers the most ignominious overthrow, while the Church continues to prosper and increase"—L. (1 Sam. 25. 38; 2 Sam. 24. 17; Ps. 115. 1.)

24. The word of God grew. "After all the opposition of its enemies, the progress of Christianity was apparently promoted by the concurrence of extraordinary events related in this chapter"—B. (Isa. 55. 11; ch. 6. 7; 19. 20; Col. 1. 16.)

25. Saul returned—to Antioch. Taking John surnamed Mark—"the son of Mary (at whose house the disciples met to pray for S. Peter), who was sister to S. Barnabas"—WESLEY. When they had fulfilled their ministry (R.V. "ministration")—viz. the giving to the elders of the Church the money contributed in Antioch for the relief of the poor. (Ch. 11. 29, 30; 13. 5, 13; 15. 37; ver. 12.)

CHAPTER XIII.

Vers. 1–12. SAUL'S FIRST MISSIONARY JOURNEY — EVENTS IN CYPRUS. — 1. There were in the church that was at Antioch (R.V. "At Antioch, in the church that was there"). "Up to this point the spread of the gospel beyond Palestine may be attributed chiefly to the persecutions at Jerusalem. A movement is now made for the express purpose of extending Christianity to foreign nations"—W. W. Manaen, who had been brought up with Herod—"his foster brother, now freed from the temptations of a court"—WESLEY.

The Herod meant is Herod Antipas, tetrarch of Galilee. He was at this time in exile. (Ch. 11. 27; 14. 26; 15. 35; 11. 22–26; Rom. 16. 21.)

2. As they ministered to the Lord—carried on the public and social worship of the Church, but doubtless a special time of prayer is meant—the Holy Ghost said—probably by the mouth of one of the prophets—Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work to which I have called them. "This was not ordaining them. S. Paul was ordained long before, and that, 'not of men, neither by man.' It was only inducting him to the province for which our Lord had appointed him from the beginning, and which was now revealed to the prophets and teachers. In consequence of this they fasted, prayed, and laid their hands upon them; a rite which was used not in ordination only, but in blessing, and on many other occasions"—WESLEY. (Num. 8. 14; ch. 9. 15; 23. 21; Rom. 1. 1; Gal 1. 15; 2. 9; Matt. 9. 38; ch. 14. 26; Rom. 10. 15; Eph. 3. 7, 8; 1 Tim. 2. 7; 2 Tim. 1. 11; Heb. 5. 4.)

3. Then having fasted. "Again, Thus they did also (Acts 14. 23)"—WESLEY.

They sent them away—"with the most affectionate marks of Christian friendship, and fervent prayers for their success"—B. (Ch. 6. 6.)

4. Sent forth by the Holy Ghost. The words intimate the importance of the new departure, and the confidence which the Church felt that it was of the Lord. To Cyprus. Cyprus was the birthplace of S. Barnabas; if he were permitted to choose the route, he would naturally go first to his countrymen. And Antioch, and indeed the whole Gentile Church, owed much under Divine Providence to the men of Cyprus, who first "spoke to the Greeks." (Ch. 4. 36.)

5. In the synagogues—"using all opportunities that offered"—WESLEY.

John to their minister (R.V. "as their attendant"). (Ver. 46; ch. 12. 25; 15. 37.)

6. "Paphos was on the western, Salamis on the eastern, part of the island"—WESLEY.

A sorcerer—Bar-jesus. For many years before this time, and many years after, impostors from the East, pretending to magical powers, had great influence over the Roman mind. (Ch. 8. 9.)

7. The proconsul (so also R.V.)—"the Roman governor of Cyprus. A prudent man—and therefore not overswayed by Elymas, but desirous to inquire further"—WESLEY.

Under Augustus the Roman provinces were divided into two classes, one class of which (needing the presence of troops, and the possession of which gave the emperor the control of the army) was called imperatorial, while the others were called senatorial provinces. The former were governed by an officer named pro-prætor, the latter by a "proconsul." We know from Dio Cassius that Cyprus was originally an imperatorial province, and therefore under a pro-prætor. This Strabo confirms; but says that Augustus made it over to the Senate, along with part of Galatia, and took instead of these Dalmatia for one of his provinces. So that the government of Cyprus was at the time of S. Paul's visit held by a "proconsul" for the Roman Senate; and this is another instance of the historic faithfulness of S. Luke's record.

8, 9. Elymas the sorcerer, for so is his name by interpretation—that is, the word Elymas, in Persian and Arabic, signifies "sorcerer" or "magician." He had assumed this name in place of his own Jewish one. (Ex. 17. 11; 2 Tim. 3. 8.) Then Saul, who is also called Paul. "It is not improbable that, coming now among the Romans, they would naturally adapt his name to their own language; and so called him Paul, instead of Saul. Perhaps the family of the proconsul might be the first who addressed to, or spoke of him by, this name, and from this time, being the Apostle of the Gentiles, he himself used the name which was more familiar to them"—WESLEY.

"In the former part of the Acts of the Apostles he is uniformly called Saul; hereafter, in the Epistles as well as in the history, the name employed is always Paul. We are inclined to adopt the opinion that the apostle bore this Roman name, as well as his other Hebrew name, in his earlier days, and even before he became a Christian. As the Jews have successively learned to speak Chaldee, Greek, Latin, or German, so they have adopted into their families the appellations of those Gentile families with whom they have come in contact, and never united"—C. H. Filled with the Holy Ghost. The Spirit gave him a sudden insight into the man, enabled him to discern the innermost state of his soul, and filled him with a holy indignation. (Ch. 4. 8.)

10. O full of all guile—"as a false prophet—and all mischief—as a magician. Thou son of the devil—a title well suited to a magician, and one who not only was himself unrighteous, but laboured to keep others from all goodness. Wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord? Even now thou hast heard the truth of the gospel"—WESLEY. (Matt. 13. 28; John 8. 44; 1 John 3. 8.)

11. Thou shalt be blind—for a season. The punishment of Elymas is far lighter than that of Ananias and Sapphira for obvious reasons. For him also there was left space for repentance. "And immediately a mist, or dimness within, and darkness without, fell upon him"—WESLEY. (Ex. 9. 3; 1 Sam. 5. 6.)

12. Then the deputy believed. "The blinding of the false prophet opened the eyes of Sergius Paulus"—C. H. "Being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord—confirmed by such a miracle"—WESLEY.

Vers. 13–52. THE APOSTLES AT PERGA, ANTIOCH in PISIDIA, AND ICONIUM.—13. Paul and those with him. Henceforth S. Paul becomes the most prominent figure throughout the Acts of the Apostles. To Perga. "We read of no missionary work here until the return visit"—C. B. (Ch. 14. 25.) John withdrawing from them returned—"tired with the fatigue, or shrinking from danger"—WESLEY. (Ch. 15. 38.)

14. Antioch in Pisidia—"different from the Antioch mentioned, ver. 1"—WESLEY.

Went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day. "S. Paul making it a point in every place first to offer salvation to the Jews"—B. (Ch. 16. 13; 17. 2; 18. 4.)

15. And after the reading of the Law and the Prophets, the chief of the synagogue sent to them. "The Law was read over once every year, a portion of it every Sabbath; to which was added a lesson taken out of the Prophets. After this was over, anyone might speak to the people on any subject he thought convenient. Yet it was a circumstance of decency, which S. Paul and S. Barnabas would hardly omit, to acquaint the rulers with their desire of doing it; probably by some message before the service began"—WESLEY. (Luke 4. 16; ver. 27; Heb. 13. 22.)

16. Ye that fear God—"whether proselytes or heathens"—WESLEY.

"The discourse which the apostle now delivered seems to have been intended to illustrate the Divine economy, in opening the gospel gradually, and in preparing the Jews, by temporal mercies, for others of a more important nature. His sermon is particularly worthy of our consideration, as being an example of his method of preaching in all the synagogues"—B. (Vers. 26, 42, 43; ch. 10. 35.)

17. The God. "By such a commemoration of God's favours to their fathers, at once their minds were conciliated to the speaker, they were convinced of their duty to God, and invited to believe His promise, and the accomplishment of it. The six verses (17–22) contain the whole sum of the Old Testament. Of this people. S. Paul here chiefly addresses himself to those whom he styles, 'Ye that fear God.' He speaks of Israel first; and (ver. 26) speaks more directly to the Israelites themselves. Chose. And this exalted the people; not any merit or goodness of their own. (Ezek. 20. 5.) Our fathers—Abraham and his posterity"—WESLEY. (Deut. 7. 6, 7; Ex. 1. 1; Ps. 105. 23, 24; ch. 7. 17; Ex. 6. 6; 13. 14, 16.)

18. Suffered their manners. (In the margin of R.V. "Many ancient authorities read, 'Bare He them as a nursing father'"). The text has the highest authority in its present form. But the difference in the Greek is only in one letter. (Ex. 16. 15; Num. 14. 33, 34; Ps. 95. 9, 10; ch. 7. 36.)

19, 20. Seven nations—"enumerated (Deut. 7. 1). About four hundred and fifty years—that is, from the choice of the fathers to the dividing of the land, it was about four hundred and fifty years"—WESLEY.

R.V. "He gave them their land for an inheritance for about four hundred and fifty years; and after these things He gave them judges." "According to the received chronology, about four hundred and fifty years elapsed between the call of Abraham and the death of Joshua. This is the usual interpretation of this somewhat difficult passage. But supposing it could be proved that S. Paul's knowledge, or recollection, of ancient chronology was imperfect, this need not surprise us. We have no reason to assume that Divine inspiration would instruct the apostles in truth non-essential to their religious mission"—C. H. (Deut 7. 1; Josh. 14. 1, 2; Ps. 78. 55; Judg. 2. 16; 1 Sam. 3. 20.)

21. He gave them Saul forty years—"including the time wherein Samuel judged Israel"—WESLEY. (1 Sam. 8. 5; 10. 1.)

22. Having removed him. "Hence they might understand that the dispensations of God admit of various changes. I have found David, a man after Mine own heart. This expression is to be taken in a limited sense. David was such at that time, but not at all times; and he was so in that respect, as he performed all God's will in the particulars there mentioned. But he was not a man after God's own heart in other respects, wherein he performed his own will. In the matter of Uriah, for instance, he was as far from being a man after God's heart as Saul himself was. It is therefore a very gross, as well as dangerous, mistake, to suppose this is the character of David in every part of his behaviour. We must beware of this, unless we would recommend adultery and murder as things after God's own heart"—WESLEY.

The expression refers to David's public, not his private, character. He ruled Israel after the Divine will. He did not allow idolatry; he did not set up absolute power; he was guided in the government of the nation by the Law of Moses as the standing rule, and by the prophet, or the Divine oracle, upon particular emergencies. (1 Sam. 15. 23, 26, 28; 16. 1; Hosea 13. 11; 1 Sam. 16. 13; 2 Sam. 2. 4; 5. 3; Ps. 80. 20; 1 Sam. 13. 14; ch. 7. 46.)

23. According to His promise (R.V. "According to promise brought unto Israel"). (Isa. 11. 1; Luke 1. 32, 69; ch. 2. 30; Rom. 1. 3; 2 Sam. 7. 12; Ps. 132. 11; Matt. 1. 21; Rom. 11. 26.)

24. John having first preached. "He mentions this as a thing already known to them. And so, doubtless, it was; for it gave so loud an alarm to the whole Jewish nation, as could not but be heard in foreign countries; at least, as remote as Pisidia"—WESLEY. (Matt. 3. 1; Luke 3. 3.)

25. His course. "His work was quickly finished, and might therefore well be termed a course or race"—WESLEY.

Whom think ye that I am? (R.V. "What suppose ye?"). (Matt. 3. 11; Mark 1. 7; Luke 3. 16; John 1. 20, 27.)

26. Brethren, children of the stock of Abraham . . . to us is the word of this salvation sent (R.V.). (Matt. 10. 6; Luke 24. 47; ver. 46; ch. 3. 26.)

27. For they that dwell at Jerusalem. "He here anticipates a strong objection: 'Why did not they at Jerusalem, and especially their rulers, believe?' They knew not Him, because they understood not those very prophets whom they read or heard continually. Their very condemning Him, innocent as He was, proves that they understood not the prophecies concerning Him"—WESLEY.

They knew Him not. So S. Peter said in his sermon at the Beautiful Gate, "I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers." (Luke 23. 34; ch. 3. 17; 1 Cor. 2. 8; vers. 14, 15; ch. 15. 21; Luke 24. 20, 44; ch. 26. 22; 28. 23.)

28. They found no cause of death in Him. So Pilate himself declared. (Matt. 27. 22; Mark 15. 13, 14; Luke 23. 21, 22; John 19. 6, 15; ch. 3. 13, 14.)

29. They fulfilled all things that were written of Him. "So far could they go, but no farther"—WESLEY.

"Their ignorance made their condemnation of Jesus all the more certainly a fulfilment of prophecy"—W. W. (Luke 18. 31; 24. 44; John 19. 28, 30, 36, 37; Matt. 27. 59; Mark 15. 46; Luke 23. 53; John 19. 38.)

30, 31. He was seen many days by them who came up with Him from Galilee to Jerusalem. "This last journey both presupposes all the rest, and was the most important of them all"—WESLEY.

Who are His witnesses (R.V. "are now") —to the people—that is, to the people of Israel. (Matt 28. 6; ch. 2. 24; 3. 13, 15, 26; 5. 30; Matt. 28. 16; ch. 1. 3; 1 Cor. 15. 5–7; ch. 1. 11; 1. 8; 2. 32; 3. 15; 5. 32.)

32. The promise made unto the fathers—"which had been the hope and joy of their posterity through so many succeeding ages." (Gen. 3. 15; 12. 3; 22. 18; ch. 26. 6; Rom. 4. 13; Gal. 3. 16.)

33. God hath fulfilled—"completely ful filled"—W. W. In the second Psalm. "By this it appears that the Psalms were then placed in the same order as they are now; and it is observable that this is the only quotation from the Old Testament so circumstantially made in the New"—B. Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee. It is true He was the Son of God from eternity. The meaning therefore is, I have this day declared Thee to be My Son. As S. Paul elsewhere, 'Declared to be the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead' (Rom. 1. 4). And it is with peculiar propriety and beauty that God is said to 'have begotten Him,' on the day when He raised Him from the dead, as He seemed then to be born out of the earth anew"—WESLEY. (Ps. 2. 7; Heb. 1. 5; 5. 5.)

34. No more to return to corruption—"that is, to die no more. I will give you the sure mercies of David. The blessings promised to David in Christ. These are sure, certain, firm, solid, to every true believer in Him. And hence the resurrection of Christ necessarily follows; for without this, those blessings could not be given"—WESLEY.

R.V. "The holy and sure blessings of David." S. Paul at Antioch quoted from the LXX. (Isa. 55. 3.)

35. Wherefore He saith. "David in the name of the Messiah"—WESLEY.

R.V. "Because He saith." The words which David was inspired to utter cannot refer to David himself, as S. Paul proceeds to show. It is perfectly natural that he should repeat at Antioch the Scripture argument which S. Peter had employed in Jerusalem. (Ps. 16. 10; ch. 2. 31.)

36. David, having served the will of God in his generation, fell asleep. "So his service extended not itself beyond the bounds of the common age of man; but the service of the Messiah to all generations; as His kingdom to all ages. Served the will of God. Why art thou here, thou who art yet in the world? Is it not that thou also mayest 'serve the will of God'? Art thou serving it now? doing all His will? And was added to his fathers—not only in body. This expression refers to the soul also, and supposes the immortality of it"—WESLEY.

R.V. "In his own generation served the counsel of God." "David was not appointed to be the eternal servant of God; he served God in his time, and did so honestly"—L. (Ver. 22; Ps. 78. 72; 1 Kings 2. 10; ch. 2. 29.)

38. The forgiveness of sins. "As Jesus in His lifetime on earth declared that His miracles were signs, 'that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins,' so the apostles preach concerning the resurrection. (Comp. ch. 10. 43, the conclusion of S. Peter's speech in the house of Cornelius)"—C. B. (Jer. 31. 34; Dan. 9. 24; Luke 24. 47; 1 John 2. 12.)

39. Every one that believeth is justified from all things—"has the actual forgiveness of all his sins at the very time of his believing. From which ye could not be justified. Not only, ye cannot now, but ye never could. For it afforded no expiation for presumptuous sins. By the Law of Moses—the whole Mosaic institution. The division of the Law into moral and ceremonial was not so common among the Jews as it is among us. Nor does the apostle here consider it at all; but Moses and Christ are opposed to each other"—WESLEY.

"The Mosaic Law appointed sin-offerings to expiate smaller offences, so far as that the offender who offered them should be free from all further prosecution on account of them. But this very view of them shows how absolutely necessary to the being of society it was, that they should not be admitted in cases of murder, adultery, etc. But the expiatory sacrifice of Christ takes away the guilt of all sin, with respect to the penitent that believe aright on Him"—B. (Isa. 53. 11; Rom. 3. 28; 8. 3; Heb. 7. 19.)

40. Beware—"a weighty and seasonable admonition. No reproof is as yet added to it"—WESLEY.

The apostle refers to Hab. 1. 5, where the destruction of the Jewish nation by the Chaldæans is foretold, as an incredible and unparalleled destruction; and that prophecy is here, with the greatest propriety, applied to the destruction that was coming on that nation by the Romans for neglecting the gospel of Christ. (Isa. 29. 14; Hab. 1. 5.)

41. I work a work which ye will in no wise believe. "This was originally spoken to those who would not believe that God would ever deliver them from (? into) the power of the Chaldæans. But it is applicable to any who will not believe the promises or the works of God"—WESLEY.

"S. Paul quotes, as usual, from the LXX. translation, which varies considerably from the Hebrew. It will be remarked that the close of this speech reminds us of the arguments of S. Peter on the day of Pentecost, just as the beginning recalls that of S. Stephen before the Sanhedrim. Possibly S. Paul himself had been an auditor of the first, as he certainly was of the last"—C. H.

42. And when the Jews, etc. The Gentiles (R.V. "And as they went out, they besought that these words"). The desire was expressed by the congregation both of Jews and proselytes as they left the synagogue. The Gentiles would hardly be present on an ordinary occasion. When the Jews were going out—"probably many of them, not bearing to hear him, went out before he had done. The Sabbath between. So the Jews call to this day the Sabbath between the first day of the month Tisri, on which the civil year begins, and the tenth of the same month, which is the solemn day of expiation"—WESLEY.

Both A.V. and R.V., however, translate simply "the next Sabbath."

43. Who, speaking to them—"more familiarly—persuaded them to continue—for trials were at hand—in the grace of God—that is, to adhere to the gospel or Christian faith"—WESLEY.

"With what pleasure can we fancy the apostles to have observed these hearers of the word, who seemed to have heard it in such earnest. How gladly must they have talked with them, entered into various points more fully than was possible in any public address, appealed to them in various ways which no one can touch upon in speaking to a mixed multitude. Yet, with all their pleasure and their hope, their knowledge of man's heart must have taught them not to be over-confident; and therefore would they earnestly urge them to continue in the grace of God; to keep up the impression which had already outlasted their stay in the synagogue, to feed it, and keep it alive, and make it deeper and deeper, that it should remain with them for ever"—ARNOLD. (Ch. 11. 23; 14. 22; Titus 2. 1; Heb. 12. 15; 1 Pet. 5. 12.)

44. Almost the whole city—"idolaters as well as proselytes"—B.

45. The Jews, filled with envy (R.V. "jealousy"). "The exclusive spirit, which was so engrafted in the Jewish race, asserted itself as soon as they saw the Gentiles gathered to hear the apostles. For themselves and their proselytes they could accept a message as God sent, and tolerate some modification of their teaching or their practice; but they could not endure that the Gentiles should be made equal with God's ancient people"—C. B.

46. Then Paul and Barnabas, speaking boldly, said. "Those who hinder others must be publicly reproved. It was necessary—though ye are not worthy. He shows that he had not preached to them from any confidence of their believing. But seeing ye judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life—they indeed judged none but themselves worthy of it; yet their rejecting of the gospel was the same as saying, We are unworthy of eternal life. Behold—a thing now present, an astonishing revolution—we turn to the Gentiles. Not that they left off preaching to the Jews in other places; but they now determined to lose no more time at Antioch on their ungrateful countrymen, but to employ themselves wholly in doing what they could for the conversion of the Gentiles there"—WESLEY. (Ch. 18. 6; 1 Pet. 4. 4; Jude 10; Matt. 10. 6; ch. 3. 26; ver. 26; Rom. 1. 16; Ex. 32. 10; Deut. 32. 21; Isa. 55. 5; Matt. 21. 43; Rom. 10. 9; ch. 18. 6; 28. 28.)

47. For so hath the Lord commanded us. "By sending us forth, and giving us an opportunity of fulfilling what He had foretold. I have set Thee. The Father speaks to Christ"—WESLEY.

Divine promises often intimate our duty as well as our privilege. (Isa. 42. 6; 49. 6; Luke 2. 32.)

48. The Gentiles were glad—"that such things had been prophesied concerning them many ages ago, and that the Lord Jesus had commanded His apostles to receive them into His Church, without subjecting them to the Law of Moses"—B. As many as were ordained to eternal life. "S. Luke does not say 'foreordained.' He is not speaking of what was done from eternity, but of what was then done through the preaching of the gospel. He is describing that ordination, and that only, which was at the very time of hearing it. During this sermon those believed, says the apostle, to whom God then gave power to believe. It is as if he had said, They believed, 'whose hearts the Lord opened,' as he expresses it in a clearly parallel place, speaking of the same kind of ordination. (Ch. 16. 14, etc.) It is observable, the original word is not once used in Scripture to express eternal predestination of any kind. The sum is,—all those, and those only, who were ordained now believed. Not that God rejected the rest; it was His will that they also should have been saved; but they thrust salvation from them. Nor were they who then believed constrained to believe. But grace was then first copiously offered them. And they did not thrust it away, so that a great multitude of Gentiles were converted. In a word, the expression properly implies, a present operation of Divine grace working faith in the hearers"—WESLEY.

"The word translated 'ordained' is used in classical Greek chiefly in a military sense. It simply means arranged, drawn up in battle array. It refers at once to the action of the commander in marshalling them, and to their own obedience and readiness"—G. "In ver. 46 we are told that the Jews had judged themselves unworthy of eternal life, and all that is meant by the words in this verse is the opposite of that expression. The Jews were acting so as to proclaim themselves unworthy; the Gentiles were making manifest their desire to be deemed worthy. The two sections were like opposing troops, ranged by themselves, and to some degree, though not unalterably, looked upon as so arranged by God on different sides. Thus the Gentiles were ordering themselves, and were ordered unto eternal life. The text says no word to warrant us in trusting that none could henceforth change sides"—C. B. (Ch. 2. 47.)

49. Throughout all the region. From this time forth, it appears, in all the Gentile countries, "S. Paul, after preaching to the Jews, constantly offered salvation to the Gentiles"—B.

50. Devout and honourable women (R.V. "Devout women of honourable estate"). "Thus an honourable and devout character becomes a barrier to Christianity. Such persons are easy to stir up, and they say, What better do they pretend to have than we possess?"—L. (2 Tim. 3. 16.)

51. Shook off the dust of their feet—"as Christ had commanded. It was 'for a testimony,' certainly not of contempt, but of renunciation of all fellowship with them and with their fate"—L. (Matt. 10. 14; Mark 6. 11; Luke 9. 5; ch. 18. 6.)

52. The disciples were filled with joy—those at Antioch, although their teachers had been driven away. The joy which the first experience of Christianity produced is mentioned repeatedly in the Acts of the Apostles. It was emphatically the glad tidings, and the reception of it was great joy. (Matt. 5. 12; John 16. 22; ch. 2. 46.)

CHAPTER XIV.

Vers. 1–20. FIRST MISSIONARY JOURNEY, continued—ICONIUM, DERBE, LYSTRA.—1. In Iconium—"the modern Konieh, famous long afterwards as the cradle of the Ottoman power. At this time it would resemble other important towns in Asia Minor. The elements of its population would be as follows: a large number of trifling and frivolous Greeks, whose principal places of resort were the theatre and the market-place; some remains of a still older population, coming in occasionally from the country, or residing in a separate quarter of the town; some few Roman officials, holding themselves proudly aloof from the inhabitants of the subjugated province; and an old established colony of Jews, who exercised their trade during the week, and met on the Sabbath to read the Law in the synagogue"—C. H. "So spake. Persecution having increased their strength"—WESLEY.

2–4. "The same kind of events as in Antioch, and almost in the same order. The Jews were offended, and stirred up the Gentiles against the apostles. Long time therefore abode they speaking boldly in the Lord. One would have thought, that therefore they should have withdrawn and hasted out of the way; or that if they preached, they should have preached cautiously for fear of giving further offence. But, on the contrary, the more they saw the spirit and rancour of the town against the new converts, the more needful they saw it to continue among them"—B. The multitude of the city was divided. Jesus had predicted that such divisions should result from His coming (Luke 12. 51). (Mark 16. 20; Heb. 2. 4; ch. 13. 3.)

5. When there was an assault made—or was about to be made—both of the Gentiles and also of the Jews. Generally at enmity, they were united against the Christians. The proposal to stone the apostles shows that the conspiracy originated with the Jews. Stoning was their method of punishment for blasphemy. (2 Tim. 3. 11).

6, 7. They were ware of it and fled—in obedience to Christ's directions (Matt. 10. 23). To the cities of Lycaonia, Lystra, and Derbe (R.V.). "This was a wilder region, inhabited by a ruder population. The towns must have been small, and their sites cannot now be positively identified"—F. There they preached the gospel—the same gospel, perhaps not in the same manner, but with the same success.

8. There sat a certain man—"evidently in some place of public resort, where the apostles came to preach. There is no mention of a synagogue at Lystra or Derbe, and it is not probable that there was one"—C. B. Impotent in his feet. S. Luke, the physician, describes the malady with his usual preciseness. (Ch. 3. 2.)

9, 10. He had faith to be healed. "He felt the power of God in his soul; and thence knew it was sufficient to heal his body also"—WESLEY.

In this respect the case of the poor heathen at Lystra rises above all that is told us of the lame Jew whom S. Peter healed at the Beautiful Gate. "The lame man at Jerusalem desired and expected nothing but to receive alms, even when S. Peter exhorted him to look on him and S. John. But this lame man, who was an attentive and earnest hearer of S. Paul, already possessed the believing confidence that S. Paul would help him. Then the apostle calls aloud to him to stand up; he does not, as S. Peter did, invoke the name of Jesus, on whose authority the call was issued, and in whose strength it could be obeyed; because the lame man had learned from the preaching of S. Paul to recognise Jesus as the Saviour. At this call the lame man leaped up at once, and walked up and down; here there is a third distinction, inasmuch as S. Peter took the lame man by the hand and lifted him up"—L. Evidently the three points of difference spring from the same origin. This man had faith to be healed. (Matt. 8. 10; 9. 28, 29; Isa. 35. 6.)

11, 12. In the speech of Lycaonia. "The people were bilingual, and S. Paul had been speaking to them in Greek. This fact may give us some additional light on the question of what the gift of tongues was, which was bestowed upon the apostles. From what we see here, it was not such a power as enabled them at once to employ or even to understand the various dialects of all the people into whose countries they might be brought in their missionary labours. For it is evident that neither S. Paul nor S. Barnabas understood the cry of these Lycaonians. If they had, we cannot suppose they would have allowed a moment to elapse before they corrected the false impression which the words conveyed, and at which, when they came to know its purport, they expressed such horror. They, however, left the place where the multitude had been assembled, and departed to their own lodgings"—L. The gods are come down—"which the heathens supposed they frequently did, Jupiter especially. But how amazingly does the Prince of Darkness blind the minds of them that believe not! The Jews would not own Christ's Godhead, though they saw Him work numberless miracles. On the other hand, the heathens seeing mere men work one miracle were for deifying them immediately"—WESLEY. (Ch. 8. 10; 28. 6.)

Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius. "They identified S. Paul with Mercury, who was the god of eloquence. If it be asked why they called S. Barnabas Jupiter, it is sufficient to say that these two divinities were always represented as companions in terrestrial expeditions. It is also probable that S. Barnabas was older and therefore more venerable in appearance than S. Paul"—C. H.

13. The priest of Jupiter—"whose temple and image were just without the gate of the city — brought garlands — to put on the victims—and bulls—the usual offerings to Jupiter"—WESLEY.

Unto the gates—"of the place where S. Paul and S. Barnabas were"—B. Would have done sacrifice—"to acknowledge the obligation they were under for this visit, and to ask their continued protection"—B. (Dan. 2. 46.)

14. They rent their clothes—"in token of the indignation and sorrow with which they beheld this strange abuse of a miracle, wrought to destroy this very idolatry"—B. Ran in among the people (rather, as in R.V. "sprang forth")—that is, out of their lodging, as soon as they heard what was being done. Crying out—"as in a fire or other sudden and great danger"—WESLEY. (Matt. 26. 65.)

15. Of like passions with you—exposed to the common infirmities of human life. The gods were even to the heathen incapable of suffering—free from want, blessed, immortal. To turn from these vanities—"from worshipping any but the true God. He does not deign to call them gods. Unto the living God. Not like these dead idols. Who made the heaven and earth, the sea—each of which they supposed to have its own gods"—WESLEY. (1 Sam. 12. 21; 1 Kings 16. 13; Jer. 14. 22; Amos 2. 4; 1 Cor. 8. 4; ch. 10. 36; Jas. 5. 17; Rev. 19. 10; 1 Thess. 1. 9; Gen. 1. 1; Ps. 33. 6; 146. 6; Rev. 14. 7.)

16. Who in times past. "He prevents their objecting, But if these things are so, we should have heard them from our fathers. Suffered—an awful judgment—all nations—the multitude of them that err does not turn error into truth—to walk in their own ways—the idolatries which they had chosen"—WESLEY. (Ps. 81. 12; ch. 17. 30; 1 Pet. 4. 3.)

17. He left not Himself without witness. "For the heathens had always from God Himself a testimony both of His existence and His providence. In that He did good. Even by punishments He testifies of Himself; but more peculiarly by benefits. Giving rain—by which air, earth, and sea are, as it were, all joined together—from heaven—the seat of God; to which S. Paul probably pointed while he spoke. Filling the body with food, the soul with gladness"—WESLEY.

We cannot help pausing to observe the essentially Pauline character of this speech. It is full of coincidences, evidently undesigned, in argument and even in expression, with S. Paul's language in other parts of the Acts and in his Epistles. He reminds the Thessalonians that they had turned from idols to serve the living and true God. He tells the Romans that God in His forbearance had passed over the former sins of men, in times gone by (Rom. 3. 25, R.V.). And so he tells the Athenians that the past times of ignorance God overlooked. Lastly, how striking is the similarity between the natural theology with which the present speech concludes, and that in the Epistle to the Romans where, speaking of the heathen, he says that atheists are without excuse. "For His eternal power and Godhead, though they be invisible, yet are seen ever since the world was made, being understood by the works which He hath wrought"—C. H. (Ch. 17. 27; Rom. 1. 20; Lev. 26. 4; Deut. 11. 14; 28. 12; Job 5. 10; Ps. 65. 10; 68. 9; 147. 8; Jer. 14. 22; Matt. 5. 45.)

19. Jews from Antioch and Iconium. "Their arrival was certainly not accidental, but occasioned by the news received of the success of the apostles at Lystra" — L. Persuaded the multitude — "moved with equal ease either to adore or murder him"—WESLEY.

Having stoned Paul. This must be the stoning to which S. Paul alludes (2 Cor. 11. 25), "Once was I stoned." "Paley (Horæ Paulinæ) calls attention to the close agreement between the history of S. Luke and the letter of S. Paul. At Iconium S. Paul had just escaped stoning; at Lystra he was stoned. The two circumstances are mentioned by the historian; only the actual suffering by the apostle himself. Nothing but truth to guide them, says Paley, could have brought the two writers so close 'to the very brink of contradiction without falling into it'"—C. B. (2 Tim. 3. 11.)

20. But as the disciples stood around—"probably after sunset. The enraged multitude would scarce have suffered it in the daytime. He rose and went into the city. That he should be able to do this, just after he had been left for dead, was a miracle little less than a resurrection from the dead; especially considering the manner wherein the Jewish malefactors were stoned. The witnesses first threw as large a stone as they could lift, with all possible violence, upon his head, which alone was sufficient to dash the skull in pieces. All the people then joined, as long as any motion or token of life remained"—WESLEY.

The next day he departed. Having been sheltered for the night in the house of some disciple, perhaps in that of Eunice and Lois, the mother and grandmother of Timothy. With Barnabas to Derbe—east of Lystra. No other places in Lycaonia are mentioned as visited by S. Paul and S. Barnabas, but we gather from ver. 6 that they went through other parts of the surrounding country.

Vers. 21–28. FIRST MISSIONARY JOURNEY—THE RETURN HOME.—21. Taught many (R.V. "Made many disciples"). The work at Derbe appears to have been very successful. Of one convert we read afterwards, Gaius of Derbe (ch. 20. 4). Returned again to Lystra and to Iconium and Antioch. They considered it their nearest duty to visit once more all the churches founded on this missionary journey, and to confirm them in the faith.

22. Confirming the souls—by the word of exhortation, that they should cleave steadfastly to the faith; to which they added the declaration, that the way to the kingdom of God leads necessarily through many troubles. This was necessary, lest opposition and suffering should shake their confidence, and even cause them to apostatise from the faith. (Ch. 11. 23; 13. 43; Matt. 10. 38; 16. 24; Luke 22. 28, 29; Rom. 8. 17; 2 Tim. 2. 11, 12; 3. 12.)

23. When they had ordained them presbyters in every church—"out of those who were themselves but newly converted. So soon can God enable even a babe in Christ to build up others in the common faith"—WESLEY.

This was a case of necessity; where choice is possible, S. Paul himself says, "Not a novice." They commended them to the Lord — "an expression implying faith in Christ, as well as love to the brethren"—WESLEY. (Titus 1. 5.)

25. "Perga and Attalia were cities of Pamphylia"—WESLEY.

They preached the word in Perga, which they had simply passed through on the outward journey.

26. Sailed to Antioch — in Syria — from whence they had been recommended to the grace, or favour, of God for the work which they fulfilled. "This shows the nature and design of that laying on of hands which was mentioned in Acts 13. 3"—WESLEY. (Ch. 15. 40.)

27. Gathered the Church together — all the leading persons of them, and perhaps as many as the place of meeting would contain. The Church had sent them forth, and it was fitting that the Church should receive a formal report of the results of the mission. How He had opened the door of faith to the Gentiles —had made faith the door of admission to His kingdom. Through the open door of faith in Christ the Gentiles might now come in. (Ch. 15. 4, 12; 21. 19; 1 Cor. 16. 9; 2 Cor. 2. 12; Col. 4. 3; Rev. 3. 8.)

We must assign to this first mission a space of three or four years, and as the district traversed was but small, a considerable time must have been spent at each place chosen for a centre of labour. The abundant fruit of the labours of the apostles is seen in the need for the ordination of elders, and in the provisions made for orderly church government. The course S. Paul adopted was to tarry in some centre of population, and to continue his ministry until a sufficient number of converts had been gained to carry on the work after he left them. In this manner at least four Christian churches had been founded, consisting for the most part of Gentiles, which promised well.

CHAPTER XV.

Vers. 1–5. THE ATTEMPT TO IMPOSE THE JEWISH LAW ON GENTILE CONVERTS—DEPUTATION TO JERUSALEM.—1. Coming down from Judea — "perhaps to supply what they thought S. Paul and S. Barnabas had omitted" —WESLEY. (John 7. 22; ver. 5; Gal. 5. 2; Phil. 3. 2; Col. 2. 8, 11, 16; Gen. 17. 10; Lev. 12. 3.)

2. No small dissension and disputation. "They strenuously opposed this doctrine— (1) Because its direct tendency was to subvert the gospel which they had preached, and which they knew was of itself sufficient for the salvation of men; (2) Because it was a betraying of the natural rights of mankind, who by the gospel are left free to obey the good laws of the countries where they live, and to enjoy whatever rights accrue to them from these laws. Whereas, by receiving the Law of Moses, the Gentiles made themselves the subjects of a foreign power, being under the jurisdiction of the high priest and Council of Jerusalem"—B. "S. Paul's position in this controversy will be best understood by a careful study of his Epistles, especially that addressed to the Galatians. He regarded the proposal as not only an infringement of the lawful liberty of the Church, but an attack on the office and work of the Redeemer Himself. The conflict was prolonged, and caused him much suffering; but we owe the existence of the Christian Church, in its present form, under the providence of its Divine Head, to the fidelity of S. Barnabas and S. Paul"—G. They—the brethren —determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain others, should go up to Jerusalem about this question. "This is the journey to which S. Paul refers (Gal. 2. 1, 2) when he says he 'went up by revelation'; which is very consistent with this; for the Church in sending them might be directed by a revelation, made either immediately to S. Paul, or to some other person, relating to so important an affair. Important indeed it was, that these Jewish impositions should be solemnly opposed in time; because multitudes of converts were still 'zealous for the Law,' and ready to contend for the observance of it. Indeed, many of the Christians of Antioch would have acquiesced in the determination of S. Paul alone. But as many others might have prejudices against him for his having been so much concerned for the Gentiles, it was highly expedient to take the concurrent judgment of all the apostles on this occasion"—WESLEY. (Gal. 2. 1.)

3. Through Phenice and Samaria—which lay in their way. The gospel had reached Samaria by the agency of Philip (ch. 8. 5), and those who were scattered by the persecution which arose about S. Stephen had preached in Phenice. Great joy unto all the brethren. These churches were very largely, if not entirely, gathered from the Jews and proselytes. It is probable that the party of the circumcision was stronger at Jerusalem than in the remoter congregations. (Rom. 15. 24; 1 Cor. 16. 6, 11; ch. 14. 27.)

4. They were received — "solemnly welcomed"—WESLEY.

All things that God had done with them. The expression intimates that the apostles deemed themselves workers together with God. (See Mark 16. 20.) In ver. 12 they speak of themselves as instruments in His hand. (Ver. 12; ch. 14. 27; 21. 19.)

5. But certain Pharisees—"for even believers are apt to retain their former turn of mind, and prejudices derived therefrom. The Law of Moses—the whole Law both moral and ritual"—WESLEY.

R.V. "It is needful," ver. 1.

Vers. 6–21. THE COUNCIL AT JERUSALEM—SPEECHES OF PETER AND JAMES.—6. The apostles and elders came together (R.V. "were gathered together"). This was evidently a formal meeting to discuss the question, probably some days after the first welcome of the apostles by the Church.

7. After much debate. "It does not appear that this was among the apostles themselves. But if it had, if they themselves had debated at first, yet might their final decision be from an unerring direction. For how really soever they were inspired, we need not suppose their inspiration was always so instantaneous and express as to supersede any deliberation in their own minds, or any consultation with each other. Peter rose up. This is the last time he is mentioned in the Acts"—WESLEY.

He begins by referring to the scene in the house of Cornelius, by which he had himself, while obeying the direct commands of God, been brought into trouble among the stricter Jews. (Ch. 10. 20; 11. 12.)

8. God bare them witness—"that He had accepted them, by giving them the Holy Ghost"—WESLEY. (1 Chron. 28. 9; ch. 1. 24; 10. 44.)

9. Purifying. "This word is repeated from ch. 10. 15. Their hearts. The heart is the proper seat of purity. By faith—without concerning themselves with the Mosaic Law" —WESLEY. (Rom. 10. 11; ch. 10. 15, 28, 43; 1 Cor. 1. 2; 1 Pet. 1. 22.)

10. Now therefore—seeing these things are so—why tempt ye God? "Why do ye provoke Him to anger by putting so heavy a yoke on their neck?"—WESLEY.

"Tempt"—provoke—try the forbearance of God. This they would do if they called in question His wisdom and goodness as exemplified in the case of Cornelius. (Matt. 23. 4; Gal. 5. 1.)

11. The Lord Jesus Christ (R.V. omits "Christ"). "He does not here say, Our Lord; because in this solemn place he means, The Lord of all. We—Jews—shall be saved, even as they—Gentiles—namely, through the grace of the Lord Jesus, not by our observance of the Ceremonial Law"—WESLEY.

"There had been a long conference, in which reasons for and against were weighed. Because neither the written word of the Old Testament nor the judgment of the brethren had led to any sure result, S. Peter takes the ground of decision from the experience of what God had done under their own eyes" —L. (Rom. 3. 24; Eph. 2. 8; Titus 2. 11; 3. 4, 5.)

12. All the multitude. "Though the apostles and elders alone are mentioned (ver. 6) it now appears that the assembly was a large one'—C. B. Miracles and wonders (R.V. "Signs and wonders"). "By which also what S. Peter had said was confirmed"—WESLEY. (Ch. 14. 27.)

14. Symeon hath rehearsed (R.V.). "James, the apostle of the Hebrews, calls S. Peter by his Hebrew name. To take out of them a people for His name—that is, to believe in Him, to be called by His name"—WESLEY.

So that it was evident the Jews were no longer to be exclusively the chosen people. (Ver. 7.)

15. To this agree. "S. Peter had urged the plain fact, which S. James confirms by Scripture prophecy. The words of the prophets. One of whom is immediately cited"—WESLEY.

16. After this—"after the Jewish Dispensation expires—I will build again the fallen tabernacle of David. By raising from his seed the Christ, who shall build on the ruins of His fallen tabernacle a spiritual and eternal kingdom"—WESLEY. (Amos 9. 11,12.)

17. The Gentiles on whom My name is called—"that is who are called by My name: who are My people"—WESLEY.

The quotation is as usual almost exactly in the words of the LXX. version.

18. Known unto God are all His works from eternity—"which the apostle infers from the prophecy itself, and the accomplishment of it. And this conversion of the Gentiles being known to Him from eternity, we ought not to think a new or strange thing. It is observable, he does not speak of God's works in the natural world (which had been nothing to his present purpose), but of His dealing with the children of men. Now He could not know these without knowing the characters and actions of particular persons, on a correspondence with which the wisdom and goodness of His providential dispensations is founded. For instance, He could not know how He would deal with heathen idolaters (whom He was now calling into His Church), without knowing there would be heathen idolaters; and yet this was a thing purely contingent, a thing as dependent on the freedom of the human mind as any we can imagine. This text therefore, among a thousand more, is an unanswerable proof that God foreknows future contingencies, though there are difficulties relating hereto which man cannot solve"—WESLEY.

R.V. makes ver. 18 a part of the quotation from the prophecy. "Saith the Lord, who maketh these things known from the beginning of the world," or "who doeth these things that were known," etc.

19. Are turned to God—"to the knowledge and worship of the true God, and to obedience to His gospel"—B. (Ver. 28; 1 Thess. 1. 9.)

20. From pollutions of idols. Explained (ver. 29) to mean "meats offered to idols." This regulation was adopted to make it possible for strict Jews to have social intercourse with Gentiles. S. Paul's view of the question is explained in 1 Cor. 8. 1–10. To abstain from fornication—"which even the philosophers among the heathens did not account any fault. It was particularly frequent in the worship of their idols; on which account they are here named together. And from things strangled —that is, from whatever had been killed without pouring out the blood. When God first permitted man to eat flesh, He commanded Noah, and in him all his posterity, whenever they killed any creature for food, to abstain from the blood thereof. It was to be poured 'upon the ground as water'; doubtless in honour of that blood which was in due time poured out for the sin of the world"—WESLEY. (Gen 35. 2; Ex. 20. 3, 23; Ezek. 20. 30; 1 Cor. 8. 1; Rev. 2. 14, 20; 10. 20, 28; 1 Cor. 6. 9, 18; Gal. 5. 19; Eph. 5. 3; Col. 3. 5;

1 Thess. 4. 3; 1 Pet. 4. 3; Gen. 9. 4; Lev. 3. 17; Deut. 12. 16, 23.)

21. For Moses. "Perhaps the connection is, To the Jews we need write nothing on these heads. For they hear the Law continually"—WESLEY.

"The Gentiles were advised to abstain from these things, because they would give great offence to the Jews"—W. W. "The argument may be supposed to run thus: We may make this concession to the Gentiles without the fear of doing any injury to the Jew. For Moses, etc."—C. B. (Ch. 13. 15, 27.)

Vers. 22–35. THE DECISION OF THE COUNCIL SENT TO ANTIOCH. — 22. With the whole Church. "Which therefore had a part therein —to send chosen men, who might put it beyond all dispute that this was the judgment of the apostles and all the brethren"—WESLEY. (Ch. 1. 23.)

23. Writing thus, and sending it by their hand. "The whole conduct of this affair plainly shows that the Church in those days had no conception of St. Peter's primacy, or of his being the chief judge in controversies. For the decree is drawn up not according to his, but the Apostle James's, proposal and direction; and that in the name, not of S. Peter, but of all the apostles and elders, and of the whole Church. Nay, S. Peter's name is not mentioned at all, either in the order for sending to Jerusalem on the question (ver. 2), or in the address of the messengers concerning it (ver. 4), or in the letter which was written in answer"—WESLEY.

The apostles, and elders, and brethren (R.V. "The apostles and the elder brethren"). Greeting. "The ordinary Greek salutation at the commencement of a letter, as in ch. 23. 26. The peculiarity is that it occurs only once in the apostolic epistles, viz. in Jas. 1. 1. An undesigned coincidence, tending to prove the genuineness of this document, as drawn up by S. James"—C. H.

24. Forasmuch as. "The simplicity, weightiness, and conciseness of this letter are highly observable"—WESLEY.

The simplicity and conciseness are still more marked in R.V., "Subverting your souls, to whom we gave no commandment." So that their interference was absolutely unauthorised. (Ver. 1; Gal. 2. 4; ver. 12; Titus 1. 10, 11.)

25. Being assembled with one accord (R.V. "Having come to one accord"). To send chosen men. "This was an interchange of courtesy and respect, as well as a provision for the more solemn and authoritative settlement of the question"—W. W.

26. Men that have hazarded their lives. "This is spoken of S. Paul and S. Barnabas"—WESLEY.

"Such a testimony was by no means a mere compliment, but exceedingly prudent, as it would tend to remove the prejudices conceived against them by the Jewish teachers, and would also be an evidence of the harmony subsisting between them and the apostles of the circumcision"—B. (Ch. 13. 50; 14. 19; 1 Cor. 15. 30; 2 Cor. 11. 23, 26.)

27. Judas and Silas—"men that have heard our debates, and are perfectly acquainted with our judgment and decision"—B. Who will tell you the same things—"which we have written"—WESLEY.

28, 29. To the Holy Ghost and to us. "This may include the decision which the Holy Spirit had given by His descent on Cornelius and his friends, but seems more directly to express the consciousness which this assembly had of being guided by His influence in the present determination. It cannot, however, be extended to ecclesiastical councils which have not inspired apostles to preside"—B. These necessary things. "All of these were necessary for that time. But the first of them was not necessary long; and the direction concerning it was therefore repealed by the same Spirit, as we read in the former Epistle to the Corinthians"—WESLEY.

Blood—"the eating which was never permitted the children of God from the beginning of the world. Nothing can be clearer than this: for (1) From Adam to Noah no man ate flesh at all; consequently no man then ate blood; (2) When God allowed Noah and his posterity to eat flesh, He absolutely forbade them to eat blood, and accordingly this, with the other six precepts of Noah, was delivered down from Noah to Moses; (3) God renewed this prohibition by Moses, which was not repealed from the time of Moses till Christ came; (4) Neither after His coming did any presume to repeal this decree of the Holy Ghost, till it seemed good to the Bishop of Rome so to do, about the middle of the eighth century; (5) From that time those churches which acknowledged his authority held the eating of blood to be an indifferent thing; but (6) In all those churches which never did acknowledge the Bishop of Rome's authority, it never was allowed to eat blood; nor is it allowed at this day. This is the plain fact; let men reason as plausibly as they please, on one side or the other. From which keeping yourselves, ye will do well—that is, ye will find a blessing. This gentle manner of concluding was worthy the apostolical wisdom and goodness. But how soon did succeeding councils of inferior authority change it into the style of anathemas! forms which have proved an occasion of consecrating some of the most devilish passions under the most sacred names; and, like some ill-adjusted weapons of war, are most likely to hurt the hand from which they are thrown"—WESLEY. (Ver. 20; ch. 21. 25; Rev. 2. 14, 20; Lev. 17. 14.)

30, 31. They gathered the multitude—"the private Christians as well as the elders and other official members of the Church"—B. Rejoiced for the consolation—"to find that so venerable an assembly had concurred with S. Paul and S. Barnabas in vindicating the liberty of the Gentile converts from the yoke of the Mosaic ceremonies. Their joy would be in proportion to the anxiety and suspense with which they waited for the apostle's decision"—B.

32. Judas and Silas exhorted—"did not only deliver the particular message with which they were charged. Their ministry would tend to show the identity of the teaching at Jerusalem with that of the elders at Antioch. Confirmed them—in every branch of Christian faith and practice"—B. (Ch. 14. 22; 18. 23.)

33. Let go in peace. Translation of a Hebrew phrase—"in peace" means "with a blessing or prayer for peace as a parting word"—C. B. (1 Cor. 16. 11; Heb. 11. 31.)

34. R.V. inserts in the margin only—probably an interpolation to account for ver. 40.

35. Paul and Barnabas continued in Antioch. "And it was during this time that S. Peter came down from Jerusalem, and that S. Paul withstood him to the face for separating himself from the Gentiles (Gal. 2. 11)"—WESLEY. (Ch. 13. 1.)

"This is the first ecclesiastical assembly or synod in the history of the Church. It was occasioned by a deeply important question, which concerned the whole Church of Christ, the Gentile Christians directly and the Jewish indirectly. It was referred by the Church at Antioch, who were primarily interested, to Jerusalem, as the mother Church, the sacred metropolis. But the apostles did not take the decision upon themselves, much less did S. Peter; not even the apostles in conjunction with the elders; but the whole Church of Jerusalem was present, and participated in the solution of the question. The different views entertained were freely expressed in the synod. But the truth, evangelical liberty, prevailed, and that purely by the power of the Spirit, of the Divine word, and of the deeds and acts of God. Not a doubtful majority, not a majority tyrannising over the minority, but an entire unanimity decided the business. The result was not formed by mutual concessions, agreed upon in a prudent and calculating manner, but resulted from an honest, truth-loving, and God-fearing consideration, under the guidance and illumination of the Holy Ghost"—L.

Vers. 36–41. THE SECOND MISSIONARY JOURNEY — DIVISION BETWEEN PAUL AND BARNABAS.—36. Let us go and visit the brethren in every city where we have preached. "This was all that S. Paul designed at first. But it was not all that God designed by his journey, whose providence carried him much farther than he intended. And see how they do — how their souls prosper; how they grow in faith, hope, love. What else ought to be the grand and constant inquiry in every ecclesiastical visitation? Reader, how dost thou do?"—WESLEY.

It is only just to add that John Wesley's conduct in his repeated visits to the churches he had founded was in strict accordance with the spirit of his note. His chief concern was the religious state of the Societies. (Ch. 13. 4, 13, 14, 51; 14. 1, 6, 24, 25.)

37. Barnabas counselled to take John—"his kinsman"—WESLEY.

A.V. "Determined"; R.V. "Was minded." (Ch. 12. 12, 25; 13. 5; Col. 4. 10; 2 Tim. 4. 11; Philem. 24.)

38. But Paul thought it not right—"to trust him again who had deserted them before; who had shrunk from the labour and danger of converting those whom they were now going to confirm"—WESLEY. (Ch. 13. 13.)

39. And there was a sharp contention—"literally, a paroxysm, or fit of a fever. But nothing in the text implies that the sharpness was on both sides. It is far more probable that it was not; that S. Paul who had the right on his side (as he undoubtedly had) maintained it with love. And Barnabas taking Mark with him sailed away to Cyprus—forsaking the work in which he was engaged, he went away to his own country"—WESLEY.

R.V. "There arose a sharp contention, so that they parted." The strife between these good men, which certainly was to be lamented, was made the occasion of a more extensive spread of the gospel. For S. Barnabas sailed with S. Mark into Cyprus, to visit the churches which he and S. Paul had planted there in their former journey; and S. Paul, choosing Silas, who was a prophet and a chief man among the brethren, departed to pursue the course which he had intended"—B.

40. But Paul departed—"held on his intended course — being recommended by the brethren to the grace of God. We do not find that Barnabas stayed for this. Oh, how mighty is the grace of God! which, in the midst of the world, in the midst of sin, among so many snares of Satan, and in spite of the incredible weakness and depravity of nature, yet overcomes all opposition, sanctifies, sustains, and preserves us to the end. It appears, not only that S. Paul and S. Barnabas were afterwards thoroughly reconciled (1 Cor. 9. 6; Gal. 2. 9), but also that S. Mark was again admitted by S. Paul as a companion in his labours. (Col. 4. 10; Philem. 24; 2 Tim. 4. 11; ch. 14. 26.)"—WESLEY.

41. Through Syria and Cilicia—"which was S. Paul's native country, as Cyprus was that of S. Barnabas"—B. "These were districts in which the teaching of the Judaisers had been most active, and the presence of S. Paul, with Silas as a representative of the Church in Jerusalem, would allay all doubts and questionings. This duty S. Paul first discharged before he went on to visit any of the churches he himself had founded"—C. B. (Ch. 16. 5.)

CHAPTER XVI.

Vers. 1–13. PAUL REVISITING THE CHURCHES—FORBIDDEN TO PREACH IN PROCONSULAR ASIA—CROSSES INTO EUROPE.—1. To Derbe and Lystra. "These cities are specially named, because he there came into the scene of his former labours. Timotheus. As S. Paul (2 Tim. 3. 10, 11) speaks of Timothy having been a witness of his sufferings at Lystra, and we read nothing of any remarkable suffering at the time of this second journey, it is probable that Timothy was converted by him in his former journey, and was a spectator of what he then suffered (ch. 14. 19, 20), and that S. Paul there began to have some acquaintance with him. The son of. These circumstances are mentioned, because he became a very considerable person in the Church, as well as a faithful and useful friend to the apostle"—B. (Ch. 14. 6; 19. 22; Rom. 16. 21; 1 Cor. 4. 17; Phil. 2. 19; 1 Thess. 3. 2; 1 Tim. 1. 2; 2 Tim. 1. 2; 2 Tim. 1. 5.)

2, 3. Well reported of. "Five or six years had elapsed since the previous visit, so that the congregations had become somewhat formed, and the characters of the more earnest members well known"—C. B. S. Paul did not rely only on his own well-trained insight into character, or upon any supernatural assistance he might expect, in selecting a young man to be set apart to the work of the ministry. He sought to know the opinions of those among whom Timothy had dwelt from his youth up; and he noted his parentage, and the training of his childhood. (Ch. 6. 3.) Him would Paul have—as an assistant in his work. Probably it was at this time that he was solemnly set apart for the ministry by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. (1 Tim. 4. 14.) He took and circumcised him, because of the Jews—"the unbelieving Jews, to whom he designed he should preach. For they would not have conversed with him at all, so long as he was uncircumcised"—WESLEY. (1 Cor. 9. 20; Gal. 2. 3; 5. 2.)

4. They delivered them the decrees—"committed to the custody of each church an exact and attested copy of the decrees made by the Council at Jerusalem"—B. (Ch. 15. 29.)

5. Churches established in the faith. "Watered by such faithful labourers, and encouraged with so favourable a decision of the great point then in question, they were much confirmed in their adherence to the faith. Increased in number daily—for the burdensome yoke of the Law of Moses being now broken, a great obstacle to the conversion of the Gentiles was removed"—B. The history evidently represents the publication of the "decrees" as having given a new impetus. Probably, in the Gentile congregations, the first result would be an enhanced feeling of unity with the whole Church and of loyalty to Christ. (Ch. 15. 41.)

6. And having gone through Phrygia—"and spoken there what was sufficient, as well as in the region of Galatia, being forbid by the Spirit, probably by an inward dictate, to speak as yet in the Proconsular Asia, the time for it not being come"—WESLEY.

Flourishing churches were afterwards planted there, particularly at Colosse, Laodicea, Sardis, Thyatira, and Philadelphia. It is not improbable that the churches in Galatia were founded at this visit. (See Gal. 4. 13–19.)

7. After they were come to Mysia (R.V. "come over against Mysia"). The Spirit suffered them not (R.V. "The Spirit of Jesus"). (Gal. 4. 6; Phil. 1. 19; 1 Pet. 1. 11.) Note that the acts of the Spirit here are those of a Person.

8. Coming to Mysia, and passing it by—"as being a part of Asia, they attempted to go into Bithynia; but the Spirit suffered them not—forbidding them as before. Sometimes a strong impression, for which we are not able to give any account, is not altogether to be despised"—WESLEY.

Came down to Troas—a well-known seaport on the coast of Mysia. (2 Cor. 2. 12; 2 Tim. 4. 13.)

9. A vision appeared to Paul by night. "It was not a dream, though it was by night. No other dream is mentioned in the New Testament than that of Joseph, and of Pilate's wife. A man of Macedonia—probably an angel clothed in the Macedonian habit, or using the language of the country, and representing the inhabitants of it. Help us—against Satan, ignorance, and sin"—WESLEY.

10. We sought to go into Macedonia. "This is the first place in which S. Luke intimates his attendance on the apostle. And here he does it only in an oblique manner. Nor does he throughout the history once mention his own name, or any one thing which he did or said for the service of Christianity; though S. Paul speaks of him in the most honourable terms (Col. 4. 14; 2 Tim. 4. 11); and probably as 'the brother whose praise in the gospel went through all the churches' (2 Cor. 8. 18). The same remark may be made on the rest of the sacred historians, who every one of them show the like amiable modesty"—WESLEY.

R.V. "We sought to go forth"—inquiring how and when they could cross into Europe. (2 Cor. 2. 13.)

11. We came with a straight course (R.V. "made a straight course to Samothrace"—"which increased their confidence that God had called them"—WESLEY.

Samothrace is an island about half-way across.

12. The first city. "Neapolis was the first city they came to in that part of Macedonia which is nearest to Asia; in that part which was farthest from it, Philippi. The river Strymon ran between them. Philippi was a Roman colony"—WESLEY.

Some difference of opinion has existed as to the true position of Neapolis; but recent inquiries seem to leave little doubt that the small Turkish village of Cavallo is the Neapolis at which S. Paul landed, and the seaport of Philippi which is ten miles inland. Which is a city of Macedonia, the first of the district, a Roman colony (R.V.).

13. We went out of the gate. "The Jews usually held their religious assemblies (either by choice or constraint) at a distance from the heathens. By a river side—which was also convenient for purifying themselves. Where prayer was wont to be made—though it does not appear there was any house built there"—WESLEY.

R.V. "Where we supposed there was a place of prayer." We spake—"at first in a familiar manner. S. Paul did not immediately begin to preach"—WESLEY.

"S. Paul and his companions were divinely called, in an extraordinary manner, into Macedonia, but we may see how artlessly and simply they commence their labours. They remain some days by themselves; then they go, as others, to the usual place of devotion, content to speak there with some women; and, full of believing calmness, are ready to follow the leadings of God"—L.

Vers. 14–40. CONVERSION OF LYDIA — A SPIRIT OF DIVINATION CAST OUT—STRIPES, IMPRISONMENT, AND TRIUMPHANT DELIVERANCE OF THE APOSTLES.—14. Lydia—of the city of Thyatira—"in the province of Asia, and famous for its dyeing works—which worshipped God—a proselyte to the Jewish faith" —C. B. "Probably acquainted with the prophetic writings"—WESLEY.

Whose heart the Lord opened. "The Greek properly refers to the opening of the eyes. And the heart has its eyes. (Eph. 1. 18.) These are closed by nature; and to open them is the peculiar work of God"—WESLEY.

God opens the heart, but man must permit it to be opened. (Rev. 3. 20.) "Lydia was so strongly affected by what S. Paul said, that she embraced the gospel with the full assurance of faith"—B. (Luke 24. 45.)

15. She was baptized and her family. "Who can believe, that in so many families there was no infant? or, that the Jews, who were so long accustomed to circumcise their children, would not now devote them to God by baptism? She entreated us—the souls of the faithful cleave to those by whom they were gained to God. She constrained us—by her importunity. They did not immediately comply, lest any should imagine they sought their own profit by coming into Macedonia"—WESLEY.

"Lydia's pressing invitations, however, overcame their reluctance, and they at last consented to her request, and abode at her house as long as they continued at Philippi, which was many days (see vers. 12, 18)"—B. "The apostles did not gain over by their discourse great crowds, but one woman only. The kingdom of God commences like a grain of mustard seed. From a converted Lydia afterwards sprang that glorious Church of Philippi, to which the apostle wrote such an excellent epistle, and which he called his crown"—L. (Gen. 19. 3; 33. 11; Judg. 19. 21; Luke 24. 29; Heb. 13. 2.)

16. As we went to prayer (R.V. "As we were going to the place of prayer"). A spirit of divination (R.V. margin, "A spirit, a Python") —"a divining spirit like that attributed to the Pythoness at Delphi. The whole tenor of the narrative implies a supernatural possession; and though we do not witness the terrible spectacle of human beings possessed by evil spirits, nothing can be more presumptuous than to make our own experience the criterion of truth for the times which have preceded us" —W. W. (1 Sam. 28. 7; ch. 19. 24.)

17. Followed Paul and us. After this verse the writer ceases for a time to intimate that he accompanied S. Paul. As he reappears (ch. 20. 5), he was probably left behind at Philippi. These men are. "A great truth; but S. Paul did not need, nor would accept of, such testimony"—WESLEY.

So the demoniacs in the gospel confessed the true character of the Lord Jesus. (R.V. "Proclaim unto you.")

18. Paul being grieved (R.V. "being sore troubled")—"under an apprehension that this stratagem of Satan might lead the people to imagine that the preachers of the gospel acted in confederacy with the evil spirit"—B. (Mark 1. 25, 34; 16. 17.)

19. The hope of their gains was gone. "The effect produced upon the woman evidently proves the reality of the possession; had she been an impostor, she would have still persisted in the imposture at the instigation of her masters"—W. W. "The gospel certainly prevents much gain, because it forbids and condemns many arts and trades"—L. Caught Paul and Silas—letting S. Luke and Timothy, the younger members of the mission party, escape. Drew them (R.V. "Dragged"). (Ch. 19. 25, 26; 2 Cor. 6. 5; Matt. 10. 18.) The rulers—"the supreme magistrates of the city. In the next verse they are called by a title which often signifies prætors. These officers exercised both the military and civil authority" —WESLEY.

20. The magistrates (R.V. margin, "prætors"). Being Jews—"a nation peculiarly despised by the Romans"—WESLEY. (1 Kings 18. 17; ch. 17. 6.)

Trouble our city. "Those who disturb the false peace of sinners are cried against as disturbers of the common peace"—L. "If they troubled the city, it was but like the angel troubling the water of Bethesda's pool in order to healing"—M. H.

21. And teach customs which it is not lawful for us to receive. "The world has received all the rules and doctrines of all the philosophers that ever were. But this is a property of gospel truth—it has something in it perfectly intolerable to the world"—WESLEY.

Being Romans—though living in Macedonia. "A Roman colony was not like what we now call a colony. The inhabitants did not settle as they pleased, but were sent out by authority from Rome, and they reproduced, where they settled, a close resemblance to Roman rule and life. They were planted on the frontiers of the empire for protection, and as a check upon the provincial magistrates. Latin was their language, and they used the Roman coinage, and had their chief magistrates sent out or appointed from the mother city"—C. B. The manner in which S. Luke describes the proceedings at Philippi confirms our confidence in the genuineness of the whole narrative.

22. The magistrates rent their garments off them (R.V.), and commanded to beat them with rods. "This was the office of the Roman lictor, who carried rods for the purpose when attending on the magistrates. The use of this special word indicates that S. Luke was aware of the particular kind of beating, and perhaps beheld the infliction. This is one of the occasions to which S. Paul alludes (2 Cor. 11. 25), 'Thrice was I beaten with rods'"—C. B. (2 Cor. 6. 5; 1 Thess. 2. 2.)

23. They laid many stripes upon them. "Either they did not immediately say they were Romans, or in the tumult it was not regarded. Charging the jailor — perhaps rather to quiet the people than because they thought them criminal"—WESLEY.

24. The inner prison—"like that dungeon in the court of the prison into which Jeremiah was let down with cords, and where he sank in the mire. (Jer. 38. 6.) One such place may be seen to this day on the slope of the Capitol at Rome"—C. H. Secured their feet in the stocks. "These were probably those large pieces of wood in use among the Romans, which not only loaded the legs of the prisoner, but also kept them extended in a very painful manner"—WESLEY.

25. At midnight—sleep being out of the question—Paul and Silas sang a hymn to God — "notwithstanding weariness, hunger, stripes, and blood. And the prisoners heard —a song to which they were not accustomed"—WESLEY.

R.V. "The prisoners were listening."

26, 27. Would have killed himself. "Philippi had already witnessed, in Cassius and Brutus, examples of such desperation. Ancient philosophy approved of the practice. The Roman jailor who allowed a prisoner to escape was liable to suffer his punishment"—W. W. (Ch. 4. 31; 5. 19; 12. 7, 10.)

28. But Paul cried. "As they were then all in the dark, it is not easy to say how S. Paul knew of the jailor's purpose; unless it were by some immediate notice from God, which is by no means incredible. With a loud voice—through earnestness, and because he was at some distance—Do thyself no harm. Although the Christian faith opens the prospect into another life, yet it absolutely forbids, and effectually prevents, a man's discharging himself from this"—WESLEY.

29. Called for lights (R.V.). Fell down before Paul and Silas—paid them supreme honours; he felt persuaded that the earthquake had happened on their account, having doubtless heard something of their previous history, of their miracles and mission.

30. Sirs. "He did not style them so the day before. What must I do to be saved? —from the guilt I feel, and the vengeance I fear. Undoubtedly God had set his sins in array before him, and convinced him in the clearest and strongest manner that the wrath of God abode upon him"—WESLEY.

"He had probably heard about the testimony of the possessed damsel, that S. Paul and Silas showed the way of salvation, and now, without knowing what it fully meant, he cries out for the teaching which they had to give"—C. B. (Luke 3. 10; ch. 2. 37; 9. 6.)

31. R.V. omits the word "Christ," which a heathen would not understand without long explanations. What was required of this ignorant Gentile was to receive Jesus as his Lord, and to trust in Him as his Saviour. Thou shalt be saved, and thy household—"if ye believe. They did so, and were saved"—WESLEY. (John 3. 16, 36; 6. 47; 1 John 5. 10.)

32. Spake unto him the word of the Lord —declared more fully the contents and design of the gospel, giving a brief account of the person and offices of the Lord Jesus, of His life, His death, His resurrection and ascension. Their discourse on these subjects was so convincing that both the jailor and all his household became real converts, accepting Christ with a true and intelligent faith. "Faith cometh by hearing" (Rom. 10. 17).

33. He washed their stripes. "It should not be forgot that the apostles had not the power of working miraculous cures when they pleased, either on themselves or their dearest friends. Nor was it expedient they should; since it would have frustrated many wise designs of God, which were answered by their sufferings"—WESLEY.

"It is happy for us that few modern countries know, by the example of a similar punishment, what the severity of a Roman scourging was"—H.

34. Set a table before them, and rejoiced. "Faith makes a man joyful, prudent, liberal"—WESLEY.

Believing in God—"in the one living and true God; a very different Being from the gods in whom he had before believed"—B. This true God had been revealed to him in His Son, the Lord Jesus. Contrast the kindness, the courtesy, the consideration of the man with his former barbarity, and we have a lively proof of the change wrought in his disposition and conduct. (Luke 5. 29; 19. 6.)

35. The prætors sent—"being probably terrified by the earthquake"—WESLEY.

Saying, Let those men go. "How different from the charge given a few hours before! and how great an ease to the mind of the jailor"—WESLEY.

The prompt action of the magistrates, as soon as it was day, shows that they were alarmed, being convinced by the earthquake which must have been felt over the city, and by the rumour of what had taken place in the prison, that these men were under the protection of supernatural powers.

37. They have beaten us publicly, uncondemned, men that are Romans (R.V.). "S. Paul does not always plead this privilege. But in a country where they were entire strangers, such treatment might have brought upon them a suspicion of having been guilty of some uncommon crime, and so have hindered the course of the gospel"—WESLEY.

S. Paul knew that the report of the proceedings at Philippi would follow him wherever he went in the province, and that the conduct of the magistrates might easily be made a precedent elsewhere; and, having the opportunity, he made it appear that Roman law protected him. (Ch. 22. 25.)

38. They feared when they heard that they were Romans. "They had probably heard of the punishment of the inhabitants of Rhodes, A.D. 44, whom Claudius had deprived of their freedom for putting to death some Roman citizens. Besides, the prætors were liable to action under the Cornelian law"—W. W.

39. Asked them to go away from the city (R.V.)—to prevent popular tumult. S. Paul went not unwillingly, knowing that the foundation had been laid, and probably trusting in S. Luke to carry on the work of building up the Church. (Matt. 8. 34.)

40. When they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed. "Though many circumstances now invited their stay, yet they wisely complied with the request of the magistrates, that they might not seem to express any degree of obstinacy or revenge, or give any suspicion of a design to stir up the people"—WESLEY.

"At Philippi the apostles for the first time came into direct contact with pagan Rome. In Jerusalem the ostensible ground of persecution was always religious. The Christian teachers were accused by the priesthood of blasphemies against God and Moses, against the Temple and the Law. In Philippi the persecution takes a political colour; S. Paul and Silas are accused as disturbers, as setting forth customs contrary to Roman law. It was a persecution arising not only on heathen ground, as at Antioch in Pisidia, at Iconium and at Lystra, but from purely heathen motives. And the Roman authorities, misled by statements suggested only by injured avarice, committed themselves rashly to proceedings undeniably illegal and unjust, a prelude to those bloody persecutions which the Imperial government, in the course of two centuries, inflicted on the Christians"—L. It is scarcely possible to help being struck with the effect of the first preaching of the gospel in Europe. The first notable convert is Lydia, the Asiatic settler, a woman evidently of wealth, position, and refinement; the last, the Roman jailor, of a class insensible and hardened by habit, and also disposed to despise the Jews who brought the message of the gospel. The converts at Philippi were types of the universal power of the new faith. How deep the mutual affection which existed between S. Paul and these Philippians, his first European converts, is manifest in every line of the epistle which he wrote to them from Rome in his first imprisonment.

CHAPTER XVII.

Vers. 1–15. PAUL AND SILAS AT THESSALONICA AND BEREA.—1. And taking their journey through Amphipolis and Apollonia. "S. Luke seems to have been left at Philippi; and to have continued in those parts, travelling from place to place among the churches, till S. Paul returned thither; for here he leaves off speaking of himself as one of S. Paul's company; neither does he resume that style till we find them together there. (Ch. 20. 5, 6.) After this he constantly uses it to the end of the history. Amphipolis and Apollonia were cities of Macedonia"—WESLEY.

Thessalonica—"now the metropolis of the Roman province of Macedonia. Being the seat of government, it was constantly filled with strangers attending the courts of judicature. Its situation at the bottom of the Thermaic Gulf rendering it fit for commerce, many of its inhabitants were merchants carrying on an extensive trade with foreign countries. The Jews likewise resorted to this city in such numbers as to form a numerous congregation"—B.

2. And Paul, according to his custom—"of doing all things, as far as might be, in a regular manner—went in to them three Sabbath days—not excluding the days between"—WESLEY. (Luke 4. 16; ch. 9. 20; 13. 5, 14; 14. 1; 16. 13; 19. 8.)

3. Alleging that Christ must needs have suffered (R.V. "That it behoved the Christ to suffer"). (Luke 24. 26, 46; ch. 18. 28; Gal. 3. 1.)

4. Some of them believed (R.V. "were persuaded"). Of the devout Greeks a great multitude. These were Gentile proselytes, who had not the intense prejudices of the born Jews. Of the chief women not a few. "Our freethinkers pique themselves upon observing that women are more religious than men, and this, in compliment both to religion and good manners, they impute to the weakness of their understandings. And, indeed, as far as nature can go in imitating religion by performing the outward acts of it, this picture of religion may make a fairer show in women than in men, both by reason of their more tender passions, and their modesty, which will make those actions appear to more advantage. But in the case of true religion, which always implies taking up the cross, especially in time of persecution, women lie naturally under a great disadvantage, as having less courage than men. So that their embracing the gospel was a stronger evidence of the power of Him whose strength is perfected in weakness, as a stronger assistance of the Holy Spirit was needful for them to overcome their natural fearfulness"—WESLEY.

This is S. Luke's account of the success of the gospel in Thessalonica. But we learn from S. Paul himself (1 Thess. 1. 9) that multitudes of the idolaters also believed. (Ch. 28. 24; 15. 22, 27, 32, 40.)

5. But the Jews (R.V. omits "which believed not"). Lewd fellows of the baser sort (R.V. "Vile fellows of the rabble," Rom. 16. 21).

6. Drew Jason (R.V. "Dragged"). The rulers of the city. "The title politarch is found nowhere in literature but in this chapter. But an inscription connected with this very city of Thessalonica has been preserved on an arch which spans a street of the modern city; there the title of the magistrates is given in this precise form"—C. B. (Ch. 16. 20.)

7, 8. Another King, one Jesus. . . Troubled the people and the rulers. "The accusation of the Jews was well devised. Thessalonica was not a colony like Philippi, but a free city like Antioch in Syria. The privilege technically called freedom was given to certain cities of the empire for various reasons of policy. Such a city was entirely self-governed in all its internal affairs; even the governor of the province had no right, under ordinary circumstances, to interfere; the local magistrates had the power of life and death over the citizens; there was no Roman garrison, and no insignia of Roman rule. The magistrates and the people of cities so distinguished in the midst of a conquered country would be careful to show their loyalty to the emperor, and to avoid every disorder which might compromise their valued dignity"—C. H. (Luke 23. 2; John 19. 12; 1 Pet. 2. 15.)

9. Taken security of Jason and of the other (R.V. "the rest"). "It is probably meant that a sum of money was deposited with the magistrates, and that the Christian community of the place made themselves responsible that no attempt should be made against the supremacy of Rome, and that peace should be maintained in Thessalonica itself. The whole aspect of what happened at Thessalonica, as compared with the events at Philippi, is in perfect harmony with the difference in the political condition of the two places. There is no mention of the rights and privileges of Roman citizenship; there is a mixed mob of Greeks and Jews, all anxious to show themselves Cæsar's friends. Nothing is said of religious customs which the citizens, being Romans, may not adopt lawfully; all the anxiety of the magistrates and the people is turned to the one point of showing their loyalty to the emperor. And the magistrates, by whom the question is ultimately decided, are not Roman prætors, but Jewish politarchs"—C. H. It should be noted that S. Paul at Thessalonica maintained himself by his own labour (1 Thess. 2. 8, 9), and that he was assisted by the liberality of his friends at Philippi, who once and again sent him relief. (Phil. 4. 15. 16.)

10. The brethren—finding that the Jews still meditated mischief, sent the apostles away secretly. Berea—a large city, about fifty miles from Thessalonica. (Ch. 9. 25; ver. 14.)

11. These were more ingenuous—"or generous. To be teachable in the things of God is true generosity of soul. The receiving the word with all readiness of mind, and the most accurate search into its truth, are well consistent"—WESLEY. (Isa. 34. 16; Luke 16. 29; John 5. 39.)

12. Therefore many of them—"of the Jews—and of the Grecian women—who were followed by their husbands"—WESLEY.

R.V. "Greek women of honourable estate."

13. Stirred up the people (R.V. "Stirring up and troubling the multitude"). The same word is used as in ver. 8; which renders it probable that the pretext was the same in Berea as in Thessalonica, namely, disloyalty to the emperor.

14. The brethren. A little church had already been gathered. Immediately. As from Thessalonica so from Berea, the departure is made in haste. The accusation of disloyalty involved the utmost danger. As it were to the sea (R.V. "As far as to the sea"). (Matt. 10. 23.)

15. They that conducted Paul. "It is clear from the whole account of S. Paul's travels that he was a person who by reason of his infirmities could not easily travel alone"—C. B. Silas and Timotheus. There are some difficulties with regard to the movements of Silas and Timotheus after they were left in Macedonia. They did not, so far as the history records, join S. Paul at Athens; but both of them came to him in Corinth. (Ch. 18. 5; 1 Thess. 3. 1, 2.)

Vers. 16–34. PAUL AT ATHENS — A SPEECH TO THE PHILOSOPHERS, AND ITS RESULT.—16. While Paul was waiting for them—"having no design, as it seems, to preach at Athens.

But his zeal for God drew him into it unawares, without staying till his companions came"—WESLEY.

Wholly given to idolatry (R.V. "Full of idols"). (2 Pet. 2. 8.)

17. Jews and devout persons — that is, proselytes. It was always "To the Jew first."

18. Some of the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers. "The Epicureans entirely denied a Providence, and held the world to be the effect of mere chance; asserting sensual pleasure to be man's chief good, and that the soul and body died together. The Stoics held that matter was eternal; that all things were governed by irresistible fate; that virtue was its own sufficient reward, and vice its own sufficient punishment. It is easy to see how happily the apostle levels his discourse at some of the most important errors of each, while, without expressly attacking either, he gives a plain summary of his own religious principles. What would this babbler say? Such is the language of natural reason, full of, and satisfied with, itself. Yet even here S. Paul had some fruit; though nowhere less than at Athens. And no wonder, since this city was a seminary of philosophers, who have ever been the pest of true religion. He seemeth to be a proclaimer. This he returns upon them at ver. 23. Of strange gods—such as are not known even at Athens. Because he preached to them Jesus, and the resurrection—a god and a goddess. And as stupid as this mistake was, it is the less to be wondered at, since the Athenians might as well count the resurrection a deity, as shame, famine, and many others"—WESLEY.

"Strange gods" (R.V. margin, "demons"). By this term they did not understand devils or evil beings, but an inferior order of divinities.

19. The Areopagus — "or Hill of Mars, dedicated to Mars, the heathen god of war, was the place where the Athenians held their supreme court of judicature. But it does not appear he was carried thither as a criminal. The original number of its judges was twelve; but afterwards it increased to three hundred. These were generally men of the greatest families in Athens, and were famed for justice and integrity"—WESLEY.

Took hold of him (R.V.). No violence is implied; it is the same word as is used when "Barnabas took Paul and brought him to the apostles." The expression, "the Areopagus," was used to describe either the supreme court itself, or its ordinary place of meeting. There is nothing in the history to intimate that the court was actually sitting.

21. And the strangers sojourning there—"and catching the distemper of them. Some new thing. The Greek word signifies some newer thing. New things quickly grew cheap, and they wanted those that were newer still"—WESLEY.

22. Then Paul standing in the midst of the Areopagus. "An ample theatre! Said. Giving them a lecture of natural divinity, with admirable wisdom, acuteness, fulness, and courtesy. They inquire after new things: S. Paul, in his divinely philosophical discourse, begins with the first and goes on to the last things, both of which were new things to them. He points out the origin and the end of all things, concerning which they had so many disputes, and equally refutes both the Epicurean and the Stoic. I perceive. With what clearness and freedom does he speak! S. Paul against Athens"—WESLEY.

"A stranger standing in the midst of the Areopagus would be impressed with the magnificence of the religion which he sought to overthrow. The temple of the Eumenides was immediately below him; opposite, at the distance of two hundred yards, was the hill of the Acropolis, which was entirely occupied by statues and temples"—W. W. Too superstitious (R.V. "Somewhat superstitious").

23. Your devotions (R.V. "The objects of your worship"). I found an altar. "Some suppose this was set up by Socrates, to express in a covert way his devotion to the only true God, while he derided the plurality of the heathen gods, for which he was condemned to death; and others, that whoever erected this altar, did it in honour to the God of Israel, of whom there was no image, and whose name, Jehovah, was never made known to the idolatrous Gentiles. Him proclaim I. Thus he fixes the wandering attention of these blind philosophers; proclaiming to them an unknown, and yet not a new, God"—WESLEY.

What therefore ye worship in ignorance, this set I forth unto you (R.V.).

24. God who made the world. "Thus is demonstrated, even to reason, the one true, good God; absolutely different from the creatures, from every part of the visible creation"—WESLEY.

He asserts the existence of God, the Creator, and the Providential Ruler of the universe, in opposition to the doctrine of the Epicureans. And he argues that the Lord of the whole universe has no need of temples to dwell in; that the thought of winning His favour by erecting costly and beautiful buildings, even like those upon the hill of the Acropolis, was a thought unworthy of men whose minds have been enlightened by science. (Ch. 14. 15; Matt. 11. 25; ch. 7. 48.)

25. As though He needed anything—"or person, the Greek word equally takes in both. To all—that live and breathe—life. In Him we live. And breath. In Him we move. By breathing life is continued. I breathe this moment; the next is not in my power. And all things. For in Him we are. So exactly do the parts of this discourse answer each other"—WESLEY. (Ps. 50. 8; Gen. 2. 7; Num. 16. 22; Job 12. 10; 27. 3; 33. 4; Isa. 42. 5; 57. 16; Zech. 12. 1.)

26. He hath made of one blood the whole nation of men. "By this expression the apostle showed them, in the most unaffected manner, that though he was a Jew he was not enslaved to any narrow views, but looked on all mankind as his brethren. Having determined the times. That it is God who gave men the earth to inhabit, S. Paul proves from the order of times and places, showing the highest wisdom of the Disposer, superior to all human counsels. And the bounds of their habitation—by mountains, seas, rivers, and the like"—WESLEY.

R.V. "And He made of one every nation, having determined their appointed seasons." The R.V., founded on the best MSS., omits the word "blood." "And this seems to bring out more clearly what the apostle desires to dwell upon—the Fatherhood of God. It is not only that men are all of one family, and so all equal in God's eyes. When we read they are 'made of One' we are carried back to the higher thought of the prophet. (Mal. 2. 10.) Have we not all one Father?"—C. B. If this was a difficult conception for a Jew, it was perhaps harder still for an Athenian. The distinction between Greeks and barbarians was radical and ineffaceable, and Athens was the very "eye of Greece."

27. That they should seek the Lord (R.V. "God"). If haply. "The way is open, God is ready to be found; but He will lay no force upon any man. That they might feel after Him. This is in the midst between seeking and finding. Feeling, being the lowest and grossest of all our senses, is fitly applied to that low knowledge of God. Though He be not far from every one of us—we need not go far to seek or find Him; He is very near us—in us. It is only perverse reason which thinks He is afar off"—WESLEY. (Rom. 1. 20; ch. 14. 17.)

28. In Him—"not in ourselves—we live, and move, and have our being. This denotes His necessary, intimate, and most efficacious presence. No words can better express the continual and necessary dependence of all created beings, in their existence and all their operations, on the first and Almighty Cause, which the truest philosophy as well as divinity teaches. As certain also of your own poets have said. Aratus, whose words these are, was an Athenian, who lived almost three hundred years before this time. They are likewise to be found, with the alteration of one letter only, in the hymn of Cleanthes to Jupiter, or the Supreme Being, one of the purest and finest pieces of natural religion in the whole world of pagan antiquity"—WESLEY.

"'Your own poets.' He regards Athens as the mother of Grecian literature, and calls all Greek poetry their poetry. Aratus was S. Paul's countryman, a native of Cilicia; he flourished about 270 B.C."—W. W. (Col. 1. 17; Heb. 1. 3; Titus 1. 12.)

29. We ought not to think—"a tender expression; especially in the first person plural. As if he had said, Can God Himself be a less noble Being than we who are His offspring? Nor does he only here deny that these are like God, but that they have any analogy to Him at all, so as to be capable of representing Him"—WESLEY.

"A man is of more honour than material things, how far above these must the Godhead be. The Athenians, the apostle would teach them, had formed not too high but too low a conception of themselves"—C. B. (Isa. 40. 18.)

30. The times of ignorance therefore God overlooked; but now He commandeth men that they should all everywhere repent (R.V.). "'The times of ignorance.' What, does he object ignorance to the knowing Athenians? Yes; and they acknowledged it by this very altar. 'God overlooked.' As one paraphrases it, 'The beams of His eye did in a manner shoot over it.' He did not appear to take notice of them, by sending express messages to them, as He did to the Jews. But now—this day, this hour, saith S. Paul, puts an end to the Divine forbearance, and brings either greater mercy or punishment. Now, 'He commandeth all men everywhere to repent.' There is a dignity and grandeur in this expression becoming an ambassador from the King of Heaven. And this universal demand of repentance declared universal guilt in the strongest manner, and admirably confronted the pride of the haughtiest Stoic of them all. At the same time it bore down the idle plea of fatality. For how could anyone repent of doing what he could not but have done?"—WESLEY. (Ch. 14. 16; Rom. 3. 25; Luke 24. 47; Titus 2. 11, 12; 1 Pet. 1. 14; 4. 3.)

31. He hath appointed a day in which He will judge the world. "How fitly does he speak this in their supreme court of justice! By that Man. So he speaks, suiting himself to the capacity of his hearers. Whereof He hath given assurance to all men, in that He hath raised Him from the dead—God raising Jesus, demonstrated hereby that He was to be the glorious Judge of all. We are by no means to imagine that this was all which the apostle intended to have said. But the indolence of some of his hearers, and the petulancy of others, cut him short"—WESLEY.

The unity of the speech is striking. The inscription of that altar, To an unknown God, is the theme of discourse. The apostle gladly allows to the Athenians a certain degree of religious feeling, but he asserts, on the ground of that inscription, that they failed in the true knowledge of God. Therefore he proclaims to them the truth—(1) concerning God (vers. 24, 25); (2) concerning man, as appointed to seek and to find God, and as related to God (vers. 26–28). After the intervening remark (ver. 29), which censured the worship of images as wrong, S. Paul announces,

(3) that the times of ignorance are at an end, and that God requires conversion and faith in the Risen One who is the Saviour and Judge of the world. (Ch. 10. 42; Rom. 2. 16; 14. 10; ch. 2. 24.)

32. Some mocked — "interrupting him thereby. They took offence at that which is the principal motive of faith, from the pride of reason. And having once stumbled at this, they rejected all the rest"—WESLEY.

"At this point, but not having come to the conclusion of his discourse, the speaker is interrupted by loud mockery of the resurrection. The other hearers, who did not exactly mock, in a polite manner gave S. Paul to understand that they would hear him again another time, but that they had had enough of it for the present"—L.

33. So Paul departed—"leaving his hearers divided in their judgment"—WESLEY.

34. Among whom was even Dionysius the Areopagite—"one of the judges of that court; on whom some spurious writings have been fathered in later ages, by those who were fond of high-sounding nonsense"—WESLEY.

"The conduct of S. Paul's hearers at Athens is a picture of the conduct of hearers at the present day—(1) Some mocked; (2) Some said, We will hear thee again of this matter; (3) Some clave to Paul, and believed"—L.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Vers. 1–11. PAUL GOES TO CORINTH — HIS SUCCESSFUL MINISTRY THERE.—1. Paul departing from Athens. "He did not stay there long. The philosophers there were too easy, too indolent, and too wise in their own eyes to receive the gospel"—WESLEY.

Corinth. As Athens was the seat of culture, so Corinth was the seat of commerce and of wealth. It was situated on an isthmus which joined Peloponnesus to the rest of Greece. Having been the head of the Achæan league in the final struggle for independence, the ancient city was utterly destroyed; but after lying desolate for a hundred years it was restored by Julius Cæsar. When Achaia became a Roman province, Corinth, becoming the seat of government, soon regained its ancient celebrity in respect of commerce and riches. At the time the apostle arrived, it presented all the characteristics of a great commercial city; a numerous population of varied races, vast wealth, with the luxury and refinement usually accompanying it, and more than ordinary temptations to licentious life.

2. Claudius—"the Roman emperor — had commanded all the Jews to depart from Rome—all who were Jews by birth. Whether they were Jews or Christians, by religion, the Romans were too stately to inquire"—WESLEY.

The occasion is possibly that mentioned by Suetonius (Claud. 25), where we read that the Jews, having made tumults at the instigation of one Chrestus, were driven out of the city. The similarity of name may be accidental; on the other hand, discussions among the Jews on the subject of Christianity may have given the pretext for the decree. (Rom. 16. 3; 1 Cor. 16. 19; 2 Tim. 4. 19.)

3. And wrought. "By the profits of this labour he maintained himself at Corinth, as he had previously done in Thessalonica"—B. They were tentmakers by trade—"for it was a rule among the Jews (and why is it not among the Christians?) to bring up all their children to some trade, were they ever so rich and noble"—WESLEY. (Ch. 20. 34; 1 Cor. 4. 12; 1 Thess. 2. 9; 2 Thess. 3. 8.)

4. Persuaded (R.V. margin, "Sought to persuade")—Jews and Greeks. (Ch. 17. 2.)

5. And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia. "Silas seems to have stayed a considerable time at Berea; but Timotheus had come to the apostle while he was at Athens, and been sent by him to comfort and confirm the Church at Thessalonica. (1 Thess. 3. 1–5.) But now at length both Silas and Timotheus came to the apostle at Corinth. Paul was pressed in spirit—the more, probably, from what Silas and Timotheus related. Every Christian ought diligently to observe any such pressure in his own spirit, and, if it agree with Scripture, to follow it: if he does not, he will feel great heaviness"—WESLEY.

R.V. "Was constrained by the word, testifying." Being strengthened by the arrival of his companions, and released, by the contributions which they brought (2 Cor. 11. 9), from the necessity of labouring all the week, he was no longer contented with Sabbath ministrations and reasonings out of the Old Testament, but devoted himself to the word, and gave in its fulness his solemn testimony as to the manner in which he had been convinced that Jesus is the Christ. (Ch. 17. 14, 15; Job 32. 18; ch. 17. 3; ver. 2. 8.)

6. When they opposed themselves. "The word implies organised opposition"—C. B. He shook his raiment—"to signify he would from that time refrain from them; and to intimate that God would soon shake them off as unworthy to be His people. I am pure—none can say this but he that has borne a full testimony against sin. From henceforth I will go to the Gentiles—but not to them altogether. He did not break off all intercourse with the Jews, even at Corinth. Only he preached no more in their synagogue"—WESLEY. (Ch. 13. 45; 1 Pet. 4. 4; Neh. 5. 13; Matt. 10. 14; ch. 13. 51; Lev. 20. 9, 11, 12; 2 Sam. 1. 16; Ezek. 18. 13; 33. 4; 3. 18, 19; 33. 9; ch. 20. 27; 13. 46; 28. 28.)

7. He went into the house of one named Justus — "a Gentile, and preached there; though probably he still lodged with Aquila"—WESLEY.

R.V. "Titus Justus." "He was a proselyte. His house was an appropriate place in which both Jews and Gentiles might meet"—C. B.

8. And Crispus, the ruler of the synagogue (R.V.). He is mentioned (1 Cor. 1. 14) as one of the very few whom S. Paul himself had baptized. Perhaps he was converted before Silas and Timothy arrived. And many hearing—"the conversation of Crispus, and the preaching of S. Paul"—WESLEY.

9, 10. Then spake the Lord—the Lord Jesus. Probably S. Paul had been discouraged at the contrast between his personal resources and the immense forces, both Jewish and Pagan, that were arrayed against him. It is of this time that he reminds the Corinthians (1 Cor. 2. 3), "I was with you in weakness and in fear." I am with thee—"therefore fear not all the learning, politeness, grandeur, or power of the inhabitants of this city. Speak and hold not thy peace, for thy labour shall not be in vain. For I have much people in this city. So He calls prophetically them that afterwards believed"—WESLEY. (Ch. 23. 11; Jer. 1. 18, 19; Matt. 28. 20.)

11. He continued there a year and six months—"a long time. But how few souls are now gained, in a longer time than this! Who is in the fault? Generally both teachers and hearers"—WESLEY.

"The apostle seems to have wrought many miracles at Corinth (2 Cor. 12. 12); during this period he wrote the First Epistle to the Thessalonians, late in A.D. 52, and the Second Epistle in the spring of 53"—W. W. "Ministers (and other Christians) may be serving Christ, and promoting the great ends of their ministry, by writing good letters, as well as by preaching good sermons"—M. H. During this time, also, the churches in all Achaia (mentioned 2 Cor. 1. 1) may have been founded.

Vers. 12–17. PAUL BROUGHT BEFORE THE PROCONSUL, WHO DECLINES TO TREAT THE CHARGE SERIOUSLY.—12. When Gallio was proconsul of Achaia—"of which Corinth was the chief city. This Gallio, the brother of the famous Seneca, is much commended both by him and other writers, for the sweetness and generosity of his temper, and easiness of his behaviour. Yet one thing he lacked! But he knew it not, and had no concern about it"—WESLEY.

13. Persuaded men to worship God contrary to the Law. "Probably S. Paul had taught that men were no longer bound to worship God with sacrifices and other bodily services"—B. The Jewish religion was one of those allowed throughout the empire, and the hope of the Jews was, by availing themselves of the inexperience of the newly-arrived proconsul, to induce him to enforce Jewish law on Jews by Roman authority. But the majesty of Roman power was too august to be invoked for such an object. He would not meddle in such matters.

14, 15. Matter of wrong or wicked lewdness. (R.V. "wicked villany.") (Ch. 23. 29; 25. 11, 19.) But if it be—"he speaks with the utmost coolness and contempt—a question of names—the names of the heathen gods were fables and shadows. But the question concerning the name of Jesus is of more importance than all things else under heaven. Yet there is this singularity, among a thousand others, in the Christian religion, that human reason, curious as it is in all other things, abhors to inquire into it"—WESLEY.

Look to it yourselves; I am not minded, etc. (R.V.). "Gallio knows his own business, and will only mind that. He sits to administer Roman law, and this dispute among the Jews at Corinth lies outside his cognisance altogether"—C. B.
